"Whereas the current federal budget submitted to the Congress by the Office of Management and Budget proposes a ceiling of $100,000,000 on appropriations for the federal aid to wildlife restoration program, known as the Pittman-Robertson program, and for the sport fish restoration program, known as the Dingell-Johnson program; and

"Whereas federal funds for the Pittman-Robertson program and the Dingell-Johnson program are derived from taxes and duties on sporting equipment and fuel paid by sportsmen and other recreational users of wildlife and fish resources; and

"Whereas Pittman-Robertson funds and Dingell-Johnson funds are allocated among the states and can be used only to support specific activities related to wildlife, sport fish, and public access projects; and

"Whereas the proposed ceiling on Pittman-Robertson funds and Dingell-Johnson funds will drastically affect the activities of the divisions of wildlife conservation and sport fish in the Alaska Department of Fish and Game by a 40 percent reduction in funding for research and management on wildlife and sport fish and for acquisition of public access; and

"Whereas the sport hunting and sport fishing industries in the state provide thousands of jobs and generate millions of dollars to the state economy; and

"Whereas subsistence users of the state's wildlife and fish resources annually harvest millions of pounds of these resources for personal use and benefit from the active research and management of wildlife and fish resources supported by the Pittman-Robertson program and the Dingell-Johnson program; and be it

"Resolved, That the Alaska State Legislature respectfully expresses its strong opposition to the proposal to place a ceiling on appropriations for the Pittman-Robertson program and the Dingell-Johnson program.

POM-281. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Oregon; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs:

"SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 8

"Whereas the Legislative Assembly and the people of the State of Oregon find that:

"(1) In recognition of the importance of maintaining employment in local mills, community stability and in the face of timber supply shortages, beginning in 1968 and each year thereafter Congress has enacted restrictions on log exports requiring domestic processing on timber sold and harvested from federal lands in the west;

"(2) In recognition of the importance of maintaining employment in local mills and community stability, in 1961 the Oregon Legislative Assembly passed a bill requiring all timber sold from Board of Forestry and Common School lands to be 'primarily processed' in the United States. In 1963, the law was amended to authorize the Department of Forestry to issue permits allowing the export of unprocessed logs harvested from state-owned lands under certain limited circumstances. This provision was repealed in 1981;

"(3) Oregon's Attorneys General have questioned the constitutionality of state export bans since 1961. The state continued to restrict exports until 1984 when, following a Supreme Court decision finding a state log export ban in Alaska (South Central Timber Development, Inc. v. Wunnicke) to be unconstitutional, enforcement of Oregon's log export ban stopped;

"(4) Although they remain in state timber sale contracts and in Oregon statutes, Oregon's log export restrictions are not enforced. Log exports of state timber have steadily grown and in 1987 nearly 40 percent of all state timber sold was purchased by log exporting firms;

"(5) In 1988 Congress considered legislation to give states the right to limit exports of state-owned timber consistent with the historic Congressional direction on federal public lands. Despite strong support from western states no final action was taken;

"(6) In the federal budget submitted by President Reagan for fiscal year 1990, removal of log export restrictions from public lands was proposed. Impacts are estimated to be 600 million board feet of additional log exports at a cost of 2,500 direct timber industry jobs;

"(7) Oregon's timber supply is increasingly inadequate to meet current mill capacity; and

"(8) When a state exports logs instead of lumber, it is functioning similar to the developing nations of the world that rely on their unprocessed natural resources as a primary means of generating foreign exchange revenue. By exporting raw material, we lose the value added by manufacturing, the jobs involved directly in the manufacturing process, and the related spin-off jobs that also add to our economy; and

"Whereas in order to assure that timber harvested from state and federal public lands in Oregon is processed in Orgean, the Legislative Assembly, other state-wide officials and state agencies shall use all legal means necessary to:

"(1) Demand that the federal policy continue the existing Congressional prohibition of sales of unprocessed timber from federal lands for export;

"(2) Support and assure passage of federal legislation authorizing states to require in-state processing of timber severed from state-owned lands; and

"(3) Insist that the United States Secretary of the Interior and the United States Secretary of Agriculture vigorously administer and enforce the existing prohibiton of sales of unprocessed timber from federal lands; and

"Whereas within 10 days after the effective date of the amendment proposed by this resolution, the Secretary of State shall transmit copies of this resolution, including the voter referendum results, to the President of the United States, the United States Department of Agriculture, the United States Department of the Interior, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, each member of Congress and the governors and legislature of the other 49 states; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon:

"Paragraph 1. The Oregon Constitution is amended by creating a new section 7 to be added to and made a part of Article VIII and to read:

"Section 7. (1) Notwithstanding subsection (2) of section 5 of this Article or any other provision of this Constitution, the State Land Board shall not authorize the sale or export of timber from lands described in section 2 of this Article unless such timber will be processed in Oregon. The limitation on sale or export in this subsection shall not apply to species, grades or quantities of timber which may be found by the State Land Board to be surplus to domestic needs.

"(2) Notwithstanding any prior agreements or other provisions of law or this Constitution, the Legislative Assembly shall not authorize the sale or export of timber from state lands other than those described in section 2 of this Article unless such timber will be processed in Oregon. The limitation on sale or export in this subsection shall not apply to species, grades or quantities of timber which may be found by the State Forester to be surplus to domestic needs.

"(3) This section first becomes operative when federal law is enacted allowing this state to exercise such authority or when a court or the Attorney General of this state determines that such authority lawfully may be exercised.

"Paragraph 2. The amendment proposed by this resolution shall be submitted to the people for their approval or rejection at a special election held on the same date as the next election as provided by law."

"SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION No. 8

"Whereas there are numerous inconsistent federal definitions of the term "wetlands"; and

"Whereas the lack of a single consistent definition of "wetlands" for purposes of implementing state and federal laws has caused confusion and uncertainty in the identification and classification of particular land features as wetlands; now, therefore, be it

"The definition of the term "wetlands" means an area (including a swamp, marsh, bog, prairie pothole, or similar area) having a predominance of hydric soils that are inundated or saturated by surface or groundwater at a frequency and duration sufficient to support and that under normal circumstances supports the growth and regeneration of hydrophytic vegetation.

"The term "hydric soil" means soil that, in its undrained condition, is saturated, flooded, or ponded long enough during a growing season to develop an anaerobic condition that supports the growth and regeneration of hydrophytic vegetation.

"The term "hydrophtic vegetation" means a plant growing in: (1) water, or (2) a substrate that is at least periodically deficient in oxygen during a growing season as a result of excessive water content.

"The term "wetlands" does not include: (1) irrigated acreage used as farmland; (2) man-made wetlands of less than one acre; or (3) man-made wetlands which were not constructed with wetland creation as a stated objective, including but not limited to impoundments made for the purpose of soil and water conservation which have been approved or requested by soil and water conservation districts; and, be it further

"Whereas the United States Congress is seeking some effective means of reducing the federal budget deficit in the immediate future; and

"Whereas several proposals being considered for budget reduction purposes would increase the existing federal fuel taxes by various sizable increments; and

"Whereas the U.S. Department of Energy has stated that "a motor fuel tax will create an economic loss which is of far greater magnitude than the possible benefits"; and

"Whereas a gasoline tax for deficit reduction would be a regressive tax affecting the poor to a greater extent than other income levels; and

"Whereas states would receive no direct revenue benefits, while incurring substantial increases in their public assistance costs; and

"Whereas residents of the South, Midwest and West pay more fuel taxes because they must travel greater distances by personal vehicles than residents of other regions and therefore would bear a disproportionate burden of deficit reduction; and

"Whereas current national policy makes no provision for continuing the Federal-Aid Highway Program into the future; and

"Whereas in all recent federal aid highway Acts, Congress has had to include provisions for extending the Highway Trust Fund and the taxes which sustain it; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon:

"(1) The Congress of the United States is memorialized to make permanent the Highway Trust Fund and the user fees accruing to it, so that a reliable funding source is available for constructing, rehabilitating and otherwise improving the highways and bridges which are so essential to the vigor of the Oregon and the national economies.

"(2) The Congress of the United States is memorialized to protect the Highway Trust Fund from predatory proposals to divert highway user revenues to programs entirely unrelated to the transportation purposes for which the fund was established.

"(3) A copy of this memorial shall be sent to the President of the United States, the Secretary of Transportation, the Cochairmen of the National Economic Commission, to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to each member of the Oregon Congressional Delegation."

"Whereas the memory of the hardships endured by these Japanese-Americans during the internment period is deserving of a monument which will not only honor this memory, but will also further the educational function to assure that the rights of the country's citizens never be compromised again; and

"Whereas the campus of the Treasure Valley Community College is located in the center of what was once the free zone, and would be an excellent and appropriate location for such an honorary and educational monument; and

"Whereas the cost to construct the proposed cultural center is $9,314,000 of which federal funding through the Civil Liberties Public Education Fund of the redress bills

"Whereas additional revenue would come from rental, admission and membership fees as well as through direct staffing and maintenance support from the Treasure Valley Community College; and

"Whereas the Japanese-American Cultural Center, as it would be appropriately named, would officially open on February 19, 1992, exactly 50 years after President Roosevelt signed Executive Order 9066; now, therefore, be it

SAVINGS AND CAPITAL FORMATION ACT

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, one of our most troubling economic problems continues to be our low saving rate. The United States has one of the lowest personal savings rates in the industralized world—a third that of Germany and a quarter that of Japan.

The implications are important at all levels. It means that too much of our budget deficit is financed by foreign dollars, dollars that investors can choose to withdraw at will. It means that there are insufficient and overly costly funds to invest in new and expanding businesses. And, equally importantly, it means that too many people have insufficient savings to meet emergencies or to plan for their children's education.

This is a problem that we can—and must—do something about. Ironically, the one proven vehicle for increasing saving—individual retirement accounts [IRA's]—was eviscerated by the Tax Reform Act of 1986. A recent study sponsored by Merrill Lynch Consumer Markets, entitled "Save, America," estimated that between 1982 and 1986, $137.8 billion in new savings were generated by IRA's.

In order to take a first step toward increasing our saving rate, today Senator D'AMATO and I are introducing legislation to establish a tax credit for contributions to IRA accounts and to provide for a limited exclusion from gross income of interest and dividends by people of modest means.

More specifically, the legislation provides for a 15-percent tax credit on contributions of up to $2,000 per year. In addition, people with adjusted gross incomes of up to $25,000, who do not have IRA accounts, could exclude from income up to $100 of interest and dividends a year.

Mr. President, we all understand the importance of saving to capital formation, to assuring our future standard of living and to global competitiveness. As the "Save America" study clearly states, "saving invested in productive assets increases the capital stock, which in turn results in greater amounts of output and income."

Not surprisingly, as a recent Fortune magazine article entitled "How Capital Costs Cripple America" points out, "Like all prices, the price of capital is a matter of supply and demand, with the puny supply of U.S. savings a guarantee that the price will be high." How high? A 1986 study of capital costs by economists B. Douglas Bernheim or Northwestern and John B. Shoven of Stanford reveals that throughout the 1980's the United States has borne the highest cost of capital of the leading industralized nations, nearly twice that of Japan.

Capital formation is particularly important at a time when we still have not tamed the budget tiger. Unfortunately, despite the promises of supply side economics, our saving rate continues to decline: From 8.7 percent of GNP between 1971 and 1975, to 6.2 percent between 1981 and 1985, to 4 percent between 1985 and 1988. The "Save, America" study points out the importance of this decline by noting that "a 2.5-percent increase in the personal saving rate could add roughly 10 percentage points to the GNP or $500 billion in terms of today's economy."

Introduction of this legislation raises several questions. First, "Wasn't the IRA tax deduction in effect during the decline in saving during the 1980's?" The answer is yes, it was, but as Michael Boskin wrote in "a closer look at recent U.S. saving" in 1986, "there is a substantial reason to believe that the saving rate would still be lowered * * * had universal IRA accounts not been instituted." His conclusion is supported by several other recent studies, including one by David Venti and Steven Wise, "The Evidence on IRA's," published in January 1988, which concluded that "IRA's have had a substantial positive net effect on personal savings." The authors found that 80 percent of IRA contributions were new savings; with more than one-half of each marginal IRA dollar coming from reduced consumption and another 20-30 percent from reduced taxes.

A second question often raised is, "Aren't IRA's a rich person's gimmick?" Obviously wealthier people potentially have more money to save; however, the data shows that IRA's were used predominately by moderate and middle income people. IRS statistics show that for 1986, fully two-thirds of all taxpayers claiming an IRA deduction were families with incomes under $50,000. Moreover, those returns accounted for almost 60 percent of the payments to IRA's.

I would add here, Mr. President, that with the change in the tax law in 1986 the IRS reports a roughly 50-percent reduction in the number of people who are taking out individual retirement accounts. So the change in the law in 1986 had a profound and significant impact on the number of people who were actually taking these IRA's.

The changing demographics of our society also create an imperative for increased private retirement savings. Obviously as people live longer they will need more resources. In addition, many baby boomers will be unable to accrue significant benefits under private retirement plans because today's increased job mobility will result in them not staying in pension plans long enough for their benefits to vest.

To address the legitimate objection that a $2,000 deduction is more valuable to someone in the 33-percent tax bracket than someone in the 15-percent bracket, the Dodd-D'Amato bill would replace the deduction with a 15-percent tax credit. This way a person who places $2,000 in an IRA would get a $300 tax credit, regardless of whether the person's income was $10,000 or $1,000,000.

However, many people cannot afford to tie up money until they retire. They have other more immediate concerns, from the potential devastation of a serious illness or loss of job to the need to put money aside for their children's college education. The Dodd-D'Amato legislation recognizes the importance of saving for personal reasons by establishing a $100 exclusion from income for interest or dividends earned by people with less than $25,000 in adjusted gross income who do not have IRA's.

Finally, the logical question of cost arises: Granted that inducements for saving are beneficial to society, how can we afford such a program while the Federal deficit is still out of control? The point is a legitimate one. The Joint Committee on Taxation has estimated that our legislation would cost $6.7 billion over the next 3 fiscal years, if implemented in calendar 1990. It would not be responsible to increase the deficit by that amount. Therefore, I believe that there should be an appropriate offset when the bill goes forward. Given the proposal's objective of encouraging saving, I believe the most appropriate offset would be some form of consumption tax, such as a value added tax. For the moment, however, I think the most important thing is to put a proposal on the table that focuses people's attention on the need to encourage saving, and that is what this legislation does.

I add that the President has indicated that he wants to support an individual retirement account proposal. He has failed yet to offer one specifically. Senator ROTH of Delaware has proposed an individual retirement account bill that has some very good features. Senator D'AMATO and I are not wedded to the specifics of this bill. I see my distinguished colleague from New York, Senator MOYNIHAN, on the floor, who has a deep interest in these matters, and obviously we will be seeking his advice and counsel on how best to move forward with this kind of proposal.

We believe it would give us a significant step forward in the general issue on which everyone agrees without question, and that is the importance of encouraging savings on the part of the American consumer. That must be done. If we depend upon foreign capital to finance our debt we place this Nation in great jeopardy. With an individual retirement account at best we offer the proposal of increasing a savings pool from which that deficit would be financed instead of relying on outside interests in this country who do not have the best interests of the United States at heart.

Mr. President, I urge the Finance Committee to move speedily on this proposal so that we can begin to generate the savings necessary to finance our budget deficit, to provide for capital formation, to increase international competitiveness, and to encourage a saving ethic to provide money for rainy days.

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce, along with my esteemed colleague from Connecticut, Senator DODD, a bill that will begin to address this country's most important long-term economic problem, our low domestic savings rate. As you know, Mr. President, America faces a world of vigorous competition in the global marketplace. During the same time that the economies of the world have become more and more integrated since the end of World War II, the competitive superiority of U.S. technology, productivity and finance has been steadily eroded by the rise of economies in both Asia and Europe.

The military competition of the 19th century and the first half of the 20th century have been replaced, I am happy to report, by competition in the economic arena. However, it is not so pleasing to note that America is not winning that competition. America's standard of living, once the envy of the entire world, has been eclipsed by some countries in Europe. Furthermore, the trend of America's relative standard of living is downward.

Why is this, Mr. President? There are many reasons. The complexity of this issue can be somewhat daunting—perhaps too complex for effective legislative action. However, the high cost of investment capital, a problem which many economists have identified as a crippling burden on American competitiveness, is a problem which this Congress can address with positive legislation. The solution is to remove part of the bias against savings in our system of personal income taxation.

The American taxpayer's savings are taxed twice; once when money is earned and again each year when the proceeds of savings are realized. When a young family or a retired couple manages to keep $1,000 in a savings account that earns 6 percent per year, they receive $60 a year in interest on that savings. Our Tax Code then takes either 15 or 28 percent of that. The fruits of frugality is then, at best $51 and, more likely, under the 28-percent rate, $43. It is no wonder that Americans choose to spend their wages and rely on credit when they meet an unexpected expense.

America's household savings is approximately 4 percent of GNP. This compares to a rate of 20 percent in Japan and 8 percent in West Germany and in Canada. It is a startling fact that in Japan alone there is an average of $126,000 per household in savings. With so much capital available, is it a surprise that Japanese investment in the United States has increased by 611 percent between 1980 and 1987?

Of course, the Japanese are not alone. Foreign ownership of America's productive assets is increasing at a rate which is not matched by U.S. investment abroad because many foreign concerns have access to cheap investment capital. Once again our low savings rate is our main enemy.

The result to the economy is that our companies pay several percentage points more in interest for the money they need to make the workplace safer, to conduct research, to open new markets, and to expand or improve production. The result of this trend is a decline in America's competitiveness and in its standard of living.

As we all know, our trade deficit remains enormous and American exports are in decline once again. This is only another aspect of an ominous trend that will haunt many future generations of Americans unless we correct it.

Mr. President, I do not intend to cry doom. To the contrary, I believe our market economy is inherently resilient and can weather many a misguided Federal policy. But action is needed to impede these ominous trends now.

This low savings trend also harms the individual citizen because it represents an erosion of the security that only personal savings can provide.

We, the Congress, must act to improve our rate of savings. This is why Senator DODD and I are proposing a new individual retirement account which resembles the individual retirement account which was all but eliminated in 1986. I continue to believe that Senator DODD and I fought the good fight to save the IRA in 1986. We lost to the delicate consensus that had formed around the Tax Reform Act of 1986 and to arguments that have since been discredited. The IRA faced two persistent arguments. Both of these arguments have been thoroughly refuted by the facts. Furthermore our new IRA and savings bill is designed to assure that the benefits of deferred taxation are available on an equal basis to all taxpayers regardless of income.

The economics of the IRA are now clear. Between 1981 and 1986 the IRA generated enormous new savings. By the calculations of the Institute for Research on the Economics of Taxation, the IRA brought about $135 billion in new savings. Many other economists have reviewed this question and all have concluded that the IRA promotes savings rather than merely the shifting of funds from one form of savings to another.

It is also clear that two-thirds of all IRA's were held by taxpayers who earned less than $50,000 per year. The IRA is not a tax shelter for the rich. It is a retirement savings vehicle for the middle class and it is a mistake to repeal it in the face of this unfounded argument.

The bill we are introducing today nonetheless addresses these two concerns. First, the tax benefit will be equal for all taxpayers—a straight 15 percent credit against tax for every dollar of contribution regardless of tax bracket. Those who argued that the old IRA which allowed a deduction rather than a credit was an unequal tax break should be satisfied. Regardless of how much income one has or how much tax shelter they seek, all taxpayers get the same $300 maximum tax credit.

Second, we offer a savings incentive for taxpayers who lack the resources to fund an IRA. For those who make no IRA or some other personal retirement fund contribution, there is an exclusion of the first $100 of income from taxation. This amount is $200 for joint returns. While a $100/200 exclusion is not a great amount of tax benefit, it will make the entire proceeds of a $1,600 savings account earning 6 percent annually tax free. And for a low income taxpayer that means $15 to $28 a year staying in that savings account and earning interest rather than going to Uncle Sam's double taxation. I think that is a bit of fairness for the little guy and an incentive to save as well.

This bill also addresses the nonearning spouse as well. Couples who file joint returns can contribute up to $3,000 and claim a credit of $450. This would establish a spousal IRA of $1,000 compared to the current limit of $250.

We all agree that our savings rate is too low. I urge my colleagues to seize the moment and join Senator DODD and me in sponsoring this legislation. The country's future economic well-being is at stake and we are offering a good program for restoring America's competitive position through improved savings.●

By Mr. METZENBAUM:

S. 1589. A bill to amend the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 to include Columbiana County, OH, as part of the Appalachian region; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

INCLUSION OF COLUMBIANA COUNTY, OH, IN THE APPALACHIAN REGION

● Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, in 1965, Congress created the Appalachian Regional Commission, an agency dedicated to ending decades of social, cultural and economic isolation within Appalachia. Over the course of the past 25 years, the ARC has been an unqualified success. Schools have been built, roads constructed, water and sewer lines needed to attract industry have been laid. Head Start, senior programs, community recreation centers, and many other programs have helped to improve the lives of millions of people who live in the region.

I am today introducing legislation to correct an oversight that occurred when the ARC legislation was enacted 25 years ago. At that time, Columbiana County, OH, was supposed to be included in the group of Appalachian counties that made up the region. Unfortunately, local officials in Columbiana County who feared being labeled socially and economically backward, therefore declined to join the commission. As a result the county has been unable to benefit from ARC programs ever since.

Since 1965, the economic position of Columbiana County has deteriorated. Through much of the 1980's, the county has had a double digit unemployment rate. Per capita income has fallen from 89 percent of Ohio's rate to 79 percent, and the area population is predicted to fall by more than 10 percent during the next 20 years. The county needs help.

This bill would put Columbiana County back in the designated Appalachian region. The county shares many of the social and cultural characteristics of the region, and therefore I believe it is only fair that we help these folks obtain the same benefits that are available to others throughout this section of the country.●

S. 1590. A bill to transfer certain rights-of-way to the Elephant Butte Irrigation District of New Mexico, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

ELEPHANT BUTTE IRRIGATION DISTRICT

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to transfer certain rights-of-way to the Elephant Butte Irrigation District of New Mexico, and for other purposes.

The Elephant Butte Irrigation District [EBID] is a quasi-municipal corporation formed in cooperation with the United States Bureau of Reclamation under the laws of the State of New Mexico. The EBID is a successor to the Elephant Butte Water Users Association. It was established in 1905 as a preliminary component for the Rio Grande project that was authorized in 1906. The EBID, through various repayment contracts with the Bureau of Reclamation, made its final payment for the construction of the project in September 1971.

On February 15, 1979, the Bureau transferred the operation and maintenance of the New Mexico portion of the Rio Grande project to the EBID. This year the EBID marks its 10th anniversary operating the Rio Grande project, and over these past 10 years they have had the opportunity to evaluate and recommend improvements to the project.

Over the last decade, the costs to EBID for the annual operation and maintenance charges by the Bureau of Reclamation have increased 141 percent, while the duties and responsibilities of the Bureau have continued to decrease. In an effort to halt the spiraling costs of the annual operation and maintenance budget, EBID assumed operation and maintenance responsibilities over the three diversion dams within the EBID boundaries. Within 2 years, the Bureau of Reclamation's budget again outstripped the savings that had been achieved with the district assumed greater responsibilities.

The district has also had a continuing problem with encroachment on their rights-of-way and easements which severely impacts the project's operations. There have also been delays in processing and issuing permits to cross these easements and rights-of-way which undermines the efficiency of the various utilities and water companies that work hand-in-hand with the district.

Several years ago the Bureau of Reclamation established a policy of transferring single-purpose and many multi-purpose facilities to local water organizations for operation and maintenance. In an effort to implement that plan, the district has initiated this legislation for the return of the remaining district works so that it may assume complete operation and maintenance control over them. Part of a contract entered into between the Bureau and the district in 1979 provided that "upon the execution of this contract, the United States shall transfer to the Elephant Butte Irrigation District, and the district shall assume the operation and maintenance of the transferred district works." The term "transferred district works" in the contract refers to the distribution and drainage systems for the operation and maintenance of the irrigation district.

In addition to this contract language transferring the balance of the district works, statutory language found in 43 U.S.C. 498 also provides that when repayment to the Government has been made, the title to, and the management and operation of the irrigation works should pass to the owners of the land irrigated by the project. This statute was section 6 of the original 1902 Reclamation Act.

This legislation provides the Secretary of the Interior with the necessary authority to transfer back to EBID all those district works covered by the 1979 contract and 43 U.S.C. 498. The EBID has demonstrated clearly its ability to govern, control, maintain, and operate its portion of the project in an efficient manner. Since the district assumed greater responsibility for the project, costs for operation and maintenance have been reduced substantially. The result is a net savings for the Federal Government and lower water rates for members of the district. In this time of tight budgets and fiscal restraint, this transfer serves the best interest of all parties involved.

This measure is identical to H.R. 3196, sponsored by Representative JOE SKEEN. I urge the Senate to approve this legislation.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1590

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. TRANSFER.

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to transfer to the Elephant Butte Irrigation District, New Mexico, without cost to the district, title to such easements, ditches, laterals, canals, drains, and other rights-of-way, which the United States has acquired on behalf of the project, that are used solely for the purpose of serving Elephant Butte Irrigation District lands and which the Secretary determines are necessary to enable the Elephant Butte Irrigation District to carry out operation and maintenance with respect to that portion of the Rio Grande project to be transferred. The transfer of the title to such easements, ditches, laterals, canals, drains, and other rights-of-way located in New Mexico, which the Secretary has, that are used for the purpose of jointly serving Elephant Butte Irrigation District and El Paso County Water Improvement District No. 1, may be transferred to Elephant Butte Irrigation Distict upon agreement by the Secretary and both districts. Any transfer under this section shall be subject to the condition that the Elephant Butte Irrigation District assumes the responsibility for operating and maintaining that portion of such projects. Title to, and management and operation of, the reservoirs and the works necessary for their protection and operation shall remain in the United States until otherwise provided by an Act of Congress.●

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 68—AUTHORIZING A CONCERT ON THE CAPITOL GROUNDS

Mrs. KASSEBAUM (for herself, Mr. PELL, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. KERRY, Mr. SIMON, Mr. SANFORD, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. MURKOWSKI, and Mr. MACK) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

S. CON. RES. 68

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the National Park Service shall be permitted to sponsor a concert by the American Soviet Youth Orchestra on the Capitol grounds on Tuesday, August 28, 1990, such concert to be free to the public and arranged not to interfere with the needs of Congress, under conditions to be provided by the Architect of the Capitol.

● Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, the American Soviet Youth Orchestra performed brilliantly last summer at the Kennedy Center under the direction of Zubin Mehta. It was a moving and unforgettable evening not only for these fine young musicians from the United States and the Soviet Union but also for the audience.

The nationwide competition for the 1990 American Soviet Youth Orchestra is in its final stages. In July 1990, the 50 United States winners will join with their 50 Soviet counterparts in rehearsals at the Moscow State Conservatory, to be followed by the Moscow performance and a tour of the Soviet Union and five cities in Europe. The orchestra will then travel to the United States where plans call for a performance on the Capitol grounds and public concerts in major U.S. cities.

In this country, the Oberlin College Conservatory of Music is sponsoring the orchestra, and in the Soviet Union the sponsors are the Ministry of Culture and the Moscow State Conservatory. First Lady Mrs. George Bush is the American honorary chairman. Mrs. Raisa Gorbachev has recently been invited to be the Soviet honorary chairman.

The orchestra needs the permission of Congress to perform on the Capitol grounds. The enclosed concurrent resolution simply provides that permission and does not have funding as an objective. The orchestra is supported primarily by donations from individuals, corporations, and foundations.

Senator CLAIBORNE PELL, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I are pleased to submit this concurrent resolution. We would like to thank our colleagues on the committee who are cosponsoring the concurrent resolution.●

TOM VAUGHAN IS HISTORY

● Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise today to recognize the lifetime achievement of my good friend, Mr. Thomas Vaughan, director of the Oregon Historical Society.

The Oregon Historical Society, founded in 1898, now boasts an annual budget of more than $3 million. The organization has the highest per capita membership of any State and is considered to be among the finest regional societies in the United States. After 35 years of dedicated service, Tom Vaughan retired as the Oregon director on August 12, 1989.

During his tenure, the Oregon Historical Society grew at a phenomenal rate and now includes a museum, a publishing house with nearly 150 titles, and a research library. Over 25,000 schoolchildren visit the museum each year.

Tom's outstanding achievements were recently featured in the Oregonian. It is an honor to include in the RECORD the following article entitled "Tom Vaughan is History," and the editorial entitled "Tom Vaughan, a Character." I applaud Tom for his many years of wonderful service to the State of Oregon and the country.

The article follows:

TOM VAUGHAN IS HISTORY

(By Jann Mitchell)

The dusty boxes were piled higgledy-piggledy, as the new director put it, at the Oregon Historical Society on the second floor of the Portland Public Auditorium.

It was 1954, and 29-year-old Tom Vaughan was determined to create order of the musty, dusty elk antlers, yellowing papers and American Indian baskets stashed on stairs. From one box he palmed a small silver seal, its face tarnished by time.

Polishing revealed a tiny beaver gnawing at an immense tree and a single word: perseverance. It was the seal and motto of the Northwest Company, the fur traders who helped open this region.

"It was meant to be that I should find this—it will be my motto," vowed Vaughan with typical drama.

Thirty-five years later, the tree has toppled, damming a precious pool of the past in the nation's premier historical society.

Vaughan found the Oregon Historical Society "in serious trouble—no home, no property, no nothing. We were on the verge of collapse—difficult but exciting. I was the forlorn hope, so no one was jumping in my way, breathing on me. I felt I'd found my great calling."

The society now spills over a city block worth $10 million, housing a museum, a publishing house with nearly 150 titles and a research library boasting nearly 100,000 books, 22 million manuscripts, nearly 3 million photographs, 15,000 maps and 7 million feet of film. The society also bought a Meier & Frank warehouse in Northwest Portland to store its collection.

The society writes the historical plaques throughout the state, owns the exhibits in the state Capitol and the furniture in the governor's mansion, supports local museums and is host to 25,000 schoolchildren yearly.

Chartered in 1898, the society has grown from a staff of five, an annual budget of $38,000 and a membership of 1,500 in 1954 to a staff of 95, budget of more than $3 million and membership of 8,500. Some states have larger historical societies, but Oregon's has the highest per capita membership, whose dues pay 13 percent of its budget. The society receives 33 percent of its money from the state, 33 percent from endowments, 20 percent from private gifts and 1 percent from sales.

"To have interested actively that many people is a major accomplishment," said W. Kaye Lamb of Vancouver, B.C., Canada's chief archivist from 1948-68. He ranks the Oregon Historical Society among the highest regional societies on this continent.

To Vaughan, history is "this incredible, endlessly moving picture. Our mission is to excite a person to say, 'I'm part of all that. Life didn't begin when I was born.' "

The industrious beaver has earned his rest. His directorship becomes history Aug. 12.

At 64, Vaughan has earned the title of Historian Laureate from the Oregon Legislature and Commander of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire from Queen Elizabeth II. He has edited and/or written 16 books and made five films. He has traveled Russia's Trans-Siberian Railroad in quest of material on Siberian explorers and logged 600,000 miles by car in Oregon—getting only one ticket, and that on a road he designed. Many applaud him as Oregon's top fundraiser; some venture he's also its best politician.

"That's not true, but I just love politicians—they can't be successful without discipline. I'm proudest of my discipline," Vaughan demurred in the deliberate, elongated tones his familiars call "the T-o-m V-a-u-g-h-a-n voice."

The pace is as slow as a dull history text before Friday's final bell. But the content is richly detailed, resonant with the color of yesteryear. How many men refer to themselves as lads or describe themselves as vexed? Vaughan chooses his words with the deliberation most people reserve for the dessert tray. He's not the kind of man to whom one says "Yo, Tom."

Tom Vaughan could intimidate people. His great, shaggy brows play Lewis and Clark across his forehead, scouting out the best routes to a goal. Grand arm flourishes accompany his conversation, which is punctuated with quotes from the famous (he tactfully adds, "Francis Bacon, whom you know is the English philosopher . . ." lest ignorance embarrass a listener). Yet, his enthusiasm saves the phrases from becoming benedictions; he beguiles the small-town resident and big-city legislator equally.

"He is as at home in Buckingham Palace or the White House as he is in Condon or Fossil," said Elizabeth Johnson of Redmond, longtime board member who, along with her late husband, Sam, is also a longtime friend. "He can adapt his attitude and attire to mesh with the local people."

Vaughan's costumes help. He doesn't blush at appearing publicly in a kilt, cowboy duds or 1887 tails.

He has donned medieval robes for the Magna Carta exhibition, worn 1930s garb and a bowler to the state Capitol's 50th anniversary, sported a straw boater and white suit for the rededication of Vista House. He recently wore to an annual meeting the same suit he was interviewed in 35 years ago; told then he looked like an Anglican bishop, he decided he'd keep it.

Friends recall the events Vaughan has staged, from a promotional picnic in Condon that featured a stuffed buffalo, to an armed ambush when board members and supporters took a train to the Pendleton Round-Up, to standing on the beachheads of France dramatically reading aloud the memoirs of World War II servicemen.

Sporting such flair on his own, Vaughan has little reason to leap into another man's shoes. But he would have "loved to trail along as the partner of Marco Polo—and I'd cherish chatting with Newton. George Washington is my favorite hero. I still think he's not yet truly understood."

All people—famous and unknown—energize him because "we're all in this together." Never bored on his backroad visits, he found "simple values—the real thing. I'll miss that."

The Dale Carnegie of Oregon plucks rather than pries money from supporters' hands. Vaughan believes in his cause and inspires others to.

"That's my skill—I somehow am able to convey a sense of excitement about something that is not tangible," he said. "I have a total obligation, or we wouldn't have flourished. I believe so deeply in what we're doing and how we spend the money."

He also believes in building slowly. The society's square block was purchased during 16 deals over 29 years. He never has held a membership drive.

"Never in 35 years have I said, 'Think how we have done all this!' People want a challenge, or some of the best would be off in another place where they were needed more," Vaughan reasons. "You've got to plan in such a way that the first response is not 'no.' "

"I don't know how many boards I've sat on where people said, 'What we need is another Tom Vaughan,' " said Brian Booth, Portland attorney and community leader in the arts.

Booth and others say Vaughan epitomizes the strengths of a chief executive; the highest professional standards and a strong record of accomplishment in fund raising, public relations and working with the Legislature.

Vaughan passes the hat with such finesse that Oregon legislative officers have announced his appearances before the Ways and Means Committee so legislators could catch his act.

"People understand his mission," said former Gov. Vic Atiyeh. Giving becomes "a desire on people's part to be a part of the successful mission the society's been on. I've seen other groups apply inordinate pressure. With Tom and his network of friends, it's all done in the manner of a good cause, not twisting arms."

"People come from all over the country and say, 'Tell us the secret,' " said Vaughan. "I tell them it's hard work and methodical, slogging discipline. Their eyes glaze over at the notion.

"People think I have a tree I won't let other people near, that I shake it and casually pick the money up. I've worried about money every hour of every day for the last 35 years. It's a gnawing, erosive concern."

Concern about money is not surprising to find in man who was one of seven children raised by a father working in the Vancouver shipyards. Vaughan was born in Seattle, but spent his boyhood in the Cowlitz Valley 50 miles north of Portland.

His parents' love of history, their large library and inspiring teachers prompted Vaughan's passion for the past. He creates a canvas from the air and paints word pictures of a childhood with rivers choked with logs, salmon and steamboats: "Such plentitude! Everyone thought it would last forever," Vaughan said wistfully.

World War II interrupted college, but after serving in the Marines, Vaughan graduated from Yale University and knocked about. He worked with a survey crew for an airfield in Anchorage, Alaska, and toiled in the oil fields of Texas and Alberta, Canada. At 23, he enrolled in the University of Wisconsin to get a master's degree in American history.

He was doing pre-doctoral work when he hired as his research assistant Elizabeth Crownhart, dubbed "Sherry" at age 9 when a family friend noted that her hair was the color of the wine. They eventually married and raised four children, becoming worldwide travelers and professional collaborators—working together on several books and translations of Siberian explorers of the Northwest, for which Crownhart-Vaughan learned Russian. She is director of the society's North Pacific Studies Center; many call the husband-wife scholars a team.

She was attracted by Vaughan's "aura of excitement about everything he does and thinks."

"Women of my generation were brought up to hold back, not to be too obviously bright. It was very exciting to find someone who was so brilliant himself and certain of who he was that I never had to hold back. Just the opposite; it was a challenge to be my very best. It was true with our children, as well as with his staff."

Tom Vaughan fans say he is the proverbial tough act to top.

"I almost feel sorry for the new director," Atiyeh said. "Tom is that very unique person who just doesn't come along. He gives credit to a lot of other people, but he's the genius of it. Some people think it's the Tom Vaughan Historical Society."

James Thayer Sr., immediate past board president, said that his toughest job was searching for Vaughan's successor.

He is comfortable with the selection of William J. Tramposch, director of the Colonial Williamsburg Foundation in Williamsburg, Va., "because I had the total backing of Tom and Sherry. They thought we made a great selection—the greatest reward I had for something I didn't want to do."

Vaughan, the dedicated beaver, may be finishing gnawing, but he'll never stop knowing.

Is history shaped by the impersonal forces of economics and geography or by the deeds of men and women? The career of Tom Vaughan argues that the force of an individual personality can have a powerful effect.

Much has been appropriately said elsewhere about the growth of the Oregon Historical Society under the leadership of Thomas J.G. Vaughan, who retired Saturday from 35 years as its executive director.

What needs to be remembered along with that record is the flavor of Tom Vaughan, the man. He has character and he is one. These are some of his ingredients:

Presence. His typical greeting, "Hello. I'm Tom Vaughan," somehow combines warmth with just a touch of a blessing.

Understanding. Vaughan knows about all kinds of people because he has seen a good bit of life. He went to Yale, and he holds a medal from Queen Elizabeth II, but he also was a Marine and an oil-field roustabout.

Diligence. Many people have marveled at his ability to win ever-increasing appropriations from the Oregon Legislature (although he always points out that the state provides only about one-third of the historical society's financial support). What the envious may not know is the amount of time Vaughan has spent, months ahead of every legislative session, talking with legislators and the governor's budget-makers about the society's needs and its potential.

Daring. His slightly reckless courage launched him, for example, on his spectacularly successful explorations of the historical archives of Soviet Siberia—not by the obvious but dead-end approach through the bureaucracy of Moscow, but by way of the back door. He boarded the trans-Siberian railroad from the east and got off at stops in Central Asia to meet librarians who had never heard of him.

Scope. Some regional historians limit themselves to pioneer diaries and wagon tracks. Important as that is, Vaughan has seen more. He relates the history of Oregon to the clashes of empires, and has made the Oregon Historical Society a center for information about the ambitions and defeats of British fleets and Spanish friars, Russian czars and Chinese mandarins.

Improvisation. Not even Tom Vaughan wins 'em all, but he has an uncanny talent for making an apparent setback seem to be what he intended all along, and to turn it into something for the historical society's advantage.

He has had the support his fellow-historian wife, Elizabeth, and of a staff capable of filling in details within the outlines he has sketched. But he chose the staff and inspired it.

The Oregon Historical Society's charter directs it to hold its materials "in trust for the people of the state of Oregon." Tom Vaughan has been faithful to that trust.●

SOUTH AFRICAN MINISTER URGES MORE SANCTIONS TO END APARTHEID

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, recently, the Illinois Times ran an article and quoted a South African Lutheran minister, Zwoitwaho Nevhutalu, saying what I have sensed overwhelmingly in talking to blacks in South Africa and from South Africa.

There is a notion that is much too widespread that most blacks in South Africa are opposed to economic sanctions.

The opposite is clearly the case.

I urge my colleagues in the House and Senate to read this article. At this point, I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

SOUTH AFRICAN MINISTER URGES MORE SANCTIONS TO END APARTHEID

Zwoitwaho Nevhutalu believes black South Africans face a choice between competing evils. The lesser evil, says the Lutheran minister from Venda, a city in northern South Africa, is the loss of jobs as a result of economic sanctions by western countries and businesses against the South African government. The greater evil, says Nevhutalu, is the government, which ignores human rights, represses individual freedoms, illegally imprisons its citizens, and kills innocent men, women, and children who disagree with its policies. He says it will take more of the lesser evil, the bitter pill of economic sanctions, to eradicate the greater evil.

The United States and European nations have employed economic sanctions—such as embargoes on coal and manufactured goods—to pressure the white minority South African government to abolish its system of apartheid, the separation of the races and repression of majority blacks. Blacks, who cannot vote under apartheid, are segregated from whites in housing, schooling, and other social contact and have limited freedom of movement within their own country. Many Western businesses also are "disinvesting" from South Africa, shutting down operations and withdrawing investments in the country.

"The government derives its oppressive power from the economy," says Nevhutalu, who was in Springfield last week to encourage church congregations, public officials, and private individuals to support pending federal legislation to increase economic sanctions against South Africa. Opponents of such economic pressure contend that black South Africans suffer the greatest hardships from a worldwide attempt to force the white ruling government of P.W. Botha to recognize the rights of blacks. They note, for example, that nearly 10,000 black miners have lost their jobs since foreign investors began moving their businesses out of the country five years ago. And it has been estimated that sanctions and disinvestment by foreign corporations could cost nearly 2 million jobs by the year 2000, most of them unskilled labor positions filed by black South Africans.

But Nevhutalu says that, for blacks, losing a job is preferable to living under a repressive regime. "What is the point of a job when you are dead?" he asks. "People are dying with jobs because of apartheid. Whatever good foreign investors do cannot outweigh the suffering, pain, and death in black communities."

Moreover, he says, job security for blacks has never existed in South Africa. Blacks, particularly miners, have never had permanent employment, he says. Workers can be laid off at the least provocation, such as disagreeing with company rules or seeking higher wages, because there is a large pool of unemployed laborers. The South African government publicly claims that sanctions have not done the economy much harm, but Nevhutalu disagrees. He says sanctions are causing major rifts between white politicans and business people in his country. Members of the white business community recently met with members of the outlawed African National Congress to discuss a peaceful resolution to apartheid, without the approval of the government. "We think sanctions are effective," says Nevhutalu. "Although the politicians say sanctions can't hurt them, anyone who calls for sanctions can be tried for treason and put to death. So the government and the business people are very worried about sanctions."

Nevhutalu discredits a recent poll commissioned by the Chamber of Mines, a private association of South African mining companies, which has gained worldwide attention. The poll reported that 82 percent of the 1,400 black South Africans interviewed said they opposed sanctions and 85 percent opposed disinvestment by foreign companies. Nevhutalu says black churches and trade unions have rejected the results of the poll. If blacks had the freedom to discuss and support sanctions, the overwhelming majority of them would, he says. "If you say you favor sanctions—you are breaking the law. You can only speak openly against sanctions. Some organizations, such as the South African Council of Churches and the Congress of South African Trade Unions, openly defy the law and ask foreign governments for more sanctions.

Nevhutalu says Americans can help end apartheid by putting increased pressure on the South African government. He says an important part of his mission to Illinois, Iowa, and Indiana is to educate Midwesterners on the role they can play. "There are many things people can do as individuals, groups, or a city," he says. "People need to be informed about what's happening in South Africa—then they can participate." The Springfield City Council will be voting on a resolution to support federal legislation to increase sanctions. Ward 2 Alderman Frank McNeil also has introduced an ordinance that would prevent the city from purchasing materials or equipment from companies doing business with South Africa. Nevhutalu suggests individuals write letters urging an end to apartheid to South African consulates in the U.S., and to the prime minister and minister of police in South Africa. Groups can demonstrate against apartheid outside of South African embassies and consulates, such as the one in Chicago, and boycott companies doing business in South Africa.

Because laws to suppress individual freedoms are being passed almost daily, Nevhutalu is concerned that it will be many years before blacks will be able to overthrow apartheid. "I can't talk about a peaceful resolution—it's already bloody," he says. "There is no peace in South Africa. People are dying right now as I sit here."●

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I am pleased that we were able to work out with Senator SASSER, the chairman of the General Services, Federalism and District of Columbia Subcommittee, a reasonable sunset provision for this bill to enable the Senate to fully consider the broader issue of civil contempt after further study. The 18-month sunset will serve as an action-enforcing mechanism for us to do that. The bill before the Senate amends the statute governing civil contempt in the District of Columbia only with regard to child custody cases. It may be appropriate, however, to apply similar limitations to all civil contempt proceedings in both the District of Columbia and our Federal court system.

The amendment to which we have agreed would limit the application of S. 1163 to an 18-month period and would require the Senate Judiciary and Governmental Affairs Committees to study the question of civil contempt during that time and report to the Senate on any recommendations for changes to current law by September 1, 1990. We will then have a 6-month period to time in which to consider legislation embodying those recommendations. The amendment makes clear that anyone incarcerated for civil contempt during the 18-month period would be protected by the 12-month cap, even if their incarceration for the 12 months extends beyond the 18-month deadline.

By proceeding in this manner, we will enable ourselves to address what we know now to be a serious problem and at the same time allow us to have the benefit of a comprehensive review of the question to address the broader issues. If unlimited civil contempt is inappropriate for the District of Columbia courts, then it seems logical that it would be inappropriate for our Federal courts. Likewise, if it is appropriate for child custody cases, it may also be appropriate for all types of cases. That is what we need to examine in the next year, and then, based on the recommendations we receive, legislate accordingly.

I only reluctantly voted to report this bill to the full Senate. I was concerned that we didn't devote enough attention and study to this subject. While we have limited this bill's application to only child custody cases, further examination of the issue may have led us to conclude that the 12-month limit should apply in all civil contempt proceedings.

At the same time, Congress has not acted to restrict the length of civil contempt in the Federal court system. We would significantly benefit from the advice and guidance of the Senate Judiciary Committee as to whether a limitation on civil contempt has been considered in that committee and if so, what the committee's conclusions on the subject were.

Mr. President, I appreciate the cooperation and effort of the Senator from Tennessee and my friend from New Hampshire, Senator RUDMAN.●

HONORING THE 25TH EVACUATION HOSPITAL

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I rise today to give recognition and honor to the physicians and nurses who served in the 25th Evacuation Hospital during World War II. Originally organized as an evacuation hospital, the 25th Evacuation Hospital unit actually served the command as a combined station, evacuation, and general hospital, rendering surgery, treatment, and evacuation during a 2½-year period to more than 20,000 resident patients, 36,000 outpatients, and 68,000 treatment cases not requiring hospitalization or out-patient services.

The 25th Evacuation Hospital was staffed mostly by physicians and nurses drawn from West Suburban Hospital, as it was then known, the majority of whom were living in Oak Park and River Forest, IL.

The 25th Evacuation Hospital began limited operations as a field hospital in Espiritu Santo, New Hebrides, on February 8, 1943, despite torrential rains, intense heat, tropical diseases, and enemy bombardment.

On September 5, 1951, the Secretary of the Army, under General Orders No. 77, awarded the 25th Evacuation Hospital the meritorious unit commendation for exceptionally meritorious conduct in the performance of outstanding service in the Asiatic-Pacific Theater during the period of November 20, 1942, and November 30, 1945. Hundreds of American lives were saved through the persistent and industrious application to duty by the members of the 25th Evacuation Hospital.

I ask my colleagues of the Congress to join me in recognizing the outstanding contributions of these individuals in providing the needed care for our Armed Forces. I believe their contribution to the war effort was critical to the victory of the United States and Allied Forces in the Pacific.

Although the 25th Evacuation Hospital created a depletion of physicians and nurses in the Oak Park and River Forest communities, I am proud of their efforts and pleased to know they will be remembered by the dedication of a Memorial Plaque on September 13, 1989 at the West Suburban Hospital Medical Center in Oak Park, IL.●

SENATE CONSIDERATION OF S. 1163

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I want to commend Senator SASSER for the hard work he and his subcommittee staff have performed in the Governmental Affairs Committee in fashioning this compromise approach to a very difficult issue.

S. 1163 limits to 12 months the time an individual may be jailed in the District of Columbia for civil contempt.

The bill is limited to imprisonment for civil contempt arising from child custody cases.

S. 1163 was reported out of the Governmental Affairs Committee on July 26, 1989. All of the Governmental Affairs Committee members deserve praise for working to bring this bill to the floor so quickly.

A court uses the civil contempt power to compel parties before the court to obey its orders. Sanctions for civil contempt—sanctions such as imprisonment—are the court's only means to ensure compliance with and respect for the decisions it makes.

This power to coerce is vital to the judiciary's enforcement of the rule of law. However, over time, coercive sanctions lose their effect. The person imprisoned or fined becomes resigned to defying the court no matter what the consequences. At that point, sanctions, turn into punishments for obstinate behavior—severe punishments which are imposed without normal due process protections.

S. 1163 simply states Congress' belief that, after 12 months, the sanction of imprisonment for civil contempt arising from a child custody case can no longer be coercive. After that amount of time, an individual jailed for civil contempt must be charged and accorded full due process protections if he or she is to be kept in jail.

The problem of long-term incarceration for civil contempt was brought to the Governmental Affairs Committee's attention by the case of Morgan versus Foretich. The Superior Court of the District of Columbia has kept Dr. Elizabeth Morgan jailed for almost 2 years in an attempt to compel her to turn over her child to Dr. Foretich for visitation. Without judging the merits of Drs. Morgan and Foretich's various claims and counterclaims in their drawn-out custody battle, I believe that Dr. Morgan's situation is a clear demonstration of the injustice of long-term indefinite incarceration.

S. 1163 addresses this injustice only in limited circumstances: civil contempt arising from child custody cases in the District of Columbia. There is good reason for this. Beyond the Morgan case, the Governmental Affairs Committee heard no evidence that District of Columbia Courts—the only courts in the committee's jurisdiction—have relied on lengthy imprisonment for civil contempt. We also had no evidence before us detailing the effect that generally restricting the courts' civil contempt power might have on the administration of justice in cases other than child custody. We in Congress bear the burden of proof when we seek to limit an inherent and essential power of the courts. As of now, that burden has been satisfied only for the power to incarcerate for civil contempt arising out of custody cases.

Furthermore, the limitation S. 1163 places on the D.C. courts is only on their punitive power—not on their coercive power. And even that limitation is in accordance with accepted legal principles. S. 1163 simply affirms the long accepted rule that punitive imprisonment be preceded by constitutionally guaranteed due process.●

I ask that the board's tribute be printed in the RECORD.

The tribute follows:

Whereas it is the greatest achievement in a lifetime of accomplishments to be of service; and

THE SEC HAS MADE A MISTAKE

● Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I rise to express my deep disappointment and sense of frustration that the Securities and Exchange Commission does not intend to require Sir James Goldsmith and his fellow foreign financiers to make the required filings under the Securities Act of 1933 with respect to their highly leveraged, noncash offer for B.A.T. Industries. In a letter to our congressional colleagues, outgoing Chairman Ruder indicated that his agency would closely monitor the bid but would not now assert jurisdiction over the Goldsmith Group's offer.

Mr. President, timeliness is critical. Given the substantial effect the offer will have on U.S. investors, I am hard-pressed to understand why the Commission would not assert jurisdiction. The Commission's position is particularly surprising because the offer includes $6 billion in dollar-denominated junk bonds to be marketed by Drexel Burnham that ultimately are likely to come to rest in the United States. I am quite surprised the Chairman did not even address this issue in his letter.

As my colleagues no doubt are aware, the Goldsmith Group appears to have carefully crafted their bid for B.A.T. to avoid the reach of our securities laws. They must be thrilled to think that their gambit has worked. I hope they have not broken out the champagne bottles, because this issue is far from settled. If Congress does not step in, I am concerned that the SEC will have set a precedent for others to follow to avoid U.S. jurisdiction, further fueling the use of junk bonds and other forms of debt.

Mr. President, I must admit that I have closely followed this bid because it would lead to the bustup of BATUS Inc., which owns Marshall Field's, one of the great retail institutions in the city of Chicago. Among my colleagues, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has a similar affection for this important institution, as does my good friend Mr. SIMON. We believe it is important that Congress carefully assess all aspects of the proposed bid. As Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI said in an August 9 letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, "[t]he magnitude of this takeover attempt, the tax policy issues raised by the proposed form of the takeover, and the potential significant negative impact on communities across the Nation render this transaction worthy of review by the Congress and the administration."

Now that we have the position of the outgoing Chairman of the Commission, it seems to me we need to discuss with the President's nominee the importance we in Congress attach to having the SEC step in to ensure that U.S. shareholder interests are adequately protected.

Mr. President, I ask that the correspondence I referenced above be included in the RECORD at this point.

The correspondence follows:

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS,
Washington, DC, August 9, 1989.

Hon. NICHOLAS F. BRADY,
Secretary of the Treasury, Department of the Treasury, Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY BRADY: As you are aware, Sir James Goldsmith and other foreign investors have announced their intention to acquire B.A.T. Industries in a highly leveraged transaction. B.A.T. Industries is the largest company in the United Kingdom outside of the utility and oil industries. Its U.S. subsidiary, BATUS, Inc. ("BATUS") holds a network of businesses in the tobacco, paper, retailing and insurance industries, including such well known companies as Marshall Field's, Saks Fifth Avenue and Farmers Insurance Group. According to information I have received from parties interested in this transaction, it is the intention of Sir Goldsmith and his partners to break-up BATUS and sell the non-tobacco businesses in order to repay the acquisition debt.

The magnitude of this takeover attempt, the tax policy issues raised by the proposed form of the takeover, and the potential significant negative impact on communities across the nation render this transaction worthy of review by the Congress and the Administration. Within the United States, corporations held through BATUS have combined assets of $11.5 billion, gross revenues for the year ended 1988 of approximately $7.4 billion, more than 55,000 employees and operations in all 50 states. In addition, I have a particular interest in this transaction as a Member of Congress representing the Chicago area. BATUS has recently demonstrated its commitment to Chicago with a $110 million renovation of Marshall Field's downtown flagship store. Obviously, this retail chain is important to the economic well-being of the Chicago area. Moreover, of the 15,000 sales agents and district managers associated with Farmers Insurance Group, over 1,300 employees, agents and managers reside in Illinois.

Mr. Secretary, I know that we share concerns regarding the proliferation of hostile takeovers and related transactions which cause an increase in aggregate levels of corporate debt. The Committee on Ways and Means held seven days of hearings on these issues earlier this year. As a result of these hearings, the Committee has tentatively agreed to several provisions as part of its fiscal year 1990 reconciliation measure, including a 'loophole closer' recommended by the Administration revising the treatment of certain bonds containing original issue discount ("OID").

The proposed takeover and break-up of BATUS raises several concerns which the tentative decisions made by the Committee would seek to rectify. It is my understanding that the acquisition transaction has been structured so that the foreign investors would utilize a Bermuda corporation as the acquiring corporation. The ability of foreign acquirers, directly or through foreign entities, to obtain a competitive advantage in leveraged acquisitions and dispositions of interests in domestic entities was a specific concern raised during the Ways and Means Committee's hearings. This concern was one basis for the Committee's adoption of provisions affecting the sale of domestic stock held by foreigners and the treatment of so-called 'earnings stripping' transactions. In addition, it is my understanding that a significant portion of the transaction will be financed by dollar-denominated junk bonds issued through the Bermuda corporation and marketed by Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. The OID proposal sponsored by the Administration and subsequently adopted by the Committee seeks to restrain unintended subsidies for excessive rates of corporate debt.

I believe it is very important that we review these decisions of the Committee in light of the BATUS transaction. My staff has preliminarily informed me that, based upon the information available on the transaction to date, it is unclear what impact the Administration's proposal and decision of the Committee would have on the tax consequences of the transaction. It is my further understanding that in the near future more information regarding the details of the transaction will be available in accordance with United Kingdom securities rules. Accordingly, I propose that our staffs meet as quickly as possible after reviewing further information on the transaction.

The purpose of the meeting of our staffs would be to review the details of the BATUS takeover transaction and to assess the potential impact of the Committee's decisions on the tax consequences of the transaction. In addition, the staffs would discuss the important issues of tax policy raised by this transaction and consider any possible further legislative options, if appropriate, for review by the Committee when it resumes its reconciliation deliberations in September. In this regard, I would like the staffs to consider several tax policy issues, including whether the use of U.S. assets of a foreign target as the principal source of funds for repayment of the acquisition debt would constitute a sufficient diversion from corporate purposes to require the imposition of U.S. income tax on any built-in gains in such assets.

Because of Congressional recess schedules, I would ask that the staff meeting be held as soon as possible. Please contact the Committee's Chief Counsel, Robert J. Leonard (225-3628) to schedule the staff meeting. Thank you for your prompt attention to this important issue.

Sincerely yours,
DAN ROSTENKOWSKI,
Chairman.

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION,
Washington, DC, September 6, 1989.

Hon. HAROLD ROGERS,
Ranking Minority Member, Subcommittee on the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies, Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN ROGERS: This letter responds to your letter of July 25, 1989, regarding the proposed tender offer and related activities by Hoylake Investments Ltd. ("Hoylake") undertaken to acquire B.A.T. Industries p.l.c. ("B.A.T."). The Commission has taken an active interest in this transaction and will continue to monitor compliance by the parties with all applicable U.S. securities laws and regulations.

Foreign issuers making an exchange offer of this kind frequently do not extend offers to holders in the United States because they are unwilling to bear the costs and other burdens of registering securities in the United States. The Commission is unable to require that Hoylake extend its offer to U.S. shareholders of B.A.T. since the U.S. securities laws and the principles of international comity would not permit the Commission to force a foreign issuer to enter the U.S. securities markets against its will.

SECURITIES ACT REGISTRATION

The Commission's staff has examined the offering materials, discussed the offer's exclusionary procedures with the British Takeover Panel, and considered submissions made by counsel for B.A.T. and Hoylake. The staff has concluded that the registration requirements of Section 5 of the Securities Act of 1933 (the "Securities Act") have not been triggered by the offer. Section 5 provides that, unless a registration statement is in effect, it is unlawful to use any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or the mails to offer or sell a security. Counsel for Hoylake has represented that, as a result of strict limitations imposed by Hoylake on the use of the U.S. jurisdictional means, holders in the United States are "effectively precluded" from participating in the proposed exchange offer and from receiving the securities being offered by Hoylake. At present, it appears that the means of interstate commerce have not been used and that no securities have been offered to persons in the United States (whether they hold B.A.T. shares directly or through American Depositary Receipts ("ADRs")), and that the transaction is therefore not subject to the registration provisions of the Securities Act.

EXCHANGE ACT

The filing and disclosure requirements of the Williams Act, which as you know govern the conduct of tender offers subject to the Act's provisions, do not apply to the tender offer because B.A.T.'s securities are not registered under Section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (the "Exchange Act"), and are not required to be registered. B.A.T.'s common stock is traded in the form of ADRs on the American Stock Exchange, but has unlisted trading privileges on that exchange rather than being listed. For that reason, it is exempt from registration under the Exchange Act pursuant to the "grandfather" provisions of Section 12(f)(1)(A). While Section 14(e) of the Exchange Act, and rules promulgated thereunder, apply to all tender offers, whether or not the securities are registered under the Exchange Act, jurisdiction to enforce those provisions, as well as the antifraud provisions generally, would not be available where, as here, the shares are not registered and no other U.S. jurisdictional means appear to have been triggered. Thus, absent circumstances directly or indirectly involving U.S. jurisdiction, the Commission has no authority to challenge the conduct of the offer.

We appreciate the concerns that have been raised about the effect of the proposed transaction on the employees and business of the companies owned in the United States by B.A.T. However, the Commission's authority in the area of tender offers does not extend to a determination of whether a transaction is in the interests of the target company's employees. The Commission's statutory function is to ensure that tender offers are made on the basis of full disclosure, but the Commission is required to be strictly neutral as between bidder and subject company and is not permitted to make any determination of the merits of a tender offer. Thus, even if the jurisdiction of the Williams Act had been triggered, the Commission would not have authority to review the effects of the offer on U.S. employees and operations.

Your letter also mentioned that U.S. Journalists had been excluded from press conferences relating to the transaction. In proposing Regulation 8, which would clarify the extraterritorial application of the Securities Act registration provisions, the Commission noted that:

. . . the proposed rule is not intended to limit or interfere with news stories or other bona fide journalistic activities, or otherwise hinder the flow of normal corporate news regarding foreign issuers. Access by American journalists to offshore press conferences, press releases and company press spokesmen in which an offshore offering is discussed need not be limited where the information is made available to the foreign and U.S. press generally and is not specifically intended to induce purchases of securities in the United States (Release No. 33-6779 (June 10, 1988) [53 FR 22662]).

This view also would apply with regard to the extraterritorial application of the Williams Act.

Thus, to summarize, in answer to your specific questions:

1. There appears to be no jurisdictional basis for applying Securities Act registration requirements;

2. There appears to be no jurisdictional basis for applying Exchange Act antifraud provisions, including Section 14(e); and

3. Investors in the United States will be treated differently than other B.A.T. shareholders because the offer is not being made to them, but the Commission does not have authority to cause such an offer to be made.

As stated above, the Commission is continuing to monitor the proposed transaction. If the staff's understanding of the facts as stated above should change, particularly with regard to jurisdiction, appropriate action will be taken promptly to enforce U.S. registration, tender offer, and antifraud laws where applicable.

Sincerely,

DAVID S. RUDER,

HIGHWAY SAFETY

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the Chicago Sun-Times recently had a fascinating story about the large number of accidents involving tractor-trailer trucks. Every year between 4,000 to 5,000 people are killed in accidents involving these vehicles.

But what struck me was the record of the United Parcel Service [UPS].

The Chicago Sun-Times has a brief story, as part of the larger story, by Leon Pitt and Roger Flaherty entitled "UPS Drivers Deliver Highway Safety Record." It shows what a responsible company can do that both protects public lives and, at the same time, I am sure, is good business for the UPS.

I commend the United Parcel Service, and I ask that the story be printed in the RECORD.

The story follows:

UPS DRIVERS DELIVER HIGHWAY SAFETY RECORD

United Parcel Service dresses most of its workers in unfashionable brown, and paints its parcel trucks and truck tractors the same dull color.

But the huge parcel handler flashes a sparkling road safety record—one-tenth the national average of accidents—according to the Congressional Office of Technology Assessment.

Its study, "Gearing Up for Safety," published last summer, noted the record was no accident, but the result of long-established safety practices.

In an office inside the cavernous UPS hub in Addison, regional safety manager Stan Wysocki recently discussed some of the procedures for tractor-trailer drivers. They start with setting reasonable driving times, including rest periods, for drivers to reach a relay point no farther than 150 miles away.

A UPS driver coming out of Chicago with an East Coast shipment might go to the Indiana-Ohio border where he will meet a driver with an eastbound load, Wysocki said. They switch trucks and each returns home in the same shift.

UPS drivers, unlike many in the industry, are salaried, not paid by the mileage they cover in a work week.

"We do a time study of each area, looking at speed limits, lights, traffic, road conditions," Wysocki said. This, he said, allows drivers to stay well within the federal 10-hour-a-day driving limit.

Drivers are kept on the same route for six months at a time, which allows regular work hours, another safety factor. And a supervisor checks for signs of fatigue before a driver's run begins.

UPS semitrailer drivers undergo an 80-hour program of classroom instruction and driving with a trainer. All drivers are accompanied by supervisors on four runs a year to check performance.

Drivers are assigned the same vehicle for long periods of time, a policy the company believes develops more careful observance of its mechanical needs as well as pride in its appearance. Trucks are checked about every 20 days, supervisor Larry Flaherty said.—Leon Pitt and Roger Flaherty.●

SPARKY ANDERSON

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, Michigan loves Sparky Anderson. His 10 years at the helm of our Tigers have been filled with excitement and only the occasional disappointment. They were years that saw one of the longest streaks of winning seasons in the majors. The Tigers posted second three times, took two divisional titles, and took it all with a World Series win in 1984.

One key to this success has been the unique character of Sparky Anderson and his ability to bring out the best in the players around him. In most careers you wouldn't have to look past the more than 800 wins of a manager to make a judgment of greatness. But in Sparky's case, the Tiger tally is added to a string of 863 wins in Cincinnati that together have landed him in the record books as the first manager to collect more than 800 wins in two different leagues. He is also the first manager to win 100 or more games in a season with two different teams.

Now, it's one thing to manage success, but entirely another thing to hold the reins during disappointment. Sparky has done both with a great deal of class.

One day last week, the Tigers had the dubious distinction of being the first team in the East Division of the American League to be mathematically eliminated from this year's playoffs. On that same day, the Tigers broke a 2-2 fourth inning tie with six runs, including two triples, and later added two more runs toward their 10-4 shellacking of the Cleveland Indians. Sparky's only comment in the Detroit Free Press on the day's events spoke volumes. "I don't remember the last time I had that much fun watching a game," he said.

To Tigers fans, the Anderson attitude means we've got the confidence to "get 'em next year." Like the ancient Phoenix—or maybe the modern Baltimore Orioles—the team will rise again. But Sparky's genius goes beyond the peaks and valleys of the scores. He's shown us, as we honor his 10th anniversary with a reception in Detroit hosted by Gov. Jim Blanchard, that you're never really down, you've never really lost, as long as you never quit, as long as you stay in the game with a smile.●

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

PRIME MINISTER MANLEY URGES INTERNATIONAL RESPONSE TO DEVELOPMENT, DEBT, AND DRUGS

HON. PETER H. KOSTMAYER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call my colleagues' attention to a recent speech by Prime Minister Michael Manley delivered at the TransAfrica Forum dinner on June 10, 1989.

In his speech, Prime Minister Manley addressed the connections between the depth of poverty experienced in the Third World, the burden of debt payments, and the growing narcotics problem. Developing countries are faced with the dilemma of servicing their debt at the expense of growth. In Jamaica 51 cents of every dollar goes to debt servicing. No growth means no jobs and no food for a hungry nation. For the jobless and hungry who are faced with their desperate situation, involvement in the drug trade becomes an issue of survival.

Prime Minister Manley points to legislation such as the Caribbean Regional Development Act of 1989, introduced by our colleague Mr. CROCKETT and incorporated into the House-passed version of the International Cooperation Act of 1989, which begins to address the development issues in a way that will help bring an end to this downward economic spiral. In addition, he calls for the development of an international drug strike force and a U.N. convention against drug trafficking.

Development, debt, and drugs are no longer issues that can or should be solved by one country. They are multilateral issues that demand a multilateral response. I urge my colleagues to take a close look at Mr. Manley's speech and to help us move toward multinational solutions to multinational problems.

ADDRESS BY HON. MICHAEL NORMAN MANLEY, PRIME MINISTER OF JAMAICA

And so I salute TransAfrica for the work that it did along with the members of the Congressional Black Caucus and many others in the United States in creating a sense of the international significance of apartheid. And I would like, with your permission, to speak of other threats that I believe exist, which I believe exist, which I believe are more international in character than we care to recognize and which I feel represent challenges that we must face. I do so as a man of the Caribbean. I do so as a representative of a very small island. I am proud that with us tonight is a congressman who is showing grest sensitivity to the problems of the Caribbean and who has a bill before Congress now that has great implications for the freedom and the capacity to move to self-reliance of those islands. And I pay tribute to Congressman George Crockett.

But I must say that everything that George can achieve, if he will forgive me the familiarity, everything that we can achieve in all the areas in which we work, I believe can be overwhelmed if we do not deal with a threat which I see standing like a dagger at the throat of civilization. I'm very proud that we have had him with us tonight, although I think he has now had to leave, I'm sorry he did not hear my words.

But there is a man who was with us tonight who has played a tremendous part in awakening the conscience of the United States to the threat of which I speak and I speak of drugs and I speak of the Reverend Jesse Jackson. There was a time when people deluded themselves into believing that apartheid was a problem between the black majority and the white minority of South Africa. And then in due course we came to understand that it really was an international threat.

There are people today who believe that the threat of drugs or drugs abuse and that companion in death, drug trafficking, is a phenomenon between societies that consume and particular countries that produce. And they are equally wrong. I know that in my country, we have had to recognize that drugs is not a matter of some high school kid losing his way. It's not just a matter of the search of people trapped in poverty for release.

What we really are dealing with is the most brutal and complete international criminal conspiracy that mankind has ever known. In my own small country, we feel a deep sense of responsibility to try to save ourselves and we are trying to increase our interdiction capabilities; we are trying to develop from our utterly rudimentary intelligence capabilities.

We are probably going to be one of the first small countries in the world to introduce a formal program of training in our educational system. We start in September in our primary school system to teach young children about drug abuse and the problem. We pray that the children will educate their parents. We hope that parents stimulated by their children will make common cause with teachers. I know that our church is mobilizing to help. We speak already to all our great sporting athletes. And Jamaica is one of the greatest athletic nations in the world. And I'm happy to say that every one of our sporting heroes, including those that we export to the United States like Patrick Ewing have all already promised to come and help the bureau model to do the things that we have to do. And so I think that we can say, in all conscience, that we are doing what we can to save ourselves.

We are very happy that we get tremendous cooperation from the authorities in the United States in this struggle and I do not know what we would do without that cooperation. But I'm very conscious of the fact that when we are finished with what we can do, when we are finished with the help that we do get and can get from the United States' authorities, that I sometimes have the feeling that we are playing at the periphery of a problem because I do not fool myself that if I can strengthen my defenses against a transshipment of hard drugs or against the export of marijuana and that that will help you to some extent with your own terrible problem, then we are dealing with people to whom the world is just a wide canvas of opportunity.

If I can shut off the roots in Jamaica, they can find ten other ways to go because they operate globally. Already they tell me that the people who run this international cartel feel that the U.S. market is about saturated with cocaine. So let's not increase supplies to the U.S. They are now probing Britain and probing Western Europe. And we are beginning to understand this but I don't think we really understand completely how massive is the thing that we face.

I will confess to you that I do not know how to build a society in Jamaica worth having on the basis of a drug culture. I do not know how to build a nation which can be overwhelmed and corrupted in its judicial and its security forces by the massive resources and the utter ruthlessness at the command of the drug barons.

In my country, we talk about the Mr. Bigs who are the ones who move the product. To me they are not Mr. Big, they are just minor subcontractors of the international operation. And so, Mr. Robinson, we have made a proposal, a very serious proposal, and I would love you to think about it because of your capacity to act. We believe that we need to internationalize the response to this problem.

I am reminded of how, when hijacking was a tremendous problem, we eventually had the intelligence as an international community to have a United Nations convention against hijacking because it was a problem and it brought together international resources.

I believe that we need a U.N. convention against drug trafficking. I believe that we need nations to subscribe to that, to contribute to it and to pledge mutual support under it. I believe that we need to have a centrally created means of training narcotics agents, developing intelligence to a higher level than at present. I believe that we need to have a body that can offer an internationally mobilized kind of assistance to countries who do not yet have the capability to fight this problem.

I believe that we can even see cases in countries like Colombia where they casually and arrogantly talk of their ability to pay off Colombia's national debt in return for free passage. And they kid you not when they say that they could. And where in that country they have actually units of the Colombian army. I would even like to know that there was an international strike force that could be called in at time of need within the realm of sovereignty and the privilege of sovereignty to help with training, with strengthening your agent capacity, with strengthening your intelligence capability while countries train their own capability. I believe that we need to do that and I have sometimes spoken and been told I was out of turn. I have not often yet been shown to be wrong.

And I believe that if the world does not wake up to this problem, we may yet find that we are overwhelmed by it. But I want to say the last thing, that the great market countries of North America and in Europe, that if we do not find the way to educate new populations that are drug resistant, new populations that have turned their back and not said no in rhetoric, but said no from the depth of understanding, if we do not do this, the demand pull of that market can yet defeat us all.

I hope TransAfrica, that you will play your part along with the Reverend Jackson and others in challenging this country to do something about that market that will yet provide the tragedy of the corruption that we all fight. I would like to end with another international problem. I know that your preoccupations are with Southern Africa, and so are mine. I know therefore I trespass on perhaps dangerous ground when I ask you into other views.

But I believe you have extraordinary capacity. We are very conscious of the fact that when you look at the drug problem, that the most difficult area in dealing with it is in the realm of poverty.

Experience shows that when better off kids flirt with drugs, that a good education program, appropriate rehabilitation reaches them and dramatically reduces the problem because really their problem is a problem of temporary escape from difficulties that are minor. The real problem with drugs is to be found in that hard brutal territory of poverty. Poverty brings a pain that is not easy to answer. Drugs bring a temporary release to that pain.

When people are trapped in poverty, community outreach programs do not get to them easily. When countries are poor, their capacity to resist is low. The ability to corrupt them is great. And therefore I see a very profound connection between some things that we must understand. We are beginning to understand the relationship between poverty and development.

We are willing, we are beginning to understand the relationship between poverty and drugs. More recently, we are all becoming conscious of that problem known as debt, debt that is crippling the chances of more than half of the world. And therefore in a very interesting and indirect way, but a very telling way, there is a connection between drugs and debt.

I come from a country that has never experimented with wasting money on buying jet planes. We have not tried to finance any dictatorships. We have never had political leaders who build up strings of poor opponents. We have been a hard-working people. We have disagreed sometimes amongst ourselves. Happily we have a peaceful and more politics today, God bless that.

I think we've all learned a lot, become more pragmatic, more realistic in Jamaica. And yet in spite of all of that, there we are with ambitious people, a political process that wants to be the agent of change and development on both sides, differences in methodology but I hope with a common objective. And yet we are trapped in huge problems.

And one of the problems we are trapped in is that of every dollar we struggle to earn with our exports and the things we send abroad, 51 cents goes right back out to service debt. So we're trying to run a country on a 49 cent dollar and I really suggest that some of you try that some time. And the debt problem has become, in my view, a sort of cumulative insanity of mankind.

And still we have people, in spite of the best efforts of former Secretary of the Treasury Baker and now very interesting new proposals by Secretary of the Treasury Brady, all of those concepts I predict are going to fail to deal with the problem. The problem is a large part of mankind, unable to buy your goods, unable to develop themselves because of the cumulative insanity of the debt problem.

And one of the things that you might also try to sensitize American public opinion about is that the debt problem hurts us, hurts the banks and hurts you. The banks know it and we know it, but forgive me, so far the American people find it difficult to recognize that they too are trapped in the difficulty; that you too are suffering the loss of all the exports and economic activity that could flow could we break out of the vicious circle in which we are caught.

And as long as we are caught in it, poverty in the world is going to be endemic. A few countries will break out, many will not. And what to me is a great tragedy is a failure of collective common sense. You know, I remember in 1944 into 1945, Breton Woods and the Marshall Plan was radical, it was revolutionary at the time.

And because of the imagination of the people that did it, breaking out of the thralldom of the past and the old shibboleths of tired habits, in a great act of imagination, management and statesmanship, the United States, Canada and Europe unleashed for themselves an unprecedented cycle of progress and development. We need something like that now. We need the act of statesmanship that recognizes that the debt problem is there like a huge, irrational obstacle in the path of progress.

That millions of people are trapped in a poverty that they need not endure and from which they could be released where there the act of statesmanship. It has to be tackled internationally. You cannot solve the debt problem between Mexico and the United States. Trust me when I tell you that you can't.

It has to be the subject of international discussion. We need an international institution that is designed to deal with its problems. It is only internationally that we can create the financial instruments like an internationally backed debt bond which could be the means of resolving a common crisis.

If we could do that, if we could look at the whole of the system of debt and substitute for what is in those debt portfolios now, that nobody ever really collects and substitute for it a secure bond of long maturity with moderate interest rates that could be administered in place of what is on the books but in the end is not actually being collected, you would find that our banking system would be able to substitute security for a high return that is in fact not happening.

That the debtor countries would get the breathing space with which to build their economies and that the creditor countries like yours might actually get detritefully back to work. And nobody's asking for giveaways because an international body of that kind could say to anybody destined to enjoy the relief, show us a sound realistic economic program before you get help. And that way everybody could be joined in a collective sanity which is to me preferable to the present madness.

So, we stand with you in the struggle of Southern Africa. I invite you to stand with us in the struggle to internationalize the response to drugs and to debt. If you do not move conscience, nobody will listen. If you move conscience, maybe somebody will act. I pray for that result.

HUMAN RIGHTS IN CHINA

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, 3 months after the Government's brutal crackdown on peaceful, unarmed prodemocracy demonstrations, gross human rights violations continue in the People's Republic of China.

The atrocities that are still taking place daily in China have fallen from the front pages of our newspapers and no longer make the evening news. But we should not be lulled into thinking that the Chinese Government has softened its stance on the prodemocracy movement and its participants. The Chinese Government has adopted a different tack now that it finds itself susceptible to international opinion. Authorities have dropped the method of publishing arrests in the newspaper to make an example of those arrested and have opted for a quieter method of dealing with dissent. According to the New York Times, authorities circulated an internal memo last June saying arrests and sentences would continue, but should no longer be publicized.

Those even loosely associated with the movement now find themselves under interrogation, arrest, and banishment to the Chinese gulag. The extent of the Chinese Government's reach will never be accurately known, but we do have reports from the human rights organization, Asia Watch, that the number of confirmed arrests by official Chinese sources number over 6,000, with unofficial estimates as high as 30,000. Amnesty International reports strong evidence that a deliberate decision was made by Chinese authorities after the crackdown to carry out secret executions, adding that some death sentences would be publicized to deter political opposition. But, again, the total number executed and imprisoned was not to be published. Amnesty also has reported on cases of torture of former detainees, and we can assume that this practice continues today.

The Chinese Government has waged a full-scale campaign to snuff out the voice of its people. Officials, members of the media, and intellectuals continue to be harassed and dragged off by the police, without charge, never to be heard from again. The highest ranking official to be ousted since the military crackdown is Culture Minister, Wang Meng. Mr. Wang's appointment 3 years ago was seen by many as signal of a new openness and softening of the Government toward individual speech and artistic expression. This is clearly no longer the signal in post June 1989 China.

Mr. Speaker, the United States Congress must continue to focus international attention on the unabating human rights violations in China. If we don't, I fear these violations may go unnoticed as other world events overtake the Nation's attention. I hope my colleagues will not shift their focus from China, but remain vigilant in condemning the atrocities exercised by the Chinese Government.

RECOGNITION AND TRIBUTE TO WALTER A. PATTERSON

HON. MERVYN M. DYMALLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of this Congress, an extraordinary American who has served his Nation with honor and dedication for over 52 years. Simply stated, this gentleman in his lifetime is an example of an African-American rising out of the depth of a segregated society into a world of struggle for equality and achievement, in the Federal service which very few Americans can claim. Walter Arnold Patterson has achieved a remarkable feat in continuous Federal service from 1937 to 1989 with his retirement from the Department of Health and Human Service.

Born in here in Washington, DC on June 27, 1918, Walter was educated at the old Miner's Teachers College, where he joined an important organization which was to leave an indelible imprint as a lifelong member of Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity. This fraternity was to become a vital and singularly important fraternity organization in Walter's life as well as in the lives of many African-Americans yearning for higher education in America which was largely segregated. Several decades later, Walter's son was to join this public service fraternity while attending Harvard, carrying on his father's deeply held conviction about serving one's community and government. Kappa Alpha Psi has given generations of young black men the opportunity of learning from other black professionals, and has provided the necessary discipline and motivation to succeed in facing a difficult, competitive world which was neither colorblind nor without bias.

Walter Patterson started from the very bottom with part-time Christmas jobs with the U.S. Post Office. Then he took a brief appointment at Commerce's Census Bureau before working 7 years covering the World War II years, first at the Navy Yard in Washington. During part of these years he was drafted in the U.S. Army and served in Okinawa directly contributing to the national war effort. After the war, he earned a M.A. at New York University under the GI Bill. He spent the following 7 years at the District of Columbia Public Schools from 1948 to 1955, where he was able to apply his considerable knowledge and skills as a teacher, counselor, and educator to thousands of students from the Washington metropolitan area.

This experience prepared him for the challenging years as a teacher and administrator for the U.S. Army in Europe where he taught soldiers and their dependents from 1955 to 1967. Walter Patterson was fully prepared to complete his stint of Federal service from 1967 to July 31, 1989, by his appointment to the U.S. Office of Education in the old Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and later to his retirement after a distinguished career as a senior executive of HHS's Office for Civil Rights. In all these 52 years of dedicated service to his country and to his Government, Walter Patterson was conscious of the hard work and dedication needed to get the job done, leaving a legacy which many of his friends identify today as uniquely his:

His determination to undertake hard work and set excellence as standard for himself and others;

His enthusiastic presence and determination to open the doors equally to all individuals, regardless of race, color, denomination, age, or sex, and his steadfast commitment to equitable treatment for all;

His legacy to young people in striving for education and the pursuit of learning, and his willingness to work with all people to achieve this goal; and finally,

His dedication to his family, his church, his community, and to his country to which he has given his best years of devotion.

Mr. Speaker, while Walter Patterson has struggled throughout his life for others and has achieved far more than most Americans achieve in a lifetime, Walter is now fighting a final battle with cancer. His family and colleagues are fighting with him to overcome this final obstacle to what has been a remarkable life and career in raising a fine family, of government service and unselfish dedication to all of us in the community and in the Government.

Mr. Speaker, we are here to recognize and pay tribute to the life of an extraordinary man from Washington, DC, who has lived a personally exemplary life, and through his good works has made a better world for his children and a better community for all of us. Few of us have this opportunity to touch so many people as has Walter Patterson. We wish him well and ask God's blessing for a triumph over the personal adversity faced by this extraordinary man.

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM F. BOLGER

HON. FRANK HORTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that we mourn the loss of a man who served the U.S. Postal Service for over 40 years, former Postmaster General William F. Bolger. Bill died on August 21, 1989, after suffering a heart attack. He was a loyal, dedicated, and tireless worker, who was the first career postal employee to attain the rank of Postmaster General.

Bill was the 65th Postmaster General since Benjamin Franklin became the Nation's first PMG. He headed the Postal Service during a crucial period in that agency's history. Bill became Postmaster General in March 1978 and was immediately faced with a crisis. The Postal Service was in the midst of contract negotiations with the Postal Employees Unions, strikes were threatened. Some critics argued that the Postal Service had been given too much autonomy in the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970. Under Bill's leadership, the unrest was settled and he was able to establish a productive working relationship with Capitol Hill.

The present Postmaster General, Anthony Frank, stated "Bill Bolger leaves an indelible imprint on the U.S. Postal Service and the American public he faithfully served for 43 years. He was a leader of great statute and boundless energy who brought a spirit of innovation and vision to this organization during the critical times of change and challenge." I wholeheartedly agree with my friend Tony Frank's characterization of Bill Bolger's career, and I should like to add that I hope Tony Frank will remain on as Postmaster General for as long as Bill Bolger served in that post.

Bill Bolger began his career with the old Post Office Department as a finance clerk in 1941. After serving as an Air Force bombardier during World War II, he resumed his career with the Post Office Department. During the 1950's he held a number of positions in the New England Region, where he became Regional Director for Boston. From 1972 to 1975 he served in New York as Regional Postmaster General for the Eastern Region. In 1975 he returned to Washington to serve as Deputy Postmaster General. In 1978 he was appointed by the Postal Service Board of Governors to be Postmaster General, the first career postal employee to reach the top of the ladder in the Postal Service. He served as PMG until his retirement in late 1984.

Bill Bolger is widely regarded as one of the most effective leaders of the Postal Service, and I pay tribute to a man who served his country with distinction and honor for over 40 years. Bill was an influential leader of the largest civilian work force in America. He preached to those employees the foundation of the modern Postal Service, to take pride in the institution, and provide better and more courteous service.

My heartfelt sympathies go out to his wife, Marjorie Tilton Bolger, and his daughters, Catherine and Margaret.

THE RISE AND FALL OF THE SOVIET EMPIRE

HON. JACK BUECHNER

OF MISSOURI

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. BUECHNER. Mr. Speaker, with the anxious eyes of the western Nations on them, more than a million Estonians recently joined hands in demonstrating their commitment to the independence of the Baltic States. Commenting on this event, Pravda, the official newspaper of the Communist Party of the Soveit Union used language that should send a chill up the spine of a post-Tiananmen Square world:

The fate of the Baltic people is in serious danger. People should know into what abyss they are being pushed by their nationalistic leaders. We appeal to the common sense of the peoples of the multi-national Soviet Baltic region. It is time, in our common interest, to put an end to the fateful course of events, to come to your senses, go over from confrontation to dialogue, and a search for difficult but necessary solutions and compromises.

Fifty years ago the world at large was drawn into a war the ramifications of which are felt to this day. The German blitzkreig rolled across Eastern Europe snuffing out freedom, aided in the knowledge that there would be no opposition from the Soviet Union. However, it was not only German perfidy at work. The Soviet Union, aided by the circumspect legality of a secret nonaggression pact with Nazi Germany, moved forcibly to annex the tiny Baltic Republics of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania.

The authors of the Molotov-Ribbentrop pact dividing Eastern Europe between Nazi Germany and the U.S.S.R., worked for the most prolific mass murderers the world has known, Hitler and Stalin. But even as the end of World War II destroyed the pretensions of the Third Reich, it also served to consolidate the Soviet colonial empire. It is, however, a crumbling empire which the Baltic Republics are now challenging.

On August 22, 1989, the Lithuanian Supreme Soviet commission found "illegal and invalid" the Soviet annexation of Lithuania. Yet one would be foolish to think that such a finding would be accepted by the Soviet Union. In fact, Pravda continues to promote the dubious underpinnings of the Soviet line feebly attempting to dismiss the Lithuanian court's decision as little more than national chauvinism. It's billed as a separatist line, "that has been foisted on the Baltic public by a persistent but small group." Continuing their institutional angst Pravda further notes:

Perestroika paved the way for the raid growth of national awareness of peoples, made them confident that they can independently solve the problems of their political, social, and economic and cultural life. But at a certain stage nationalist extremist groups began to introduce an unhealthy aspect into the development of events.

Included in the crimes of which the Baltic Republics now stand accused are: Mockery of state insignia as well as desecration of sacred things viewed as inviolable by any decent individual—among them the monuments to those who died in the great patriotic war—World War II. Presumably the people of the Baltics should hold sacred the symbols of their oppressors and the monuments to those who died defending a Soviet status quo. In light of the estimated almost two-thirds of the population of Estonia, that took part in the recent "hands across Estonia" demonstration a good case can be made that it is not "certain forces" leading this activity. More accurately, what is occurring is a popular outcry by a country tired of having its affairs dictated by an outsider.

Throughout Eastern Europe, communism, and its reliance on totalitarian mechanisms is under seige. In Poland the Communist Party has essentially thrown up its hands. Although the Communists will remain an important force by their control of the military and secret police, they have abrogated any pretense of constituting a viable force in dealing with Poland's intractable economic problems. In Hungary the barbed wire and barricades are coming down, an admission that a prison does more than keep people in—it also keeps progress out. East German citizens remain committed to escaping the bonds of totalitarian oppression and have shown themselves innovative and opportunistic in their many different approaches. Ethnic Turks pour out of Bulgaria, only too happy to be given a chance to flee an oppressive assimilation policy. Even within the citadel of communism, the U.S.S.R., elections were held signifying that self-determination must be a part of governmental legitimacy. Yet, it is in the Baltic Republics where truth of Soviet reforms will be brought to the ultimate test.

Even as a drowning miser will refuse to release the gold carrying him to a watery grave, so, too, is it with the foundering Soviet ship of state. Increasingly unable to provide for the sustenance of its own people, the Soviet Union will try to cling to the last shining gems of a bankrupt empire.

The people of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania have shown extraordinary courage in proclaiming their independence as they struggle to shed the ties which forcibly bind them to a system of which they reject. But, as one of the few regions under Soviet control which remain economically viable, the Baltic Republics are probably the most in danger of drawing an armed response. Further, in light of the Soviet Union's historical aspirations toward being accepted as a European Nation, there is considerable animosity toward releasing one fo the most tangible links to the European continent.

For the last 50 years, the United States has maintained that the Baltic Republics were forcibly annexed and are in fact autonomous nations. Although we have done little more than pay lip service to this claim, it is clear that the time for stronger action is fast approaching. As the deepening clouds of a Soviet response seem to be gathering on the horizon the people of the Baltic States must be made aware that they are not alone.

Time and again, our post World War II nation has pleaded helplessness or political reluctance to influence the domestic events of a sovereign nation. In this case, our continued support of Baltic autonomy forces us to forfeit this defense. By having failed to press the legal validity of the Baltic nations claim to sovereignty we can be accused of negligence or sloth. But if we allow the Soviet Union to forcibly subjugate these countries, in direct contradiction to the democratic reforms they themselves have been encouraging in their own country, we will stand accused of cowardice.

The United States and the other democratic nations of the world should be sending strong signals to the leaders of the Soviet Union that suppression of these countries by means of military force will meet with severe repercussions. We should make it clear in no uncertain terms that further improvement in economic ties and technology transfers are predicated on Soviet actions in the Baltics, and that the heavy-handed tactics such as those employed in the past will not be tolerated. In light of the extreme need of the Soviet Union to modernize its failing economy, this is a weapon which if brandished effectively exercises real clout. Further, we should continue to actively push for a Soviet repudiation of the illegal Nazi-Soviet agreements and their renunciation of the fallacious, and long since discredited, justification by which legitimate nations are held under Soviet domination.

The time of empires is over. The Soviet Union should show that it has the courage to recognize this—rather than the power to continue perpetuating by force that which it cannot hold by the strength of its ideas.

EIGHTEEN ATHLETES INDUCTED INTO THE LUZERNE COUNTY HALL OF FAME

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the men and women of Luzerne County, PA, who have been selected for induction into the Luzerne County Hall of Fame.

Each year, for the past 5 years, the hall of fame has chosen among a distinguished list of men and women who are residents of Luzerne County and who have contributed to the sports history of our area. This year the screening committee has chosen 18 former athletes, each of whom has upheld the sports tradition of the Wyoming Valley by committing their unique talents to the fullest extent. With this year's selections, the hall of fame now has 110 members. The induction ceremonies honoring these exceptional athletes will be held at a dinner on Sunday, September 10, 1989.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to introduce to my colleagues of the House of Representatives this year's inductees into the Luzerne County Hall of Fame:

Joe Amato, Old Forge, is the 1988 National Hot Rod Association Top Fuel World Champion. Amato also won this title in 1984 and is one of four who have won the Top Fuel title more than once. He is ranked third on the all-time win list with 15 victories. In addition, Mr. Amato is involved with the Valvoline "Say No To Drugs" campaign.

Corny Salvaterra, of Wilkes-Barre, helped lead the GAR High School football team to win the 1952 Wyoming Valley Conference football title. Salvaterra played quarterback with the University of Pittsburgh playing in two bowl games. In addition, he was also known for his outstanding ability in track, winning the javelin throw in the State meet.

Jane Dimond, Forty Fort, was considered one of the best women golfers ever in the Wyoming Valley. From 1933 to 1962, she won 20 women's club championships. Ms. Dimond played two exhibitions against golf greats Sam Snead and Patty Berg. She consistently scored in the 70's using the men's tees—women's tees did not exist at that time. If Dimond had been born 30 years later, she could have possibly played on the LPGA tour.

Ed Halicki, Askem, was captain of three sports—football, baseball, and basketball—for 3 years at Hanover High School. He played fullback at Bucknell for 4 years and was captain for 1 year. He went on to play professional football and baseball. He played for Frankford Yellow Jackets, forerunner to the Philadelphia Eagles and played baseball with the St. Louis Cardinals.

Francis A. Lovecchio, M.D., Wilkes-Barre, was an outstanding athlete in football, basketball, and track at GAR High School. He attended Princeton University and was named varsity quarterback and captain, winning letters in 1951, 1952, and 1953.

Lou "Sheriff" Zara, Old Forge, was a star basketball player at Old Forge High School making the varsity team as an eighth-grader. He played basketball at Rider College becoming the first eastern college basketball player to score more than 200 points in a season. Zara later served as general manager and public relations director of the Syracuse Nationals' basketball team.

W.J. Romanowski, Avoca, excelled in football at Avoca High School in addition to participating in baseball and track. In college he played for Villanova and later played semi-pro football for the Magnolia Club. Mr. Romanowski had a long officiating career as a PIAA football official in addition to officiating basketball and track meets. His officiating career expanded beyond high school to college football, including the annual Army-Navy game.

Adam Sieminski, Hazleton, played football, basketball, and baseball teams at Swoyersville High School. He attended Michigan State and played offensive and defensive tackel for 4 years, lettering for 3 of those years. Sieminski was drafted by the Green Bay Packers, and later went on to coach high school football.

Joe Andrejco, Hazleton, won letters for 3 years at Hazleton High School in both basketball and football. He continued playing football at Fordham University and twice helped lead his team to the Sugar Bowl. Mr. Andrejco continued to play football while serving in the U.S. Marine Corps during World War II.

Daniel Donovan, Old Forge, was captain of the Avoca High School football, basketball, and baseball teams. He later became a star in basketball, football, and track at East Stroudsburg State College. He became a coach for several sports at Darby High School and later Cathedral High School. In addition, Mr. Donovan has been the founder and president of the Lackawanna Scholastic Girls' Basketball League.

Eddie Mullin, Ashley, is a former professional boxer and is a member of the Wyoming Valley Boxing Hall of Fame. Known as "Blue Eyes" Mullin, he lost just 2 of 86 fights. He represented the Navy in the 1948 Olympic Trials. His most memorable pro fight was a victory over Vince Martinez.

Michael (Mickey) Noonan, Plymouth, was an all-scholastic at Plymouth High School and went on to play professional baskeball in the Midwest and South for several years. He conducted a state-accredited school for football officials for more than 25 years.

"Machine Gun" Lou Butera, Pittston, started his career at the age of seven in his father's pool hall. Among his many accomplishments are the World Championship in 1973, the All-Japan Championship, and the World Trick Shot Championship. In addition, he holds the world's record in tournament play by pocketing 150 balls in 21 minutes. He is only the 23rd member inducted into the Billiard's Congress of America's Hall of Fame.

Tom Morgan, Wilkes-Barre, played baseball, football, and basketball for Coughlin High School. He continued his career at Villanova University where he excelled in baseball, football and basketball, earning three letters in each sport. A leg injury at Villanova prevented Morgan from pursuing a pro career. He was offered baseball contracts from the Philadelphia Athletics, Boston Red Sox, St. Louis Cardinals and Philadelphia Phillies. After college Morgan turned to coaching and retired in 1960 with a career record of 270–52.

Ken Smith, Scranton, was a football, baseball, basketball star at Scranton Tech. He was a member of the football and baseball teams at Penn State. Smith played pro basketball for the Scranton team in the old Penn State League and played pro baseball for the Patterson Buswicks. He became the first baseball coach for GAR High School and held the position for 28 years.

Stan Ritinsky, Luzerne, was an all-scholastic end on the football team and an outstanding basketball player. He played football at Fordham University where he started on the 1941 Cotton Bowl and the 1942 Sugar Bowl team. He was drafted by the New York Giants but ended his football career because of a World War II injury. He also assistant coached at the University of Scranton before moving to Upper Moreland High School.

William "Bill" Leppert, Pittston, almost single-handedly founded the Pittston Little League, turning the site of a former dump and mining area into a field for boys. He served as the league's president for 35 years, and the field has been named in his honor.

Carl "Red" Meinhold, Hazleton, was the top rebounder on the 1942–43, Hazleton High School basketball team. He went on to Long Island University and was later signed by the Baltimore Bullets of the Basketball Association of America which later became the NBA.

The athletes described above have displayed a great sense of spirit as well as competitiveness through their accomplishments. They know what it is to be faced with a challenge and to take on that challenge looking it straight in the eye. These competitors have proven that in facing obstacles in the world of sports, one can become a more active and perhaps a more productive citizen. I would like to join my colleagues in the House of Representatives in commending these individuals on their induction into the Luzerne County Hall of Fame.

DR. RALPH W. ADAMS

OF GEORGIA

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this time to bring to the attention of my colleagues the tremendous accomplishments and contributions of the outgoing president and chancellor of Troy State University System, Dr. Ralph W. Adams. During his 24 years at Troy State, Dr. Adams devoted his time and talents to the development and advancement of the university.

The following article, which appeared in the university's homecoming newspaper, details the activities and accomplishments of Dr. Adams.

DR. ADAMS ACHIEVED HIS OWN GOAL

Wallace Malone, Jr., President Pro Tempore, Troy State University Board of Trustees.

In business, it is an axiom that good management is a prerequisite for success in any enterprise, and business often measures that success in terms of growth, quality, and profit. These principles also apply to institutions of higher learning and give one an insight into the success of Troy State University, for Dr. Ralph Wyatt Adams is an outstanding administrator.

Certainly, the growth of the University has been one of the hallmarks of Dr. Adams' tenure as president and chancellor of the university sytem. In the 24 years he has served the institution, the student body has not merely doubled or tripled but has grown eightfold. In 1964, Troy State students were primarily at one campus and in one discipline, education; in 1988, students are at more than 40 locations throughout the world and pursuing programs of study in more than 70 academic areas on undergraduate, and special degree levels. Because of Dr. Adams' foresight, the University was one of the first to anticipate important trends in adult, military, and non-traditional education. Thus, Troy State University had the programs in place as the needs arose.

Growth in the student population necessitated as increase in the number of employees, their numbers growing from 270 to more than 500 members of the faculty, staff, and administration on the main campus, with more than 800 full-time and 300 adjunct faculty in the system. Increases in plant, grounds, and facilities kept pace with the expanded role of the University because Dr. Adams saw the University as an organic whole and insisted that each part be maintained and nurtured.

However, growth costs money. Fortunately, year after year, Dr. Adams' thorough planning and persuasive arguments have resulted in the University's budget being increased from $2 million in 1964–65 to $44.5 million in 1988–89. Significant also is that for the fiscal years 1984–85 and 1985–86, the legislative appropriations for institutions of higher learning in the State of Alabama increased by 53 percent—the highest in the nation—and leading the State was Troy State University, with an increase of 69 percent. Therefore, according to The Chronicle of Higher Education, Troy State University had the greatest increase in budgetary appropriations for those two years, thanks to the relationship of Dr. Adams to the Alabama Legislature.

Not only have these increases made it possible for the University to achieve its goals, but the increased funding has enriched the economy of the Wiregrass area. In April, 1985, the most recent economic impact study was conducted, determining that the combined direct and indirect impact of Troy State University on the area was more than $35 million, making it the largest industry between Montgomery and Fort Rucker. Considering the current budget of the University, the impact is probably in excess of $50 million.

Like every effective administrator, Dr. Adams realized that an increase in size must be accompanied by an increase in quality. Beginning with the students, who have always been his main concern, Dr. Adams mandated that a variety of scholarships be made available to highly qualified high school graduates. Today, Troy State University offers the George C. Wallace Scholarship, the Ralph W. Adams Pre-Medical Scholarship, Air Force ROTC Scholarship, and other scholarships in nursing, athletics, music, performing arts, and debate. Upon his arrival, Dr. Adams found that there was one national honor society on campus; today there are seventeen, along with ten leadership and service organizations. Honors Day, when these outstanding students are given the public acclaim they deserve, has always been for the Chancellor second in importance only to graduation.

Recognizing the importance of a competent faculty, Dr. Adams insisted on being directly involved in the upgrading of the faculty. Not only did he substantially increase the number of faculty who hold terminal degrees, but he sought out and brought to campus distinguished visiting professors of the stature of Edward Teller, William D. Revilli, and Russell Kirk. To encourage faculty to teach more effectively and to reward those who teach exceptionally well, Dr. Adams negotiated with the Ingalls Foundation to establish the Ingalls Award for Excellence in Classroom Teaching.

I could go on citing example after example of improvements that Dr. Adams has made. As a member of the Board of Trustees and President pro tempore, I have witnessed many of them, have worked with him to achieve some of them, and have admired the workmanlike manner in which Dr. Adams has pursued excellence and made the term the catchword of the University.

Others outside the University family have also recognized his skills and wisdom. He achieved the signal honor of being named one of the country's 100 most effective college presidents by the Exxon Corporation Education Foundation, and is known throughout the state as the dean of college presidents. He has been sought by those in all levels of government and has served on a variety of state and federal boards, including the Education Appeals Board of the U.S. Department of Education and the Presidential Clemency Board. This latter appointment was made personally by President Ford. Business, too, has recognized his abilities, and he currently serves on the boards of directors of several financial institutions.

The pursuit of excellence and the achievement of success are principles that under Dr. Adams' leadership have shaped the Troy State University System we know today. That the University is in large measure the handiwork of Dr. Adams is obvious. That he deserves the praise and gratitude of many is equally obvious, for his management, dedication, perseverance have profited every student and employee of the University, as well as the community. However, knowing the man as I do, I think he will be the first to say that Troy State University has given a breadth and meaning to his life that few other experiences would; that he as the shaper of the University has also been shaped by it. And I can say what Dr. Adams would never say, that in his pursuit of excellence for the University, he has won the prize himself.

TAIWAN'S 78TH NATIONAL DAY ANNIVERSARY

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my congratulations to my friends in the Republic of China on Taiwan on the occasion of their forthcoming 78th National Day Anniversary on October 10, 1989. Taiwan, under the leadership of President Lee Teng-Hui, is a nation worthy of our admiration and respect. In four decades, Taiwan has made an incredible transformation in its economy, moving from an agricultural economy to one of the "Four Asian Tigers", or economic successes in Asia.

Much has been said and written about Taiwan's economic miracle, but what hasn't been noted is Taiwan's diplomatic initiatives in recent years. There is no question that Taiwan is diplomatically isolated because of mainland China's threat to break diplomatic ties with any country that seeks to recognize both Taiwan and the People's Republic of China. Even under such grave threats, The Bahamas and Grenada recently established full diplomatic ties with Taiwan. Foreign Minister Lien Chan and his two assistants, Vice Minister John Chang and Vice Minister C.J. Chen, deserve much credit for Taiwan's diplomatic breakthroughs.

Mr. Speaker, as Taiwan celebrates its 78th anniversary this October, it is my hope and wish that Taiwan will continue to have diplomatic successes and will be allowed to participate in international economic and trade groups, such as the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and other key international organizations.

HAPPY ANNIVERSARY TO TAIWAN

HON. MERVYN M. DYMALLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt in my mind that Taiwan is a true miracle of the 20th century. It has found prosperity amidst the ruins of World War II. For the last 40 years, Taiwan's far-sighted leaders have given their energies to the economic, political, and educational development of this island nation, and their efforts have borne rich results. Taiwan is the second richest country in Asia, second only to Japan. It is on the road to a full constitutional democracy; and the literacy rate stands at 92 percent while 34 percent of all its high school graduates go on to tertiary education.

Taiwan, Mr. Speaker, is a shining example of self-reliance and hard work, and I wish to take this occasion to congratulate its leaders, President Lee Teng-hui, Premier Lee Huan, Foreign Minister Lien Chan and former Minister Ding Mou-shih, on the 78th anniversary of the founding of their nation—October 10, 1989.

MRS. ADELAIDE BAILEY

HON. FRANK HORTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, over the recess period I had the opportunity to meet with many of my constituents in upstate New York. One of them was Adelaide Bailey who recently celebrated her 82d birthday.

Mrs. Bailey, who resides in my hometown of Penfield, NY, has been a very active citizen in that town for many years. She has also conducted a considerable amount of research on the history of Penfield, the State of New York, and the United States. During our visit at her home on August 25, we discussed various aspects of her research. I was impressed by the broad scope of her research.

She also pointed out that she had written several poems and prayers. One of these prayers appears in the ritual book for the Daughters of the American Revolution. The prayer is for the Dedication of the Flag ceremony. It is ironic that I had just presented Mrs. Bailey with an American flag flown over the Capitol on July 4, 1989, as well as with greetings from President and Mrs. Bush. In light of her contributions to historical research and her tremendous love for the American flag, I thought it would be appropriate to include her prayer as it appears in the DAR ritual book in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

Lord, our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee for the beauty of symbolism which has inspired our race from generation to generation.

We thank Thee for the response that warms our hearts when we come face to face with something tangible which speaks to us of intangible things.

And so we thank Thee for our Flag because we are grateful for the things it says to our spirits and because we remember in solemn joy the things which it has said to other generations of Americans.

Bless to us its reminders of heroic sacrifices and its call to devotion and service on our part.

Grant that we may be true to the ideals it teaches and that in us the highest type of patriotism may be developed.

In reverencing our Flag, may we build up within ourselves honor and justice and integrity of life.

In Thee, O Lord, do we put our trust. Bless our America, we pray. And make her Thine own messenger of righteousness and peace.

Amen.

COMMEMORATING THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE MISSOURI BOTANICAL GARDEN

HON. JACK BUECHNER

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. BUECHNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the Missouri Botanical Garden of St. Louis, MO. Voyager II hurdles into the darkest reaches of our universe and sends back images of nature beyond what man can even imagine. We here on Earth sit in amazement and long to know more—to extend that metaphysical chord "A man and his universe."

Yet in St. Louis there has been for 100 years a special place for man to seek out his own planet and to discover the fauna that in turn has given him food, cures for his diseases, the paper that his history is kept upon, and most importantly the air that keeps him alive.

The Missouri Botanical Garden, also known as "Shaw's Garden," is the oldest botanical garden in the United States in continuous operation. Internationally recognized for the quality of its horticultural presentations, it stands out particularly for its educational programs and most importantly its scientific research. Its staff and administrators have gone around the world assisting or helping to start similar institutions dedicated to man and nature.

Most recently, this garden, under the leadership of Dr. Peter Raven, has achieved further acclaim as it works to preserve and protect the tropical forests of the planet Earth—and in doing so helping determine the fate of mankind.

As concern for the environment has moved to the forefront of public awareness, the garden has played a prominent part in helping to define the importance of maintaining a biologically diverse and balanced ecosystem. Established in 1864 and directed for 25-years by a private St. Louis merchant, Henry Shaw, it was bequeathed to the public in perpetuity upon his death in 1889. Surveying his legacy with the hindsight of a century, I am certain that Mr. Shaw would be proud of what the tireless work and dedication of the caretakers of his garden have wrought. It is certain his spirit still tenderly touches the plants, the trees and blossoms, and the waters of "his garden."

To those of us who know and love this place, it is more than just a garden or a center of learning. It is a refuge from the turmoil of an often ugly world, a gentle reminder of what Eden must have been, and a continuing celebration of the glorious beauty of nature.

As we strive to remember our true role in the grand scheme of things, to recover that which we seem to have lost, it is well to look to the example that Missouri Botanical Garden has set. For there is no finer example of what good and true stewardship means than that which has been set by the Missouri Botanical Garden.

I ask each of my colleagues to join me in celebrating this 100th anniversary of the Missouri Botanical Garden and in saluting those who continue to work to ensure that our continuing journey through the cosmos is not devoid of beauty. Let us each and every one pledge ourselves to the same level of commitment, strive to attain the same attention to detail, and show the same love and devotion to our Earth that has been shown by the caretakers of the Missouri Botanical Garden.

NEWLY COMMISSIONED U.S.S. "PENNSYLVANIA" JOINS DISTINGUISHED LIST OF PENNSYLVANIA VESSELS—HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI ON BEHALF OF THE ENTIRE PENNSYLVANIA DELEGATION IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the entire bipartisan Pennsylvania delegation, I take great pride in announcing to our colleagues in the House of Representatives the christening of a Trident submarine—the U.S.S. Pennsylvania. This weekend, on behalf of the delegation, I will participate in a very special ceremony, the christening of the U.S.S. Pennsylvania. This newly commissioned submarine is a member of a distinguished line of naval vessels to be named after the second of our original 13 States.

Ship-of-the-line Pennsylvania was authorized by Congress on April 29, 1816. She was launched on July 18, 1837, after budgetary problems that delayed her construction. She was the largest sailing warship ever built for the U.S. Navy. Pennsylvania eventually became a receiving ship for the Norfolk Navy Yard and remained there until April 20, 1861, when she was burned to the waterline to prevent here from being destroyed or captured by the Confederacy.

A U.S. Navy steamer, originally named Keywaden, was assigned the name Pennsylvania on May 15, 1809. She was one of the least active of the vessels named Pennsylvania and was never actually launched. She lay on the ways from 1803 until 1884 when she was broken up.

The second battleship commissioned Pennsylavania was launched on August 22, 1903 and operated on the East Coast and in the Caribbean. It was renamed the Pittsburgh in August 1912 to free the name Pennsylvania for a new battleship. The keel for the newly christened Pennsylvania was laid down on October 27, 1913. She was launched March 16, 1915, and commissioned on June 12, 1916, with Capt. H.B. Wilson in command. The Pennsylvania was attached to the Atlantic Fleet and in January 1917 steamed for fleet maneuvers in the Caribbean only to return to her base on April 6, 1917, the day of declaration of war against Germany.

The Pennsylvania performed fleet maneuvers in the Caribbean and Yorktown areas. In 1922, the Pennsylvania joined the Pacific Fleet with her principal areas of operation along the coast of California, Washington, and Oregon.

The battleship was in drydock in the Pearl Harbor Navy Yard at the time of the Japanese attack in 1941. She was one of the first ships in the harbor to open fire as enemy dive bombers and torpedo planes launched a surprise attack in the early hours of December 7.

The Pennsylvania remained on the west coast patrolling the California shoreline for the remainder of the war. She was decommissioned on August 29, 1946, after sustaining extensive damage from a Japanese torpedo bombing while anchored in Buckner Bay. The Pennsylvania received eight battle stars for her World War II service.

Another vessel christened the Pennsylvania R.R. No. 9 served as a minesweeper and tug in New York habor. She remained active until January 2, 1919.

We take great pride in the fact that such fine ships have shared the name of our great State of Pennsylvania. We join our colleagues in the House of Representatives in saluting not only the newly commissioned U.S.S. Pennsylvania but in remembering the history of this great line of ships and the man and women who have served on their decks.

THE U.S.S. "LIBERTY" 1967-89

HON. ANDREW JACOBS, JR.

OF INDIANA

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, our former colleague, Pete McCloskey of California has asked me to place this essay of his in the RECORD.

As can be seen by the essay itself, a strange controversy occurred in connection with the 20th anniversary of the Israeli attack on the U.S.S. Liberty.

I believe that Mr. McCloskey's views and report are entitled to be examined by the membership—and I place the essay in the RECORD without the slightest animosity toward Israel. Apparently somebody somewhere in Israel did a very bad thing in the case of the U.S.S. Liberty. People in our country have done bad things too. That does not mean that either country is essentially bad.

But young American military men did die 20 years ago. And I think it is regrettable that our own Government has declined to participate in the memorial the little town in Wisconsin decided to make for these innocent victims.

THE U.S.S. "LIBERTY," 1967-89

A heartwarming event took place a few days ago in the village of Grafton, Wisconsin, population ten thousand, 20 miles north of Milwaukee and surrounded by the rolling corn fields of southeastern Wisconsin.

It was an especially beautiful June day, bright and sunny, with a cooling breeze off Lake Michigan.

In a brief ceremony, the Town's leading citizens unveiled a simple memorial to 34 U.S. Navy officers and men killed by Israeli torpedo, rocket and machine gun fire 22 years earlier, on June 8, 1967. The Israelis, on the verge of attacking Syria's Golan Heights, had unleashed a furious fighter-bomber and torpedo boat attack on the intelligence-gathering ship, the U.S.S. Liberty, off the shores of Egypt's Sinai Desert.

The U.S. flag had been flying in an 8 knot breeze during several earlier Israeli reconnaissance flights and every man on the Liberty believed that the attack was no accident. A U.S. Secretary of State, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Director of the National Security Agency have agreed with them.

Strangely enough, the dedication of the memorial with the names of the 34 dead

U.S. servicemen was the first public recognition of their sacrifice in the 22 years since the attack. There had also been 171 wounded from the crew of 294. No U.S. naval vessel since World War II had suffered a greater percentage (69%) in battle casualties.

The honor to the 34 dead Americans, however, did not come from their Commander in Chief, the U.S. Navy, nor their Senators and Congressmen.

Twenty-two years after the fact, all but one of the political and military leaders of the nation, successors to those from whom the 34 U.S. sailors had died that hot afternoon of June 8, 1967, were too afraid to attend or even send a congratulatory message.

That the ceremony was held at all was a tribute to two sturdy Grafton civic leaders and their wives, former Navy veteran Jim Grant and his wife, Carol, and John and Mary Dickmann. Grant was President of the Town's Board of Trustees, Dickmann the head of his own small manufacturing company in Grafton. Together they had organized the memorial event against bitter editorial opposition from Wisconsin's largest newspaper and from the Milwaukee Jewish community.

The stone memorial bearing the names of the 34 dead, including one Jewish boy, was unveiled by one of the two U.S. Navy regulars who attended, a Lt. Commander, who had been a Seaman 1st Class aboard the Liberty during the 1967 Israeli attack.

A former Navy combat pilot, President Bush, had been invited to attend. He didn't, nor did his office send the customary congratulatory message.

The Secretaries of Defense and of the Navy had been invited. Neither responded.

The Commander of the nearby Great Lakes Naval Training Station has been invited. Neither he nor even a Navy band was allowed to attend. No Blue Angels flew overhead. The clear word from on high was that no Navy personnel should dignify this particular memorial ceremony.

One solitary Chief Petty Officer, a recruiting officer from a nearby town, showed up. He tersely commented that he would have come even if the whole damn Navy Officer Corps had ordered him not to.

The remarks from the small podium in the afternoon sunshine were brief. The Liberty's chaplain gave a moving invocation. The ship's captain, Commander McGonagle, wearing the Congressional Medal of Honor awarded him for having saved his ship despite severe wounds, thanked the President of the Town's Board of Trustees for the honor done his crew; the Chairman of the Grafton Library Committee, Mrs. Carol Schneider, raiser of over $1 million to build the new town library, gave a few words of thanks; the local state assemblyman and state senator made a few remarks as did the American Legion commander, the head of the Chamber of Commerce and a former congressman. Two Liberty crew members, one officer and one enlisted man, gave U.S.S. Liberty crew jackets to the two elderly Grafton industrialists, Ben and Ted Grob, brothers who had preserved their machine tool company through the Depression years and who had contributed to countless Grafton charitable causes, large and small, before donating $500,000 for the new library. When the Grob brothers were invited by the Library Committee to name the library after themselves, the Grobs had asked instead to name it for the U.S.S. Liberty.

The Grobs had read about the 1967 Liberty incident in a book, "Assault on the Liberty," written by deck officer Jim Ennes. Ennes' book had made it clear that the attack was deliberate, not accidental, and that the Israeli attacks on the Liberty's life rafts were clearly intended to leave no survivors. It is not easy to find Ennes' book in bookstores today, despite the fact that it sold out five printings. The publisher no longer finds it politic to publish and sell this particular piece of American historical writing.

The ceremony, on the lawn of the new Grafton Library, at least had marvelous music. The Lakeshore Philharmonic Orchestra, 20 volunteers strong, ages 16 to 60, opened with "America, the Beautiful," then accompanied a talented local soprano in "The Star-Spangled Banner," and finally, while the names of the 34 dead young Americans were slowly read, gave a soft rendition of "My Country 'Tis of Thee." There were few dry eyes among the surviving Liberty crew members and several hundred Grafton citizens standing on the lawn or in the adjacent street.

An honor guard of aging American Legionnaires, mostly veterans of World War II, fired three volleys from M-1 rifles which some of them could barely lift to the firing position; the orchestra rendered a final taps.

There was a brief tour of the new library, still without books, for the townspeople and 40-odd Liberty, survivors, and their families, following which lemonade and brownies were served to all hands in the basement.

Almost last to leave were a quiet couple and their two adult children, the family of Seaman Richard Goss, all from Fort Wayne, Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Goss had lingered awhile to quietly gaze at the simple memorial gravestone with their son's name on it.

The Milwaukee Journal, once a great crusading newspaper, for over a year had written scathing editorials and news articles condemning the Grafton citizens' committee and town leaders who had agreed to name the library after the U.S.S. Liberty. The Journal thought the name was "controversial and might evoke anti-Semitic feelings."

The Journal's article the next day was somewhat muted, devoting only half its words to "the controversy" the newspaper itself had created by terming the name of a U.S. Navy ship as a rallying point for anti-Semitic organizations. The Journal's article stressed the police SWAT team protection provided the ceremony, mentioned the attack as "a strange historical footnote to the Six Day War," Israel's claim that the attack was an accident and that Ben Grob had once given campaign contributions to a former leader of the Ku Klux Klan and "other right wing causes." The article cited "some Jewish groups" who had said those who wished to memorialize the ship by naming the library were—at the very least—"insensitive."

To the crew of the Liberty, the real heroes present were the Grants and the Dickmanns who had weathered the personal attacks from the Journal and the greater Milwaukee Jewish community for the previous two years.

As Oliver Wendell Holmes, veteran of the 20th Massachusetts Regiment, wounded at Balls Bluff, Antietam and Spotsylvania, once paraphrased: "The perils of civil strife can be greater than the battlefield."

As the two buses with the U.S.S Liberty survivors and their families left the new library's parking lot, one man leaned out the window for a final salute to the American Flag flying over the new monument and said "Thank you Grafton!"

What a nation had declined to do, a small town had done, with patriotism, warmth and class.

A TRIBUTE TO ROBERT BRADLEY PIPER

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to pay tribute to a man who was a dear friend and an outstanding constituent of mine in Russellville, KY. The contributions he made to his community will never be forgotten.

Robert Bradley Piper died March 27, 1989, at the age of 84, after a long and dedicated career in education and many years of volunteer service to his community, State, and Nation.

Bob Piper, whose mother was a schoolteacher and whose father was a school board member, was a native of Logan County, KY. He attended Bethel College in Russellville before earning his bachelor's degree at Western State Teachers College in Bowling Green and his master's at the University of Kentucky.

He began his teaching career in the Gordonsville community school, where he later served as principal. He also taught at Olmstead School before becoming superintendent of Logan County Schools, in 1942, a position he held proudly for 33 years.

He remained steadfast in his commitment to and love for education in his retirement years. He served as president of the Kentucky Retired Teachers Association at the time of his death, and he was a member and former member of the American Association of Retired Persons.

Also a very civic-minded individual, "Mr. Bob" was a 46-year member of the Russellville Rotary Club and logged 22 years of perfect attendance.

Bob Piper's service to his community, though done unpretentiously, did not go unnoticed. In 1987 he was awarded the "Senior Achiever Hall of Fame Award" at the "Life After Fifty" fair sponsored by Western Kentucky University. He served as a member of the Barren River Area Development District's Council on Aging.

He was a member of Russellville's First Baptist Church where he served as deacon for about 30 years and as Sunday school superintendent for several terms.

Like his father, Bob Piper married a schoolteacher. He and the former Eleanor Bryant married in 1930. He is survived by his lovely wife Eleanor; their daughter, Dr. Ann Pember; and son-in law, Benny J. Pember, of Greensboro, NC; one brother, Henry Piper of Russellville; and two grandchildren, Robert Benjamin Pember and Piper Ann Pember, both of Greensboro.

My wife Carol and I extend our sympathy to the members of Bob Piper's family.

RULE ON H.R. 3, THE EARLY CHILDHOOD EDUCATION AND DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1989

HON. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI

OF ILLINOIS

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the rules of the Democratic caucus, I wish to serve notice to my colleagues that I have been instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to seek less than an open rule for the consideration by the House of Representatives of H.R. 3, the Early Childhood Education and Development Act of 1989.

HOW TO PAY FOR AN EFFECTIVE DRUG WAR

HON. JOHN BRYANT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, drug abuse and the illicit industry and crime it has spawned are perhaps the most serious challenges confronting our society today. Drugs flow daily across our borders—onto our streets and into our neighborhoods and schools.

Drugs cause crime, devastate productivity and kill—as we ever more frequently witness, not just in this capital city, but in most of our cities and increasingly in rural communities. During the Reagan-Bush administration, drug use and drug-related crimes increased dramatically.

While I applaud President Bush's recognition of the fact that we must put more money into the effort to end the scourge of drugs in this Nation, I am dismayed that he has given little indication of where this money should come from. The proposed financing for the plan consists of accounting gimmicks and misguided cuts in important programs.

It is a clever accounting gimmick to count $686 million of programs already included in the fiscal year 1990 budget as part of his proposed increase. It is misguided to finance $751 million of the increase with dramatic cuts in important and often related domestic programs. And the President has not given us an inkling as to how the remaining $763 million increase—part of an anti-crime proposal never included in the budget—can be financed with neither additional spending cuts or revenue increases. You might say this is a case of deja-voodoo economics.

I am pleased that the President has joined the Congress in deciding that we need to reinforce our troops in the war on drugs. We also need to assure the American public that we have a responsible way to pay for it.

One responsible source for funds for the anti-drug war would be to require our allies to begin paying their fair share for their own defense. I authored the "Allies Fair Share Defense Act" as a source for additional funds to help us balance the budget and free up needed funds for the drug war.

I have serious concerns about the Bush administration plan to reduce funding for drug treatment and education, Department of Defense interdiction efforts, housing, and economic development.

I am especially disturbed about the proposal to reduce, by $320 million, Federal funds for the State Legalization Impact Assistance Grants created by the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 [IRCA].

The SLIAG Program—which I had proposed to reimburse 100 percent of costs imposed on State and local governments by the new immigration law—was created, over the objections of the Reagan administration, to reimburse the States for some of the costs of public health, public assistance, and education of newly legalized aliens.

The funds allocated for the SLIAG Program were guaranteed to the States for use through 1994. President Reagan in his final budget and President Bush in his first budget, recommended reducing 1989 SLIAG funds by $300 million. Now President Bush seeks an even deeper cut that will do more serious economic damage to State and local governments.

States such as my home—Texas—with significant portions of the legalized alien population cannot afford to assume the greater spending burden for these services which have been mandated by the Federal Government.

For several years the Democrats have struggled to finance the war on drugs. The Bush proposal in fact barely matches the funding levels authorized by Congress last year—it barely restores 40 percent of Reagan-Bush cuts in anti-drug efforts over the previous 8 years. The Bush administration's original fiscal year 1990 budget proposal fell almost $1.5 billion short of the authorizations in the 1988 bill.

I am pleased that the President has discovered many of the programs approved by Congress in 1987 and 1988 and recognized that any progress in the war on drugs will be made only if we provide funding for them. An effective strategy in the war on drugs will require that we also fight the root causes of drug use and crime.

We must recognize that Americans consume 60 percent of the world's supply of illegal drugs. Americans have doubled their purchases of illegal drugs to more than $140 billion a year since 1980. Approximately 43 percent of all Federal inmates are incarcerated for drug-related offenses and 40 percent of new admissions were rated as having moderate to severe drug use histories.

We have not yet begun to fight.

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE REPUBLIC OF CHINA

HON. BILL GRANT

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. GRANT. Mr. Speaker, today I wish to draw the attention of my colleagues to a very important upcoming anniversary.

On October 10, 1989, the nation of Taiwan will celebrate its 78th birthday. As we all know, Taiwan is a vital island country and one of our strongest allies in the Pacific. It has also become our fifth largest trading partner and a shining example of economic growth and political liberalization.

I want to salute and congratulate President Lee Teng-hui and the people of Taiwan for their dedication and commitment to free enterprise and democratic ideals. For 78 years, Taiwan has demonstrated clearly that freedom and economic opportunity go hand in hand.

Taiwan continues to be a valued friend of the United States and an inspiration for other Asian countries attempting to modernize. I congratulate Taiwan on its 78th birthday and offer my best wishes for the future.

EAGLE SCOUT HONORED

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to bring to the attention of my colleagues, an outstanding young individual from the Fifth Congressional District of Illinois, who has completed a major goal in his Scouting career. Mr. Thomas Joseph Boor, of Troop 415 in Chicago, IL, will be honored on September 21, 1989 at an "Eagle Scout Court of Honor."

It is important to note that less than 1 percent of all boys in America attain the rank of Eagle Scout. This high honor can only be earned by those Scouts demonstrating strong, extraordinary leadership abilities. Thomas Boor has clearly demonstrated such abilities through his dedicated community service and hard work.

Having joined Cub Scouts, Pack 3415, at Maurice Parish in September 1983, Thomas earned all 15 activity badges as a Webelos Scout. He then went on to earn the Arrow of Light Award prior to becoming a Boy Scout in November 1984.

After becoming a Boy Scout in 1984, Thomas rapidly advanced to the rank of Tenderfoot on November 11, 1985; a Second Class Scout on June 12, 1986; a First Class Scout on December 19, 1986; a Star Scout on January 17, 1987; a Life Scout on June 19, 1988 and, finally, Boy Scouting's highest honor—the Eagle Scout on June 29, 1989.

In his quest to become an Eagle Scout, Thomas earned all 12 skill awards and 38 merit badges. In March 1986, Thomas was elected by his fellow Scouts into the Order of the Arrows [OA], an organization within the Boy Scouts that promotes camping and assistance to others.

A career in Scouting would not be complete without service in the various other capacities that help make up such a fine organization. To fulfill this philosophy, Thomas served as the corresponding scribe for Tschitani, Mawat chapter, Owasippe Lodge of the Order of the Arrow from January 1987 until June 1989. In June 1989, he was elected chief of this chapter. Further, in April 1989, Thomas and numerous members of his Order of the Arrow chapter organized and ran the spring camporee for the Marquette Trail District. The theme of the camporee was "Fun for Boys, By Boys." This camporee was one of the most successful events the district had ever seen.

Thomas was chairman of an interdistrict training session on April 1, 1989 for boy leaders at Camp Sullivan. He also served on the staff at Owasippe Scout Reservation from June to August 1988. While on staff, he was able to assist many Scouts seeking their merit badges.

On an heroic note, Thomas, while serving on staff at Owasippe, was involved in transporting a boy suffering from an asthma attack to the nearest medical facility. Accordingly, he was commended for his courageous actions in assisting a needy individual who might otherwise have suffered from more serious complications.

On a personal note, Thomas is presently enrolled at Thomas Kelly High School as a junior. After attending college at the University of Illinois, Chicago circle campus, Thomas aspires to one day be an officer on the Chicago Police Department.

In addition to Scouting, Thomas's many interests include music, football, basketball, wood working, fishing, hiking and of course, camping.

In light of the commendable leadership and courageous activities performed by such a fine young individual, I ask you, my fellow colleagues, to join me in honoring Thomas Joseph Boor for attaining the highest honor in Scouting—the Eagle Scout. With God's blessings, let us wish him the very best in all of his endeavors.

TRIBUTE TO DAVID A. STRONGIN

HON. BARBARA F. VUCANOVICH

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the patriotic enterprise of one of my constituents, Mr. David A. Strongin, whose corporation, Ties of Honor, uses a percentage of its profits of regimental tie sales to aid the survivors of military service personnel who have died in peacetime. Certainly, as the daughter of a brigadier general, I appreciate the importance of this endeavor.

At the very least, I would like to commend Mr. Strongin and his company for making us all more aware of the needs of the families of those military personnel who have given their lives, in the pursuit of preserving the peace, which we all enjoy. Mr. Strongin's contribution of service to military families and military pride shows that old soldiers do not have to end their service to their country after their Active or Reserve duty.

JUNIOR LEAGUE WORLD SERIES RUNNERUP TEAM HAILS FROM TOCCOA, GA

HON. ED JENKINS

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the opportunity today to bring some recognition to a group of very deserving young people and the adults who have supported them.

The town of Toccoa, GA, welcomed home its Junior Little League All-Star team from World Series play a couple of weeks ago with a parade and a community-wide pep rally honoring the players, their parents, coaches, and other supporters. After winning the South region division tournament in Orlando, FL, the Junior Little Leaguers then had traveled to the Junior League World Series in Taylor, MI. They came home the World Series runner-up in the world and first in the United States. Two of the three games the team lost this season were to Puerto Rico in the World Series.

As one who played a little ball in his younger years, I realize some credit must be given to the natural ability of the players, but a team does not go all the way to the World Series without a great deal of hard work. The players have to put in extra time perfecting the skills of the game. Parents and community leaders must plan ahead, contributing time and money to the organization and for the facilities to create the environment conducive to producing an outstanding team such as this one.

During the welcoming home ceremonies, Leonard Griffin, President of the Toccoa Little League, said:

If you had told me last winter when I agreed to be president that I would travel 8,000 miles in 4 weeks with this team, I would have said I didn't have the time. I didn't have the time, but I have enjoyed every minute of this experience and wouldn't trade it for anything in the world.

What he, Coaches Mike and Donnie Ivester, the parents, and the community in Toccoa, GA, have learned is that we must invest time in our young people. What these young people have learned is that people do care about them and whether or not they excel and succeed. These Toccoa Junior League All-Stars, Shannon Dean, Josh Holcomb, Richard Aderholdt, Matthew Griffin, Brent Brown, Rodney Oglesby, Jimmy Roush, Jason Ivester, Brandon Peace, Jonathan Griffin, Clay Rickman, Charles Colbert, Serrante Hester, Nekinno Turner, know what it means to have a community behind them.

These people should serve as examples to all of us to put forth extra effort, to cooperate and work together to seek higher goals.

I tip my baseball cap to these young men who played their hearts out, to the Toccoa Little League organization for its support, to the parents for their encouragement and extra efforts. They are all winners with outstanding records.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, an unavoidable commitment in my district forced me to miss most of the September 6 session. That session included the votes on H.R. 1668, which authorized appropriations for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's Coastal Programs, and H.R. 2427, which authorized appropriations for the NOAA's Atmosphere and Satellite Programs.

These programs make a contribution to our knowledge of important weather, atmospheric and oceanic conditions and changes. I support them and I would have voted in favor of these bills had I been able to attend.

REFLECTIONS OF A CONGRESSMAN'S JOURNEY TO ISRAEL

HON. BILL PAXON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. PAXON. Mr. Speaker, this August, I had the opportunity to visit the State of Israel for the first time. On the flight back, I wrote down some of my reflections, which I subsequently developed into a column for a local paper in my district. I would like to share this article with my colleagues.

REFLECTIONS ON A CONGRESSMAN'S JOURNEY TO ISRAEL

(By Congressman Bill Paxon)

ABOARD EL AL FLIGHT 1—As the blue and white El Al 747, with the Magen David on its gleaming tail fin, banks slowly toward the green Mediterranean Sea, it is a time for reflection.

I take my final glimpse of the land of Israel and realize that my sojourn has been both an exploration through the ages and an expedition through a modern twentieth century democracy, peopled by some of the most determined and courageous individuals I have ever met.

The trip has been a deeply moving and personal experience.

It has demonstrated concretely my conviction that our aid to our only real ally in the volatile Middle East region can stand the test of both moral and fiscal scrutiny.

The House Chamber on Capitol Hill now seems distant. More than ever, I can clearly see and understand the imperatives that have forged the friendship and alliance we enjoy with the State of Israel.

The money is indeed important—and I feel privileged to have been a leader in the fight on the floor of Congress to secure passage of a $3 billion aid package for Israel.

Yet, after my brief week's trip, Israel is closer to me and more real than ever. I know I shall never forget the faces of Israel. Faces of men and women determined to live out an age old dream of a free and peaceful Jewish homeland.

Of course, the words and ideas of Israeli officials held great importance.

I am greateful for the time I spent with Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek and members of the Knesset from both the Labor and Likud parties. They devoted many hours detailing the current situation and provided me with a better understanding of the serious nature of the Palestinian uprising in the West Bank and Gaza, and its affect on the nation.

Nonetheless, it was the Israeli people who best put their land and their dreams in perspective. Perhaps, the feeling I gained is summed up best by the four I had the good fortune to meet: a former refusenik, a tank commander and a young Kibbutznik couple.

Yuri Kashorovsky, spent 18 years of tears and suffering— longer than any other person—as a Jewish Refusenik in the Soviet Union.

Now in Israel just seven months, there are no tears now, just a broad smile and bright eyes that reflect an infectious sense of adventure, excitement and faith. He says happily that he is "fulfilling thousands of years of history by coming here."

In some ways, Yuri Kasharovsky is a personification of this tenacious little nation. There is nothing in this man that suggests the tough times past—only a belief in the future, and a faith in the God that has led him and his family into this Promised Land.

Then there was Army Commander Yossi. At age 36, he commands a 1000-member tank brigade on the Golan Heights overlooking Syria.

Commander Yossi was a lieutenant at Golan in 1973. He was one of the few to survive the initial onslaught of Syrian armor on Yom Kippur.

Sixteen years later, he recounts the stress of being poised for battle "every hour, every minute, every second" here on the front line.

The young men and women under his command are among the brightest I have ever met. Their tough fighting skill has been honed through an inner strength and the clear determination that their families, never very far away in this tiny land, will never again be put at risk by an unexpected invasion from Syria or any military foe.

A visitor to the small, yet comfortable, apartment of Susy and Josef Abas in Kibbutz Misgav-Am, can see firsthand the challenges and accomplishments of a unique lifestyle found only in Israel.

As I looked down from their kitchen window, through the barbed wire marking the border toward a small, Lebanese village, Susy from Argentina and Josef from Holland readily acknowledged this life is not for everyone.

"It can be difficult," Susy said "With the changing work assignments, long days and daily threat from the PLO of a terrorist attack, life is not easy."

But Susy and Josef Abas are proud of the community they have helped to build. It is here they plan to raise their family. They will not be driven away.

As we prepared to leave the Kibbutz, Josef called after us with a certain smile and said, "Come back and visit us again. We will be here."

Although our week in Israel was far too short, our time was well planned and presented a comprehensive picture of a vital people. People who, in spite of all odds, have built a dynamic land with a future as rich as its historic past.

We saw the future in the lush farms, wrested from the deserts, and in the high-tech work being done at the Israel plant of Western New York's Mennen Medical, Inc.

Finally, I shall never forget my moving visit to Yad Vashem, the memorial to six million Jews murdered in the Holocaust. I participated in a prayer service and wreath laying ceremony. It was a special honor and an emotion packed moment—particularly as my thoughts turned to the 1.5 million children of the Holocaust.

Now, as we soar high above the clouds, I think of the strength of the people of Israel, their faith, their courage and determination.

I am reminded of a true and solid friendship between our nation and a nation that can be counted on day-in and day-out in a region filled with violence, treachery and deceit.

I shall always deeply appreciate the Greater Buffalo Jewish Federation for hosting this trip and particularly to Harry Kozansky, executive director and Gorgon Gross, for their time and energy in planning and carrying out our comprehensive schedule. Together with our travelling companion, County Executive Dennis Gorski, I say to them "Mazel Tov."

And to my friends in Israel, "Shalom!"

HON. ESTEBAN EDWARD TORRES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent on official business during rollcall vote 203 on August 2, 1989. Had I been present on the House floor I would have voted "aye" on final passage of the Labor, HHS, Education appropriations bill, H.R. 2990.

ARE YOU PATRIOTIC ENOUGH?

HON. CLYDE C. HOLLOWAY

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. HOLLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, the esteem in which millions of Americans hold the U.S. flag has been the subject of thousands of news reports, columns, and analyses during the last several months. One particularly impressive commentary was published in the August 24 edition of the Lutcher News-Examiner, a newspaper published in St. James Parish, LA. The author of this stirring and inspirational column, Mr. Stanley Smith, my constitutent, has both my respect and admiration and deserves the same from all Americans who hold the American flag dear.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues in this great body to read and consider this thought-provoking column. The author's pride in the American flag and the cherished values it represents reflects the feeling of men and women across our land. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride and enthusiasm that I ask that Mr. Smith's column, entitled "Convictions," be published, as follows, in this CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

[From the News-Examiner, Aug. 24, 1989]

CONVICTIONS

(By "Prof" Stanley Smith)

ARE YOU PATRIOTIC ENOUGH?

I know that I have written about flag desecration before, today's article will include additional comments that I made at my recent installation as head of the Fourth Degree Knights of Columbus. Patriotism is the foremost objective of that degree.

It is strange that defacing a dollar bill is a crime, but burning, trampling and spitting our flag is "freedom of expression." The First Amendment guarantees freedom of speech, and I do want to protect that. Thomas Jefferson, perhaps the most brilliant man to ever occupy the White House, once told a political opponent that he disagreed with him completely, but that he would fight to the death for his opponent's right to speak.

Desecrating the flag, however, is an action, not speech. It is a terrible action that is an insult to everyone who loves this nation. Hundreds of thousands of men have died fighting for that flag and what it stands for in may wars.

The most celebrated picture to come out of my war, World War II, was of my fellow marines raising the flag on Mt. Surabachi on Iwo Jima. I wish I had been there. I was on Saipan hundreds of miles away.

In the VFW we drape the casket of our deceased comrades with the American flag. We follow that casket to the tomb in the cemetary, and we reverently fold that flag and present it to the next of kin, wife, daughter, or son. We express our gratitude for the service rendered to our nation under that flag.

There are those who tell me that the flag is only a piece of cloth, and my mind seems to say that, but my heart tells me differently. Blaise Pascal, French scientist and philosopher expressed it best when he said, "the heart knows reasons that the mind knows not."

This nation has really only lost one war in its entire history, the Viet Nam War. We lost that one because many American people did not support the war effort. I find it hard to forgive people like Jane Fonda who gave aid and comfort to the enemy. This generation of Americans is not as patriotic as former generations. Do you love this nation enough to serve it and die for it in a cause that is just?

TRIBUTE TO JOE MOQUIN

HON. RONNIE G. FLIPPO

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. FLIPPO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in order to pay tribute to Joseph C. Moquin, chairman and chief executive officer of Teledyne-Brown Engineering in Huntsville, AL, who is retiring after more than 30 years of outstanding service to his company, his community and State, and to this Nation.

A native of Middleboro, MA, Joe moved to Huntsville in 1956 to work for the Army Ballistic Missile Agency. His reputation as a skilled manager led Milton Cummings, then president of Brown Engineering, to recruit Joe to the young company as executive vice-president.

Brown engineering was acquired by Teledyne and was renamed Teledyne-Brown Engineering in 1967. The company has in many ways been the foundation of Huntsville's emergence as a leading center of research and development in the Nation. And much of Teledyne-Brown's growth can be directly attributed to the vision and leadership provided by Joe Moquin.

Throughout the more than three decades since he came to Huntsville, Joe Moquin has been a veritable wellspring of community involvement and community leadership. He was the driving force behind an effort to establish a first-class research park in what was then the cotton fields of western Huntsville. The park that he convinced local officials to establish now hosts scores of high technology companies and is widely considered a model of the modern research and development environment. The park was named after his predecessor, Milton Cummings, in 1973 and is now called Cummings Research Park.

He has also dedicated much of his time and energies to a wide range of public service endeavors which have contributed greatly to a better community and State. Joe has served on the board of trustees of Alabama A&M University, Birmingham-Southern College, the board of directors of the UAH Foundation, the Huntsville Hospital Foundation—the list could go on and on.

Joe Moquin has truly been a model for the kind of community leader that every community would love to have. Joe, I am glad you settled in Huntsville and I want to thank you sincerely for the efforts you have made which have benefited us all.

I want to wish you and Anita a very happy and productive retirement.

TRIBUTE TO ELI LURIA

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing Mr. Eli Luria for his long and outstanding service to the community of Santa Barbara. In order to honor Mr. Luria and to express thanks and appreciation for his many contributions to Santa Barbara City College, on September 5, 1989, the trustees of the Santa Barbara Community College District named the new library and learning resource center "The Luria Library."

Mr. Eli Luria has been a resident of the Montecito area of Santa Barbara for over 32 years. A native of Washington, DC, he attended George Washington University and the Corcoran Art School there, then went on to graduate from U.C.L.A. in 1945 as an art/history major.

Mr. Luria was a partner in the general contracting firm of Luria Brothers in Washington, DC. He is a California licensed real estate broker and building contractor, although he is no longer actively engaged in the building business. His Luria Development Co. has been responsible for the construction of many attractive homes, apartments, and office buildings in Santa Barbara, several of which have won the "Santa Barbara Beautiful" award.

Always active in civic affairs, he founded the local chapter of the National Association of Home Builders—now the Building Industry Association. He is a past member of Toastmasters and Suburban Kiwanis, past president of the local chapter of the United Nations Association, a member of the Citizens Planning Association and the County of Santa Barbara Arts Associates. He is a trustee of the Santa Barbara Museum of Art and of the Nuclear Age Peace Foundation. He is treasurer and past president of the Riven Rock Park Homeowner's Association. In 1972 he was chairman of the County Heart Fund Drive. He is past president of the Santa Barbara City College Adult Education Advisory Council.

In January 1989, Mr. Luria was honored at a large dinner in Santa Barbara as A.D.L.'s "Man of the Year," in recognition of his many years of community service.

In 1972, Mr. Luria cochaired a successful city college bond issue drive to acquire land for expansion and development of the campus. He was first appointed to the Board of Trustees of the Santa Barbara Community College District in 1976, and has since served as board president, vice president, and as a member of the board's Educational Policies, Fiscal, and Facilities subcommittees. He is a founding member of and has served as president of the Foundation for Santa Barbara City College, and has made noteworthy donations both financially and of his personal time.

Mr. Luria and his wife, Leatrice, who have been married for 43 years, are the parents of one daughter, and have two grandchildren. His hobbies include tennis, golf, traveling, and oil and water color painting. His wife designs and produces distinctive pottery works in her Montecito studio.

It is clear that Mr. Luria's dedication to the community of Santa Barbara is both lifelong and ongoing. His commitment to the Santa Barbara City College has proved to be invaluable. Therefore, I ask the House to join me in paying tribute to Mr. Eli Luria for his dedication to the betterment of mankind and wish him success in the future.

TO PROVIDE FOR THE CLEAN-UP OF THE UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANKS AT THE CHENNAULT AIRPARK, LAKE CHARLES, LA

HON. JAMES A. HAYES

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. HAYES of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing this bill today in order to rectify a problem that needs immediate attention. The issue involves the need for a remediation project at the former Chennault Air Force Base, presently known as the Chennault Airpark.

In 1961, when the base was closed and the property was transferred to the parish, the Department of Defense expressed to the Airpark Authority that the underground storage tanks and pipelines had been cleaned as all oil and other jet fuels had been removed. However, within the last year, jet fuel has been detected in the ground and surface waters of neighboring properties.

The Army Corps of Engineers currently has the mandate to clean up such hazards under the Defense Environmental Restoration Program. While the Corps has been helpful in processing the Airpark's request for assistance under this authority, several of the Airpark's tenants are concerned that the Corps may not decide to assume responsibility for the remediation work. Consequently, they are concerned that they will end up having to foot the expenses. There is no reason for the Corps not to accept responsibility and they have been cooperative at each step of the proposal process so far. However, I feel that it is necessary to protect the Airpark Authority, which is one of the largest employers in my district, from tenants panicking and pulling out of their current contracts or more realistically, halting plans for future expansions. Therefore, I have introduced this legislation today in order to assure those parties that the work will be done.

VITO BATTISTA ARCHITECT, EDUCATOR, HUMANITARIAN, LEADER

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, today, I rise to pay tribute to Vito Battista, a truly remarkable man. During the course of his life, this resident of Brooklyn, NY, has excelled as a businessman, educator, architect, humanitarian, and civic leader.

Mr. Battista is a personification of the tenets of the American dream. He came to America as a child, an immigrant to a strange land. He worked his way through high school and college by laboring long and grueling hours as an ice peddler. However, his hard work and determination to succeed allowed him to obtain a bachelor's degree in architecture from Carnegie Institute and a master's degree in architecture from M.I.T. In his attempt to broaden and deepen his knowledge of the architecture and design of the old world he studied at the Fountainbleau and the Ecole Des Beaux Arts in France. To complement his knowledge of the "old world" style and to develop a well-rounded architectural perspective, he did graduate work in urbanism at Columbia University.

The fruit of Mr. Battista's studies and the culmination of his skill and talent as an architect can be seen in the work he contributed to the designs of many well-known public buildings including the Brooklyn Civic Center, the Supreme Court Building, New York's 1939 World's Fair exhibits as well as many other municipal buildings including hospitals, schools, fire houses, police stations, and libraries while in the service of the New York City Department of Public Works. He has been widely acclaimed for his unique solutions to difficult design problems.

In addition to being a prodigious practicing architect, Mr. Battista has devoted a significant portion of his life to educating others. Over 40 years ago, he founded the Institute of Design and Construction, an architecture and engineering technical school chartered by the New York State Board of Regents. In 1952, Vito realized that classroom education was only half the picture in achieving proficiency in architecture and design. To complete this picture, the institute was among one of the pioneers in a ground-breaking program in which students work in their chosen field during the day and attend classes in the evening. This type of work and study program is currently being used in many colleges and universities. He founded the school to pass along his knowledge and love of design and construction to others. Today he serves as president of the school. In the last 40 years the school has educated and trained over 30,000 students in the principles and practices of design and construction.

As a political and civic activist, Mr. Battista was elected and served in the New York State Assembly for three terms; for six terms on the Community School Board in District No. 19 in east New York; 12 years on the Planning Board No. 5; 10 years as a Republican State committeeman in the 54th Assembly District and a delegate to the Republican National Convention at five consecutive national conventions from 1972 to 1988. He has admirably served the east New York community as a member of the board of directors of the East New York Development Corp.

In sum, I salute Mr. Vito Battista for his courage to take on tough issues, the ability to lead in the face of adversity, the tenacity to overcome obstacles, and the determination to fight until the battle is won. Throughout his years of public service, Mr. Battista has exhibited commitment, compassion, and concern.

A TRIBUTE TO DENNIS OEHLER

HON. RAYMOND J. McGRATH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, in my hometown of Valley Stream, NY, there is a very special resident who has shown tens of thousands of people worldwide that a physical disability is not a hindrance to athletic success.

In 1984, Dennis Oehler was a 24-year-old promising amateur soccer player with high hopes of turning professional. His dream ended with a tragic accident in which he lost his right leg below the knee. Shortly after his accident, Dennis saw the International Games for the Disabled which were held on Long Island that same year. After seeing physically challenged people perform athletic events identical to those in the Olympics, Dennis vowed that he would become the fastest amputee in the world.

For several months, Dennis trained 6 hours a day, 6 days a week in preparation for statewide and national competition. After several local successes, Dennis won gold medals in the Australian National Amputee Championships in 1987 and 1988 for the 100-meter and 200-meter sprints. The U.S. Amputee Athletic Association named him Athlete of the Year in 1987.

Throughout 1988, Dennis participated in several international track events in preparation for his ultimate goal, the 1988 Paralympic Games in Seoul, South Korea. In Seoul, Dennis kept his 4-year vow to become the world's fastest amputee. In the 100-meter sprint, Dennis came from behind to win the gold medal in 11.73 seconds—the first time an amputee broke the 12-second mark and a new world record.

This year and next, Dennis plans on entering several more international competitions.

Dennis' exploits are not limited to the athletic field alone. He devotes much of his time to helping other physically challenged young people. He is a member of the Eastern Amputee Athletic Association, a swimming instructor at a local university, and a volunteer fireman. He is also a loving and devoted husband and father.

We, as a nation, pride ourselves on the love of competition and sport. Dennis Oehler is truly a gifted American athlete and is deserving of every accolade he has received. He is a true example of American determination and athletic skill who is a proud representative of the United States wherever he competes. I ask all of my colleagues to join me to wish him well as he represents our Nation on the athletic fields of the world.

ROBERT J. SMITH HONORED

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, the United Way of Hudson County will hold a luncheon on September 19, 1989 honoring Mr. Robert J. Smith for 36 years of outstanding volunteer service. Over 800 community and business volunteer leaders are expected to attend the luncheon at the Meadowlands Hilton Ballroom.

Robert J. Smith was born and raised in the Greenville section of Jersey City. He graduated from Sacred Heart Grammar School and Henry Snyder High School, and earned degrees from St. Peter's College and Seton Hall University. He served in the U.S. Army Infantry in the South Pacific between 1943 and 1946. He joined the Joseph T. Ryerson Steel Co., upon his Army discharge in 1946.

Bob was married on May 28, 1949 to Theresa Donohue. The Smiths have 7 children and 15 grandchildren.

As a representative of Ryerson Steel Co. in 1953, Bob joined the governing board of Community Chest, the forerunner of today's United Way of Hudson County.

Since that time, Bob has served our entire community with distinction.

In 1972, Bob played a pivotal role in uniting nine Hudson County communities under one organization—the United Way of Hudson County.

In Jersey City, Bob played a major role in directing a large circus and fair to raise money for the Boys Clubs and other volunteer agencies.

Bob worked with local bank officials, real estate developers and architects to provide the United Way with additional office space. Since United Way dollars could not be used for real estate development, Bob and United Way Executive Director Bill Martin organized a Sunday bingo tournament to pay for the new facilities. Over a period of 14 years, he helped raise $500,000 to offset the cost of the building.

With Bob's help, the United Way of Hudson County joined the United Way of the Tri-State Area. Today, this partnership represents 36 United Way organizations, 800 communities, and over 1,800 human service agencies.

During Bob's tenure, the United Way of Hudson County expanded the Boys Clubs, developed a child abuse service via the visiting homemakers, and added the Hoboken Club, the Red Cross Chapters of Hudson County and Bayonne, the Retired Senior Volunteer Program, the Coalition of 100 Black Women, the Sickle Cell Anemia Organization, North Hudson Community Action, the Urban League, the Franciscan Aids Initiative to help [FAITH], and the Alzheimer's Adult Day Care Program of the Jewish Home and Rehabilitation Center.

Bob has spent his volunteer career working to help the United Way make the greatest possible contribution to our community. In 1978, he worked with Martha Lewin of the YWCA, the New Jersey Housing Finance Agency, the Ford Foundation and several local contributors to convert buildings to housing for the elderly and the disabled.

Bob worked with Thomas Stanton, chairman of the Board of First Jersey National Bank—now National Westminster Bank—to convert an abandoned coal bunker along Jersey City's waterfront into a new home for the Boys Club. Lawrence Lewis, former United Way president and director of bridges and tunnels at the Port Authority of New York-New Jersey, praised Bob's visionary leadership and called the new home of the Boys Club a showcase for the benefits a community can achieve when volunteer and government agencies work toward a common goal.

Bob worked with Maureen Walliser, executive director of the Occupational Center Shelter Workshop, and Robert Burstein, an accountant, to purchase a new home for the workshop. With the assistance of a small business loan my office helped them receive, the workshop moved to a new site and served 200 additional clients.

The Joseph T. Ryerson Steel Co., deserves credit for encouraging Bob Smith to serve Hudson County.

In addition to his career at Ryerson Steel and the United Way, he served on the Woodbridge Board of Education from 1962 to 1963, the Woodbridge Township Council from 1963 to 1971, and as vice president of the Woodbridge Council.

GROVE CITY HIGH SCHOOL BAND MARCHES IN THE TOURNAMENT OF ROSES PARADE

HON. CHALMERS P. WYLIE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, not since 1968 has a central Ohio high school band represented our area in the world famous Pasadena Tournament of Roses Parade. This will change on January 1, 1990, when the Grove City High School Band from Grove City, OH, appears in this world renown parade. After reviewing over 250 applications from bands throughout the world, the Tournament of Roses Committee extended an official invitation to the Grove City High School Band to participate in the Rose Parade.

The march to Pasadena has been a long one for the Grove City High School Band; one filled with awards and distinguished performances. Some of their distinguished appearances include performing for Vice President George Bush in the fall of 1988 for his Presidential campaign and in Florida for Disney World's Electric Light Parade in 1989. Some of the band's awards include 1986–87 Grand Champion of the Ohio State Buckeye Band Invitational, Grand Champion of the Pickerington Band Contest, the Athens Band Contest, the Miami Trace Band Contest, and the Newark Band Contest.

The Grove City High School Band should be congratulated on its accomplishments. This is a fine, first-rate band and a great asset to central Ohio.

LOCAL COOKIE MANUFACTURER GOES NATIONAL

HON. BILL RICHARDSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I recently had the good fortune of meeting with the owners of a small New Mexico company who represent the very best of the American entrepreneurial spirit.

Lawrence and JoMarie Semprevivo's cookie company, L&J Lite Cookies, is a prime example of American innovation. When the Semprevivos' son was diagnosed as diabetic, mom and dad developed a reduced-calorie cookie—a cookie that is now a big seller.

I encourage my colleagues to read about the Semprevivos' successful business venture in the following news article which appeared in the July 31 edition of the Deming Headlight. I would be most happy to provide a sample to any colleague who wishes to try the Semprevivos' "lite" cookie.

[From the Deming Headlight, July 31, 1989]

LOCAL COOKIE MANUFACTURER GOES NATIONAL

(By Rand Miranda)

For L&J Lite Cookies, their reduced calorie cookies has turned into a gold mine with more and more stores offering their products and customers ranging from actor Jack Lemmon to President George Bush.

L&J Cookies, 204 S. Gold Ave., is quickly selling all of its products and has even had to turn down stores wishing to sell the lite cookies, said Lawrence Semprevivo, co-owner and founder.

Semprevivo, along with his wife JoMarie, experimented with different doughs trying to develop a cookie for one of their sons, a diabetic. They finally discovered a product which was tasty to eat and safe for their son.

The cookies use a crystalline fructose manufactured from corn syrup as the sweetener. This natural sugar doesn't elevate a person's blood sugar or change the triglyceride levels in the bloodstream.

Semprevivo said the cookies have an additional benefit of being salt and sucrose free, high in fiber and protein with about half the calories of normal cookies.

L&J Cookies currently offers chocolate chip, oatmeal with raisins, whole wheat, pecan double fudge, vanilla and almond cookies. A brownie and snack cookies for movie theaters have been developed and will soon be on sale, he said.

The store has shifts working from 8 a.m. until midnight making approximately 10,000 cookies an hour, he said. Even so, the demand for the cookies is far outweighing the supply.

"The General Nutrition Center stores have recently hired us to produce 5,000 cases every other week for their 820 stores," Semprevivo said. "Plus, they'd like to expand the operation to another 500 stores."

The Food Emporium chain in New Mexico and Texas had to be turned down because his business is currently unable to produce enough cookies, he said. Because of the high demand for the cookies, Semprevivo said he would like to build a plant in the Deming Industrial Park.

"We'd like to stay in Deming," he said. "Our corporate offices will stay here regardless, but we would like our production plant to stay here." Semprevivo said he is planning on discussing the matter with the Deming City Council in August. If the plant is approved, he said he would like to see construction begin as soon as possible.

Semprevivo said he is buying most of his products locally and helps charitable organizations such as the National Juvenile Diabetes Foundation and the Southwestern Services to the Handicapped, who are paid to place labels on the cookie bags.

The store is also planning on delivering a batch of cookies to the White House and to New Mexico's congressmen. The cookies will be in a pottery cookie jar with the recipient's name on one side, and the Mimbres Indian design on the other side, he said.

The cookies are sold locally at stores such as Farmer's Market, Safeway and City Drug, Semprevivo said.

"These are just good, healthy cookies with one-half the calories," he said.

JOSEPH A. PECHMAN

HON. WILLIS D. GRADISON, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, during our recent recess, America lost one of its outstanding citizens, Joe Pechman. His career, both in and out of government, was a model of public service. I had the good fortune to meet Joe when we were both at the Treasury Department during the early days of the Eisenhower administration. Since then, our paths frequently crossed.

Joe combined scholarly knowledge of the tax and budget systems with a keen understanding of how government works. His work was consistently on the cutting edge of the key issues we have faced in recent years. He shared his wit and wisdom with many of us, and was especially helpful during the retreats of the Ways and Means Committee and in his annual budget analyses at Brookings.

About 2 years ago, when Rudy Penner announced his plans to retire as Director of the Congressional Budget Office, and I was a member of the committee to recommend a successor, Joe was my candidate—yes, if you will, a sentimental candidate. His interest in the problems of the day continued until the end—most recently in his views on capital gains taxation. Joe and I did not always agree. But by talking to him and reading what he wrote I, and I'm sure many others, developed a keener understanding of the issues before us. Joe will be missed, but I hope his life will inspire others to follow his example.

TO ASSIST THE HOMELESS MENTALLY ILL

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

Thursday, September 7, 1989

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that would focus attention and resources on the problems of America's homeless mentally ill by establishing a National Commission to Aid Homeless Mentally Ill Individuals.

Homelessness is a serious problem in our Nation and has received a great deal of attention from policymakers, public interest groups, and the academic community. At the same time, however, little attention has been focused on the plight of homeless mentally ill individuals who comprise a significant portion of the overall homeless population.

While a majority of individuals with severe mental illness receive necessary treatment and are able to live independently with family or friends, a large proportion of these individuals are homeless and live in precarious and life-threatening circumstances.

A recent survey of 10,000 homeless adults living in New York City shelters found that fully two-thirds suffer from a mental disorder. A book written by psychiatrist E. Fuller Torrey entitled "Nowhere to Go: The Tragic Odyssey of the Homeless Mentally Ill," estimates that there are at least twice as many mentally ill individuals on the streets as there are in mental hospitals.

Research conducted by the National Institute of Mental Health suggests that at least 33 percent of the current homeless population are severely mentally ill.

While homeless mentally ill individuals share many characteristics in common with the general homeless population, the presence of mental illness heightens their individual vulnerability and requires special intervention to end their homelessness. Multiple service needs of the homeless include the need for mental health treatment, physical health care, alcohol and drug abuse treatment, employment assistance, job training, and housing.

Given these special needs, if we hope to effectively address the homelessness problem in America, we must recognize that mentally ill individuals represent a significant portion of the homeless population and have special needs which must be met. Failure to recognize and address these needs will limit our ability to succeed in addressing the larger problem of homelessness in general.

I have supported funding for the McKinney Act and other legislation directed toward providing assistance to the homeless. These are important programs and they have helped reduce the severity of the homeless problem in our country.

Until we begin to effectively address the specialized needs of the homeless mentally ill population, however, I do not believe we will make as much progress in solving the problem as we hope.

The legislation I am introducing would focus attention and resources directly on the problems that are faced by the homeless mentally ill by creating a national commission known as the Commission To Aid Homeless Mentally Ill individuals.

The Commission would have several duties. Most importantly, it would be responsible for establishing a national policy to improve the treatment and care for homeless mentally ill individuals. The Commission would also develop strategies for generating new and more complete information about effective and economical methods of providing mental health treatment and other services to the mentally ill. Finally, the Commission would be responsible for inventorying information that is known about the homeless mentally ill and for identifying areas that are in need of further research.

The Commission would be made up of 15 members appointed by the President of the United States and would include psychologists and psychiatrists, officials from the Departments of Housing and Urban Development and Health and Human Services and the National Institute of Mental Health, parents and siblings of mentally ill individuals who have experienced homelessness, State mental health officials, and service providers.

Mr. Speaker, today there are thousands of mentally ill individuals in America who make their homes on our Nation's streets. Many of them are there because the support and specialized services they need are not available to them.

While the weather is warm, it is easy to forget the desperate plight of these individuals. However, an effective and compassionate response to the homeless problem demands that we take steps to understand who these individuals are and address the specialized needs of the homeless mentally ill population. The National Commission To Aid Homeless Mentally Ill Individuals is a necessary and constructive first step and I encourage Members to join me in cosponsoring this measure.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] to lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. MONTGOMERY led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE HONORABLE CHARLIE GRIFFIN

(Mr. MONTGOMERY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to report to you and to the House the death of my friend and our former colleague, Charlie Griffin of Mississippi. Charlie died of a heart attack Sunday morning at his home in Utica, MS.

He came to Washington in 1949 as a member of the staff of Representative John Bell Williams at the age of 23. He was with him, until Williams left the House to become Governor of Mississippi in 1968. Charlie won the election to fill that unexpired term, and then he was reelected to two more terms from Mississippi's Fourth District.

In 1972, he retired from the House and went back home to Mississippi, but he returned to public service in 1980, taking the job of Secretary of the Mississippi State Senate. Charlie retired from that "second career" in July of this year.

Charlie dedicated his life to public service, here in Washington and in Mississippi. I know the Members of the House join me in expressing our sadness to his wife, Angie, and his family.

LET US HAVE CAPITAL GAINS FOR THOSE WHO NEED IT, NOT TAX BREAKS FOR THE RICH

(Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, this week Congress is going to consider the capital gains tax cut. The two major proposals that have been offered are similar in their impact. One would give 80 percent of the benefits, very significant tax cuts, to those whose incomes are above $100,000 a year. The second would give 75 percent of the benefits to those whose incomes are above $100,000 a year.

Under the Jenkins-Archer proposal, the average tax cut for those who report capital gains and whose incomes are over $200,000 a year, the average tax cut will be approximately $25,000 a year in tax cut.

Now this country is up to its neck in debt. The rich are getting richer and the poor are getting poorer.

Some people say the solution is to give big tax cuts to the very rich. But where is the evidence?

That makes no sense at all.

I am going to offer an amendment this week in the Committee on Ways and Means. It is an amendment that says to President Bush, "Let's see if you really mean it." The President and others say, "We want capital gains cuts for the middle class." And they offer something that gives virtually all of the benefits to the rich.

The "Let's see if you really mean it" approach says this: "Let us provide capital gains cuts, a 30-percent exclusion, for those with incomes up to $100,000 a year and phase them out between $100,000 and $200,000."

If you make nearly a quarter of a million dollars or a million dollars or $10 million a year, you can very easily afford to pay today's modest income tax rates of 28 percent, or the 33 percent that I would propose for the top bracket.

We do not need more tax breaks for the Donald Trump's and the Malcolm Forbes' and their friends. They are doing just fine.

The top tax rate used to be 91 percent, then it was reduced to 70 percent, then to 50 percent, and now to 28 percent for the richest of the rich.

I say enough is enough. This country cannot afford big tax cuts to the rich people.

Let us provide capital gains for the rest, reasonable tax rates for the rich. Let's see if those who propose capital gains relief for the middle class really mean what they say.

I am not sure they do. This is really the discredited trickle-down approach.

Hubert Humphrey used to debunk this by saying, "If you give the horses some hay, somehow the sparrows will have something to pick at later."

I do not support that either.

Let us straighten out our treatment of horses and sparrows. If we are going to have capital gains, let us make capital gains adjustments for those who need them, not give out big tax breaks for the rich.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE HONORABLE CHARLIE GRIFFIN

(Mr. WHITTEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.).

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleague, SONNY MONTGOMERY, in expressing my sorrow at the untimely passing of my good friend, Charlie Griffin.

Charlie had successful experiences, as administrative assistant to Congressman John Bell Williams, as a Congressman, as a bank president, and for many years as chief officer of the Mississippi State Senate.

In all he was successful, passing on to something new from choice.

Truly, Charlie was an outstanding Mississipian and American. His service has been tremendous, and his friends, unparalleled in the history of our State.

To his wife, Angie, we extend our deepest sympathy.

We have lost a dear friend and Mississippian and the Nation has lost an outstanding citizen.

THE LEBANESE CONFLICT COMES HOME TO WICHITA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, the continued bloodshed in Lebanon is more than just a distant conflict to many Wichitans. For many of our friends and neighbors this war is very real and very painful. Until last week, many Lebanese put their faith in the U.S. Embassy to help them find ways out of that war-torn country. With the evacuation of the U.S. Ambassador, the symbol of hope for those people is now gone.

Indeed, the United States Embassy provided the only hope for reuniting families and friends left in Lebanon for many Lebanese-American families. The State Department estimates that some 20,000 Lebanese are waiting to immigrate to the United States. Their visas have been approved and they have American sponsors in the form of parents, brothers, sisters or children who are already U.S. citizens or are resident aliens in the awaiting U.S. citizenship.

But because of restrictive immigration quotas, many of those 20,000 people face 2 to 6 year waiting period before being allowed into the United States. The past 6 months of the conflict alone has left over 800 people dead and 2,500 wounded; we simply cannot make people wait for years and years when the situation is so obviously life threatening.

The war in Lebanon came home to Wichita, and to me, when one family my office had been working with on immigration matters lost a family member in a bomb blast in Beirut. He had just been told that he could pick up his visas in 2 weeks for travel to the United States. That tragedy is repeated far too frequently for Lebanese-Americans waiting to be joined here by other family members.

Virtually all families have suffered the loss of a loved one, the constant pain of trying to live in the rubble of Beirut, and the fear of what another day of intensive shelling of residential neighborhoods will bring. We must not allow our frustration with finding a constructive role in this conflict turn to complacency. We cannot abandon the Lebanese people. Nowhere in the world is the daily physical threat to the lives of innocent people more clear.

What the United States can offer is refuge to the people whose lives are at risk. Today, along with my colleagues from Ohio Ms. OAKAR and Ms. KAPTUR, I will introduce legislation to permit Lebanese with family members in the United States who qualify for visas to come here immediately, temporarily lifting the quota ceiling that has created a tremendous backlog of Lebanese who want to escape the war and come to the United States.

Many of these people have parents, children, brothers, and sisters in Kansas. Everyday that the bloodshed continues, these people face the risk of bodily injury and death. I also will support efforts to give students and other Lebanese nationals who entered the United States legally and whose visas have expired or are near expiration, temporary protected status in the United States until the bloodshed subsides. Congress has taken similar action in the case of Chinese students following the Tianamen Square massacre, and related action has been proposed in the past for Salvadorans and Nicaraguans living in the United States. But there are very few places on Earth where the constant daily dangers to human life is greater than it is in Lebanon.

During this difficult period we must also keep faith that the efforts to stop the war in Lebanon will continue. In the meantime, the United States should provide these oppressed people with something few other countries can: An opportunity to live in peace, with hope for the future.

ANNUNZIO WARNS OF WIDESPREAD MONEY LAUNDERING BY DRUG DEALERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TALLON). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, President Bush has revealed the administration's "War on Drugs" strategy and it includes a crackdown on drug dealers who use U.S. banks to launder the illicitly gained money to foreign countries. As chairman of the House Banking Subcommittee on Financial Institutions Supervision, Regulation and Insurance, I applaud the President's plan. I hope, however, the strategy is transformed from rhetoric into action.

Mr. Speaker, modern technology such as facsimile machines and computers have rapidly expanded the volume of electronic money transfers among banks throughout the world. The technology has hidden vast sums of illegal drug profits being clandestinely sent out of the United States. A 35-year-old Colombian economist, who has been extradited to this country, allegedly used some of New York's most prominent financial institutions, like Citibank, American Express, Bank of New York, and Republic National Bank, to help move $1.2 billion in cocaine profits out of the United States in a 2-year period.

More than $100 billion a year in drug money flows through the Nation's banks. That is billion with a capital "B" as in big bucks. Traditional Treasury Department attempts to detect drug money laundering through report filing procedures has proved so ineffective that drug dealers have even filed all the proper government forms and have gone undetected.

Wire transfers between banks are executed almost instantly and anonymously. Transfers commonly occur by instructions sent by customers through their computers or fax machines to bank tellers or computers. Often the transfers involve little more than a customer's computer communicating with a bank's computer. The bank computer communicates with a clearinghouse computer, which then makes the transfer of credit to the receiving bank computer. Throughout, there is little or no human oversight. Furthermore, the clearinghouses often combine money transfers headed to the same bank into batches that average about $5 million. Because of the sheer volume, the transfers go unmonitored.

The Treasury Department has been overwhelmed by cash transfer reports, which banks must file with the Government for deposits of more than $10,000. More than 7 million are now filed annually, up from less than 100,000 a decade ago. Thus, it is easy to understand how a money launderer can become lost in the paperwork shuffle.

Congress adopted legislation last year that directs the Treasury Secretary to negotiate with foreign countries that conduct significant transactions in dollars. Now under way, the negotiations are aimed at persuading foreign banking institutions to maintain adequate transfer records to make them available to U.S. officials.

Mr. Speaker, the United States must not relax in its efforts to put the dirty money launderers behind bars. As President Bush said in his drug message: We will pursue and enforce international agreements to track drug money to the front men and financiers. And then we wil handcuff these money launderers, and jail them—just like any street dealer. And for drug kingpins, the death penalty.

UNFAIR FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TALLON). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I just came from the International Trade Commission a few minutes ago, testifying on the issue of Durum exports from Canada to the United States under the United States-Canada Free Trade Agreement. I want to make the point, for the purpose of serving some notice to the Secretary of Agriculture and also to the U.S. Trade Representative that those Members who represent farm districts in this Congress are not going to sit still much longer for the inaction of the USTR and the Secretary of Agriculture. They negotiated away a great deal of American agriculture's interest in this United States-Canada Free Trade Agreement.

Yes, the Canadians are good neighbors of ours and we like good trade, and the ideological thrill seekers who advance free trade would have Members believe this is in our best interest. Let me give Members an example of Durum wheat: The Free Trade Agreement has a condition in which Canadian markets are closed to American producers, so we cannot move any grain north. American markets are wide open to Canadian producers, and they are moving a deluge of Durum wheat south. That moves across subsidized rails in Canada, subsidizing the bushels, 50 to 80 cents a bushel, to the U.S. eastern pasta markets. The U.S. producers cannot compete. Subsidized Canadian exports have caused a collapse in Durum prices, taking tens of millions of dollars out of the pockets of American Durum producers. That is not free trade, that is unfair trade.

Clayton Yeutter, the U.S. Trade Ambassador when this was negotiated, had written to me during the negotiations, and I have the representations in writing, that this would not happen. He said this sort of thing will not happen because there is going to be good faith on both sides. The description of the "good faith" on our side is that we will not pursue the question of whether the end use certificates or licensing program in Canada is GATT legal, and there are questions of whether the Canadian system of licensing is violative of GATT.

In exchange for our not questioning the GATT legality of the Canadian export question, the export licensing system, we will then expect the Canadians to show good faith by not dumping enormous subsidized grain into the American grain markets. The fact is, 14 percent of the Durum market is now Canadian grain, coming across unfairly, at a time when Canadian markets are closed to American grain. Coming across with these deep transportation subsidies at a time when American producers cannot compete with them.

I have asked the Secretary of Agriculture what he is going to do about this, because clearly it violates the tenets that were represented to Members. I have yet to hear from the Secretary of Agriculture. However, I have heard, and we have heard from the U.S. Trade Representative. The United States Trade Representative is down to the ITC, saying, "Let us accelerate the phaseout of tariffs with Canada." Well, my message to the U.S. Trade Representative is to let Members solve the problems that exist before we begin accelerating anything. Accelerating the phaseout of tariffs does not mean anything to the Canadians. Their markets are closed to the United States. It does not matter what the tariffs are if Americans cannot get grain in. The tariff is irrelevant.

My message to the Secretary of Agriculture is that we expect some action, and we expect it soon. We do not expect to continue to see additional deluges of Canadian grain competing unfairly and costing our producers enormous amounts of money, and in contravention of the representation made to Members, by now Secretary and then Ambassador Yeutter, during the United States-Canada Free Trade Agreement.

Finally, I represent a district, the entire State of North Dakota, that has a long common border with Canada. The Canadians are good neighbors and good friends. However, free trade and fair trade are different situations, and we do not countenance an agreement that is called a Free Trade Agreement that does not allow for free trade in agriculture products between the United States and Canada. We hope to hear from and see action soon from the USTR and the Secretary of Agriculture. They should know this is not the last they will hear of this if we do not hear from them soon.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

INDEPENDENT COUNSEL CALLS FOR PASSAGE OF DISCLOSURE LEGISLATION

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 11, 1989

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, drawing from his experience in the Mike Deaver case, as well as the recent scandals at HUD, Independent Counsel Whitney North Seymour, Jr., has recently issued a thorough, and insightful, analysis of influence peddling in the executive branch.

Although the full report, "Executive Branch Lobbying," is too lengthy to include in the RECORD, I would like to share his major findings and conclusions with my colleagues.

Mr. Seymour recommends that the best way to eliminate improper lobbying activities is through enactment of a comprehensive executive branch lobbying disclosure law.

Earlier this summer I introduced the Consultant Disclosure and Fraud Prevention Act (H.R. 3145) to provide effective disclosure of lobbying activities. H.R. 3145 offers a logical, and prudent, nonpartisan solution to this difficult problem.

EXECUTIVE BRANCH LOBBYING—REPORT TO CONGRESS ON THE NATURE, EFFECTS AND NEED FOR REGULATION OF EXECUTIVE BRANCH LOBBYING

(Report to Congress by Independent Counsel in the Michael Deaver Case)

I. INTRODUCTION

On May 29, 1986, a division of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit appointed Independent Counsel to investigate whether former Deputy Chief of Staff and Assistant to the President Michael K. Deaver had violated the provisions of the Ethics in Government Act, 18 U.S.C. Section 207, or any other provision of Federal law. The appointment was requested by the Deputy Attorney General of the United States,[1] by members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and by Mr. Deaver himself.

The investigation resulted in Deaver's indictment for perjury in sworn testimony about his lobbying activities before the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations of the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives (chaired by John D. Dingell) and before a Federal grand jury. In December 1987, Deaver was convicted by a trial jury on three counts of the five-count indictment. Deaver was sentenced to a prison term of three years, on which execution was suspended by the trial judge, and was ordered to pay a fine of $100,000. He was placed on probation for three years, during which he was prohibited from lobbying the Federal Government for profit and required to perform 1,500 hours of community service. Deaver filed an appeal but later withdrew it, and he is currently on probation and performing the community service imposed by the District Court.

The statute creating the office of Independent Counsel directs the Independent Counsel to report to Congress as and when appropriate. 28 U.S.C. Section 595(a)(2). This report is submitted pursuant to that authorization.

A. The Ineffective Regulation of Lobbying: The Shortcomings of Section 207

At the time of appointment, Independent Counsel was directed to investigate what was thought to be a particularly egregious example of Executive Branch lobbying by a former White House official. As previously pointed out to the Judiciary Committees of both Houses of Congress, the shortcomings of the statute, 18 U.S.C. Section 207—combined with Deaver's false testimony—made prosecution of Deaver for violating its provisions impossible.[2] The principal defects in the statute as it then existed were as follows:

1. White House Compartmentalization

In 1982, the Office of Government Ethics ("OGE"), responding to a request from the White House Counsel, issued an order dividing the White House into nine separate "statutory agencies." Since the main feature of the statute was to prohibit a former employee from lobbying his "former agency," the effect of the OGE compartmentalization order was to grant Deaver a blanket exemption for contacts with most of the key White House officials with whom he had worked regularly as Deputy Chief of Staff and Assistant to the President.

2. Use of Intermediaries

The Ethics in Government Act ("EIGA") was expressly intended not to prohibit former high government officials from using emissaries to influence their former agencies. Even where a former official employed his own former staff aides for his lobbying business and used them to carry personal messages to his former agency, such conduct was exempt under Section 207 if the aides' government salaries—as was usually the case—had been below the grade of GS-17.

3. "Social and Informational" Communications

Section 207 authorized administrative interpretation of its operation in separate regulations, which expressly permitted "social or informational" communications. Such communications provide a perfect method for a lobbyist to convey his personal interest in a particular matter to one of his former colleagues simply by inquiring about its status or by mentioning it during a "social" conversation.

4. Job Switching

The statute did not prohibit a former high official from lobbying a former government colleague who had moved to a different agency, no matter how close their personal relationship.

5. "Particular Matter" Requirement

The express language of Section 207 prohibited only communications relating to a "particular matter" pending before the agency, or in which the agency had a direct and substantial interest. This qualification created extensive doubts over the section's applicability to specific situations and permitted a former employee to lobby an agency to become interested in a matter which previously had not been before it.

B. Strengthening the Regulation of Lobbying: A Registration and Reporting Requirement

In addition to eliminating these loopholes from the EIGA, Congress should consider a different approach to regulating Executive Branch lobbying. We suggest legislative consideration of a registration and reporting requirement for Executive Branch lobbying on behalf of domestic clients, similar to the FARA requirement applicable to the representation of foreign clients.

The initial disclosure of Deaver's activities, which led to the pressure for an inquiry, and ultimately to the appointment of Independent Counsel, demonstrates the wisdom of such a reporting requirement. The Deaver story broke only after journalists scrutinized Deaver's FARA filings. The fact might otherwise never have come to light.

Lobbying abuses and secrecy are intertwined. That is why a reporting requirement makes such good policy. Secrecy was so important to Deaver that he felt compelled to conceal and lie about his activities even while testifying under oath.

Two significant facts underscore the importance that secrecy plays in Executive Branch lobbying:

"1. As soon as Deaver's activities received public attention, Deaver's clients began to desert him. So significant was this damage to Deaver's lobbying business that it resulted in the cancellation of a proposed multimillion dollar acquisition of his form by an international conglomerate.

"2. Deaver himself was so concerned about maintaining the secrecy of his dealings with White House and other Executive Branch officials that he was willing to risk prosecution and imprisonment to keep them from a congressional committee and a Federal grand jury."

Secrecy is important to successful Executive Branch lobbying from two points of view:

1. For business reasons, the client does not want publicity about its high-fee lobbying with government officials.

2. For political reasons, the Executive Branch official does not want publicity about his accessibility to high-fee lobbyists.

From the standpoint of the public interest, lobbying is most dangerous when it is carried on in secret, with no one representing the citizen-taxpayer or the public at large. This report recommends an antidote to lobbying carried out in secret. Drawing on facts from the public record of the Deaver case, the activities of this office, and other information in the public domain, this report discusses the widespread nature of lobbying activity similar to Deaver's, and the need for strengthened regulation of such activity through a registration and reporting requirement.

II. "BACK CHANNEL" GOVERNMENT

The Deaver case record, viewed against the backdrop of the conduct of similar lobbyists, reveals that present-day lobbying of the Executive Branch of the Federal Government is an unregulated, free-wheeling, essentially lawless activity that is damaging to public confidence in the government, and potentially harmful to the integrity of the governmental process.

Executive Branch lobbying is aimed directly at decision-making in the White House and the various Executive agencies. It is an activity which can accurately be described as "back channel" government because it circumvents the normal government procedures which apply to other citizens.[3] This back channel government is manipulated by a small number of Washington consultants who have special access to politically-oriented senior staff members in the Executive Branch. This special access is used to advocate the interests of high-paying clients.

To understand this back channel government, one needs to recognize that the nation's Executive is not simply a single individual elected by the people to serve as their President. The President's personal staff alone is a substantial bureaucracy numbering several hundred. Senior staff members who are closest to the President wield immense power. In some administrations they determine what the President will be told, who the President will see, what he will say, where he will go, and what he will do. They directly influence the President's decisions and can tip his judgments in one direction or another.

In a government as complex as ours, it would be impossible to run the presidency without a large support staff. As a consequence, the welfare of the country is dependent in significant respects upon the ability, judgment and integrity of individual members of the President's staff. The same is true of other agencies in the Executive Branch. Agency heads must depend on their staffs to advise them on what to say or do in official matters.

When a new Administration comes into office, as many as three thousand new appointments may be made to fill top policy positions in the Executive Branch. Presidential staff people and Cabinet aides are a special breed, different from almost anyone else in government. Many of them have had little or no prior Federal Government experience. Many come into office by way of political positions in presidential campaigns. On the whole, they are people of talent and perform their particular tasks with skill. They also bring valuable insights and experience to Executive Branch operations. Yet they have one characteristic which sets them apart: their primary loyalty is to the President as a political figure, the person who was once head of their ticket and is now head of the government. Some of these staff people think and act like political "wheelers and dealers" rather than career public servants. They measure their achievements in terms of winning, of gaining an advantage, of increasing their own personal or political power. This is not true of all of them by any means, but it does apply to a sufficient number to be a significant factor in how the government functions.

Closely allied to these people is a special group of "government affairs consultants" who have private access to the White House and other senior Executive Branch staff. In number they are only a dozen or so firms, but they wield enormous influence on government decisions involving the interests of their clients. These firms are mostly run by former presidential campaign aides. Because of their personal and political contacts with senior Executive Branch staff members, they are able to command substantial fees for their work. They prosper not necessarily because they are smarter or work harder than anyone else, but because they can provide "access" to those who influence presidential decisions and have the "clout" to request favors from them.[4]

These consultants often claim they are merely "technicians" whose service is explaining to clients how government works. But the size of the fees they receive shows that their clients believe they offer something of far greater value than merely technical advice on government operations.

Defense contractors, big business, and foreign governments are the principal entities who pay large retainers to these consultants in the confident expectation of receiving special consideration in matters that may involve billions of dollars of public funds.

Two of Deaver's high-paying clients were principal defense contractors: Rockwell International and The Boeing Company. His mission on their behalf was not to lobby Congress but to lobby the Executive Branch to help them win huge contracts, and to do so behind closed doors via the equivalent of the back channel.

There is nothing new about Executive Branch lobbying. One need only think back to the administration of Presidents Ulysses S. Grant and Warren G. Harding to be reminded of the extraordinary potential for abuse that exists, and will probably always be present to some degree. The fact that today's lobbying of the Executive Branch is an updated version of an age-old phenomenon, however, does not mean that it cannot be controlled.

The problem can be stated simply: a small group of highly-paid consultants is able to gain special privilege for its clients because of personal and political ties to senior staff members in the White House and other Executive agencies, including most major departments and key independent agencies in Washington. These consultants have direct "back channel" access to decision-makers in the Executive Branch that is not available to citizens at large. Unlike congressional lobbyists, Executive Branch lobbyists are not required to register or otherwise publicly disclose their activities, unless they represent foreign interests.[5] Their back channel access to government is not subject to any public accountability whatsoever.

Michael K. Deaver

The significance of the Deaver case from the viewpoint of governmental operations is that it provided a clear look at exactly how Executive Branch lobbying works, and what lobbyists are able to do despite the Ethics in Government Act. The case also revealed why Deaver was able to attract so many clients who were willing to pay him fees ranging from $100,000 to $500,000 per year.

IV. LEGISLATIVE RECOMMENDATIONS

A. Public Disclosure of Lobbying Clients and Activities

Who first blew the whistle on Deaver's lobbying excesses?

That honor apparently belongs to two Washington Post staff writers, Thomas B. Edsall and David Hoffman. On October 27, 1985, the Post carried a front page article by Edsall and Hoffman entitled "Luring Clients." It was the first hard news story of Deaver's extraordinary success in lining up business for his lobbying firm following his departure from the White House in May. The key to the Edsall-Hoffman article was its reliance on public filings by Deaver's firm under the Foreign Agents and Registration Act. The lead paragraphs in the story specifically described Deaver's retainer as a lobbyist by the Canadian Government—a fact which was disclosed in FARA filings with the Justice Department.

It was this same October 27, 1985 Washington Post article which directly triggered Congressman Dingell's initial inquiry to the General Accounting Office about Deaver's activities on the acid rain issue. This led in turn to the Dingell subcommittee hearings in May 1986, when Deaver committed the perjury for which he was later convicted. The most striking fact about this chain of events is the importance of the filing and disclosure requirements of FARA.

Other investigative journalists have made good use of the information in FARA filings to keep the public informed about questionable conduct by Executive Branch lobbyists. Washington Post reporter Stuart Auerbach published a listing of well-connected lobbyists representing foreign interests in a lengthy article on February 16, 1986. The lead sentence in the story stressed the role of former officials and campaign aides as Executive Branch lobbyists:

Former officials of the Reagan administration and influential Reagan-Bush campaign aides are being paid millions of dollars by foreign governments and corporations, in many cases to help those clients block or counter administration initiatives.

The first former official Auerbach named was Deaver: "The most prominent former Reagan aide representing foreign interests for large fees is Michael K. Deaver, a confidant of President Reagan and his wife, Nancy."

The Post reporter repeatedly identified the FARA filings as his source of information.

[3] "Back channel" is the term used to describe the communications network to U.S. Embassies abroad which bypasses formal State Department oversight. See use of the phrase in a Black, Manafort client proposal quoted in the Time magazine excerpt on page 15.

[4] There are, of course, hundreds of organizations, attorneys, and paid lobbyists who make presentations to administrative agencies in support of legitimate goals and who serve a useful public purpose, but they usually operate at the "line" level, dealing with career civil servants, where issues are decided on the merits. This report concerns itself with the high-priced lobbyists whose stock in trade is peddling personal political influence directly to agency heads and senior policy staff.

[5] Criticisms have been directed at the ineffectiveness of congressional lobbyist reporting requirements, but this topic was not the subject of the Independent Counsel's investigation, and we therefore have no basis to make legislative recommendations. See Richard Cowan, "None Dare Call It Lobbying," Common Cause, March/April 1989, pp. 13-16.

Particularly significant was the fact that in many cases the FARA filings were the only available source of information, since many of the lobbyists would not volunteer information about their clients:

Deaver declined to talk about potential conflicts between his former White House job and his foreign clients. "I don't talk about my clients, either foreign or domestic," he said.

It can be fairly said that the Deaver disclosures and subsequent congressional hearing and grand jury investigation would probably never have occurred if it had not been for two factors:

1. The requirement for lobbyists to register their retainer agreements with foreign clients at the Justice Department under the Foreign Agents Registration Act.

2. The enterprising work of journalists in reviewing those FARA filings and using them to alert the public.

What is noteworthy, however, is that there is no equivalent requirement to disclose contracts to lobby for domestic clients. The only way such information can now be obtained is through voluntary disclosures by the parties—a rare event—or through congressional or grand jury investigations, a costly and cumbersome process.

The single most important result that could come out of the Deaver case would be enactment of legislation to require the disclosure of all high-fee lobbying contracts aimed at the Executive Branch. The Foreign Agents Registration Act has proven itself an excellent model for what the legislation should provide. With suitable modification it could be extended to cover domestic clients with equal effectiveness.

V. CONCLUSION

The Michael Deaver case revealed the tip of an iceberg—a small outcrop of Washington's secret government, where special favors are traded based on who you know.

The basic philosophy of democratic government is that official decisions should be made strictly on the merits. Under democratic principles, all citizens are supposed to be able to deal with government on an equal footing—a crucial cornerstone of democratic society when our government has become a major dispenser of funds, and when every segment of society must compete for a fair distribution of the benefits of public funds and the burdens of public taxation. Democracy becomes corrupted when one segment of society can obtain special benefits and dispensations through secret access to government decision-makers.

The real issue raised by the Deaver case is not the narrow question of when an insider should begin lobbying the Executive Branch for special favors, but why secret lobbying should be allowed to be carried on at all.

Of course, not all lobbying is bad. Indeed, in some cases lobbying is the only way a perfectly legitimate organization can overcome bureaucratic misinformation, neglect, myopia or animosity. If the cause is legitimate, however, why does it need to be presented in secret? Why do ex-White House aides need to use White House passes to present legitimate cases?

Secrecy in government breeds abuse in government. When people believe that no one is watching, they are capable of conduct and decisions they would never attempt in the open.

The concept of open government is founded on long popular distrust of quiet deals and secret bargains. What may be appropriate to private business is not acceptable in a representative government.

The Biblical admonition "And ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free" could well be the motto for democracy. Truth is the fodder of freedom. Citizens make decisions based on what they know. In a democracy they are entitled to know exactly what their government leaders are doing and why.

At present there are no disclosure requirements for private lobbying of the Executive Branch by domestic interests. Defense contractors can influence awarding of contracts involving billions of dollars of tax money with no one being the wiser. Regulated industries can use the back stairs to make presentations to their regulators. Investment bankers, transportation corporations, minority businesses, professional associations, real estate developers—almost anyone who has a substantial stake in Federal policy—can hire a lobbyist whose stock-in trade is who he or she can see privately to make a secret approach to government officials for special consideration. There is simply no requirement to tell anyone what takes place.

A few administrators do take precautions to minimize lobbyist abuses—through sign-in registers, attendance of extra staff people as observers at meetings, post-meeting memos to the file, detailed appointment and telephone records, and the like—but this is the exception rather than the rule. Too many administrators, enjoying their power and prestige, wheel and deal with lobbyists inside and outside their offices, never keeping records, and exhibiting convenient memory lapses when questions are asked.

Influence peddling is not the same as bribery. The process is much more genteel, but the results are usually the same. Government officials tip the scales to help their friends earn money in their private lobbying firms. This can be done as indirectly as by providing advance information about an upcoming government decision, or as directly as deciding a close question in favor of the lobbyist's client. Often the "close question" involves deciding between the private interest of the client represented by the friendly spokesperson (authorizing construction, preserving a tax break, approving a merger) and the public interest (protecting the environment spreading the tax load, encouraging price competition), which may have no spokesperson at all.

The evils in this practice are not so much who does the lobbying, but the lack of public information about what lobbying is taking place. In a sense, the uproar over Deaver's lobbying activities after he left the White House was based on a feeling of unfair competition on the part of other lobbyists who were doing exactly the same things but with less "clout." Legislation to tighten up the "cooling off period" before an ex-official can begin lobbying is in one sense a "Lobbyists' Protection Bill" whose effect is to guarantee that lobbyists who already have special access to the Executive Branch are not put out of business by newcomers who may have even better access. Such legislation does not address the underlying problem, the secret lobbying itself.

One remedy is simple and self-evident: public disclosure. Let in the sunlight. Make records of high-fee lobbying activity open to the public. Encourage an inquiring press. End government decision-making by secret deals behind closed doors.

On the day following the jury's conviction of Michael K. Deaver for lying about his Executive Branch lobbying activities, the Independent Counsel issued a public statement about the significance of that conviction. The statement produced expressions of rage from the White House and sarcasm from some newspaper editors, but it is just as valid today as it was in December 1987:

The jury's verdict is the most eloquent statement that can be made about the Deaver case.

But the successful outcome of the Deaver trial should not be mistaken as a resolution of the more serious problem which brought about the appointment of an Independent Counsel in the first place.

That problem is too much "loose" money and too little concern in Washington about ethics in government.

Vast sums of money are on call to representatives of major corporations, defense contractors, and foreign governments to buy influence and favors. Much of that money is paid to "consultants" whose stock in trade is their friendship with persons in high office. Washington money men will continue to undermine public confidence in government until lawmakers, business and community leaders, and individual citizens decide to cry "enough."

The Congress of the United States is the only force that can effectively cry "enough" to the unbridled lobbying of the Executive Branch of the Federal Government. If some such measures are not taken soon, business interests and foreign governments will increasingly manipulate the policies of the Executive Branch of our national government, and special interest will replace public interest as government's primary goal.

Respectfully submitted,

WHITNEY NORTH SEYMOUR, JR.,
Independent Counsel.

TRIBUTE TO FIRST AMERICAN NOVELIST, JAMES FENIMORE COOPER

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

Monday, September 11, 1989

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to bring to the attention of my colleagues a celebration of the 200th anniversary of the birth of James Fenimore Cooper, America's first novelist. The Burlington County Historical Society of New Jersey is coordinating the year-long celebration that includes an essay contest, seminars, a library exhibit, and a reception honoring the charter members of the "James Fenimore Cooper Fellows."

Mr. Cooper, author of such classics as "The Last of the Mohicans" and "The Deerslayer," was born to William and Elizabeth Fenimore Cooper—the 11th of 12 children—in 1789 as they resided on High Street in the city of Burlington, NJ. The family lived there until 1790 when the novelist's father founded a frontier settlement on the Susquehanna River in New York, later called Cooperstown. A few years later, the family returned to Burlington where the novelist's father served as a Democrat in the 26th Congress in Philadelphia, 1839–41.

The author was educated at private schools in New York and then attended Yale University prior to a few years service in the Navy. Mr. Cooper married Susan DeLancy in 1811 and in 1820 published his first novel, "Precaustion."

The Burlington County Historical Society has maintained the birthplace of the author as its flagship historical site. The building, circa 1780, consists of four museum rooms containing Cooper artifacts and furnishings. Since acquiring the Cooper House in 1923, the Society has seen great expansion that now includes three historic houses, a museum and a library.

Mr. Speaker, I respectfully ask that my colegues join me in paying tribute to the Burlington County Historical Society and, in particular, the James Fenimore Cooper Fellows as they continue with their fine work throughout this year and the many years to come.

TRIBUTE TO MR. AND MRS. JOHN KOOK, JR.

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 11, 1989

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Mr. and Mrs. John Kook, Jr., of my 17th Congressional District of Ohio on the occasion of their 50th wedding anniversary.

John Kook, Jr., and Estelle Frederick were married in St. Mary's Catholic Church in Warren, OH, on September 23, 1939, by Rev. Clarence Heiman. They are the parents of John. F. Kook and the proud grandparents of seven, Karl, Michele, Allen, Ruthanne, Rosemary, David, and Douglas, who are residents of Hockessen, DE.

Mr. Kook retired from U.S. Steel in McDonald, OH, with 40 years of service in 1977. Mrs. Kook retired from Packard Electric with 33½ years of service in 1982. The Kooks attended Warren City Schools and are members of St. Peter and Paul Catholic Church. They are also active members of the Senior Archivers, the Labor Retirees of Trumbull County, and the local 717 Packard Electric Retirees. The Kooks have served on various school levies and have participated in local, State, and national committee elections.

Currently, Mrs. Kook is the president of the local 717 Packard Electric Retirees, the secretary for the local 717 Polish Women's Allegiance, the treasurer of Labor Retirees, and a board member of Senior Archivers. She has served on the School Review Board Committee and is presently a member of the Warren City Democrats, Women's Democrats, St. Peter and Paul Altar and Rosary Society, and the Women's Auxiliary.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to wish John and Estelle Kook a very happy 50th wedding anniversary. We are deeply indebted to both of them for their dedication and political contributions to our 17th District. The Kook's efforts have enhanced our local community and the Democratic Party as a whole. Their dedication and devotion also reflects the secret of their long-lasting and successful marriage. I am honored to represent these outstanding individuals.

INTRODUCING RESOLUTION IN SUPPORT OF COLOMBIA

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 11, 1989

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, there have been some serious developments in the war on drugs during the last few weeks. Following three successive brutal murders in as many days—a police chief, a magistrate, and a leading Presidential candidate—Colombian President Virgilio Barco took some unprecendented, bold steps against the Colombian drug trafficking organizations.

President Barco used state of siege powers to legislate by decree both extradition and asset seizure laws. The Government began an immediate crackdown on drug traffickers and their assets. So far, nearly 12,000 persons have been arrested, several millions of dollars worth of property and assets have been seized, and one of the cartel's financiers, Eduardo Martinez Romero, has been extradited to the Untied States to face money laundering charges.

Mr. Speaker, these are not small steps for the government and people of Colombia. The Colombian people have borne the brunt of drug trafficking violence during recent years. These new government actions have triggered a further escalation in drug violence. The drug traffickers responded by declaring war on the Colombian Government, judiciary and press. And—while this may be shocking to us, Mr. Speaker, it is not inconsistent with the previous heinous acts of these criminals—they have declared they will not spare the families of their victims.

The drug traffickers have vowed to kill 10 judges for each trafficker extradited to the United States. They have conducted a rash of over 20 bombings of public places and offices, including the office of the prestigious newspaper, El Espectador, whose editor they assassinated several years ago.

Mr. Speaker, my heart goes out to the brave people of Colombia who are on the front line in the battle with some of the world's most ruthless criminals.

I offer today a resolution of recognition and respect for the government and people of this ravaged nation. It is a resolution of empathy and of camaraderie. Finally, it is a resolution of support for the struggle against the drug trafficking cartels. I hope that all of my colleagues will join me in sponsoring this resolution.

COMMENDATIONS FOR THE MON-YOUGH COMMUNITY SERVICE SYSTEM

HON. DOUG WALGREN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 11, 1989

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to the Mon-Yough Community Mental Health, Mental Retardation Service System as it celebrates its 20th anniversary.

Mon-Yough Community Mental Health, Mental Retardation Service System is part of the community mental health system that was created under the Kennedy administration in 1963. Until that legislation, mental patients had no alternative to hospitalization unless they could afford expensive private psychiatric outpatient care.

Community mental health centers such as Mon-Yough provide that alternative. They have given many thousands of people the first real chance they have ever had to recover from or stabilize their conditions.

Mon-Yough and other community health centers have virtually revolutionized mental health treatment because of three distinguishing characteristics: Accessibility, affordability, and concern for the well-being of the whole person.

Mon-Yough is accessible because it operates in the community where the people it serves live. They no longer have to isolate themselves in far-away institutions to get treatment. It is affordable because it charges people only what they are able to pay. Mon-Yough is concerned for the well-being of the whole person because it realizes that treating the disease is not enough. The person is not going to recover if he or she does not have a job, or a place to live, or friends.

Mon-Yough and all community mental health service centers make an invaluable contribution to our Nation, and I ask my colleagues to join with me in expressing our gratitude.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIANS CELEBRATE OKTOBERFEST

HON. MERVYN M. DYMALLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to a set of important events which will be taking place in my district this weekend. My good friends, Hans and Theresa Rotter, owners of Alpine Village in Torrance, CA, will be hosting the fourth annual Oktoberfest fundraiser on September 9. This event officially kicks off Oktoberfest, a yearly German cultural event. The brainchild of Hans and Theresa, Oktoberfest has become a very special event in my district. So, to help celebrate this joyous 19th year of frolic and fun, I ask my colleagues to join me in a special tribute to Hans and Theresa for their outstanding humanitarian and civic contributions to our community throughout the years.

The Oktoberfest opening day has become a major community affair over the past 4 years, benefiting 12 charities this year. Festivities will include a stein holding contest; a patriotic concert by the San Diego U.S. Marine Corp Band, a special drawing for trips and cars, and dancing to the authentic brass band, Oom Pa Pah, direct from Germany.

Torrance Mayor Katy Geissert will officially open this 2-month-long Oktoberfest season by leading a parade, and by tapping the first keg of beer.

Hans and Theresa established Alpine Village in 1970, beginning with a small bratwurst sausage stand, at the sidelines of a soccer field which lay on an isolated landfill. Since that time a freeway has been built next to the Alpine Village, and the 14-acre property has flourished into an authentic German village atmosphere with a large bavarian inn, club haus, 20 specialty stores, a small wedding chapel, a beer garden—the home of Oktoberfest—an intercontinental market, a bakery, and butchery.

Alpine Village attracts many ethnic groups to this European style setting, with all the festivals, live entertainment, quality foods, quaint ambiance, and wonderful service.

Hans and Theresa have been able to turn Alpine Village into this wonderful cultural experience where an individual can actually feel that he or she is in a small town in Europe, if only for a while. Through hard work, perseverance, and commitment by Hans and Theresa, Alpine Village's Oktoberfest, beginning this weekend, is truly an experience one remembers forever. I congratulate my friends for their outstanding dedication and contributions to the 31st Congressional District.

HONORING THE ARMED SERVICE ACADEMY APPOINTEES FROM NEW YORK'S 10TH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT

HON. CHARLES E. SCHUMER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 11, 1989

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize two outstanding young students from my district. They were among the select few who were chosen as appointees to our armed service academies.

Each of my colleagues is very familiar with the rigorous procedure used to determine Academy appointments. Candidates must display the academic skills, as well as possess the character and commitment to succeed.

It is encouraging to see the determination in those who seek appointments, that they would give so much of themselves to serve their country. Those selected to the Academy become part of an enduring tradition and legacy.

This year, the 10th Congressional District in New York is fortunate to have representation at the elite service academies. Both of these appointees were leaders in their high schools and examples for their peers.

Ike Kim received an appointment to the Military Academy at West Point. He graduated from Hunter High School this past June. Ike was quite active in several clubs throughout his high school career. His devotion as an athlete inspired his peers and teachers. Ike is regarded as a determined leader with the stamina to fulfill the goals to which he aspires.

Receiving an appointment to the Naval Academy is Michael Simonelli. Michael's dedication to academic interests has qualified him as an outstanding student who participated on both the math team and academic Olympics in his high school career. Michael is a hardworking and ambitious young man who relates very well with his peers and is a leader in athletics. Michael graduated from Sheepshead Bay High School this June.

Mr. Speaker, I hope all of my colleagues will join me in wishing these two fine young men all the best in the future. We are extremely proud to have them representing and serving us at the service academies, and hope that all of their expectations are met and exceeded.

THE CONSULTANT DISCLOSURE AND FRAUD PREVENTION ACT

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 11, 1989

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, in his September 6, 1989, special report to the Congress, "Executive Branch Lobbying," Independent Counsel Whitney North Seymour, Jr., concluded:

The single most important result that could come out of the Deaver case would be enactment of legislation to require the disclosure of all high-fee lobbying contacts aimed at the Executive Branch.

The Congress of the United States is the only force that can effectively cry "enough" to the unbridled lobbying of the Executive Branch of the Federal Government.

Earlier this summer, I introduced legislation, H.R. 3145, to meet this specific goal, to provide public disclosure of what Seymour called back channel government. My bill would put an end to the kind of abuse we have seen recently at HUD and other agencies.

H.R. 3145, the Consultant Disclosure and Fraud Prevention Act of 1989, would deter influence-peddling by requiring full public disclosure by consultants who receive $5,000 in any calendar quarter, or $10,000 in any year, and who contact Federal officials at or above the GS–11 level on behalf of applicants for Federal funds, loans, loan guarantees, or contracts. Covered consultants would have to report the names and titles of the officials they contacted, as well as how much they received for their services, and whether or not they had been employed by the Federal Government in the previous 2 years.

The Consultant Disclosure and Fraud Prevention Act differs from other proposals in this area because it places the burden of compliance on consultants, rather than on towns, cities, and other applicants for Federal funds. It will provide us with the information we need to prevent abuse, without creating a hardship for communities and other groups which depend on Federal funds.

H.R. 3145 requires covered consultants to file quarterly reports with agency inspectors general so that the IG's will have a data base from which to detect patterns and practices of abuse. It also provides that the consultants' quarterly reports must be available for public inspection.

Finally, the bill provides a graduated scale of penalties for different levels of violation, including debarment from consulting activities for 3 years.

SOUTH JERSEY FAST PITCH SOFTBALL HALL OF FAME INDUCTEES 1989

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

Monday, September 11, 1989

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the members of various softball teams, in the south Jersey region, who will be inducted into the South Jersey Fast Pitch Softball Hall of Fame, at the annual award dinner, on Sunday, September 17, 1989. Two honorees will be inducted posthumously; they are Peter DelGrande and Chester Wachala. The honorees who will be on hand at the dinner are: John Holmes, Albert Scarduzio, Harry Mannal, Edward Groch, Benjamin Reeves, JoAnn VietDyer, and Clara Holmes.

All have given their talents to the game of fast pitch softball and have been all-around competitive athletes who played well both offensively and defensively. Additionally, over the years, each honoree has made a special contribution which will be long remembered by the teams for which they played.

This is not only an honor bestowed upon men and women who played the game well, but who also displayed their sportsmanship and dedication to the sport. This commitment stands as an example for all who participate today. There is no question that their sense of sportsmanship was also translated to their lives, through their involvement, in their individual communities.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that all join with me in offering congratulations to the 1988 inductees, into the South Jersey Fast Pitch Softball Hall of Fame, and also to the families of those who will be posthumously honored.

TRIBUTE TO MUNICIPAL JUDGE ROBERT J. KALAFUT

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 11, 1989

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to municipal Judge Robert J. Kalafut of my 17th Congressional District on the occasion of his 25th year on Struthers Muny Court.

Robert Kalafut began his academic career at Youngstown State University where he received his B.S. degree in business administration and was elected president of his sophomore class. In 1954, Robert earned his LL.B. degree at Case Western Reserve University where he also became actively involved in editing the law review.

Throughout his life, Robert has exhibited exceptional citizenship and service to his community. He began his career by serving as acting judge of the Mahoning County Court. He also served 1 year as city law director in Struthers. Robert was the first and only judge to sit on the municipal court bench in Struthers since its establishment in 1964.

As municipal court judge, Robert has consistently displayed a sense of understanding and devotion in aiding the issues or problems that affect his community. He has received numerous honors and awards demonstrating the pride and integrity that he has shown through his involvement in public service. He has also received awards from the Ohio Supreme Court for his superior judicial service.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Robert Kalafut on the 25 years of commendable judicial and community service that he has provided at the Struthers Muny Court. We are deeply indebted to him for his dedication and generosity to our 17th district and I am honored to represent this outstanding individual.

SPRING INDUSTRIES

HON. ARTHUR RAVENEL, JR.

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

Monday, September 11, 1989

Mr. RAVENEL. Mr. Speaker, a recent report by the National Wildlife Federation of "The Toxic 500" industrial polluters erroneously included Springs Industries' Grace Fishing plant on South Carolina's Catawba River. As a result of a clerical error in reporting to the EPA, the incorrect chemical was reported as released into the Catawba River. In fact, the chemical substance released by the plant was treated in an approved wastewater treatment facility and was rendered nontoxic before it was allowed to flow into the Catawba River. Springs Industries, Inc. has an excellent record of environmental concern in South Carolina and has taken pride in its protective measures employed at all its South Carolina facilities.

HAPPY 80TH BILL

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 11, 1989

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, in 1953, two great American thoroughbreds entered races in Kentucky. Native Dancer ran a disappointing second in the derby that year.

The other great thoroughbred was BILL NATCHER. He won his race for Congress—and he's been winning races ever since.

That's because he's not only a fine race horse, but a real work horse, as well. He holds the record for responding to rollcalls; he presides over the Committee of the Whole with courtesy and fairness; and he has shouldered a lot of responsibility for the work of the Appropriations Committee.

BILL still has the energy of a freshman Member, so I am sure that many will be surprised to learn that today is his 80th birthday.

Of course, BILL also has the wisdom and experience of a senior statesman. He's one of the people that holds this House together.

As one of the younger Members of the House, I'd like to wish BILL a very happy birthday and express our hope that he plans to stay with us for many years to come.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. BILL NELSON

OF FLORIDA

Monday, September 11, 1989

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, due to personal business, I was unable to vote on H.R. 1668, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration ocean and coastal programs authorization bill which passed the House on September 6. Had I been present. I would have voted "yes."

CONGRESSMAN DALE E. KILDEE CELEBRATES NATIONAL HISPANIC HERITAGE MONTH

HON. DALE K. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 11, 1989

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, as our Nation celebrates National Hispanic Heritage Month, I am extremely proud to pay tribute to the Hispanic community of the Seventh Congressional District, Michigan.

The Hispanic culture has enriched our community and our Nation by making its presence felt in government, the arts, labor, business, science, and every aspect of our society. Hispanics make up 7.9 percent of the Nation's population and are expected to rise to 15 percent by the year 2000. This ever growing presence is a vibrant spirit and force in America that is helping to shape the future of our great Nation.

America's Hispanic community brings to us a rich heritage and tradition, infusing our lives and our society with a wealth of culture we would otherwise lack. Our great Nation is a land of immigrants, and our greatness comes from the rich histories and cultures of every country and every people, and our Hispanic community has indeed contributed to the success of our country. Historically, the Hispanics in our country have both immigrant roots and roots well established inside the borders of the United States long before we became an independent Nation.

Today, the Hispanics are a strong force on the political landscape. Often an unsung and underestimated factor in American politics, Hispanics have provided the margin of victory of many races. Recent elections have shown strong voter registration and turnout among Hispanics.

Hispanics in my home district are making tremendous contributions to the development of our community. We can point with pride to Buick City, where plant manager, Nelson Gonzalez, a Hispanic, is helping produce the best built automobiles in the United States. There is no doubt that Hispanics have made their mark on our society.

The decade of the 1980's will be viewed as a decade of firsts for the Hispanic community in the Seventh Congressional District. We have seen Hispanics elected to city councils in the cities of Burton and Flint, the Flint Board of Education, the Genesee County Board of Commissioners and to several commissions and councils in the State of Michigan. We have also seen, for the first time, Hispanic representation from Flint at the Democratic National Convention. I have had the distinct honor and pleasure of working with several Hispanics on my campaign and congressional staff.

Mr. Speaker, during Hispanic Heritage Month, we are more than recognizing the importance of the Hispanic community in America, we are also commemorating the growth of our Nation's culture, vastly broadened and enriched by its Hispanic citizens.

TRIBUTE TO DOBROSLAV PARAGA

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 11, 1989

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Dobroslav Paraga, a Croatian dissident and human rights activist who has delivered his message of human rights' abuses in Yugoslavia to the citizens of the United States.

Mr. Paraga represents all groups in Yugoslavia to whom human rights have been denied, including Croatians, Slovenians, and Albanians. He was made to suffer physical and psychological punishment in a Yugoslav jail for 4 years for seeking signatures to a petition for general amnesty for the over 2,500 political prisoners in his nation.

Following his imprisonment, Paraga was given a passport by his government and forbidden to publicly speak out about his experiences as a political prisoner or about human rights abuses in Yugoslavia. He has, however, spread the word throughout Europe and the United States. He now plans to return to his native Yugoslavia to continue his struggle for the freedom of all minority groups. He risks imprisonment upon his return for his brave actions.

Mr. Speaker, Yugoslavia has jailed more of its citizens for political reasons than any other nation in Eastern Europe. In addition, more than 10,000 Yugoslavians have been denied the right to bear a passport. I commend Mr. Paraga for fearlessly speaking out for all Yugoslavian, ethnic minorities who have no voice. I give him my wholehearted support in his quest for their liberty.

A TRIBUTE TO JOE GUNN

HON. CHARLES WILSON

OF TEXAS

Monday, September 11, 1989

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I am proud that a great man and friend has recently received the honor of being elected president of the Texas AFL-CIO. Joe Gunn has actively served his community for many years, holding such positions as vice president of the Harris County United Way, the Houston Council Boy Scouts Executive Council, and youth director of his church. Joe also has six foster children of his own.

Joe has worked for Southwestern Bell for 22 years, 11 of which was full-time service for the Communications Workers of America, Local 6222. He has served as secretary-treasurer of the Texas AFL-CIO from January 1979 until his election as president on July 29, 1989.

It is my honor to extend my heartiest congratulations to Joe on his election as president of the Texas AFL-CIO. I know he will serve the workers of Texas with dedication and integrity. Congratulations, Joe.

A TRIBUTE TO THE BELLS ACROSS AMERICA

HON. DOUGLAS APPLEGATE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 11, 1989

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to pay tribute to the BelleMonte Service Unit of the Girl Scouts of America, who have organized a "Bells Across America" celebration at the Belmont County, OH, Fairgrounds.

Started in 1987, the bicentennial of the signing of our Constitution, "Bells Across America" has been celebrated each September 17, the day that the U.S. Constitution was signed over 200 years ago. This year, the Girl Scouts have planned a one-half hour program, culminating at 4 p.m. by ringing bells for 200 seconds and releasing 200 balloons. They have invited groups ranging from churches to fire departments and all citizens from Belmont and the surrounding counties to participate in the ringing celebration.

I would like to congratulate the Girl Scouts in taking the initiative to plan and participate in this nationwide celebration of the document that guarantees the rights and freedoms of our Nation's citizens. Since the Bill of Rights was approved by Congress and submitted for ratification 200 years ago September 25, this year's commemoration is particularly important.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in praising the BellMonte Service Unit Girl Scouts for their patriotism and initiative and in urging all citizens of the United States to take a moment on September 17 to remember our Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

SAVINGS AND LOAN BAILOUT BILL MISSED MARK

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

Monday, September 11, 1989

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, in spite of the best—and highly commendable—efforts of the Members of the House and Senate Savings and Loan Conference Committee, their final work product fell short of the mark. I could not support it.

The bill approved by the House Banking Committee was improved during floor action. It was upgraded to require a higher capital requirement for S&L's—although I felt the capital requirement could have been set even higher. S&L's were prohibited from dealing in high-risk junk bonds and the Government's regulatory powers over the industry were strengthened.

I was proud to support all the strengthening and tightening amendments offered on the floor and to oppose all weakening amendments. Nevertheless, I could not support the final draft of the measure—despite its improved looks.

I had some hope, Mr. Speaker, that the conference committee would return a measure I could support. Unfortunately, my hope was not to be fulfilled. I therefore had to vote against final passage of H.R. 1278.

First and foremost, the conference committee package allowed the overseer of this horrendous fiasco—Bank Board Chairman M. Danny Wall—to remain at the helm of the new and reorganized thrift industry. This not only invites further disaster, but rewards one of the perpetrators of the whole mess.

Second, the package created a Resolution Trust Corporation to coordinate the disposition of hundreds of billions of dollars of assets acquired from failing thrifts. Yet conferees, at the eleventh hour, deleted House requirements that employees of the Corporation, as well as its independent contractors, be subject to stringent Federal conflict of interest and "revolving door" requirements. We could be asking for a HUD-type scandal all over again—only this time worse—by not having written in stern conflict of interest guidelines.

Another major problem for me was that the bailout bill established a policy for closing failed institutions by borrowing funds today and paying them back tomorrow—many tomorrows down the road—at a cost to us, our children, and, undoubtedly, our grandchildren, of hundreds of billions of dollars in added interest payments.

Congress should have done this thing straightforwardly. It should have bitten the bullet here and now, raised whatever revenues would be needed to take care of the mess, and established a payback system which would balance the books sooner rather than later. Future generations already have enough to worry about.

Conferees also dropped a House provision generally requiring annual certified audits of Federal insured financial institutions. If we are going to grant deposit insurance coverage to these organizations, then we have a right to receive accurate and reliable information from them about their financial health and their accounting practices.

Finally, and of huge importance to me, I cannot in good conscience vote to make innocent taxpayers pick up the tab for this financial catastrophe when the swindlers and ripoff artists who looted the S&L's and treated them as personal piggy banks are not going to be prosecuted to the fullest extent.

In sum, Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1278 was a bailout, pure and simple. It was a bailout of the bad guys by the good guys, the taxpaying men and women of America. It did not correct or prevent the problems that brought us to this point in the first place. And, it did not adequately get at the people who brought the disaster to pass in the first place.

I fear, Mr. Chairman, that we will have this issue back before us again before too much time has passed. I hope I am wrong. But, I could not countenance the high risks involved or otherwise endorse this antitaxpayer bill by giving it my vote.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, September 12, 1989, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

SENATE—Tuesday, September 12, 1989

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 6, 1989)

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable JOHN GLENN, a Senator from the State of Ohio.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

He that dwelleth in the secret place of the most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress: my God; in Him will I trust.—Psalm 91:1, 2.

Eternal God, loving Heavenly Father, make real to each of us the profound reality promised by the psalmist. In times of peace as well as trouble grant to all who need Thee the security and the blessing of Your abiding presence. Help us to live our days under the canopy of God's love. In Jesus' name who is love incarnate. Amen.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Republican leader is recognized.

VISIT TO SOVIET ARMENIA

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, last week, I reported to the Senate on the recent visit that my wife, Secretary of Labor Elizabeth Dole, and I made to Poland—part of a four nation trip that also included Morocco, The Netherlands, and Soviet Armenia. Today, I would like to make a few comments on our stop in Armenia.

AN IMMENSE HUMAN TRAGEDY

While a hopeful new political day dawns in Poland, the specter of a terrible nightmare continues to haunt Armenia, 8 months after a terrible earthquake turned vast areas of Armenia, literally, upside down—the devastation wrought by the quake remains the most important single fact of life for most Armenians.

The human statistics—even the official and probably understated statistics—are striking: More than 25,000 dead, 5 times that injured, a half million homeless, countless tens of thousands displaced.

The material damage is awesome: 58 villages totally destroyed; two significant cities and 100 other villages badly damaged; 21,000 homes, 170 schools, over 80 hospitals—all turned to rubble.

The financial costs are staggering: Total physical damage has been estimated at $13 billion; damage to agricultural output at $3.1 billion this year alone.

BEING THERE

As incredible as those statistics are, though, nothing—nothing—prepares you for the physical and psychological impact of being there; of seeing with your own eyes, and feeling in your own heart, the anguish of the mothers of the city of Leninakan, who lost 400 children in 40 seconds, when their school collapsed.

Nothing prepares you for the experience of sitting through a briefing by the city leader of Spitak, and having someone whisper in your ear midway through the briefing that this same man lost his wife and 12 family members in an instant, the day the quake hit.

Nothing prepares you for seeing a city that used to be home for 23,000 looking like an after photo of one of those fake towns they used to build out on the Nevada desert, to test the effects of nuclear blasts on residential areas.

And nothing prepares you for a hillside covered with 8,000 still-fresh graves, each marked by a tombstone with the etched face of the individual victim buried there.

In short, nothing prepares you for an in-person visit to Leninakan, and Spitak, and the other areas devastated by the quake; and nothing prepares you for meeting, and talking to, so many of the survivors—each of them a victim, each of them still struggling with rebuilding their communities, and their homes, and their lives.

Incredibly, yet another quake—happily, a much less severe one—hit the same area just last week. Asked about the damage done, a Soviet commentator spoke volumes when he replied: "There is nothing left to destroy."

GENEROUS AMERICAN RESPONSE

The United States and the American people have already responded generously to the tragedy in Armenia. Official Government aid has totaled $4 million, primarily in relief supplies in the immediate aftermath of the quake. Private American groups and individuals have contributed about $45 million in additional aid, responding to the full gamut of needs—from immediate relief through long-term reconstruction.

I was pleased that we were able to transport more than 50,000 dollars' worth of medical equipment and supplies to Armenia in our plane, on behalf of Project Hope—one of the U.S.-based voluntary agencies that is doing outstanding work there every day.

I hesitate to name any of the others, for fear that I will inadvertently leave some out. But all Americans can be proud of the work that so many dedicated and generous Americans are doing in Armenia, every day.

Many of those involved—both the giving here, and the working in Armenia—are themselves Americans of Armenian ancestry. They represent a number of organizations, each of which is making a real contribution.

Without in any way slighting the work of any other organization, I would like to say a word of personal thanks to the Armenian Assembly; its Chairman, Hirair Hovnanian; and its representative in Armenia, Matthew Manuelian—who, I want to add, gave up a lucrative New York law practice for a life of 18-hour days, and 7-day work weeks in Armenia's capital of Yerevan.

MEETING WITH VOLUNTARY AGENCIES

While in Armenia, I met with representatives of many of the United States-based voluntary agencies working there. I learned of some of the vital work they are doing, in health care, rehabilitation, housing and other areas. I also asked for an assessment of their problems and needs.

The two problems most often cited were difficulty in obtaining transportation for moving their equipment and supplies from the United States to Armenia, and the extensive inefficiency and redtape encountered at various levels of the Soviet Government.

I and my staff are working on both areas. One possibility being explored with the administration is whether there might be excess cargo capacity on planned American military flights to destinations relatively close to Armenia, which could be made available for voluntary agency shipments. I and my staff will also be communicating with the Soviet Government, both directly to Moscow and through its Embassy here, about the problems of inefficiency and redtape.

I also asked the voluntary agency representatives to prepare for me an agreed list of the most pressing specific needs—a kind of followup action agenda. When that document is available, I will certainly share it with the Senate, the administration and interested private parties.

RESPONSE OF OTHER NATIONS

I should also note that many other nations have also responded very generously to Armenia's needs. While there, we visited housing projects donated by Italy and a private group from Austria; and we saw the good work being done by many other nations, from every corner of the globe.

The Soviet Union itself, of course, has the primary responsibility for rebuilding Armenia, and the effort being expended is visible and impressive. We received extensive briefings from the Chairman of Armenia's Council of Ministers, and from the Armenian republic's Foreign Minister on the work being done in the areas of housing, employment, agricultural rehabilitation, education, and medical care.

And we saw the physical evidence of the effort, in the vast areas of reconstruction outside the city of Leninakan—where a new city of 50,000 is being constructed in fields festooned by dozens and dozens of huge cranes, building countless new homes and apartments.

DAUNTING PROBLEMS REMAIN

So a great deal has been done, and is being done. But so much more remains to be done, too.

With winter fast approaching, 500,000 earthquake victims still remain homeless. How they—and countless thousands of others whose housing consists of tents or crude trailers or slap-dash wooden shacks—how they are going to fare, or even survive, the intense winter that will soon invade the mountainous areas that are the site of the worst damage remains to be seen.

How the tens of thousands of adults and children physically and psychologically broken by the quake—how they will readjust to the postquake world—remains to be seen.

How the educational system will function, with so many schools destroyed, and so many children displaced, remains to be seen.

How the agricultural sector will rebound, with so much of the livestock and farm equipment destroyed, remains to be seen. So much remains to be seen, and done.

The earthquake took place 8 months ago yesterday. The media has pretty much come and gone. There are very few headlines about the earthquake anymore; very few "spots" on the evening news.

But the needs remain as fresh and real as they were last December.

WE CANNOT QUIT NOW

The people of Armenia have not quit. The government officials we met seem sincerely dedicated to the massive tasks before them. The Soviet system, as it exists in Armenia, is just as far from perfect as the Soviet system is everywhere else in the country. Lots of things just do not work the way they should. But a sincere effort is being made.

His Holiness Vazgeni, the spiritual leader of millions of adherents to the Armenian Church inside Armenia and around the world, has not quit. Elizabeth and I had a most informative and inspiring audience with him, at his historic church in the town of Etchmiadzin.

We learned from him of the continuing relief and rehabilitation work of the church, including the formation of a mothers' committee to deal with the special problems of mothers who have lost their husbands and children; their homes; their jobs. We learned from him, too, of a kind of spiritual renewal since the quake, that has lead increasing numbers of Armenians back to active church lives.

And, as I indicated, the voluntary agencies have not quit.

None of us can afford to quit. There is still too much to be done.

UNITED STATES SHOULD DO MORE

And I believe there is more that the United States can do.

In a stop in Kennebunkport en route home from our trip, Elizabeth and I briefed the President on our experience in Armenia. We indicated to him that we would be exploring with the administration ways in which we might provide additional help, including in the transportation area already mentioned. I will also be consulting with Senate colleagues and private groups in the United States, to see what more might be done.

Having said all that, let me also note that the earthquake—devastating as it was—is not the only issue one encounters in Armenia.

There is the ongoing political unrest growing out of ethnic and religious tensions between Armenia and Azerbaijan: 200,000 ethnic Armenians fled Azerbaijan, and many of them settled in the Leninakan-Spitak area—only to be devastated and rendered homeless again, by the quake.

Even in this age of glasnost, there are problems of repression of free political expression—a matter that will be tested in local elections now scheduled for next February.

And there is the terrible history of the events which transpired in Ottoman Turkey during the first quarter of this century, when a million and a half Armenians lost their lives.

All of these issues are part of the lives of the people of Armenia, and each is worthy of our attention, at the appropriate time.

A PERSONAL NOTE

Mr. President, I have had a deep, personal tie to Armenia. A great and good Armenian-American—Dr. Kelikian—changed my life in the months after my return from World War II.

He gave more to me than I can ever repay. I thought of him many, many times during my short stay in Armenia.

It is his spirit—a spirit of determination, of optimism, of genuine humanity—that I saw reflected everywhere I looked in Armenia. It is the spirit that sustains the people of Armenia. And the spirit that gives hope to those who visit there.

DRUG INITIATIVES

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, it will be a week ago tonight that President Bush sounded the call to arms on America's war on drugs. In an outstanding Oval Office address, the President called for national unity and outlined a tough, no-nonsense strategy to beat the pushers and the thugs.

The American people—judging by every poll I have seen; and there have been plenty of them—are giving the President sky-high marks for his anti-drug offensive.

Unfortunately, some of his critics did not get the message; and did not quite see it as the American people did. The critics were dumping on the President's plan. They came back with a laundry list of negativism: a list of what we cannot do and why we cannot win.

Mr. President, that is not a war on drugs—that is a retreat.

Even worse, some critics were saying the President's plan was doomed because he refused to raise taxes—that Congress could not cut anything in the budget, so the American taxpayer should pay for the war on drugs with new taxes. Well, we do not need a poll on that one—that idea went over with taxpayers like a lead balloon.

Even Democratic Party Chairman Ron Brown said the tax offensive was a bomb—that it was out of step with what the American people wanted.

And late yesterday, another Democrat—the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee—called for additional funding for the war on drugs—and not with more taxes.

BYRD AMENDMENT

Mr. President, I understand the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee has drafted an amendment to fund the drug strategy written by the President and his Director of Drug Control, Bill Bennett. According to press reports, the amendment would go one better—adding $2.2 billion more than the President requested for his unprecedented $8 billion Federal effort to fight the scourge of drugs.

I know Senator BYRD is committed to eliminating drugs in our society. I was pleased to join him in cosponsoring both the 1986 and the 1988 drug bills, the backbone of the drug strategy. And I know the Senator wants to responsibly fund the war on drugs, and he may have the best solution on the funding side of the equation. I am not certain of the amount but perhaps it is something we can work on.

CRIME BILL

But this is also a fight against crime. Crime committed by the high rolling drug trafficking and crime committed by the street corner drug dealing thugs who terrorize our neighborhoods. It is also about the crime committed by drug users, whether it is burglary and robbery or even prostitution to pay for drugs, to child abuse or endangering the lives of others by the actions of those who are under the influence of drugs.

So the Republicans in the Senate and the President congratulate the Democrats for coming to the table with a proposal to fund the President's strategy on drugs without taxes. We are looking at it now, and it may be something we can work out.

And the Republicans will also look forward to working with the Democrats on completing the package, by including the President's crime bill on our war on drugs and crime.

The bill was sent to the Congress in June—this is now September—and yet I understand the Committee on the Judiciary has not been able to even hold a single hearing on it yet. While armed criminals are roaming the streets, randomly killing competitors, debtors and even innocent bystanders, we have sat back and watched dust collect on the President's crime bill. But now maybe we have the initiative to get it considered by the Senate.

PROVISIONS

Mr. President, there are many essential components in the crime bill that will give police, prosecutors, judges and the penal system the additional tools and resources needed to apply a choke hold on the criminals running lose—even those right outside this building.

Anyone arrested for a crime in which a firearm is used will automatically be held in pretrial detention—no more letting the armed and dangerous out on bail simply because they came up with the cash.

Those who use a semiautomatic firearm in the commission of a crime will get an extra 10 years behind bars. As I have said before, we ought to consider applying the penalty to the use of any firearm.

We have seen recent press reports of drug smugglers trying to double their ill-gotten gains by smuggling guns to South and Central America on return trips. There is also a growing concern over the smuggling of fully automatic firearms—machineguns—into the United States. These activities are made separate, new Federal crimes.

The same is true of firearm thefts. Remember, 80 percent of firearms used in crimes are not obtained through normal channels. Many are stolen, and this is made a Federal crime.

Those on probation or parole would be subjected to random drug testing. Flunk the test or be found with a firearm, and the parole or probation are automatically revoked.

There are two other extremely important provisions—creation of a good faith exception in the exclusionary rule and reform of habeas corpus procedures. The first will help bring criminals to justice by ensuring that evidence—gathered by police officers who believe they are acting in accordance with constitutional standards—will not be mindlessly rejected by the courts. The second provision will reduce the number of appeals that convicts now use to clog our court system.

Finally, the bill contains the death penalty. In the 17 years since Furman versus Georgia—the Supreme Court decision restricting the use of the death penalty—41 States have acted to permit the imposition of the death penalty for the most heinous of crimes. It is far past time that the general death penalty be resurrected at the Federal level.

I know that under a previous unanimous-consent agreement, it might be difficult to include the death penalty at this time. But we ought to consider it, and we might ask unanimous consent to consider it.

The bill contains resources, some of which is included in the drug strategy; $1 billion for prisons, $50 million for assistant U.S. attorneys, $40 million for more agents at the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms and for the FBI's violent crime and major offenders program, along with $12 million to beef up the U.S. Marshal's Program.

SUMMARY

So we welcome the concern and support of all Senators in the war on drugs and crime. And we will look forward to all Senators supporting both the money and the new authority in the crime bill. It is going to be a tough battle. We need tough tools, and we need Congress to stick together with the President and for our citizens.

There will be more to say on this matter as we progress with the transportation appropriation bill, but I wanted all of our colleagues to know that we are looking for a well rounded, tough as nails program.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business, not to extend beyond the hour of 10 a.m. with Senators permitted to speak therein for not to exceed 5 minutes each. Does anyone seek recognition?

The Chair, in his capacity as a Senator from the State of Ohio, suggests the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN). With objection, it is so ordered.

THE 200TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE APPOINTMENT OF HENRY KNOX TO THE NATION'S FIRST CABINET

● Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, in September 200 years ago, George Washington appointed the four members of our Nation's first Presidential Cabinet.

The Cabinet developed directly out of the American struggle for independence. Congress created departments of government to plan and control the war effort, to finance expenditures, and to build relations with foreign governments. After the Revolution, between 1781 and 1789, Congress attempted to maintain these efforts under the Articles of Confederation.

At the Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia in 1787, there was considerable debate as to whether such department heads could be brought into close contact with the President, instead of Congress, without making the Executive too powerful.

By his Cabinet choices, Washington demonstrated the value he placed upon expertise, personal ties, and political balance. Secretary of State Thomas Jefferson of Virginia would be returning from diplomatic duties in Paris to manage foreign affairs. Treasury Secretary Alexander Hamilton of New York had been Washington's personal secretary, and was considered to possess one of the new Nation's most formidable intellects. Attorney General Edmund Randolph of Virginia was a long-time friend who had served as attorney general and then Governor of their home State. Secretary of War Henry Knox of Massachusetts had been a trusted member of Washington's general staff. By choosing Hamilton and Jefferson, the respected leaders of political factions which were often bitterly opposed, Washington showed his commitment to the consideration of varying points of view. All four men were quickly confirmed by the Senate.

I am especially pleased to celebrate today the appointment of Henry Knox, on September 12, 1789, as Secretary of War. He made lasting contributions to his country and to my State.

A Boston bookseller who read all he could of military affairs, Knox became the Colonies' foremost authority on artillery. After serving under Washington during the American Revolution as commander of the artillery, Knox served as the Confederacy's chief military officer. In this capacity and as Secretary of War, he initiated a national militia and Navy, encouraged coastal fortification, and created an Indian policy.

Knox's wife, Lucy Flucker, was heir to much of Maine's Waldo Patent. As Knox approached retirement from his Cabinet duties he built an elegant mansion overlooking Thomaston Harbor which would become their home—Montpelier. Knox, Lucy, and their six children moved from Philadelphia to Thomaston in June 1795.

A genial and confident man of many interests, Knox made a substantial impression on the Maine countryside. Lucy's piano, imported from London, was thought to be the first in coastal Maine, and the Knox Library of 1,600 volumes was the region's largest. A vigorous entrepreneur, willing to go into debt to finance his many projects, Knox became involved in lime quarrying, brickmaking, farming, fishing, lumbering, and shipbuilding. His hope was for Maine—which was then part of Massachusetts—to become a prosperous, independent State. He hired local labor, as many as 100 men at a time, as quarrymen, shipwrights, and carpenters. He advertised for settlers on his land, and worked to improve navigation along the Georges River. He was appointed justice of the peace for Lincoln County in 1802 and worked to improve sawmills, lime kilns, and farming in the area.

Knox was known for his generosity and goodwill. Montpelier was open to any visitor, and once to the entire Tarratine Indian Tribe of Penobscot County, who came to dinner and stayed for several weeks.

Knox lived at Montpelier until his death in 1806, leaving to the people in coastal and inland towns a legacy of self-confidence and curiosity. His entrepreneurial spirit lives on, evidenced by the diversity and prosperity of small businesses on the coast of Maine today, and a Maine economy which continues to be closely tied to the sound utilization of natural resources.

Henry Knox left his mark throughout the Nation. Eight States in addition to Maine have a Knox County. Tennessee has the great city of Knoxville and Kentucky its Fort Knox. When at the height of his fame and capacity, however, Henry Knox chose Maine, and Mainers have benefited from that choice ever since.

The people of my State are proud to recognize the 200th anniversary of Gen. Henry Knox's appointment to the first Cabinet of the United States.

COMMISSIONER A. BARTLETT GIAMATTI

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, last week the baseball world mourned the passing of Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti and my home State of Massachusetts lost an extraordinary native son.

Since Bart Giamatti's youth in the small western Massachusetts town of South Hadley, baseball and his life are connected. From listening to Red Sox radio broadcasts while sitting in cars being repaired at the local service station, to making what he called the once a year pilgrimage to Fenway Park to see his Red Sox in action, he was the consummate fan. And years later, as with many fathers, he too brought his children to Fenway's bleachers to watch a ballgame.

His career included a Woodrow Wilson fellowship at Yale, several professorships of English and comparative literature, serving as president of Yale from 1978–86, president of the National League of Major League Baseball, 1986–89; commissioner of baseball, 1989; and awards and honors too numerous to mention.

As Yale president he would be seen wearing an old Red Sox cap around campus, and as president of the National League, he would be tested as to where his loyalties were during the 1986 World Series between the Red Sox and the Mets. "I think I'll just sit down and be quiet," he said, when asked by Red Sox great Johnny Pesky whom he would be standing up for in the seventh-inning stretch.

Although Bart Giamatti's tenure as commissioner of baseball was very short, he was doing what he wanted to do.

He loved the game and fought to keep its integrity intact. He faced the Pete Rose case squarely, attempting to be as fair as possible.

While history will eventually look back on this man and what he meant to baseball and to the Nation, our thoughts and sympathy today are with the Giamatti family.

A. Bartlett Giamatti once wrote of baseball:

> It breaks your heart. It is designed to break your heart. The game begins in the spring when everything else begins again. And blossoms in the summer, filling the afternoons and evenings, and then as soon as the chill rains come, it stops.
> And leaves you to face the fall alone.

Mr. President, these words not only speak of our national pastime, they speak of life itself.

DEDICATION OF THE MONUMENT MARKING THE BIRTHPLACE OF COL. WILLIAM BARRET TRAVIS

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, on August 19, 1989, I had the pleasure of participating in the unveiling of a monument in Saluda, SC, designating the birthplace of William Barret Travis, commander of the Alamo, Colonel Travis was born on August 9, 1808, in what was then known as the Old Edgefield District of our State. His distinguished career as a member of the Texas Cavalry under Gen. Sam Houston is well known, and his bravery as commander at the Alamo will be forever remembered as an integral part of our country's history.

Our Nation's greatest treasure is its rich and illustrious history. It was with great pride that I participated in this dedication ceremoney remembering William Barret Travis, and it was my pleasure to pay tribute to him on that occasion.

Mr. L. Charles Billings, historian general and president of the William Barret Travis Chapter of the Sons of the Republic of Texas, delivered an outstanding address detailing the life of Colonel Travis during the dedication ceremony. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of his address be included in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the addres was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS GIVEN AT THE OCCASION OF THE DEDICATION OF THE MONUMENT MARKING THE BIRTHPLACE OF COL. WILLIAM BARRET TRAVIS, SALUDA, SC, AUGUST 19, 1989

This story begins near here, it has no ending, near Red Bank Church. The first of nine children born to Mark and Jermima Travis was William Barret Travis, on August 9, 1809. It was his destiny to perform valiant deeds, which would alter the course of Texas history and American history, changing the entire Western United States. Words of heroism, valor, loyalty, dedication are used to describe heros. William Barret Travis ranks at the top of all these categories. At the age of 9, his family moved to a farm near Sparta, Alabama, He continued his education and emerged as a school teacher and law student under Judge James Dellett, of the best criminal lawyers in Alabama. He was 19 years of age, one of Travis' pupils was Rosanna Cato. On October 26, 1828, the young couple were married. Two children were born to this union. Charles Edward Travis and Suan Isabella Travis. The marriage was not a happy one, it was dissolved. By May, 1931, Buck Travis was a Texas resident. A striking man, over six feet tall, red hair, blue eyes, large frame, would have less than six years to ride his destiny into immortality. He practiced law in Anahuac, a small settlement on the Gulf of Mexico, between Houston and Beaumont. It was here that he almost singlehandedly started the revolution. He quarreled with tax collectors and led several raids against Mexican units he felt were in violation of the Mexican Constitution of 1824, which briefly was "Taxation Without Representation". Gen. Sam Houston commissioned him a Major in the Texas Cavalry.

In early 1836, Houston sent Travis to the Alamo with orders to blow it up and retreat eastward. Insubordination was rampant in the Texas Army and Travis impetuous nature allowed him to overlook this order. He felt that the Alamo was too strategically located to leave, it being the only fortress between Santa Anna's charging Army and the Texas colonies. At age 27, he was leader enough to mold 188 brave soldiers, some of them headstrong and in their 40's and 50's, into a unit. In addition, he asked for their lives and they obliged. For 13 precious days, Travis held the 5000 Mexicans at bay, allowing Houston to unify Texas defenses. On the fateful 13th day, Santa Anna's troops breached the wall. The Texan troops fought valliantly, until each and every hero paid the supreme sacrifice. What kind of man was Travis? Motte Yarbrough will tell you he was one of compassion. One of his last messages read—"Take care of my little boy. If the Country be saved, I may make him a splended fortune—but if lost, and I perish, he will have nothing but the proud record that he is the son of a man who died for his Country."

Ms. Mary Parkman will tell you he was a passionate man, enjoying life to its fullest. This is clearly set out in his personal diary, which we've both read.

Rev. James Watterson will tell you he was a Christian man, worshiping in Red Bank Baptist Church. Many references to God are made in his letters and messages.

Ms. Diane Timmerman will tell you he was a brave man, much influenced by the writings of Sir Walter Scott. This letter inscribed on this monument has been called one of the most heroic documents in American History, not only Texas History.

Dr. Joe B. Frantz, Professor of History will tell you-for a brief tragic fortnite, William Barret Travis was all that is noble and exalted in mankind, and it is good fortune for the Texas tradition that he chose his fortnite of many grandeur in a Texas setting. In a world that sometimes has to fabricate its heros, the hero that is Travis is genuine. His story is magnificent and inspiring in its unvarnished details, and no embroidery of fine writing can improve upon the bare facts of. Elementary loyalty to a cause that he displayed in the siege of the Alamo.

President Andrew Jackson would tell you that without Travis, Texas could well have lost the fight for freedom. The Republic of Texas consisted of what is now Texas, plus parts of New Mexico, Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado, and Wyoming. In 1846, The Republic of Texas merged with the U.S., adding 30% to the total land mass. This move opened the Colonization and Annexation to the U.S. of the states of Arizona, Utah, Nevada, and California. Indeed, William Barret Travis made an impact on history. Let us join Sir Walter Scott in saying to the Alamo's brave Defenders:

Soldiers may rest, thy warfare o'er,
Sleep the Sleep that knows no breaking,
Dream of battlefields no more, Days of danger, nights of waking.

TRIBUTE TO JOHN L. HIXON

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President I rise today to pay my respects to an outstanding man and fine South Carolinian, former State representative John L. Hixon of North Augusta, SC. His contributions to our State and to his local community were great, and we will remember him with gratitude, respect, and lasting affection.

Representative Hixon was active in his community in many ways—as a businessman, civic leader and family man. Mr. Hixon was the owner and operator of Hixon Insurance Agency and Hixon Realty Co. He also served his country with courage and honor, fighting in World War II until he was wounded in Belgium. Ultimately, representative Hixon retired from the Army as captain in a parachute infantry division.

Representative Hixon represented Aiken County with distinction for two terms in the South Carolina State Legislature. He was a dedicated member of the house, and the citizens of Aiken County appreciate his able service over the years.

Community activities and leadership roles abound in the RECORD of representative Hixon's accomplishments. He was president of many fine organizations: North Augusta Lions Club, North Augusta Chamber of Commerce, North Augusta Community Chest, and South Carolina Horse Shows Association. In addition, he was commander of the American Legion Post No. 71.

Representative Hixon did not limit his personal commitment to civil duties, but took an active leadership role in the church. At the First Baptist Church of North Augusta, he served as deacon, member of the finance, personnel, and pulpit search committees, Sunday school department superintendent and teacher and outreach leader.

His fine character and many achievements were recognized in 1971 when Gov. John West named representative Hixon "Palmetto Gentleman" of South Carolina. He also received the "Citizen of the Year" award from the North Augusta Chamber of Commerce and the "Service to Mankind" award from North Augusta Sertoma Club and Sandhills District of South Carolina. Clearly, representative Hixon was held in very high esteem by his friend and colleagues.

Representative Hixon was a living example of the adage that those who receive the most out of life are those who give the most. We will miss his presence among us, but his memory will keep him alive in our hearts and our minds.

Nancy joins me in extending our deepest sympathies to his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth C. Hixon; his stepfather, Audry T. Hydrick; and his two sons, Douglas R. Hixon and William M. Hixon.

I ask unanimous consent that the following articles regarding representative Hixon be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Aiken (SC) Standard, Sept. 3, 1989]

JOHN L. HIXON

John L. Hixon served two terms representing Aiken County in the South Carolina House of Representatives in the 1950s, and then largely withdrew from political life. But he remained active in community life in North Augusta, contributing immeasurably to a variety of good causes.

He was a native of the Johnstown community in the Horse Creek Valley.

Mr. Hixon was a hero of World War II. He served as a captain in the Army paratroops and was wounded in the Battle of the Bulge.

For five years after the war he was employed as a department manager for a department store in Augusta. He then entered the insurance and real estate fields in North Augusta and established Hixon Insurance Agency and Hixon Realty Co.

He was first elected to the House in 1953 to fill the unexpired term of W. Cecil Kenney of Graniteville, who had died in office. He was reelected in 1955 to a full two-year term. He gave up his House seat to make an unsuccessful run for the Senate.

Mr. Hixon thereafter served his hometown and his county in many capacities.

He was a deacon and Sunday school teacher and department head at North Augusta's First Baptist Church, where he held many key committee assignments.

An active Lion and onetime Lions Club president, he served for 11 years as chairman of the Lions Community Benefit Horse Show, which raised more than $143,000 for worthwhile causes. He also served as president of the North Augusta Chamber of Commerce, the North Augusta Community Chest and the South Carolina Horse Shows Association.

He was commander of American Legion Post 71 and served on the board of directors of the Belvedere Board of Realtors, the Salvation Army, the Aiken County Hospital and the North Augusta Medical Center. He was on the advisory committee of the South Carolina National Bank. Mr. Hixon also served on the North Augusta Stadium Committee and was active in the campaign to buy new uniforms and a bus for the North Augusta High School band.

In 1971, Mr. Hixon was named by Gov. John West as a Palmetto Gentleman. He also received the Citizen of the Year Award of the North Augusta Chamber of Commerce and the SERTOMA Club Service to Mankind Award.

Former Sen. Edward C. Cushman Jr., who served in the House with Mr. Hixon, said he was "conscientious, a square shooter and devoted to the public good. He was faithful in representing his constituency."

Mr. Hixon became ill with cancer about two years ago and died last Sunday after a valiant fight with that disease.

He leaves behind a devoted family, to whom we extend our sincerest sympathies.

TERRY ANDERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise simply to inform my colleagues that today marks the 1,641st day that Terry Anderson has been held in captivity in Beirut.

MAYOR JOHN V. LINDSAY—ARDENT SUPPORTER OF THE ARTS

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to bring to my colleagues' attention the thoughts of my dear friend and fellow New Yorker, Mayor John V. Lindsay. Throughout his distinguished career—as a Member of Congress, the major of New York City, and the chairman of the board of the Lincoln Center Theater—Mayor Lindsay has been an ardent supporter of the arts.

Concerned by the Interior appropriations bill passed by the Senate, Mayor Lindsay wrote to the New York Times. As most are by now aware, the Senate bill bans Federal funding of art deemed obscene or indecent. Of additional concern is a ban which prevents two institutions, the Southeastern Center for Contemporary Art in North Carolina and the Institute for Contemporary Art in Pennsylvania, from receiving NEA funding for the next 5 years.

In his letter, Mayor Lindsay reminds us that we are a nation that has thrived on diversity and free expression. He believes that in a free society, "freedom must be protected even if it confounds, nettles or offends." The values of diversity and freedom guided Congress near a quarter century ago when it established the endowment. I would hope that the 101st Congress of the United States does not embrace these values any less now than it did then.

I urge the conferees for the Interior appropriations bill to give great thought to Mayor Lindsay's words and I ask unanimous consent that a copy of his letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THREAT TO ARTS IS A THREAT TO ALL OUR FREEDOMS

To the Editor:

As a member of Congress from 1959 to 1966, as co-sponsor of the bill that led to the creation of the National Endowment for the Arts and the Natiional Endowment for the Humanities and after 25 notable years in which Congress has not meddled with the grant process, I am appalled that Senator Jesse Helms dares to strike out at an artist's vision with which he disagrees. And the Senate, with all its right thinking, honorable representatives of all the people, sniffs the political wind and joins to be among the first to throw a stone, with the sole exception of Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan, who bravely dissented ("Senate Votes to Bar U.S. Support of 'Obscene or Indecent' Artwork," front page, July 27).

If the Helms amendment were to become law, Lincoln Center Theater would be hard put to undertake such plays of past seasons as "The House of Blue Leaves," "Measure for Measure," "Road," "Sarafina!" or "Ubu," formerly produced with intrepidity and nary a thought of who might or might not be offended. With support from the National Endowment for the Arts as threat, the very discussions that might take place considering "safe" repertory are anathema.

The role of the arts in a free society is to probe and push, to think and say the unthinkable and the unsayable, and that freedom must be protected even if it confounds, nettles or offends.

President Bush's candidate for chairman of the endowment should vigorously protest by speaking out now and recommending a veto, if this amendment is passed, to force the President to take a public position on this matter. Whie a cut in endowment funds may not be so lethal as the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's bounty on the head of Salman Rushdie, nor as repressive as the clamping down and executions ordered by the Government of China, it stems from the same roots; its fruits are ultimately as poisonous.

Throughout the history of humankind's attempts at government, the lesson is clear and absolute—freedom is lost in the beginning, not at the end. Now is the time to stand up and shout at our Congressional representatives. Now is the time to stop chipping away at the fundamental character that delineates the American way.

JOHN V. LINDSAY.

NEW YORK, August 1, 1989.

TIANANMEN: A DAY FOR REMEMBERING

Mr. PRESSLER. On the night of June 3, as a worldwide audience watched with increasing horror, the Chinese People's Liberation Army obeyed its orders and crushed the democracy movement in Beijing. We will never know how many died from the violence that night, either on the spot or from inadequate medical care. We do know that the relationship between the Chinese Government, the Chinese Army, and the Chinese people changed forever.

Mr. President, in Chinese society it is traditional for the dead to be mourned for 100 days. The 100th day is set aside as a special day for remembering.

And so today we remember those young men and women, children almost, who knew they were risking their lives for their country. They sought nothing for themselves, no loot, no conquest, just the right to be free. Their dream was simple: A China free from violence, free from repression, free from want, free from corruption.

Mr. President, I believe the spirit of the Chinese people in that place and at that time was captured by the man who stood in front of the tanks. The tanks moved to the right and he moved to the right. The tanks moved left; he moved left. One young man, through the force of an idea—liberty—for a time brought a complete tank column to a halt.

In the history of human civilization on this Earth, there always seems to be a price to be paid for liberty. I wish it were not so, but that seems to be the case. The founders and defenders of this Nation paid the price and the young Chinese have now paid the price.

We know that in time the cause of liberty and justice will triumph in China. The people of China will overcome the machine guns, the tanks, the secret police, and all other forms and symbols of repression and tyranny. Until then it will be a struggle to which we must give our moral support.

Mr. President, let us remember those who made the final sacrifice in the square 100 days ago and give thanks that the Chinese people can produce persons with such love of country.

ON NEED FOR MORE APPROPRIATE RESPONSE TO POLAND'S DEMOCRATIC REVOLUTION

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, September 12 will go down in history as the beginning of a new era in Eastern Europe and the Communist world. Earlier today, the Polish Parliament voted to establish a non-Communist government controlled by a Prime Minister from Solidarity—Tadeusz Mazowiecki, by an overwhelming vote of 403 to 0. Eleven Cabinet seats are now held by Solidarity and only four by the Communists. The reign of Communist domination of Eastern Europe has been broken.

Today's vote symbolizes the triumph of four decades of the struggle for liberty by the courageous people of Poland. The sheer determination of the Polish people to be free has defeated the repressive regime imposed by Soviet tanks and troops. For 40 years, they have refused to bend under the tyrant's heavy hand. They refused to be silenced by the censor's intrusive pen. They refused to submit to the injustice of the totalitarian system imposed on them against their will. Now, at last, the fruits of their labor have blossomed with the birth of the first government in the Communist bloc to be controlled by the people themselves.

Yet, difficult times lie ahead for the people of Poland. Having reached a political solution to the people's demand for freedom, the new Solidarity Government faces an equally daunting task—the economic revival of an economy wracked by decades of war, occupation, inefficiency, stagnation, and corruption. The hard facts of inflation, food shortages, wage pressures, and an oppressive foreign debt threaten to undermine their historic political achievement. They need and deserve our help. The United States and the democratic nations of the world have an obligation to help Poland meet its overwhelming economic needs.

So far, the administration has failed to respond adequately to the dramatic changes that have taken place. Last July, President Bush traveled to Eastern Europe and proposed a modest package of assistance to Poland. I support the President's initiatives—and perhaps it was appropriate for that time. But the impressive advances of the past 2 months—particularly the establishment of a Solidarity-controlled government—demand a much stronger U.S. response.

Today's dramatic election calls for a united, bipartisan, substantial program of aid to Poland. I hope that the administration will work with Congress to fashion a comprehensive bill that meets the need. Lech Walesa will be visiting the United States in November. By beginning to work together now, we can ensure that he does not return home emptyhanded.

We must also work with other nations in a coordinated effort to provide increased assistance. If the West does its part, the Polish people will do the rest.

Last summer, Lech Walesa asked for a $10-billion multilateral package involving $2.7 billion from the International Monetary Fund, $3 billion from the World Bank, and $4.3 billion in new bilateral credits. Strong, consistent U.S. leadership in the world community, particularly in the international financial institutions, could make that goal a reality.

When Cory Aquino visited the United States after her famous peaceful revolution in the Philippines in 1986, the United States promised her nation an additional $200 million in assistance. Later, we led the effort to develop a multilateral assistance initiative of $10 billion for the Philippines over 5 years. That goal is becoming a reality because of America's strong leadership.

The United States should do no less for Poland. America has a strong tradition—beginning with the Marshall Plan—of guiding international efforts to support or rebuild democratic nations. Now we must do the same for Poland.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Lech Walesa's proposal for assistance and an article from today's New York Times regarding similar assistance to Poland by Harvard economist Jeffrey Sachs be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTERNATIONAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAM FOR POLAND

A. PURPOSE

Poland is pioneering the transformation of totalitarian communism into democracy. We are also initiating the transformation of a centrally planned economy into a market economy. The systemic changes taking place in Poland are bringing our country closer to the West, are lessening divisions in Europe and are enhancing international security. They may also serve as a source of encouragement and experience for the other so-called socialist bloc countries.

We are convinced that the most important means for improving the living standard of the working people of Poland lies in linking economic reform within the country with Poland's greater participation in the world economy. This issue has been of central importance for the Union since it first demanded economic reforms in Poland in August of 1980, demands that culminated in the Round Table Agreement of 1989.

A program of economic assistance coupled with domestic economic reforms could restore economic growth in Poland and enable it to become a major trading partner. The economic reconstruction of Poland also lies in the interests of its creditors and is furthermore indispensable if the country is to pay its debt.

The current political and economic situation motivates us to appeal to Western governments and institutions for an International Assistance Program for Poland.

B. FORMS OF ASSISTANCE

Poland should be included in the group of "heavily indebted countries" (according to the International Monetary Fund and World Bank definition) and should participate in the Brady Plan.

1. International Monetary Fund

A three-year Extended Arrangement to support economic stabilization, exchange rate unification, commercial bank debt reduction, privatization of industry, and restoration of balance of payments viability.

Drawings of 600 million SDRs per year (90 percent of quota), and additional drawings of 40 percent of quota to support debt reduction operations under the Brady Plan.

The total for 3 years would be approximately 2.1 billion SDR, that is $2.7 billion at the current SDR/$ exchange rate.

2. World Bank

A three-year program of:

(a) structural adjustment loans (SALs), aiming at the marketization and modernization of, for example:

Polish exports,

the banking system: allowing the operation of private domestic and foreign banks which would be able, on a commercial basis, to take deposits and make loans in both zlotys and convertible currencies, reduction of the energy intensity of the economy,

(b) sectoral adjustment loans (SECALs), for example for:

the agricultural and food processing sector,

the telecommunications infrastructure,

(c) the alleviation of possible unemployment by means of retraining programs for workers,

(d) International Finance Corporation (IFC) loans covering:

private sector loans,

cooperative sector loans,

capital shares of the IFC in joint ventures of Polish state enterprises with foreign parties.

Total borrowing would be approximately $3 billion over a period of 3 years.

A Mulitilateral Investment Guarantee Agency (MIGA) program of non-commercial risk insurance for foreign direct investors.

3. Paris Club

A three-year rescheduling of official debt, co-terminous with the IMF's Extended Arrangement, consisting in 100 percent rescheduling of:

(a) all principal and interest falling due on pre-cuffoff date debt,

(b) all principal and interest falling due on previously rescheduled debt,

(c) all arrears on pre-cutoff date debt and previously rescheduled debt.

Commitment of individual Paris Club creditors to establish and maintain export credit cover.

Establishment of a program to recycle interest and principal payments into local zloty expenditures for social investment via independent foundations for health, water supply, agriculture, education, environmental protection, and others. These expenditures should be compensated by cuts in other government expenditures so as not to increase inflationary pressure.

4. Commercial banks

Under the Brady Plan, reduction of the value of the Polish debt with the help of secondary market and debt for equity swaps and debt for nature swaps.

During the period of negotiations over Brady Plan debt reduction, interim financing will be needed from the banks. During the next 12 months, interim financing should cover interest falling due of approximately $860 million.

Poland will also require the maintenance of the existing $1 billion revolving trade credit facility with the banks.

5. Bilateral lending and grants programs

This Assistance Program is also expected to include a number of bilateral arrangements:

(a) interim grants of surplus supplies of food commodities from the European Community (e.g., meat, butter, grains, etc.) so as to facilitate marketization of the agricultural sector in Poland,

(b) new government and government-guaranteed credits,

(c) co-financing and parallel financing from G–7 countries in conjunction with the IMF Extended Arrangement and with the World Bank lending program,

(d) financial sustainment of, for example:

the Water Foundation for private agriculture, private vocational schools for the agricultural sector,

state-run hospitals returned to the Church,

other independent foundations.

Total bilateral lending and grants would be $4.3 billion over the next three years that will complement the lending of the international financial institutions.

6. Other forms of assistance

(a) Assistance from the European Community:

access to the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP), sectoral preferences,

spcialized educational and managerial training programs, on the job training in Community firms for Polish entrepreneurs, managers, and engineers, employment permits for Polish enterprises to hire Polish workers when operating in the Community.

(b) Liberalization of access to Western markets.

(c) Restoration of normal credit access for Polish enterprises involved in exports and imports.

(d) The Overseas Private Investment Corporation (OPIC) to operate in Poland.

7. Summary

NSZZ Solidarnosc expects from the West an assistance package consisting of the following:

(a) $2.7 billion from the International Monetary Fund,

(b) $3 billion from the World Bank,

(c) $4.3 billion of new bilateral credits, for a total of $10 billion.

C. CONDITIONS FOR ASSISTANCE

This assistance should be extended in such a manner so as to halt the deterioration of the Polish economy, and so as to promote the revitalization and marketization of the economy and its integration into the world economy. To ensure that the assistance is not squandered again, it is imperative that it be disbursed to those persons and institutions that belong to the genuinely enterpreneurial sector of the economy and that represent the society. This signifies the necessity of fundamental reforms of the system and changes in government policy.

1. Financial assistance should, to the widest extend possible, take the form of aid (e.g., investments, credits, subsidies) to private enterprises, to independent economic organizations, foundations, and associations, as well as to non-private enterprises on the condition that they are removed from under the control of the political administration. The transfer of this aid should be either direct or via the reformed banking system (see point B.2.a above).

2. In order that state enterprises be able to meet the above condition, a "National Wealth Board" subordinated to the Parliament must be established (separate from the National Treasury, which encompasses the property of the administration, public education and health services, the armed forces, the police, etc.). This institution should be authorized to:

(a) change the ownership of economic units (e.g., privatization, transferal to worker self-management councils or creditors),

(b) dispose of their profits (with the exception of legislated national and local taxes), and thus to subsidize enterprises if need be,

(c) control foreign assistance not earmarked for specific persons or institutions.

Moreover, so-called "transformation of state property" being currently carried out by the government without parliamentary control must be discontinued.

3. The government together with its administration must be prohibited from: distributing production and consumer goods (with possible exceptions provided by extraordinary and short term legislation); collecting profits from private and public enterprises (with the exception of taxes imposed by law); and from subsidizing enterprises. Consequently, numerous regulations have to be annulled, in particular "The law regarding some conditions for the consolidation of the national economy", which grants the government almost unlimited power.

4. The prohibition and discontinuation of automatic and free of charge payments to the state budget from financial institutions. (the National Bank of Poland, the State Savings Bank, and the PeKaO Bank). The parliament must have control over the money supply and credit policy.

5. The creation of a securities stock exchange and a achieving full convertibility of the zloty.

6. The dismantlement of monopolies in the economy, introduction of stricter antimonopoly laws, and formation of an antimonopoly agency independent of the government.

7. Negotiation of the suspension of all debt payments to the Soviet Union until the end of 1994.

We consider that it could be beneficial to link subsequent assistance with the fullfilment of specific combinations of the above conditions. In addition, we want to emphasize that if unemployment occurs during the implementation of the anti-inflation program, it will be necessary to introduce measures envisaged in the Round Table Agreement, particularly the retraining programs for workers funded as specified in point B.2.c above.

JACEK MERKEL,
LECH WALESA,

(For the Presidium of the National Executive Commission (KKW) of NSZZ Solidarnosc).

HELPING POLAND HELP ITSELF

(By Jeffrey D. Sachs)

CAMBRIDGE, MA.—After 44 years of Communist rule in Poland, Solidarity leader Tadeusz Mazowiecki forms a new Government today committed to re-establishing a parliamentary democracy and a Western-style market economy. As throughout their history, the Poles are taking up the banner of Western ideals not only for their own sake but for ours.

The success of the new Government will greatly strengthen the prospects for peaceful reform in the Soviet Union and the rest of Eastern Europe, and thereby immeasurably contribute to Western security.

Poland's efforts require our immediate financial support and not just our applause. Mr. Mazowiecki's Government inherits a state of total financial collapse left behind by Communist planners. The resulting instability poses grave risks for the new Government. The West, by providing emergency loans and debt relief, can help Poland through the transition to a market economy.

After that transition, Poland will grow dramatically in the nutritive soil of a market-based economy and need not become a permanent economic ward of the West. In the end, timely assistance will pay for itself many times over by allowing sharp cuts in the hundreds of billions of dollars that we and our allies now pay for the defense of Western Europe.

Poland's financial collapse is staggering. Hyperinflation has broken out, as the outgoing Government resorted to printing worthless currency to pay its bills. The prices of basic commodities have been rising by more than 50 percent per month, and in some cases by several hundred percent. Tax collections have broken down as a result of surging inflation, and heavy interest payments on the foreign debt owed to banks are also swelling the budget deficit.

The steps needed to end hyperinflation are risky and could create serious social conflict. The main step is to close the deficit, in large measure by cutting susidies and, in part, through debt reduction. But the cut in subsidies will itself produce a round of large price increases. This "corrective inflation" is familiar to economists but not to families suffering from the inflation.

If workers successfully press for higher wages to compensate for the end of the subsidies, the deficit will not fall. And if the Government has to resist powerful pressures for wage increases, the result could be a wave of strikes, civil unrest and violence.

History in many countries has shown that a stabilization loan from abroad, in conjunction with an anti-inflation program, can significantly raise the chances for stability. The U.S. made such a loan to Israel in 1985 with great success. The loan makes possible immediate stabilization of the currency, and thereby stops the rise in import prices. This gives workers confidence that the Government's anti-inflation program will be successful, encouraging wage restraint.

The West should offer a loan to Poland within the next few weeks, to coincide with the launching of Poland's stabilization program. The new Government has not yet formulated a specific aid request but its needs are discernible. The central banks of the industrial countries should lend Poland about $1 billion to support the Polish currency; the International Monetary Fund should grant a one-year loan of about $700 million, tied to its usual budget-cutting conditions; the World Bank should lend about $500 million to ease the relocation of workers from state firms to the private sector.

Later on, Poland will need further help, mainly a sharp cut in the $39 billion foreign debt that hangs heavily over its future and further lending by the I.M.F., World Bank and the Western Governments.

Over several years, U.S. financial support—loans and debt relief—might reach about $3 billion, money that can be recouped many times over in defense savings. Our allies would help with perhaps three times that amount, so that the U.S. would not carry the brunt of the burden.

But by far the biggest source of help for Poland will come from Poland itself, in the form economic reforms that will create a highly productive market economy in the center of Europe.

TIANANMEN: 100 DAYS LATER

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, it is traditional in Chinese society to have 100 days of mourning after the passing of a loved one. On the 100th day the mourners gather to remember and consider the life of the departed.

One hundred days ago this evening the killing began in Tiananmen Square in Beijing. From all four points of the compass the tanks converged on the square. Machinegun bullets with explosive rounds raked the crowd of unarmed demonstrators. Soldiers with flamethrowers burned the bodies of the dead and dying. Finally, according to the International League for Human Rights, the remains were crushed under the tank treads producing a human "paste."

Mr. President, we will never know how many died that evening in and around the square. The Communist Chinese Army closed off the square and removed the evidence with helicopters. Due to primitive medical facilities, many more undoubtedly died a long lingering death days or weeks later. Reliable estimates of deaths arising from the massacre are in the thousands if not tens of thousands.

The massacre at Tiananmen was not an isolated instance. Every day brings new examples indicating that repression and terror are being applied in a systematic way extending from Beijing out into the provinces. Last week the Culture Minister was replaced with a propaganda official who first rose to prominence during the Cultural Revolution. There are reliable reports that student leader Wang Dan is undergoing severe torture at the hands of the Communist secret police and he is not the only one. The arrests continue.

The effects of Tiananmen echo throughout the region, particularly in Hong Kong. If anyone in Hong Kong had any illusions about what is really going to happen after the Communist takeover in July 1997, they are shattered now. The free world is faced between now and 1997 with the biggest involuntary handover of population since the sellout of eastern Europe at Yalta.

Mr. President, never before have there been so many eyewitnesses to crime. Hundreds of millions of people around the world saw the Communist rulers of China turn their army's guns on peaceful demonstrators. The systematic repression reinforced since June 3 and 4 has not been hidden; it has been announced with pride in Chinese Communist newspapers.

Yet, according to the Los Angeles Times, some in the administration believe that "American television gave a selective, unrepresentative portrait of events in China."

Those are the same policymakers who want to reward the Red Chinese leadership with $780 million in World Bank loans in order to cover up the chaos Marxist economics brings. Some ought to inform them that the $780 million is not free money: It comes from the taxpayers of the free world. I doubt if French or English taxpayers want to shore up communism in China any more than American taxpayers.

Mr. President, the 100th day is a day for remembering. Let us remember those who died in the cause of freedom 100 days ago and those who suffer today.

Their cause is just. Their cause will triumph. We will not forget.

I ask unanimous consent that an article from the Los Angeles Times of September 4, 1989, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. EASING SANCTIONS ON CHINA—3 MONTHS AFTER MASSACRE, IMPACT OF CURBS LESSENS

(By Jim Mann)

WASHINGTON.—Three months after the massacre of protesters in Beijing, the Bush Administration is gradually finding ways to ease or limit the impact of the moderate sanctions it has imposed on China.

Since June, the coordinated efforts by the United States, its European allies and Japan have succeeded in isolating China to a degree that its leaders could not have imagined before they ordered the June 3-4 assault on Tiananmen Square by the People's Liberation Army.

Where once the heads of state of the world streamed to Beijing, these days even a visit by the president of the African nation of Burkina Faso is a rare and noteworthy event. U.S. officials now estimate that a decline in tourism will cost China about $1 billion in foreign exchange this year and that China will lose another $1 billion to $2 billion in foreign investment.

WORLD WILL COME AROUND

Analysts here say that the Chinese leadership has decided to wait things out on the assumption that the international pressure eventually will slacken. "China's overall reaction has been to take the position that the world will come around," said Harry Harding, a China scholar at the Brookings Institution.

There are indications that the strategy is succeeding. The Bush Administration has already taken small steps to restore some ties with the Chinese leadership, and several more such changes may be coming in the next few weeks.

Although the United States and its allies forced the World Bank to suspend $780 million in loans to China last June, bank officials say privately that they believe the Bush Administration and the Europeans and Japanese will give the green light within the next month to proceed with some of these loans.

President Bush ruled out any exchanges between U.S. officials and the Chinese government at the level of assistant secretary or higher. But in August, Secretary of State James A. Baker III met with Chinese Foreign Minister Qian Qichen in Paris, and sources say that the two men may talk again at the United Nations this month.

MET BUSH, QUAYLE, BAKER

Chinese Ambassador to the United States Han Xu had official meetings with Bush, Vice President Dan Quayle, Baker and National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft last month before ending his assignment in Washington.

Although the Bush Administration originally suspended all sales to China of goods or technology with military applications, the Administration has since begun to grant waivers clearing the way for a number of important items such as commercial planes and satellites.

The U.S. ban on military sales "hasn't done a thing really," observed one Asian diplomat who keeps track of U.S. arms sales to China. "Virtually all of the military equipment they [U.S. officials] wanted to sell had either already gone or won't be ready for several years. And they will grant special exceptions for the rest."

SOUGHT TO LIMIT CHANGE

The Bush Administration designed its response to the Tiananmen Square massacre to limit the extent of change in U.S. policy toward China. Indeed, in private, Administration officials express much less concern over the violence and political repression in China than over the reaction to those events by Congress and the American public.

One Administration official said recently that the "prevailing view" in the Bush White House is that American television gave a selective, unrepresentative portrait of events in China and that the significance of those events is being exaggerated. Such claims parallel closely the arguments made by the Chinese leadership itself since the massacre.

"Many, many more people were killed during the Cultural Revolution, at the time when President [Richard M.] Nixon went to China," this U.S. official said.

Underlying the Bush Administration's China policy is the belief that the army's assault on Beijing represents a short-term aberration for China and that Chinese leaders such as President Yang Shangkun and Premier Li Peng will not be able to consolidate their control over the nation.

FACTIONAL STRUGGLES POSSIBLE

"We don't expect the current crowd to last more than two years," said one senior U.S. policy-maker. Some of the leaders eventually could be replaced peacefully, he said, or there could be factional struggles within the top leadership in which one side or another resorts to force.

Because the Administration is hoping for changes for the better in the Chinese leadership, it has been trying to avoid any action against China that cannot be quickly undone. After the massacre last June, the Administration was careful to say that it was "suspending"—rather than permanently severing—military sales and high-level political contacts with China.

Congress will act in the next few weeks on legislation that would write the Bush Administration's China sanctions, and possibly some additional measures, into law. A House-Senate conference committee will try to reconcile differences between bills passed separately by the two chambers.

The Bush Administration probably will go along with this legislation as long as it contains a broad waiver allowing the President to lift sanctions against China whenever he thinks it would be in the "national interest" to do so.

ASSUMPTIONS MAY PROVE FALSE

But there are some indications that the assumptions on which Bush's China policy is based—that the Chinese leadership will soon take a torn for the better—may be false. One Bush Administration official acknowledged that he is worried about what would happen if leaders such as Yang and Li consolidate their power and if there are further crackdowns and repression in China.

China recently recalled most of its ambassadors from around the world to Beijing for top-level meetings with leaders such as new communist Party General Secretary Jiang Zemin. Shortly afterward, the official party-controlled Chinese press began to carry hints of a harder-line approach to foreign policy.

Some Chinese officials and newspapers began to resurrect the use of the term "imperialism" in talking about the West. They also emphasized old themes such as the fundamental "struggle" between socialism and capitalism.

"We should never turn a blind eye to the anti-communist and anti-socialist tide in the Western world, which has always existed and has risen daily in recent years," said the official Chinese magazine Liaowang on July 31.

A FOND DREAM

". . . The international bourgeoisie has never given up its attempt to eliminate socialism. . . . The socialist system is superior to the capitalist system. It is but a fond dream to predict that communism will thoroughly collapse in the end."

Despite the Bush Administration's effort to minimize the changes in U.S. policy toward China, U.S. officials acknowledge that the massacre at Tiananmen has had some lasting effects on ties between the two countries.

Over the last few years, senior U.S. military officials had carried out a series of visits and exchanges with top-level leaders of the Chinese People's Liberation Army. In the wake of the army's assault upon Tiananmen Square, these exchanges were suspended. Although some Pentagon officials are known to be eager to restore contacts with the army, Administration officials say this is unlikely to happen any time soon.

"I don't want to sound apocalyptic, but you have to assume that the military relationship with the People's Republic of China, for the foreseeable future, is defunct," said one Administration official.

More generally, another U.S. official observed, the events in China last June and afterward have so seriously damaged China's credibility that they have made it all but impossible for the Bush Administration to push any initiatives in Congress regarding China.

At various times in the last few years, members of Congress have expressed concern about China's sales of arms and missiles in the Middle east, its help for Pakistan's nuclear-weapons program, its policies toward Hong Kong and Taiwan and its strict enforcement of population control. Each time, U.S. officials have relied on the verbal assurances of Chinese leaders that the regime in Beijing had decent intentions and was not engaging in irresponsible behavior.

Now, this U.S. official observed, the political dynamics have changed. Relying on the words of Chinese officials will probably not work any more.

Each time the Bush Administration has moved to ease the impact of last June's sanctions against China, U.S. officials have explained that their original actions were being interpreted more broadly than was originally intended.

CAREFULLY WORDED SANCTIONS

For example, after Baker met the Chinese foreign minister and he and other top Administration officials saw the outgoing Chinese ambassador, U.S. officials said that the sanctions announced last June had been carefully worded to cover only formal "exchanges" in which a leader of one nation visited another.

The Bush policy was not meant to ban all high-level contacts or meetings between the two nations, U.S. officials said then—although that was the way the policy was interpreted last June, and Bush Administration officials did little to dispel that impression at the time.

"Clearly, the sanctions against China were announced in very broad, general terms," observed Harding of the Brookings Institution. "And the Bush Administration has chosen to interpret them loosely, rather than strictly."

This Act may be cited as the "Department of Transportation and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1990".

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, it is my pleasure as subcommittee chairman to bring before the Senate the 1990 appropriations bill for the Department of Transportation and related agencies. Senator D'AMATO, the distinguished ranking member, and I are proud of this bill.

This bill represents the result of a very careful and diligent examination of the budget requests proposed by the President. The subcommittee held 10 days of hearings involving 11 agencies, and held special hearings on aviation security and on the transportation trust funds.

I want to thank each one of the members of the subcommittee and the Appropriations Committee, particularly the chairman, who is present here, of the Appropriations Committee for his advice, guidance, and for his support.

I want to thank every Member for their support. While we are not able to provide for every request, I have done the best that I could to accommodate their priorities. In total, we received 431 Senate requests from 77 individual Senators, representing almost $3.8 billion in individual earmarked programs and priority listings for specific projects. By and large, these programs were above and beyond the amounts allocated in the adminstration's budget.

We think this bill is a good bill. It protests and enhances our Nation's basic transportation infrastructure. Further, it is within the subcommittee's allocation, containing $11,464,891,000 in discretionary budget authority and $27,449,864,000 in discretionary outlays. That would be compared to our 302(b) allocation of $11,500,000,000 in budget authority and $27,450,000,000 in outlays.

To all those Senators who may been thinking of offering amendments I would like to emphasis there is essentially no room for spending amendments.

The President proposed to reduce the budget authority and limitations on obligations in the Transportation bill by $2 billion, from $26.4 to $24.4 billion. In terms of outlays for discretionary programs, the budget proposed a reduction of $1.5 billion, from $11 billion to $9.5 billion.

These cuts were achieved largely by reducing obligation limitations on highway construcion programs by $700 million—which translates into a $150 million outlay cut; eliminating funding for Amtrak, the Nation's intercity passenger railroad corporation, for a savings of $584 million in budget authority and $500 million in outlays; and eliminating $2 billion in budget authority and $700 million in outlays for the urban mass transit programs.

These cuts total $3.3 billion in budget authority, offset by increases of $650 million for the Coast Guard and $1.2 billion for the Federal Aviation Administration.

In other words, the President's Budget proposed to pay for needed increases for the Coast Guard and the FAA by virtually eliminating financial assistance for mass transit and Amtrak, and by reducing highway expenditures as well.

Here are a few highlights.

COAST GUARD

For example, in the Coast Guard, the bill provides $1.952 billion in new budget authority, to be supplemented by a $300 million transfer to the Coast Guard from the Defense Department, a furtherance of the Coast Guard's national defense mission, including drug interdiction. The only major reduction we had to make to the Coast Guard was to eliminate $243 million budgeted for a new icebreaker. Otherwise, the Coast Guard will receive an increase of 6 percent for operations.

In passing, I would mention that the Commandant of the Coast Guard, Adm. Paul Yost, and I have worked closely over the past several weeks to resolve any differences and I think I can report that he is extremely pleased with his mark and has expressed his gratitude for the support of all members.

HIGHWAYS

In the Federal Highway Administration, I would note that the bill before you has $12.050 billion, an increase of $50 million over last year and $740 million over the budget.

AMTRAK

For Amtrak, the bill contains $530 million for operations, down from last year's $584 million, and also provides $85 million for capital projects, so that Amtrak can begin to renew its rolling stock and continue its tremendous progress at improving its financial performance.

FEDERAL AVIATION ADMINISTRATION

For the FAA, the bill provides an increase of $418.4 million for operations, an increase of 13 percent over the 1989 enacted level. This includes funding for an additional 695 air traffic controllers; 400 additional safety inspectors; 60 additional aircraft certification personnel; and 120 additional civil aviation security staff.

In the facilities and equipment area, the bill provides $1.78 billion, or $395.6 million more than the enacted 1989 level. Most of this will go to the modernization and expansion of our national airspace system by upgrading our air route traffic control centers, airport towers and flight service facilities.

This includes $12 million of the $30 million which the FAA requested for the microwave landing system. This amount is the same that has been funded by the House. We have, however, in the committee's report, given the FAA the latitude of going forward with a limited buy of category II/III MLS prototype systems. Our rationale in this matter is that FAA is finally ending the problems they have had with the current MLS contractor. Either that contractor will default the contract, or a new contractor—one with the ability to pick up and perform the current contract—will buy out the contract and provide the equipment. This will hopefully enable FAA to field a quantity of category I systems.

We have agreed with the House position that there needs to be a microwave landing system demonstration program. It is for that purpose that the $12 million is provided in fiscal year 1990.

Concurrently, however, we must support the FAA's efforts to develop the microwave landing system into equipment which the use community will want to adopt and utilize. Therefore, we have given FAA the ability to utilize funds to ask industry to respond to the challenge of producing a viable category II/III MLS. It is time to determine whether MLS is really the system of the future.

In the research area, there is $14 million to support continued development of automated explosive and sabotage detection systems, which is $5 million more than the administration's request.

For the grants program, the bill contains $1.5 billion, which is $150 million over the administration's request ($100 million for capacity related projects).

URBAN MASS TRANSPORTATION ADMINISTRATION

In the transit area, the bill freezes at the 1989 level the amount available for the section 9 general fund program, $1.6 billion; and keeps the operating assistance amount at $805 million. In addition, the amount for the section 3, trust-funded capital programs is at the 1989 level of $1.14 billion.

AIRLINE SMOKING BAN

Mr. President, I would also like to make a few comments at this time concerning the topic apparently of great interest in this body and around the country. It is the airline smoking provision.

The committee has proposed amendments to section 335 of the House-passed bill to permanently ban cigarette smoking on domestic airline flights. That is all flights. It does not matter where they start or where they end or who the carrier is. It is all flights that take off and land within the boundaries of the United States.

On February 10, 1989, a study on the exposure of nonsmokers on airline flights to cigarette smoke was published in the Journal of the American Medical Association. That study, conducted by a group of scientists led by researchers from the National Cancer Institute and the Environmental Protection Agency, showed that nonsmoking passengers and flight attendants are exposed to equivalent amounts of nicotine as the smoking passenger—the same exposure.

This study confirmed concerns about health risks posed by passive smoking. In the United States 390,000 people die each year from smoking-related causes. The Surgeon General, based on the information that he developed, estimated that as many as 5,000 nonsmokers die each year from enhaling the smoke of others. The problems posed by cigarette smoke on airplanes can be even worse than those in other environments. Newer, more fuel efficient planes utilize increasing amounts of recirculated air, increasing the exposure of the passengers to cigarette smoke developed by others. And we found out something else, that separating the passengers, the nonsmoking from the smoking passengers, does not separate the air they breathe.

The dangers of passive smoking continue to be of continuing concern to the committee. The Congress adopted a provision on the fiscal year 1988 transportation appropriations bill. It banned smoking on some commercial domestic flights, flights of 2 hours or less. That ban has been implemented very successfully with overwhelming public acceptance.

Based on this experience, and mounting scientific evidence on the dangers of passive smoking, especially in a confined environment like an airline cabin, the committee has included this provision to prohibit smoking on all domestic airline flights.

The Senate amendment treats all airlines alike; that is, if the prohibition on smoking applies to any airline's flight segment between any two cities, it applies to all airline flight segments between those two cities. This prohibition is applied without regard to whether, as I said earlier, the airline in question is a domestic or a foreign flag carrier. As long as it is within the United States on a continuing segment of a flight from a foreign port to U.S. gateway, smoking is prohibited.

Mr. President, I know this is not going to be the end of this discussion on this provision, but I hope my colleagues will support the committee's conclusion.

At this time, I would like to turn the floor over to Senator D'AMATO, the distinguished ranking member, to hear his comments.

Mr. D'AMATO addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with Chairman LAUTENBERG in support of H.R. 3015, the fiscal 1990 appropriations bill for the Department of Transportation and related agencies.

Let me say I think it has been a remarkable job that the Senator, and committee and staff have undertaken given our current budget constraints. Major program funding needs have been met such as enhancing our Coast Guard drug interdiction efforts and enhancing the FAA's and national airspace system modernization program. Achieving these goals in a fiscally difficult time is no easy task.

I would like at this time to pay particular thanks to a dedicated professional staff led by Pat McCann, Don Knowles, Joyce Rose, Anne Miano, and Dorothy Pastis for their fine work.

Mr. President, let me emphasize one matter as it related to the safety of millions and millions of daily commuters in New York City.

I would like to thank the chairman of the subcommittee, Senator LAUTENBERG, and the chairman of the full committee who is here, Senator BYRD, for their help in seeing to it that an amendment that will require UMTA, the Urban Mass Transportation Administration, to undertake a thorough systemwide safety investigation of the New York Metropolitan Transportation Authority, is included in this legislation.

This bill contains vital increases for the Federal Aviation Administration [FAA]. We have provided $7.3 billion for FAA, an increase of 16 percent or $1.027 billion over current levels. Of that increase, $396 million is for facilities and equipment to help modernize the Nation's air traffic control system. Another $418.4 million will pay for FAA operations, including salaries for 696 additional controllers, 120 more civil aviation security personnel, as well as 400 more safety inspectors and an additional 60 aircraft certification staff.

We also have provided $3.2 billion for the Coast Guard. Although we did not grant the administration's request to fund a new $243 million icebreaker, the Coast Guard will receive an overall increase of about $158 million. This includes a 6-percent or $340 million increase for operations. The committee has provided $567 million for drug interdiction efforts, up to 15 percent from current levels.

These increases were accommodated without shortchanging other transportation modes and with responsible, thoughtful budgeting. I am glad to say that we are within our subcommittee's 302(b) allocation.

We are grateful to the Defense Subcommittee for $300 million in funds transferred to us for the Coast Guard. Without this infusion of support, we would not have been able to provide the funds needed for the Coast Guard's vital drug fighting mission. In addition, the Defense assistance to the Coast Guard will enable us to continue the massive job of modernizing our air traffic control system, while rebuilding our crumbling highways and bridges, and keeping Amtrak and transit alive.

Mr. President, this bill contains too many provisions to be able to discuss them all, however I would like to highlight one that affects the safety of millions of daily commuters in the New York City area. I have added an amendment that will require the Urban Mass Transportation Administration [UMTA] to undertake a thorough, systemwide safety investigation of the New York Metropolitan Transportation Authority.

Conditions in New York's transit system are intolerable. For example, since 1979 there have been hundreds of incidents of passengers being dragged by subway doors. In 1987, one person was killed in a dragging accident. There were 3,600 track and tunnel fires from 1987 to 1988, at a time when many of MTA's fire extinguishers were missing or broken. Recently, a number of accidents and near misses have pointed out the need for this investigation.

In July 1989, for example, 2,600 riders were trapped for hours in over 100-degree heat in a Queens (east) bound subway train. They were forced to evacuate the train in conditions of no lights, ventilation, or communications. There were 37 passengers injured, including 2 pregnant women.

In March 1989, two workmen were killed at the Astor Place station.

Also in March, 45 passengers were injured in a crash of a Broadway line train at the 103d Street station. I could go on and on.

I have discussed my amendment with UMTA Administrator designee, Brian Clymer. He has assued me that UMTA will commit itself to undertake this very serious investigation in an expeditious manner. I have worked hard to preserve funding for public transit—this bill freezes transit at the fiscal year 1989 levels—and I will continue to do so, but I must emphasize that safety cannot take a back seat to any other transit issue.

Billions of Federal dollars have been invested in modernizing aging transit systems and in building new ones. Interest in public transit is mushrooming around the country. It is time that the Federal Government gets involved in looking at whether the systems we are paying for are safe. The New York MTA's performance makes it clear that UMTA must do more than simply write grant checks.

We have poured billions and billions of Federal taxpayers' dollars into the Nation's mass transit systems. We simply have not got the kind of response we need from UMTA regarding the safety problems that exist on public transit systems.

We are asking that the investment of billions of dollars of Federal taxpayers' moneys be monitored especially as it relates to the safety of the New York transit system. This is urgently needed because there are hundreds of millions of dollars in the pipeline that are yet to be spent. As national interest in public transit continues to grow, the least we can do is to assure that the New York MTA's performance is carefully investigated and that we get accountability for the Federal dollars that are invested in this system.

Mr. President, I congratulate the distinguished subcommittee chairman and the chairman of our full committee, Senator BYRD, for, assisting in putting together an outstanding bill. I urge my colleagues to support this bill. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. LAUTENBERG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments may be considered and agreed to en bloc, with two exceptions. First, the committee amendment inserting language beginning on page 5, line 22, and continuing through page 6, line 2. Second, the committee amendment inserting language beginning on page 71, line 6, and extending through page 71, line 12, be considered as original text for the purpose of further amendment and that no points of order be waived thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The committee amendments were agreed to en bloc, with the exception of the committee amendment inserting language beginning on page 5, line 22, and continuing through page 6, line 2; and the committee amendment inserting language beginning on page 71, line 6, and continuing through page 71, line 12.

Mr. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, today we are considering H.R. 3015, the Transportation and related agencies appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990. This measure provides funding for the programs of the Department of Transportation, including the Coast Guard, the Federal Aviation Administration, the Federal Highway Administration, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, the Federal Railroad Administration, the Urban Mass Transportation Administration, the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, the Research and Special Programs Administration, as well as the Office of the Secretary and the Office of the Inspector General.

In addition the bill provides funding for the Architectural and Transportation Barriers Compliance Board, the National Transportation Safety Board, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Panama Canal Commission and the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority.

The bill as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations provides total obligational authority of $11,937,504,569. This represents an increase of $1,909,808,000 to the President's request and a decrease of $34,895,000 from the bill as it passed by the House. With respect to the subcommittee 302(b) allocation, the bill as recommended is within both the budget authority and outlay ceilings.

I wish to commend Mr. LAUTENBERG, chairman of the subcommittee and Mr. D'AMATO, the ranking member, of their excellent work in accommodating the priorities of the Senate within the constraints of the budget agreement. Their work was in no little part assisted by the cooperation of their colleagues on the subcommittee and on the full Committee on Appropriations.

I also wish to commend the staff of the subcommittee: Patrick McCann, Don Knowles, Joyce Rose; and for the minority, Anne Miano and Dorothy Pastis. These professionals have worked tirelessly to get this measure before us today.

The managers have explained in much greater detail the contents of the measure as recommended to you. I will not review again those highlights so that we can get down to the business of considering and passing this bill. The bill as reported by the Appropriations Committee deserves the support of the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, I take it that the first of the two amendments that were accepted from the en bloc request is before the Senate for debate and amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I shall shortly send an amendment to the desk, but before I do that, let me say with respect to the amendment which I shall offer, last week President Bush went before the Nation to announce his proposal for addressing our country's drug problem.

I applaud his effort, and I applaud the leadership that he brings to the crisis. I appreciate the fact that he is doing whatever he can to galvanize the attention and the concern and the action of the Nation. But I am concerned about the means of funding the President's program. He would pay for his most recent $716 million increase in drug funding by cutting $194 million from the Economic Development Administration; $40 million from the Juvenile Justice Program; $50 million from public housing subsidies; $320 million from the Interim Assistance Program at the Department of Health and Human Services; and $132 million from the Department of Defense's single channel ground airborne radio system.

Mr. President, I do not believe that this is a fair way to fund this national crisis. What is necessary is an approach that would spread both the pain and the gain evenly throughout the Federal Government.

The President's proposal does not go far enough. The American people, I believe, see it that way, and also the subcommittees of the Senate, as they have assessed their needs on the basis of their hearings and so on, do not believe so either. According to a September 8 ABC-Washington Post poll, 74 percent of the American people agree with that statement.

In total, the President's drug program for fiscal year 1990 totals $7.867 billion. According to OMB, that total is arrived at by adding to the President's original fiscal year 1990 budget request of $6.39 billion his crime initiative of $759 million and his September budget amendment of $718 million. The total of those three figures is $7.867 billion. For fiscal year 1989, $5.668 billion was appropriated for drug programs. So, the President has asked for an increase of $2.199 billion for fiscal year 1990.

In discussing the President's request with my subcommittee chairmen, I learned two things. First, there was no way for several of the subcommittees to fund the President's request for drugs and also fund programs for which the President had asked for too little or no funding. In fact, our subcommittees with jurisdiction over drug programs have indicated that they will be able to fund only $6.138 billion of the President's request.

Second, each subcommittee indicated that through their review of the President's drug requests and from information gathered during their hearings, the President requested too little funding for many important programs.

In preparing my amendment, I worked with each subcommittee to determine how much additional funding they felt should be appropriated for fiscal year 1990 in each of their jurisdictions in order to fully fund the President's requests plus provide funding for other programs authorized by the Anti-Drug Act of 1988 but for which no funding has yet been provided.

So the amendment that I offer, based on these discussions with my subcommittee chairmen and their staffs, includes an additional $3.939 billion for drug programs. This amount, when added to the $6.138 billion which our subcommittees intend to recommend in their regular fiscal year 1990 appropriation bills, will total $10.078 billion in drug funding for fiscal year 1990. That will result in an increase of $2.211 billion above the President's request, and an increase of $4.410 billion, or a 78-percent increase above fiscal year 1989 appropriations.

Included in the amendment are the following increases:

For programs within the jurisdiction of the Commerce, Justice, State Subcommittee, $1,839,940,000 will be appropriated, including $1 billion for prison construction; for the Interior Subcommittee, $25,500,000 in the Indian Health Services, and incidentally, that bill has already passed the Senate and is going to be considered in conference shortly; for treatment, rehabilitation, and education programs under the Labor, HHS Subcommittee, $1,602,500,000; for law enforcement programs under the Treasury, Postal Service Subcommittee, $271,140,000; and for drug treatment programs in VA, an additional $100 million will be appropriated together with an additional $100 million for treatment programs in public housing facilities.

In order to pay for these increases, the amendment provides for an across-the-board cut of .575 of 1 percent; in other words, just barely more than one-half of 1 percent from all domestic, international, and defense discretionary appropriations for fiscal year 1990. It brings the law enforcement interdiction side better in balance with the education, rehabilitation, and treatment side.

This reduction applies to each discretionary program, project, and activity for which fiscal year 1990 appropriations are enacted. This means that fiscal year 1990 appropriation bills which have already passed the Senate, Interior, Energy and Water, Treasury, Postal Service, Legislative, and Agricultural, will be subject to this reduction upon enactment as well as all other appropriation bills which have not yet been considered by the Senate.

This reduction of .575 of 1 percent results in outlay savings of $1.657 billion. This amount of outlay savings will fully offset the fiscal year 1990 outlays which result from the increased drug appropriations provided in the amendment.

Therefore, this amendment will have no effect on the deficit. It is deficit neutral for fiscal year 1990.

Mr. President, I would have preferred to wait until after enactment of all 13 appropriation bills before recommending increased drug funding, but the American people are tired of waiting and fully need a strong drug program, and Members of the Senate apparently are tired of waiting, too. We saw this happen when the legislative appropriation bill was before the Senate.

This amendment is an attempt to address those concerns, and if it is adopted it would seem to me there would be no need for other drug-related amendments to be offered to appropriations bills. We have passed five of the appropriations bills.

We have eight yet to go. We need very much to pass these remaining bills and get all of them through conference by October 1, in addition to the reconciliation bill which is going to be necessary by October 15 if we are to avoid a sequester, in which case there will be much deeper cuts in defense and otherwise, because there is a penalty of $10 billion once we go over that Gramm-Rudman target, a penalty of $10 billion, if we go $1 billion over the $110 billion, $10 billion will be a cushion. We would not just have sequester for $1 billion, we would sequester 1 plus 10 to get the budget deficit down to the target of $100 billion.

So this is a very painful approach. I would hope that we could get all of these appropriations bills through and avoid a continuing resolution. I do not want to go the continuing resolution route. That is an additional headache if it ever comes up to the Senate because it is open to various and sundry amendments and when we end up with a continuing resolution, Congress looks bad, and I want to do everything I can to get the appropriations bills through before the fiscal October 1 deadline.

In view of the fact that we do have this terrible drug problem all Members are concerned about it.

There is no monopoly on the concern by either party. Democrats and Republicans are equally concerned about doing something. We may differ in our approaches, but I think it is important that we try to lay this matter to rest on the appropriations bill so that on the remaining appropriations bills that come up we will hopefully not be having to deal with all kinds of appropriations amendments that come from here, there, and everywhere else and divide us and pit my program against another Senator's program, pit one department against another, and they are all critical programs.

I would hope that this approach would relieve us of that incessant attack that we will certainly have to endure if we do not adopt an approach that takes care of all the subcommittees that are involved one at a time.

So I would have preferred to wait until after enactment of all 13 appropriations bills.

But as I say this amendment, even if not the final answer, may not provide enough drug funding for fiscal year 1990, but it is the best we can do at this time to adequately fund the drug programs and to distribute the necessary reductions in a fair and equal way.

I urge my colleagues to support the amendment. The amendment also would provide a better balance between the enforcement side and the education, prevention and treatment side. The moneys that would be added by my amendment would provide: 53 percent would be on the enforcement side, on the supply side; 47 percent would be on the demand side, prevention, education and treatment, rehabilitation, and so on. That is a pretty even balance. I think our Anti-Drug Act of last year called for a 50-50 match or some such.

So, in that respect, we build up this side that appears to be somewhat weak otherwise, and we are fair in dealing with everybody in a fair and evenhanded way.

So I hope, Mr. President, that the Senate will support the amendment.

Senator BIDEN is out conducting hearings. He is the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. He is gathering important information as he goes around the country conducting hearings and he is to be commended because in this way he can develop facts that we do not presently have. He can elicit facts from those who testify before his committee. At the same time he can also perform an important function, the function of informing the people out there as to what the facts are in connection with the proposals that have been made.

Then he will be in a position to offer suggestions for authorizing legislation or, if necessary, more funding. In that case, I certainly will do everything I can to be helpful to Senator BIDEN in the event that, in the final analysis with his hearings, he determines more is needed.

We have a war going on in our streets right now. We are not waiting for an invasion. An invasion has already begun and the troops of the enemy have landed and they are attacking at all points. If we hope to meet this terrible scourge, we need to be prepared to pay for the means by which to do it. And that is what this amendment seeks to do.

I do not seek to approach it in a partisan way. I welcome the support of Members on the other side. I would hope that the administration could see its way also to support it. Because, after all, the President and we are seeking the same goals.

So the choices are hard. We are going to have to wage a war. We must not be timid. The drug scourge here at home could be as great a threat to the future of this Nation as any war that we might wage on foreign shores.

I have heard an old story that the Chinese built a great wall. It took them many, many decades to build that wall to keep out aggressors. What happened, however, was the enemy within the walls was the one which finally was victorious. And while the wall kept the aggressors out, it was those within the walls that they were not protected against. So we have an aggressor right here within the walls, and I think we have to face up to that.

So, if we are serious in our resolve to win this war, then we have to provide ammunition to the troops in the field. And we can begin today with the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. President, it is my understanding—I have just been informed by the distinguished majority leader—that the distinguished minority leader would like for this amendment to be set aside, meaning the committee amendment that was excluded, which would carry with it my amendment, set these aside for the present so that the Senate could get on with other discussions concerning the bill and the other amendment which has been excepted in the en bloc request.

I will be happy to, if it is agreeable to my subcommittee chairman and my ranking member, once I have offered the amendment, to make that request on behalf of the majority leader.

So if there is no objection, I will do that or the subcommittee chairman can do it himself.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in accordance with my statement, I ask on behalf of the majority leader and the minority leader, if it is agreeable with both the managers, that the pending committee amendment, carrying with it my amendment, be temporarily set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I again thank both the manager and the ranking manager and compliment them highly on their work.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, it is quite clear now that the pending business is the committee amendment on page 71 pertaining to smoking on airplanes. I just want to confirm that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

AMENDMENT NO. 728 TO COMMITTEE AMENDMENT BEGINNING ON PAGE 71, LINE 6

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG] proposes an amendment numbered 728 to committee amendment beginning on page 71, line 6, and continuing through page 71, line 12.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LIEBERMAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

In the pending committee amendment on page 71, strike all after the word "deleting" and insert the following: "in 49 U.S.C. App. 1374(d)(1)(A), all after the words 'any scheduled airline flight' and inserting in lieu thereof, 'segment, in air transportation or intrastate air transportation, which is between any two points in the United States, and the Secretary shall promulgate regulations to implement this subparagraph, and'."

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, this amendment makes one substantive change to the committee amendment. It is to make clear that the Secretary of Transportation shall promulgate regulations to implement the airline smoking ban. Otherwise, it has the same effect as the committee amendment. It would ban smoking on all domestic airlines.

Mr. President, at this time I would like to briefly describe for my colleagues what the committee amendment does. It extends an existing ban on smoking on airplanes on domestic flights of 2 hours or less to cover all flights wholly within the United States. The ban would take effect 90 days after enactment.

As with the existing ban, there would be penalties—a fine of up to $2,000 for tampering with smoke detectors in lavatories, and a fine of up to $1,000 for violation of the smoking restriction.

Mr. President, this is not a new debate. This is a subject that, in one form or another, has been thoroughly debated for well over 30 years.

Its been debated in the scientific community; in numerous State and local legislatures; in congressional hearings; and here on the Senate floor.

Throughout this debate, one fact has emerged that could only be disputed by those who truly want to ignore reality, and bury their heads in the sand. That fact is, Mr. President, that smoking kills.

It takes the lives of almost 400,000 Americans each year; 400,000 people each year.

Compare that to the toll taken in the tragic Vietnam war. There, over the course of our involvement, about 60,000 young Americans lost their lives. But from smoking, we lose almost 400,000—each and every year.

Recognizing the dangers of smoking, each Surgeon General since 1964 has warned us of the threat. More than 40,000 studies have confirmed the fact that smoking is unhealthy.

And, Mr. President, over the years, with further research, another fact has come to light. That is, that you don't have to be the one holding the cigarette to suffer its toxic effects.

This phenomenon, known as passive smoking, involuntary smoking, or side stream smoking, has proved to be a significant health hazard.

In 1986, two major reports were issued, compiling and reviewing the body of scientific research available. First, there was the National Academy of Sciences' report entitled "Environmental Tobacco Smoke, Measuring Exposure and Assessing Health Effects."

Then there was the Surgeon General's report, "The Health Consequences of Involuntary Smoking," also released in 1986.

Those reports came to several conclusions.

One, That involuntary smoking is a cause of disease, including lung cancer, in otherwise healthy nonsmokers.

Mr. President, I would like to take a moment to read from the editorial in USA Today. They call for a ban on smoking on all airline flights. The text is as follows:

Cathy Gilbert-Silva would like to quit smoking but she can't. Not without quitting her job. You see, Gilbert-Silva has never puffed on a cigarette. She is a flight attendant and for 20 years has had to breathe the smoke of people that she serves. When she had polyps removed from her vocal cords recently her doctor told her that she had the lungs of a 2-pack-a-day smoker. She and other flight attendants deserve a breather—and so do nonsmoking passengers.

The editorial goes on to say—

And it then goes on to discuss the Senate proposal that you have before you.

I ask unanimous consent that the entire text of this editorial be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. LAUTENBERG. The second point that is made in the report from the Surgeon General, and the National Academy of Sciences, is that involuntary exposure to tobacco smoke increases the frequency of respiratory diseases in infants and young children. And third, that involuntary exposure of children to tobacco smoke reduces the rate of lung growth as their young lungs mature. That is, exposure of young children to cigarette smoke impairs their normal development of the respiratory system.

Based on the scientific evidence, the Surgeon General estimated that 5,000 people die each year from the effects of passive smoking.

That same year, the National Academy of Sciences issued a second report, entitled "The Airliner Cabin environment: Air Quality and Safety." This report was based on an 18-month study, and, given the unique nature of an airline cabin, recommended a total ban on smoking on aircraft.

In May 1988, Surgeon General Koop asked the National Cancer Institute to further study the effects of passive smoking in airline cabins.

The results of that study were published in February of this year in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

This study made several important findings. It demonstrated conclusively that separating their seating does not separate the air that passengers breathe. The levels of airborne nicotine that flight attendants and passengers in the nonsmoking section are exposed to are equivalent to those found in the smoking section.

Based on these findings, Surgeon General Koop renewed the call for a total ban on smoking on commercial aircraft.

On March 7, I introduced S. 519, a bill to do just that, ban smoking. I was pleased to be joined at the time by the distinguished Senator from Utah, ORRIN HATCH.

As both chairman and now ranking Republican member of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, Senator HATCH has been at the forefront of many issues to protect the health and well-being of the American public.

To be sure, there are many issues the distinguished Senator from Utah and I do not quite see eye-to-eye on.

But this is an issue is not political. In looking at the list of cosponsors of this measure, that is made all the more clear.

I would like to take a minute of the Senate's time to go through the list of cosponsors of that bill. It includes Senators: HATCH, KENNEDY, GLENN, KOHL, LUGAR, EXON, ADAMS, MATSUNAGA, BIDEN, ARMSTRONG, BINGAMAN, THURMOND, SIMON, HARKIN, GARN, BOSCHWITZ, WIRTH, CONRAD, MIKULSKI, CHAFEE, and DODD.

Mr. President, on that list of 22 Senators, we see both parties well represented. The full range of the political spectrum is represented.

That was repeated, that view was confirmed, by the vote in the Appropriations Committee last week. By an 18 to 11 margin. The Appropriations Committee approved the provision now pending before the Senate. There, too, the votes cut across party lines, across ideologies.

Yet, in spite of all the evidence, there were arguments against it. And I am sure we will hear more of them here on the Senate floor.

We will hear that tobacco is a legal substance, and that this is an unfair restriction. We will hear that the proponents of this amendment would bar consumption of one legal substance—tobacco—while continuing to allow consumption of another, alcohol.

I would like to comment on this. Even though alcohol is legal, you are not allowed to drink enough to impair you and then get in a car and drive. And the reason for that is quite evident: Because you jeopardize other people's health in addition to your own. What we are saying is if you want to get drunk sitting at home or in a bar, you can do it. But, do not get in a car and endanger other people's lives. You have no right to do it with a cigarette. You have no right to pass your habit on to innocent victims in an airline cabin.

As my distinguished colleague on the Appropriations Committee, Senator GARN, noted in the committee debate last week. He said when the guy next to me is drinking, I do not get drunk. But when the guy next to me is smoking, I stand a good chance of getting sick.

Mr. President, the American public is behind this proposal. They want a ban on smoking on airplanes. The groups that support this airline smoking ban are almost too numerous to mention but it is worth highlighting a few—American Cancer Society, American Heart Association, American Lung Association, American Academy of Family Physicians, the American Academy of Otolaryngology, head and neck surgery.

The list goes on, Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent that the full list of these support organizations be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit 2.)

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, in June the American Association for Respiratory Care surveyed 30,000 airline passengers. That survey found that 84 percent of the people questioned, approved of the current 2-hour ban on smoking and nearly two-thirds thought it should cover all flights.

A more recent Gallup poll showed that 70 percent of adult professionals, those most likely to fly, support a total ban.

I would also like to point out that in surveys, a majority of passengers identifying themselves as smokers have said they too support a ban.

Mr. President, with the pending amount before us, we have a chance to do something that is long overdue. It is the right thing to do based on mountains of solid, scientific evidence, and the American people want it, in overwhelming numbers.

There will be more debate on this. So for now, let me finish by making just one more point.

The Senate deals with a great number of issues. Among the most important ones are those to protect the health and well-being of all of our citizens. When a train crashes, we respond to do what we can to try and keep it from happening again. We spend billions to clean up our mistakes of the past, which turn up as toxic waste sites. And when workplace hazards, like asbestos, are identified, we act to protect the workers. In each case, everyone in this body, throughout the Congress, recognizes that that is an obligation that we have, to protect the health and the well-being of our citizens. But here we have a problem that is taking the lives of almost 400,000 each year, and there are those who would do all within their power to continue that, to stop us from taking even this relatively small step forward. We are not saying you cannot smoke. What we are saying is—be considerate. When you are in the small space of an airplane cabin, for God's sake, respect the rights of others.

Obviously, it is hard to understand what it is that would prevent us from moving ahead with this very positive action. It is hard for this Senator to comprehend it, and I cannot agree with them at all. I hope my colleagues will join me in supporting the provision reported by the Appropriations Committee.

[From USA Today, Sept. 12, 1989]

BAN SMOKING ON ALL AIRLINE FLIGHTS

Cathy Gilbert-Silva would like to quit smoking. But she can't. Not without quitting her job.

You see, Gilbert-Silva has never puffed on a cigarette. She's a flight attendant, and for 20 years she has had to breathe the smoke of the people she serves.

When she had polyps removed from her vocal cords recently, her doctors told her she had the lungs of a two-pack-a-day smoker.

She and other flight attendants deserve a breather. So do non-smoking passengers.

And that's what a Senate proposal to be debated today would give them. It would ban smoking on all flights, no matter how long they are.

Critics of this plan say it would deny smokers their rights. They say segregating smokers and non-smokers is good enough. They'd turn back the clock on the current 18-month-old smoking ban on flights of two hours or less and allow smoking on all flights.

There should be no turning back. It's time to move forward and protect non-smokers' health, instead.

It's a matter of common sense and common decency.

No one denies that cigarette smoke is an irritant. It can burn even non-smokers' eyes and make their clothes smell.

And despite what you can read across this page, it also may endanger their health.

The Office of the Surgeon General says so.

It estimates that 5,000 or more non-smokers suffer lung cancer every year from breathing in the 43 carcinogens found in tobacco smoke.

The National Cancer Institute and Environmental Protection Agency say so.

Their studies concluded this year that there's no way to segregate non-smokers from exposure to the cigarette smoke blown by smokers or smoldering from the end of a lit cigarette.

They found that airline cabin air, with its poor ventilation, violates indoor clean-air standards because of smoking. And even healthy, non-smoking passengers segregated in non-smoking sections suffer increased levels of nicotine and eye and nose irritation after four-hour flights.

And the National Academy of Sciences says so, too.

It reported that a flight attendant working in a smoking section breathes in at least as much smoke as the non-smoking spouse of a pack-a-day smoker.

That means flight attendants face a 34% greater chance of contracting cancer than other non-smokers.

Longer flights only prolong the exposure and increase the health risks to non-smokers.

That's one reason why the academy called for a smoking ban on all airline flights two years ago.

That's why the USA's 70,000 flight attendants support a smoking ban on all flights today.

And that's why polls of fliers have found they favor smoke-free skies by two to one.

Congress should join this chorus.

It should tell smokers to pack away their cigarettes in their bags and quit fouling the air of fellow passengers.

It's time to ground smoking for good.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment before us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who wishes to be recognized?

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS].

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I thank the Chair for recognizing me. If ever a legislative proposition was made that constitutes legislation on an appropriations bill, this is it. My good friend from New Jersey is unwilling to have the relevant committee, the Commerce Committee, consider it, but a point of order will be made sometime today. I know how the Chair will rule on that point of order, and so does the Senator from New Jersey. I think he has the votes to do the wrong thing in the wrong way. That is not unique around this place, but I do wish that he had been willing to let the Commerce Committee consider it and act on it and perhaps he will, before all is said and done, be willing to do that in any case with some sort of compromise.

My problem with the proposition by the Senator from New Jersey is not one involving smoking or health. I am not a doctor—neither is the Senator from New Jersey—and there is a weight of evidence on both sides of that question. A whole lot of liquor is drunk in New Jersey, and a whole lot of liquor is drunk on airlines. I would imagine the travail that has resulted in this country as a result of alcohol far exceeds that of any documented result of smoking.

But my interest is not in the smoking issue. My interest is in the 200,000 small family farmers in 23 States, good citizens who take great pride in growing a perfectly legal commodity. Many of these families, certainly in my State, and I believe in all the 23 States, have never grown anything but tobacco for generations. It is never said on this floor that if you put the 200,000 small family farmers out of business that tobacco will not continue to be used. It will continue to be manufactured, but it will be somebody else's tobacco, because there are foreign countries who are anxious to put the American tobacco farmer out of business because they grow tobacco and they will ship it into this country. It will be inferior tobacco with far more nicotine and all of the other substances that we hear so much about.

First of all, as I said at the outset, I regret the approach on this, this business of legislating on an appropriations bill, especially when the distinguished chairman of the Commerce Committee, which is the authorizing committee for this type of legislation, has been willing to consider the legislation of the distinguished Senator from New Jersey. But that had no effect.

The Appropriations Committee has clearly violated rule 16 of the standing rules of the Senate by including this legislation in this appropriations bill. I fully acknowledge that it is not a novelty around this place to legislate on appropriations bills. There are many pieces of legislation in this appropriations bill and in practically all, but none affecting the livelihoods of as many people as will be affected by this sort of legislation.

As far as the jurisdictional aspects of the ban, Senator HOLLINGS is chairman of the full Commerce Committee and Senator FORD is chairman of the Aviation Subcommittee. I would think they would be entitled to exercise due process. In any case, their committee and subcommittee should be the ones to decide after having hearings, and if the tobacco farmers lose, they lose. At least due process would have occurred.

In addition, the Appropriations Committee has ignored the oversight jurisdiction already exercised by the House Public Works Committee.

So the current issue is whether the proposal by the able Senator from New Jersey, my friend—and he is my friend—requires the urgent legislation on an appropriations bill. I would think that pruduent consideration by the proper committee, hearing, and scientific study, would be the procedure to follow.

I am a little bit curious as to why some of my colleagues on the Appropriations Committee would authorize a report which would finally give us some answers on this airline smoking debate but then decide to disregard the study that the taxpayers paid for and proceed pell mell—no pun intended—to act on its own. Is it a concern that some of the declarations, assertions might be proved incorrect? I do not know. I am just saying, what is the urgency? You already have a 2-hour ban. I am perfectly willing, for one, to make that permanent. I may even go a little farther than that. But to say the whole thing is over, finished, and doing it with legislation on an appropriations bill, is an affront to 200,000 farmers in 23 States, including my own.

I have never stood on this floor and advocated smoking, not once. I have never, I would say additionally—and never will—advocate the consumption of alcohol. That is a matter of individual decision.

Now, proponents of this permanent smoking ban say that 84 percent of airline passengers, smokers and nonsmokers alike, support the current ban. What they do not say—and I do not believe Senator LAUTENBERG has said it—is that the same survey showed that only two-thirds—about 67 percent—support expanding it to cover all domestic flights.

There are airlines that have banned all smoking on all flights. Smokers have an opportunity to fly other airlines. Fair enough. But I think that people who smoke cigarettes have a right, too. They are about 25 percent of the public, and they are going to be given no choice whatsoever.

Maybe there is somebody out here in the airline business who will say let us have all-smoking flights only and see how competitive they are. That at least would be fair. People would have a clear choice.

But I go back to my original point that I am not making the issue of smoking or health. I am not an expert. What I am interested in are the farmers who are going to be and already are affected by this onslaught by people who have no stake in the economic aspects of farming.

This is an easy vote for Senators who have no tobacco growers in their

State. They get accolades back home, and I am sure it is helpful and that is fine. But the fact remains that this proposal would permanently ban a legal agricultural product, that is already regulated on airlines, and it is being done without giving the relevant committee time to consider it and hold hearings on it based on the information that the Congress requested and for which the American people paid.

By banning the use of tobacco, we are neglecting to use these studies. We are refusing to have the hearings that will address many of the perceptions, and we will be discouraging efforts which will help us reach a real compromise in this debate. But most of all, there are countries to the south of us and in other parts of the world which are elated about this assault on the tobacco industry and tobacco families because if the tobacco farmers in this country suffer, then foreign tobacco will roll in here, as Chub Seawall in my State used to say, "like a blalock bull."

There is a lot of head-counting going on right now and I acknowledge at this point it does not look good for the tobacco farmers, but we are going to play out this thing. We will have a point of order raised later today.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator please withhold the quorum call?

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. HELMS. No, I do not withhold yet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has suggested the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this is the third occasion where I have come to this floor and asked for my colleagues to ban smoking from all public conveyances. I have done so pursuant to the leadership of Senator LAUTENBERG, the distinguished Senator from New Jersey. I have to say that I have great admiration for his willingness to be able to carry this battle, because it is a difficult battle. Our close friends in the Senate, who come from tobacco States, normally have to defend the raising of tobacco and the smoking of tobacco. And I understand that. I certainly do not want to offend any of them, but, Mr. President, this is an important issue. I really think it is time that we in Congress get caught up with the scientific evidence.

Cigarette smoking is both a health and safety risk to smokers and nonsmokers who travel. Passengers on interstate public conveyances are often forced to sit for hours in confined areas, breathing air contaminated by tobacco smoke.

In 1985, Congress asked the Office of Technology Assessment to review the scientific evidence on whether cigarette smoke causes illness and disease in nonsmokers. In May 1986, OTA issued a report entitled, "Passive Smoking in the Workplace: Selected Issues," which contained the following conclusions:

> There is ample evidence that nonsmokers are exposed to elements of tobacco smoke when they are around people who are smoking. * * * children and people with pre-existing lung disease might be more susceptible than healthy adults to some of the effects of passive smoking.

Most importantly, the report stated:

> More than a dozen studies have been published during the 1980's that address the possible association of passive smoking and lung cancer. Taken one by one, the studies cannot be considered "definitive"; however, most investigators have found that passive smoking elevates a nonsmoker's risk of lung cancer, and results in about half the studies were statistically significant. The consistency of the results argues for stronger conclusions than could be drawn from individual studies: examined together, the evidence is generally consistent with an increased risk of lung cancer, on the order of a doubling of risk, among nonsmokers regularly exposed to environmental cigarette smoke compared with nonsmokers without exposure.

Congress also asked the National Research Council to evaluate cigarette smoking on commercial aircraft. In their 1986 report entitled, "The Airliner Cabin Environment, Air Quality and Safety," the council concluded:

> A contaminant in aircraft cabins that can be detected by its characteristic odor and visibility is environmental tobacco smoke—the combination of exhaled mainstream smoke and the smoke generated by smoldering cigarettes. Environmental tobacco smoke is a hazardous substance, and is the most frequent source of complaint about aircraft air quality.
> Because of the high concentration of environmental tobacco smoke generated in the smoking zone, it cannot be compensated for by increased ventilation in that zone. Moreover, strict separation of the airplane into smoking and nonsmoking zones does not prevent exposure of flight attendants and nonsmoking passengers to environmental tobacco smoke.

The scientific experts considered several ways of reducing environmental tobacco smoke in aircraft including structural or engineering changes, but concluded that such changes were not economically feasible.

The National Research Council went on to recommend:

> A ban on smoking on all domestic commercial flights, for four major reasons: to lessen irritation and discomfort to passengers and crew, to reduce potential health hazards to cabin crew associated with environmental tobacco smoke, to eliminate the possibility of fires caused by cigarettes, and to bring the cabin air quality into line with established standards for other closed environments.

Other scientific experts have been just as definitive. In a 1981 report entitled, "Indoor Pollutants," the National Research Council stated:

> Public policy should clearly articulate that involuntary exposure to tobacco smoke has adverse health effects and ought to be minimized or avoided where possible.

But perhaps the strongest conclusions have been reached by the Surgeon General of the United States, C. Everett Koop. In his 1986 report entitled, "The Health Consequences of Involuntary Smoking," the Surgeon General made the following statement:

> The comparison of the chemical composition of smoke inhaled by active smokers with that inhaled by involuntary smokers suggests that the toxic and carcinogenic effects are quantitatively similar, a similarity that is not too surprising because both mainstream smoke and environmental tobacco smoke result from the combustion of tobacco.

The Surgeon General study made the following three major conclusions:

First. Involuntary smoking is a cause of disease, including lung cancer in healthy nonsmokers.

Second. The children of parents who smoke compared with the children of nonsmoking parents have an increased frequency of respiratory infection, increased respiratory symptoms, and slightly smaller rates of increase in lung function as the lung matures.

Third. The simple separation of smokers and nonsmokers within the same airspace may reduce, but does not eliminate, the exposure of nonsmokers to environmental tobacco smoke.

Those are three fairly cogent reasons why this amendment needs to stay in this bill.

Mr. President, similar results and opinions can be found in other reports such as a 1986 report by the National Research Council entitled, "Environmental Tobacco Smoke: Measuring Exposure and Assessing Health Effect's; a 1985 Surgeon General's report, "Health Consequences of Smoking: Cancer and Chronic Lung Disease in the Workplace"; and other studies by private researchers and state and local governments.

There seems to be little disagreement among objective scientific experts on the adverse health consequences of passive smoking. Passive smoking threatens the health of everyone who is exposed, and it is especially hazardous to the very young and very old. It is not a theoretical health hazard. We are not talking about assumptions based on the death of a few laboratory specimens.

Tobacco users expose the nonsmoker to the 4,000 chemicals contained in tobacco smoke, 43 of which are known to cause cancer. The Surgeon General has estimated that the 1,000 cigarette smokers who die prematurely every day are killing 12 to 15 nonsmokers with their tobacco smoke. Up to 5,000 nonsmokers die prematurely each year from exposure to the cigarette smoke of others.

Mr. President, during this Congress, there will be much debate about protecting our basic rights as individuals against a variety of threats and challenges. Well, passive smoking is a real threat to perhaps our most fundamental individual right: the right to live. Those individuals who are affected adversely by passive smoking should have rights too. And we need to protect them.

Let me share with you a letter I received from Anna Carroll of Alexandria, VA. She has been diagnosed as having nonhereditary pulmonary emphysema. Not only has she never smoked, no one in her family has smoked, including her husband. Medical experts told her that her emphysema was directly related to the fact that she was surrounded by chain smokers at work for more than 25 years.

As tragic as her story is, that was not the reason she contacted me. Her reason was to request legislation to protect nonsmokers while traveling. She stated that when she attempts to use public transportation—trains, buses, or airplanes—she has severe reactions due to exposure to tobacco smoke. The flight attendants would have to keep a close watch on her and provide her with supplemental oxygen because of the tobacco smoke. She also gets chest pains and must struggle to breathe when exposed to cigarette smoke.

When I introduced legislation on January 6, 1987, to ban smoking on airplanes and other public conveyances, I put Ms. Carroll's letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and an interesting thing happened. I received letters from others like her. I won't read all of them, but I would like to read a few lines from a representative few.

Ms. Loretta M. Skewes from Michigan stated:

On Flight 004 the smoking was very heavy, and although I complained to the attendant, nothing was done and I suffered a breathing problem which resulted in a full blown asthma attack. I had not suffered an attack for years but now the allergic cycle has been restarted.

Gerald and Sharon Campbell of Woodside, NY, said in their letter:

Since smoke sensitive people also find it necessary to travel on public conveyances, and they find it necessary to breathe during these trips, to permit smoking is to deny others the opportunity to travel. Senate Bill 51 will give us the "right" to travel without paying the penalty of an asthma attack, the infliction of carcinogenic and radioactive materials on our innocent lungs and the possibility of long-term illness and shortened lifespans.

Mrs. Wanda F. Tozer of Cincinnati, OH, wrote:

My respiratory system is highly sensitive to smoke. Yet there are times when I must fly to get somewhere on time. I find myself dreading each time I must fly because I nearly panic knowing that I will barely be able to breathe.

I could go on and on with these letters. I have received many from Utah and all over the country in support of this legislation. I have even received letters from Boy Scouts who are members of Troop 55 in Amalga, UT. I have had flight attendants stop me on airplanes and tell me about their health problems as a result of chronic exposure to tobacco smoke during flights.

I want to read one more paragraph of Anna Carroll's letter:

Letters to the Secretary of Transportation, FAA, airlines, et cetera, have done little to any good. There are no laws on the books, so nobody takes responsibility for the protection of the innocent nonsmoker.

Mr. President, people choose to smoke, but there is no choice about breathing. We should not ban individuals in airplanes or other public conveyances simply because they cannot safely breathe the air of other passengers' cigarette smoke.

One heralded freedom of movement should not be subject to the risks imposed by tobacco smoking. None of us should have to put up with it.

Now, there is another factor that we should all consider. Smoking on airlines poses a safety risk to all passengers. A study by the FAA found that 6 percent of in-flight aircraft fires were caused by careless smoking. Perhaps Michael Brown of Arlington, TX, put it most succinctly when he wrote in an editorial: Consider this:

We put an average of 150 people inside of an enclosed metal cylinder filled with highly flammable oxygen and tons of explosive jet fuel, pressurize the cabin, take the aircraft 6 miles above the Earth and allow smokers to pull out an open flame and light up.

Mrs. Georgia Shafer, a flight attendant from Colorado, wrote about another safety problem:

I experienced on a flight the cabin pressure going crazy. This caused people's ears to block, causing pain as well as headaches. The flight engineer could not control the cabin pressure. When the mechanics came to repair the problem, they found that the valves were covered with nicotine and the valves had stuck shut.

There have also been studies showing that tobacco smoke affects our pilots. Tobacco smoke, coupled with the increase in cabin altitude of an airplane, decreases the amount of oxygen in the blood stream. This decrease in oxygen can affect the pilot's night vision and even the pilot's judgment.

Mr. President, we are fortunate that cigarette smoking has not resulted in a fatal airline crash in our country, but how long will this last? That raised two principal arguments.

First, they contend that a ban will increase the risk of in-flight fires because it encourages smokers to sneak back to the restrooms and light up.

Mr. President, to my knowledge, this has not been a problem since we established the 2-hour airline smoking ban. FAA already has taken steps to address this concern. I ask unanimous consent that the section 121.308 of the Federal Aviation Regulations on lavatory fire protection be printed in the RECORD, along with (e) and (f) of section 25.854.

There being no objection, the regulations were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION 121.308. LAVATORY FIRE PROTECTION

(a) After October 29, 1986, no person may operate a passenger-carrying transport category airplane unless each lavatory in the airplane is equipped with a smoke detector system or equivalent that provides a warning light in the cockpit or provides a warning light or audio warning in the passenger cabin which would be readily detected by a flight attendant, taking into consideration the positioning of the flight attendants throughout the passenger compartment during various phases of flight.

(b) After April 29, 1987, no person may operate a passenger-carrying transport category airplane unless each lavatory in the airplane is equipped with a built-in fire extinguisher for each disposal receptacle for toilets, paper, or waste located within the lavatory. The built-in fire extinguisher must be designed to discharge automatically into each disposal receptable upon occurrence of a fire in the receptacle.

(e) Each disposal receptacle for towels, paper, or waste must be fully enclosed and constructed of at least fire resistant materials, and must contain fires likely to occur in it under normal use. The ability of the disposal receptacle to contain those fires under all probable conditions of wear, misalignment, and ventilation expected in service must be demonstrated by test. A placard containing the legible words "No Cigarette Disposal" must be located on or near each disposal receptacle door.

(f) Lavatories must have "No Smoking" or "No Smoking in Lavatory" placards located conspicuously on each side of the entry door, and self-contained removable ashtrays located conspicuously on or near the entry side of each lavatory door, except that one ashtray may serve more than one lavatory door if the ashtray can be seen readily from the cabin side of each lavatory door served. The placards must have red letters at least one-half inch high on a white background of at least one inch high. (A "No Smoking" symbol may be included on the placard.)

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, every lavatory in a commercial airplane is to be equipped with a smoke detector and every trash receptacle is to be equipped with a fire extinguisher. If a smoke alarm sounds, notifying the flight attendants, it is unlikely smokers will try to smoke in airplane lavatories.

The second argument frequently raised against the smoking ban is the need to protect the rights of smokers. Smokers do have rights, but as with every other right, there are limits. Smokers have the right to endanger their own health, no question about that. But that right ends when they start endangering the health and safety of others. We do that in countless ways across this country, through many enactments in the Congress and by State legislatures as well.

The evidence is clear that lighting up a cigarette on a public conveyance is just that, it endangers the health and safety of others. Our laws are replete, really replete, with examples of the regulation of individual conduct which poses health or safety risks to others. A ban on smoking in public conveyances would be consistent with previous actions we have taken to protect the health and safety of all Americans.

Today we have a chance to solve this problem. We have a chance to protect the Anna Carrolls of this country and give them a right to travel, the right that the rest of us enjoy. We have the chance to protect our children, our parents, and ourselves from the dangers of tobacco smoke.

Now, the public supports this move. A Gallup poll I cited before found 85 percent of nonsmokers, 75 percent of former smokers, and 63 percent of smokers felt that smokers should not smoke around nonsmokers.

The Society for Respiratory Care surveyed 2,306 travelers in the Salt Lake City Airport. Sixty-six percent of them said they wanted smoking banned, compared to only 26 percent who did not.

Today, Mr. President, we are considering legislation which will remove smoking from all airline flights. It is no secret that I would like to go further than that. I would like to protect the public while traveling on all interstate public conveyances and, of course, in the terminals that they use.

While the legislation before us is not everything I would like, it is an important step, and it has my full support. The scientists in this country have spoken; the American public has spoken; and the flight attendants and pilots have spoken. Now it is time for the Senate to support them; it is time for us to protect the health and safety of all passengers on public conveyances by eliminating tobacco smoke from those public conveyances.

The American Cancer Society, American Lung Association, American Heart Association, and a number of other health associations, and even some of our air carriers support these efforts. I hope my colleagues will join us in supporting this legislation so that we can, once and for all, give Anna Carroll and others like her the right they deserve, that is, the right to travel.

Mr. President, one last thing. As everyone knows, we have a direct flight from Dulles Airport to Salt Lake City. It takes between 4 and 4½ hours to take that flight, and 3½ to 4 hours to fly back.

I have hardly been on a flight recently where I have not had at least one flight attendant come up to me and at least one pilot or a member of the flight crew come up and say, "You have to do something. We are dying. Our lungs are filled with this smoke all the time. We have to put up with it 8 hours a day or longer on a daily, regular, repetitive basis. Something has to be done."

I have had flight attendants actually cry, because they do not know what to do. They feel this is such a terrible thing they have to go through, and they need their jobs. I really think something has to be done. I once sat by a smoker on one of the planes, and he turned to me, and I said, "What do you think about banning smoking on airlines?"

He said, "Well, it would affect me." He said, "I would feel badly about it because sometimes there is an overwhelming desire to smoke." I understand that.

But he said, "I really think it is a good idea. It is not fair for one or two people in the front of the plane or two, three, four, or five people in the back, to force everybody else to be subject to our smoking habit."

I said, "Well, would you be able to hold on for the 4 or 5 hours that it takes on this particular flight?"

He said, "Yes, we can do that. It would be difficult for some who are really addicted, but we can do it."

I said, "I agree; I really think it should be done."—as he lit up another cigarette, I might add. The fact of the matter is that it is time to do this.

Now, I fully understand how Senators who come from States that are heavy producers of tobacco feel about this issue and would like to not have this happen. I once went with the distinguished Senator from North Carolina out to one of these 40-acre farms. I have to acknowledge that those people are fiercely independent. They barely have eked out a living on that 40 acres.

They have a very, very difficult lifestyle. But they do not want to go on welfare. They want to earn their own living.

I have a lot of empathy and a lot of sympathy for the arguments that are made. We are not saying here today that we should ban all smoking, or that we should ban cigarettes or that we should make them a controlled substance.

Some argue that we should do that. It is so bad. The evidence is so strong.

We are not saying that. But what we are saying is why subject everybody else on the airplane to the cigarette smoking of one or two or four or five?

I think it is a reasonable approach here and frankly I think those from tobacco States in the end will be happy if it does pass because they will not have to come out and fight this issue all the time.

I have taken a stand, and everybody knows my position on smoking, but I have also taken a stand on some legislation where they wanted to ban advertising. My attitude is, unless we make it a controlled substance, they ought to be able to advertise smoking. I agree that there are some other items that should not be advertised.

As much as I feel that tobacco smoking is a very deleterious habit and it is a public health menace, as long as we do not make it a controlled substance, I feel people ought to have the right to choose whether they want to use tobacco or not.

I have empathy for those who come from tobacco-producing States and feel the way they do, and they should have the right to stand up and speak for their constituents. They have the right to sustain that right.

I think this is a reasonable amendment in this bill. I commend the distinguished Senator from New Jersey. He is not from Utah where in many ways we take a lot of offense to cigarette smoking, nor is he from any other State that takes a similar viewpoint. It has not been easy for him to be a champion against smoking on airlines, but he has done that.

I want you to know that I admire him for it. I have supported him in every way I possibly can, and I will continue to do so because he happens to be right here. It is time for us to acknowledge that.

It is time for us to acknowledge that there are millions of people out there being subjected to passive smoke who should not have to be.

So I commend the distinguished Senator from New Jersey, Senator LAUTENBERG, for the fight he has waged. If it had not been for him we would not have the 2-hour ban. Now let us ban it on domestic fights. We cannot do it on international flights, however we should do what we can do.

In the process I think everyone will be better off. In the process I also think those who produce the tobacco will be better of, if we can find an alternative for them so they wouldn't have to grow a crop that causes the death of so many Americans.

I thank the Senator and I appreciate the arguments on both sides.

As long as I am in the U.S. Senate I am going to fight as hard as I can to try to ban smoking on public conveyances for the benefit of all our citizens.

I thank the distinguished Senator from New Jersey for the fight he has waged, the efforts he has made, and the intelligence has has brought to this issue, and for the good nature, the humor, and all the other appropriate approaches he has taken with regard to this very important issue.

I yield the floor.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERRY). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I wish to join my distinguished colleague from Utah in commending the actions of the distinguished Senator from New Jersey in not only bringing this important issue before the Senate as a part of this appropriations bill, but for acting so decisively on a matter that is of great public importance and very much in the interests of the public health.

While I understand there is no formal attempt before the Senate at this point to strike the amendment which the Senator from New Jersey has sponsored before the committee, I wanted to be on record that if there is any such motion I will support the position of the Senator from New Jersey and that of the Senator from Utah who has been a crusader for a healthy environment and particularly for a healthy environment for nonsmokers against a closed environment in which an absence of smoking on the part of an individual, nontheless, is both a health measure because of the imposition which smokers can impose upon them.

Surgeon General Koop made it one of his final requests to this Congress and to the people of the United States that there be a total ban on smoking on commercial flights in the United States.

I can think of no better tribute to the encumbancy of perhaps the most outstanding person ever to hold the office of Surgeon General of the United States than for the Congress of the United States promptly and totally to follow that recommendation as a part of this appropriations bill.

Studies have found that nicotine levels can be as high in the nonsmoking sections of aircraft as in the smoking sections of aircraft. So passive smoking, the passive inhalation of smoke on the part of passengers, does create a very considerable health problem for them.

But the health problem created for other passengers on aircraft pales into insignificance when it is compared to the imposition on the health of the attendants on aircraft who work this as their professsion, day after day, week after week, and month after month. Some testimony at least has indicated that a nonsmoking flight attendant, nonetheless, after a period of 20 years or so, has the lungs of someone who smokes as much as two packs a day, simply a health hazard involuntarily imposed upon such people.

We have found in the experiments of the last months that the quality of air on aircraft which are flying less than 2 hours has been greatly improved and that the imposition on smokers who of course do have their rights is not great.

The experiment of Northwest Airlines in creating a smoke-free environment on all of its aircraft has been an entirely positive one. Northwest Airlines is to be commended for being willing to do something which other airlines have not. Many of them have privately informed us that while they take no formal position on this proposal they would be delighted to be subjected to such a requirement for their own employees, but they are afraid to impose such a policy themselves on the grounds that they would lose business to competing airlines which impose no such requirements.

The experience of Northwest Airlines does not seem to show that it is a competitive disadvantage. I think at this point it is appropriate to move beyond mere competition and to offer not only for passengers but for flight attendants a smoke-free environment under circumstances in which they simply cannot move away from what is a health threat to them at the present time.

Once again, I commend the Senator from New Jersey for his leadership in this respect and offer him my unqualified support should there be any attempt later on during the course of this debate to remove his most welcome and overdue amendment from this bill.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I have a few letters of support for this legislation for this transportation bill. I ask unanimous consent that letters from the Americal Lung Association, Flight Attendant Non-Smokers, Association of Professional Flight Attendants, the American Society of Internal Medicine, and numerous others, including the American Cancer Society, the Coalition on Smoking OR Health all be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN LUNG ASSOCIATION,
OFFICE OF GOVERNMENT RELATIONS,
Washington, DC, September 1, 1989.

DEAR SENATOR: Within the next few days, the Senate Appropriations Committee, of which you are a member, will consider the Fiscal Year 1990 Department of Transportation Appropriations bill. It is anticipated that the measure you consider will contain language with significant public health implications. Specifically, an amendment to mandate a total ban on smoking on all domestic airline flights will be contained in this bill, and the American Lung Association strongly urges your support for this language.

The matter of a total ban on smoking on all domestic flights is critical to the health and well-being of the traveling public and flight attendants as well. Some of your constituents cannot travel by air because they may suffer life-threatening reactions to secondhand smoke. Others must endure the acute, irritating effects of ambient tobacco smoke in the aircraft cabin. For flight attendants, such exposure is a regular occupational hazard and unhealthy fact of life as they suffer from nose and throat irritation, headaches, dizziness, and nausea caused by the heavy concentration of tobacco smoke in passenger smoking sections and the recirculation of smoke-polluted air throughout the cabin.

The current law which bans smoking on all domestic flights of two hours or less enjoys overwhelming support. On August 3, 1989, just prior to adjournment for the summer recess, the House of Representatives passed their version of the DOT Appropriations bill, which contained language making the current law permanent.

You now have the opportunity, through your committee, to preserve and expand the current law. Your leadership is urged in voting in favor of a total ban so that the full Senate may have a chance to debate this matter.

The American Lung Association asks you to keep in mind the critical need for passage of a total ban on smoking on all domestic flights. This initiative will impact the health of your constituents who fly and the flight attendants who serve them. Please let us know if you need further information.

Sincerely,

FRAN DU MELLE,
Director.

F.A.N.S.,
FLIGHT ATTENDANT NON-SMOKERS,
Sandy UT, September 8, 1989.

Hon. FRANK R. LAUTENBERG,
Chairman, Transportation Subcommittee, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LAUTENBERG: On behalf of thousands of Flight Attendant Non-Smokers (F.A.N.S.), I am writing this letter thanking you for your sponsorship of legislation, and relentless efforts, to ban smoking on all commercial airline flights.

Senator Lautenberg, unlike smokers who can choose when to smoke, when not to smoke, and if and when to quit smoking, flight attendants are not offered the choice. Flight attendants are forced to smoke every time they go to work. Flight attendants cannot choose when to have a cigarette, when not to have a cigarette, and we cannot quit smoking no matter how repulsed we are by this filthy habit being forced upon us.

Since the FAA and airlines are unwilling to protect us, since many smokers are not courteous enough to abstain and feel it their right to smoke when and wherever they choose, regardless of its effects on others, and because the tobacco industry spends millions of dollars putting up "smokescreens" to hide the facts, glamorize their deadly products, and influence legislators, you are the last hope for the preservation of our rights, our comfort, our health, and safety.

F.A.N.S. has collected signatures from several thousand flight attendants pleading for the right to a smokefree, carcinogen free, workplace. I have included this petition with my materials and hope that you will submit it to the appropriate Senate Committees in our behalf.

The enclosed materials contain facts and perspective from a flight attendant point of view. We hope that you will find them compelling and helpful.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

BRYAN D. MOSS,
Founder and President; F.A.N.S.

ASSOCIATION OF PROFESSIONAL FLIGHT ATTENDANTS,
Euless, TX, September 11, 1989.

HON. FRANK LAUTENBERG: As representatives of the Association of Professional Flight Attendants, consisting of 17,000 American Airlines crewmembers nationwide, we are here today to ask for your vote on the DOT appropriations bill which includes the total ban on smoking on all U.S. domestic flights. We understand this is an appropriations bill, but for us it is a measure to protect our health, our lives and the opportunity for us to continue in a chosen career we love. The eyes and ears of this nation's 100,000 plus flight attendants will be focused Tuesday on your vote. The FAA was charged with protecting flight attendant health upon the dismantling of the CAB and not one step has been taken by the FAA to demonstrate their responsibility. We cannot look to the airline industry for a total ban, for them it is an individual economic issue. Congressional rule must be enacted to protect the health of all crewmembers for all airlines.

The health of a generation of flight attendants has deteriorated due to the inhaling of concentrated levels of second hand tobacco smoke in the workplace. We cannot escape for a breath of fresh air. We are innocent victims of other peoples addiction. We are not against smokers, only what tobacco has done to our health. We are not taking away jobs, people will continue to smoke in other places than airplanes. We do not need to wait for the DOT air quality study, this nation's 100,000 plus flight attendants are living testimony to the ravages of passive smoke, not to mention the countless studies completed that have proven passive smoke causes various cancers and other respiratory diseases. We breathe the passive smoke of not one smoker, but 25 to 66 smokers, for 10 to 14 hours per day, 3.5 days per week. We have non-smoking flight attendants who have died from lung, throat and cervical cancers, and thousands of others with on going respiratory problems.

We have experienced some relief with the two hour ban, in the absence of the smoke we have fully realized the cause of our respiratory problems . . . the cause of our physical and mental exhaustion . . . the cause of our chest pain . . . the cause of our repeated headaches. We can't breathe! Our respiratory systems are like sores that are constantly rubbed and never allowed to heal. We are the only actual "workers in space," everyone else is at rest and we need oxygen to perform our inflight and safety duties. We hope that is not too much to ask. Our oxygen is being depleted by allowing people to smoke and light small fires in the enclosed aluminum tubes at 35,000 feet which we call our workplace. We are not a disposable work force. Your vote for a total ban will ensure us the opportunity to continue our careers in a healthier workplace.

Thank you,

SUZETTE R. AHRENDT.

AMERICAN SOCIETY OF INTERNAL MEDICINE,
Washington, DC, September 1, 1989.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: The American Society of Internal Medicine (ASIM) is an organization of physicians who are recognized as specialists in internal medicine. Our members, as the nation's major providers of continuing, comprehensive medical care to adults and adolescents, see every day the toll smoking takes on their patients.

Because of our members' concerns about the harmful effects of passive smoking on air flights, ASIM worked actively toward passage of the ban on smoking on flights of two hours or less, P.L. 100-202. At that time, ASIM advocated a total ban on smoking aboard domestic commercial aircraft. Congress now has the opportunity to revisit this issue, and we believe the evidence in support of a total ban is compelling. As you know, the adverse health consequences of involuntary smoking have been well documented by the Surgeon General and the National Academy of Sciences. Moreover, the experience gained during the period that the two-hour ban has been in effect has shown that public sentiment supports the ban.

From a public standpoint we believe that Congress should follow through to the next logical step which is needed to protect the flying public. ASIM urges you to support a total ban on smoking on domestic commercial aircraft. If additional information is needed, please contact Amanda L. Spitler, Government Affairs Representative at (202) 289-1700. In advance, we thank you for your attention to this matter.

Sincerely,

JOSEPH F. BOYLE, M.D.,
Executive Vice President.

COALITION ON SMOKING OR HEALTH,
Washington, DC, September 1, 1989.

Hon. DANIEL K. INOUYE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR INOUYE: Shortly after the Congress returns from its August recess, members of the Committee on Appropriations will be asked to consider legislation sponsored by the Transportation Subcommittee Chairman, Sen. Frank Lautenberg, to extend and expand the current law restricting smoking on commercial passenger airline flights.

On behalf of the Coalition on Smoking OR Health, comprised of the American Lung Association, the American Cancer Society and the American Heart Association, we urge you to vote in favor of a ban on smoking on all domestic passenger flights, and to support all of Senator Lautenberg's efforts in behalf of smoke-free skies.

The current smoking ban on all commercial airline flights of two hours or less in the United States has succeeded beyond all expectations. The vast majority of passengers and flight attendants, including smokers, continues to applaud the significant improvement in air quality found on smoke-free flights. National surveys show widespread public support for the current ban, as well as significant support for a total ban. A poll released in June of this year by the American Association for Respiratory Care reports that of nearly 30,000 flyers polled over 80% want, at the very least, to see the current ban made permanent.

Nearly two-thirds of all those who fly, including smokers and nonsmokers, want the ban to cover ALL domestic flights.

The law has proved to be effective and workable. As of May 1989, the Federal Aviation Administration reported only 113 incidents related to enforcement of the two-hour ban. In that time, there were 455 million flyers.

If you have any questions, please feel free to contact Arnita Hannon at the American Lung Association, (202) 785-3355, or the office of the Coalition on Smoking OR Health, (202) 234-9375.

Sincerely,

Scott D. Ballin, American Heart Association, Legislative Counsel and Vice President for Public Affairs; John H. Madigan, Jr., American Cancer Society, Assistant Vice President for Public Affairs; Fran Du Melle, American Lung Association, Director of Government Relations.

AMERICAN LUNG ASSOCIATION,
OFFICE OF GOVERNMENT RELATIONS,
Washington, DC, September 5, 1989.

DEAR SENATOR: Soon after the Senate reconvenes following the recess, you will consider amendments to the FY 1990 Department of Transportation appropriations bill that would further restrict and/or ban smoking on all domestic, commercial airline flights.

The American Lung Association strongly urges your support for these amendments. The House version of this bill, which was passed on August 3, 1989, contains language which would make permanent the current law which bans smoking on all domestic airline flights of two hours or less. This law will sunset in April 1990 if Congress fails to act.

The upcoming vote gives you an opportunity to exhibit a strong commitment to public health by continuing or expanding the current law, which has proven to be effective and workable. Since the two-hour ban became effective, the Federal Aviation Administration has logged less than 120 complaints (as of May 16) related to enforcement of the ban. The small number of complaints is significant since, during that same time period, 455 million passengers travelled via air.

The current law also enjoys overwhelming public support. A recent study by the American Association for Respiratory Care shows that more than 80 percent of the nearly 30,000 passengers surveyed support the current ban and want to see it extended permanently. Other surveys have had similar results.

Still, the health, well-being, and comfort of thousands of airline passengers are jeopardized by cigarette smoking. Some of your constituents cannot travel by air because they may suffer life-threatening reactions to secondhand smoke. Others must endure the acute, irritating effects of ambient tobacco smoke in the aircraft cabin. For flight attendants, such exposure is a regular occupational hazard and unhealthy fact of life as they suffer from nose and throat irritation, headaches, dizziness, and nausea caused by the heavy concentration of tobacco smoke in passenger smoking sections and the recirculation of smoke-polluted air throughout the cabin.

The 1986 Surgeon General's report concluded that such involuntary smoking can cause disease, including lung cancer, in otherwise healthy nonsmokers. Two reports from the National Academy of Sciences (NAS) recommend a ban on smoking on all domestic, commercial flights. The NAS reports found that simply separating smokers and nonsmokers in the same airspace does not protect nonsmokers from airborne tobacco smoke.

And, a recent study by the National Cancer Institute found that passengers seated, and flight attendants assigned to work, in a nonsmoking section inhale quantities of nicotine comparable to those inhaled by passengers seated in the smoking section. Cotinine, a byproduct of nicotine, was found in the urine of nonsmoking passengers a full 72 hours after their flights ended.

The American Lung Association asks you to keep these facts in mind when you vote on legislation that will impact the health of your constituents who fly and the flight attendants who serve them. We urge your leadership on this issue. Please let us know if you need further information.

Sincerely,

FRAN DU MELLE,
Director.

COALITION ON SMOKING
OR HEALTH,
Washington, DC, September 5, 1989.

Hon. BROCK ADAMS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR ADAMS: Shortly, the full Senate will be asked to consider legislation sponsored by Sen. Frank Lautenberg, Chairman of the Transportation Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, to extend and expand the current law restricting smoking on commercial passenger airline flights.

On behalf of the Coalition on Smoking OR Health, comprised of the American Lung Association, the American Cancer Society and the American Heart Association, we strongly encourage you to support Sen. Lautenberg's effort to enact the strongest airline smoking restrictions possible when such legislation is brought before you.

The current smoking ban on all commercial airline flights of two hours or less in the United States has been a resounding success. Passengers and flight attendants across the United States—including smokers—continue to applaud the significant improvement in air quality found on smoke-free flights. National surveys show widespread public support for the current ban, as well as significant support for a total ban. A poll released in June 1989 by the American Association for Respiratory Care reports that of nearly 30,000 fliers polled, more than 80 percent want, at the very least, to see the current ban made permanent.

Nearly two-thirds of all those who fly, including smokers and nonsmokers, want the ban to cover ALL domestic flights.

The law has proven to be effective and workable. In the year following enactment of the current law, the Federal Aviation Administration reported only 113 incidents related to enforcement of the two-hour ban. In that time, there were 455 million fliers.

On behalf of our 5,000,000 citizen volunteers, we urge you to vote in favor of smoke-free skies.

If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact Arnita Hannon at the American Lung Association, (202) 785-3355, or Cliff Douglas at the Coalition on Smoking OR Health, (202) 234-9375.

Sincerely,

Scott D. Ballin, American Heart Association, Legislative Counsel and Vice President for Public Affairs; John H. Madigan, Jr., American Cancer Society, Assistant Vice President for Public Affairs; Fran Du Melle, American Lung Association, Director of Government Relations.

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY,
Washington, DC, September 5, 1989.

Hon. WILLIAM L. ARMSTRONG,
Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR ARMSTRONG: When Congress returns from the Labor Day recess, you will have the opportunity to cast an important vote on the Senate Floor in favor of public health. The expansion and extension of the airline smoking ban will come before the Senate as part of the FY 1990 Department of Transportation Appropriations bill. On behalf of the 2.5 million national volunteers of the American Cancer Society, I urge you to support the strongest possible expansion of the ban on smoking on airline flights.

Since its enactment in April 1988, the airline smoking ban has gained overwhelming public support, both from nonsmoking and smoking airline passengers. The smoking ban has greatly added to the health, comfort and safety of the flying public and flight crews. The ban has been both popular and effective, and the majority of flyers supports its expansion.

Unless the airline smoking ban is extended, it will automatically expire in April 1990. Studies have shown that the simple separation of smokers and nonsmokers in the same airspace does not protect nonsmokers from the toxic and cancer-causing substances in tobacco smoke. Nonsmokers should not have to be subjected to health hazards on airplanes because of the demands of the small minority of flyers who wish to smoke.

Your vote to expand the airplane smoking ban would be a significant step toward better public health and safety. I urge your support for the strongest possible legislation.

Sincerely,

HAROLD P. FREEMAN, M.D.,
President.

ASSOCIATION OF FLIGHT
ATTENDANTS AFL-CIO,
Washington, DC, September 6, 1989.

Hon. FRANK LAUTENBERG,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LAUTENBERG: As a flight attendant and National President of the Association of Flight Attendants, which represents 26,000 of my colleagues across this Nation, I am writing to seek your support for pending legislation which will ban smoking on all domestic flights.

Congress took an important step when it passed the two hour smoking ban on domestic commercial flights. The law is working and has been so successful that only slightly over 100 minor incidents have been reported to the Federal Aviation Administration since its passage. That fact becomes more impressive when one considers that over 455 million passengers traveled by air over the same time period. Indeed, airline passengers are breathing much easier now. However, the law does not cover all domestic flights and it expires in April.

As flight attendants, my colleagues and I are willing to risk our lives to save others in the event of an airline accident or incident but we are not willing to risk our lives so that people can smoke on board aircraft.

Extending the present ban and making it permanent will help my colleagues, your constituents, and all frequent fliers. I encourage you to take Senator Lautenberg's lead and support this important legislation.

Sincerely,

SUSAN BIANCHI-SAND,
National President.

INDEPENDENT UNION OF FLIGHT ATTENDANTS,
Herndon, VA, September 6, 1989.

Hon. FRANK R. LAUTENBERG,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LAUTENBERG: On behalf of the over 5,000 flight attendants at Pan American World Airways, I am writing to thank you for your considerable and continuing efforts to ban smoking from all domestic commercial flights.

As you know, research to date has sufficiently proven that sidestream smoke can cause heart disease, allergies, respiratory illnesses and can double the overall cancer risk of non-smokers. Women exposed to passive smoke have a three-fold increased risk for cervical cancer. According to a study sponsored by the National Cancer Institute and published in the Journal of the American Medical Association last March, cancer risk was similar for both smokers and those exposed to passive smoke for three hours a day.

As flight attendants, we are absorbing the constituents of tobacco smoke into our bodies in levels that exceed occupational health regulations. As long as smoking is permitted on board, our right to choose health over smoking has been abrogated. Non-smoking flight attendants are now suffering from serious illnesses caused by chronic exposure to second-hand smoke in the airplane cabin. Many have been advised by their physicians to "quit smoking" which for them, sadly, translates into "quit flying".

Although pleased that the House has recently passed a measure which would make the present two hour ban permanent, we agree with you that it is not enough. We understand that you intend to lead the fight for a total ban via the Department of Transportation Appropriations Bill this month and wholeheartedly pledge our support.

We sincerely thank you for your efforts to protect the health and safety of flight attendants and their passengers and are available to assist in any way that we can.

Sincerely,

KATHRYN RENZ,
Government Affairs Committee.

AMERICAN CHIROPRACTIC ASSOCIATION,
Arlington, VA, August 15, 1989.

Hon. FRANK R. LAUTENBERG,
Hart Senate Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LAUTENBERG: On behalf of the 19,000 members of the American Chiropractic Association and the millions of patients they serve, I would like to commend and thank you for your courageous leadership role in supporting the permanent smoking ban on domestic commercial flights of two hours or less included in the Department of Transportation authorization passed by the House earlier this month.

The ACA's House of Delegates passed a resolution denouncing "cigarette smoking as a serious, multiple hazard to health and dedicating itself to combating the dangers of, and working toward the elimination of said hazard" over twenty years ago.

We are grateful to have a leader in this fight who recognizes that the health of the individual is paramount to any other concerns on this issue. We have written to your Subcommittee colleagues urging their support for a total ban provision and would like to offer our services and support in helping it pass through the full committee and Senate.

Please let us know if we can be of further assistance.

Respectfully yours,

RONALD L. HARRIS, D.C.,
Executive Vice President.

AMERICAN HEART ASSOCIATION,
OFFICE OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, September 1, 1989.

Hon. FRANK R. LAUTENBERG,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LAUTENBERG: In the very near future, you will have the opportunity to vote on a legislative proposal that would permanently ban smoking on all domestic airline flights. On behalf of the American Heart Association and its more than two million volunteers, I strongly urge you to support this initiative.

As you are aware, two years ago Congress banned smoking on airline flights of two hours or less. Based on a growing body of evidence that clearly established a relationship between the presence of cigarette smoke and adverse health impacts among nonsmokers, the American Heart Association strongly supported that initiative.

You are undoubtedly aware of some of the problems associated with cigarette smoking aboard airlines. Passengers without specific health conditions, regularly complain of eye, nose and throat irritation. Others who do have more specific health concerns, including those who suffer from cardiovascular diseases, have found that the presence of cigarette smoke on an airplane may actually make flying dangerous to their health.

Beyond banning smoking on airlines, there is no other means of alleviating the serious health concerns associated with smoking on airlines. The separation of smokers and nonsmokers in different sections aboard airplanes does not prevent exposure of all passengers and flight attendants to cigarette smoke. In fact, studies indicate that passengers seated in nonsmoking sections of airplanes are exposed to levels of nicotine comparable to those experienced by passengers seated in the smoking sections. Evidence like this convinced the National Academy of Sciences to recommend that smoking be banned on all domestic airline flights.

The American public clearly supports a smoking ban on airlines. A June 1989 survey conducted by the American Association for Respiratory Care found that 81% of respondents would support making the current two hour ban permanent and 62% of respondents supported extending the smoking ban to all flights.

The current smoking ban on airline flights of two hours or less will expire in April 1990 unless Congress acts. I strongly urge you to support a smoking ban on all domestic airline flights.

Sincerely,

SCOTT D. BALLIN,
Vice President and Legislative Counsel.

AMERICAN LUNG ASSOCIATION,
OFFICE OF GOVERNMENT RELATIONS,
Washington, DC, September 1, 1989.

DEAR SENATOR: Within the next few days, the Senate Appropriations Committee, of which you are a member, will consider the Fiscal Year 1990 Department of Transportation Appropriations bill. It is anticipated that the measure you consider will contain language with significant public health implications. Specifically, an amendment to mandate a total ban on smoking on all domestic airline flights will be contained in this bill, and the American Lung Association strongly urges your support for this language.

The matter of a total ban on smoking on all domestic flights is critical to the health and well-being of the traveling public and flight attendants as well. Some of your constituents cannot travel by air because they may suffer life-threatening reactions to secondhand smoke. Others must endure the acute, irritating effects of ambient tobacco smoke in the aircraft cabin. For flight attendants, such exposure is a regular occupational hazard and unhealthy fact of life as they suffer from nose and throat irritation, headaches, dizziness, and nausea caused by the heavy concentration of tobacco smoke in passenger smoking sections and the recirculation of smoke-polluted air throughout the cabin.

The current law which bans smoking on all domestic flights of two hours or less enjoys overwhelming support. On August 3, 1989, just prior to adjournment for the summer recess, the House of Representatives passed their version of the DOT Appropriations bill, which contained language making the current law permanent.

You now have the opportunity, through your committee, to preserve and expand the current law. Your leadership is urged in voting in favor of a total ban so that the full Senate may have a chance to debate this matter.

The American Lung Association asks you to keep in mind the critical need for passage of a total ban on smoking on all domestic flights. This initiative will impact the health of your constituents who fly and the flight attendants who serve them. Please let us know if you need further information.

Sincerely,

FRAN DU MELLE,
Director.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, while we are waiting, since we will be going to our conferences at 12:30 and will not be able to return to this bill until after the pending business on a nomination is taken care of, I would just like to make a couple of comments. Since I see my colleague from Montana on the floor, I would defer to him any time he seeks recognition.

But for the moment, I do want to thank the distinguished Senators from Washington and from Utah, Senator SLADE GORTON and Senator ORRIN HATCH, for their support of this amendment. They, like I, agree that it is time to stop impairing the health of nonsmokers by the indiscriminate action of smokers in airplane cabins. There is just not enough fresh air circulated through these cabins. It imposes a severe hardship on those who are innocent passengers in this case.

So I thank them for their support and in particular want to make mention of the fact that Senator HATCH, from Utah, has been a long-time proponent of a ban on not only smoking in airplanes but on all forms of transportation assisted by the Federal Government. I share his point of view.

But that is not the business at hand. The business at hand now is the transportation appropriation bill and the amendment that is creating the controversy, and that is whether or not we can once and for all dispense with smoking in airplanes and relieve the anxiety, concerns, and health risks of those who choose not to smoke but are imposed upon by the smokers in these situations.

The distinguished Senator from North Carolina makes his arguments based on the needs of the farmers in his State. I respect his making that point, but we will debate that later on.

For the moment, I would like it to be made clear that if the Senator from North Carolina makes a point of order against this amendment as he suggested, under rule XVI, that at the appropriate time, if such a point of order is raised, I will raise the defense of germaneness.

The Senate's precedents here are quite clear. The Senate can allow legislation where it is germane to legislation already included by House of Representatives. That is already in this bill.

The House included a provision on smoking.

I am very cognizant and very respectful of the jurisdiction of the legislative committees on matters that affect their portfolios. But in this case, Mr. President, it is very clear. The House has taken an action, we are acting on their appropriations bill, and so we are perfectly within our rights to do so and will defend any challenge to that on the basis of germaneness.

Now, I yield the floor.

ESSENTIAL AIR SERVICE APPROPRIATION

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I am pleased to have this opportunity to voice my support for the Essential Air Service [EAS] appropriation contained in the Department of Transportation's and related agencies fiscal year 1990 appropriation that the Senate is considering today. This $35.5 million appropriation is crucial to the transportation needs of the State of South Dakota, as well as small communities all across this Nation.

I am grateful for Chairman LAUTENBERG's support of this particular appropriation. It's inclusion in the fiscal year 1990 Department of Transportation funding bill is a continuation of the pledge that small communities throughout rural America received on the eve of the 1978 Airline Deregulation Act—that they would not be left out of the National Air Transportation System.

Just before the August recess, this body approved a major piece of legislation in an effort to address the devastating social and economic impacts rural America has faced over the past decade. This legislation, which is known as the Rural Partnership Act, signified a belief that by making available financial and technical assistance to rural America, we would give rural communities the tools to help rebuild and revitalize themselves.

I was proud to cosponsor the Rural Partnership Act, because I do believe that rural American can rebuild and prosper if given the tools to do so. However, in order for this act to be successful, in order for those tools to be given the opportunity to work, it is vital rural America's infrastructure remain strong. Pivotal to that strength is access to quality transportation services, of which commercial air service is a key element.

In South Dakota, five communities depend upon the Essential Air Service Program for commercial air service. Economic development officials from these communities tell me time and time again that one of the first questions a prospective industry asks is, "Do you have commercial air service?" Today, in the highly competitive environment of business site selection, commercial air service has become a standard by which a community's ability to attract and retain businesses is measured. For these communities, economic development is linked directly to commercial air service, and without it, their development will stop dead in its tracks.

This situation is not unique to South Dakota or to just the Midwest. When hearings were held on reauthorizing EAS during the 100th Congress, a recurrent theme in the expert testimony from all across America was that without commercial air service the economic stability of small communities would be in jeopardy, and without the Essential Air Service Act, there would likely be no commercial air service to these areas. For these 114 communities, the lack of commercial air service is not simply an inconvenience—it is a lifeline to their future.

The importance of this issue to rural states like South Dakota was highlighted yesterday with the announcement that my State's Essential Air Service carrier would be discontinuing service to the cities of Brookings, Mitchell, and Huron: In making its announcement, Mesaba Airlines stated that:

> The primary reasons for our termination of service * * * is the lack of a long-term commitment of funding for the program. Mesaba can no longer profitably commit assets in excess of $6 million for a program that lacks adequate funding and now appears to be funded on a month-to-month basis. * * *

Today, air service to South Dakota's fifth, sixth, and eighth largest communities, respectively, hinges on the continuation of the Essential Air Service Act at full funding, as does air service to many other small communities all across America. I urge my colleagues to continue the commitment to help small communities participate in the National Air Transportation System by supporting the $35.5 million Essential Air Service appropriation contained within the Department of Transportation's fiscal year 1990 appropriation.

URBAN MASS TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1964

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, this summer marks the 25th anniversary of the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964 and the Federal commitment to transportation that it represents. I would like to take this occasion to commend the transit industry on the progress that's been made toward achieving the objectives of that important legislation.

At the time of enactment, transit was a failing industry, facing declining ridership, unsustainable labor costs, and skyrocketing fares. Today, mass transit is a vital and mature industry reflecting the success of a committed public-private partnership.

Federal, State, and local governments along with private interests have provided financial support to revitalize mass transit systems across the country. Today, ridership in most urban areas is on the rise, fares have stabilized and services have been expanded. The transit industry represents a $15 billion per year business offering 9 billion passenger trips in 1988.

While great strides have been made in recent years, our country faces new and even more difficult transit problems than in the past. Air quality, energy efficiency, and mobility remain central concerns, but these issues have been complicated by current trends.

As population continues to grow, along with the number and use of automobiles, traffic congestion is becoming an increasing threat to mobility. In my home State of California, 300,000 work hours are lost each day due to traffic gridlock.

Emissions from these automobiles constitute one of the primary sources of atmospheric pollutants such as carbon dioxide—a greenhouse gas contributing to global warming. Auto emissions are a chief culprit in the failure of 96 cities to meet Federal clean air standards for ozone last year.

Years of neglect and underinvestment have left our roads and bridges in desperate need of repair and, in some cases, ill equipped to handle the current volume of traffic.

The aging of our population creates additional challenges for mass transit, including the need for new services to accommodate potentially isolated elderly and disabled persons.

The causes of these problems also create opportunities for mass transit to become a more widely used mode of transportation. The health of our environment and the economic soundness of our urban and suburban centers depend on the further development of mass transit.

It is time to reaffirm our Federal commitment to transportation and build on the substantial progress that has been made in these first 25 years.

MICHIGAN TRANSPORTATION PROJECTS

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank you and members of the Subcommittee on Transportation and Related Agencies for the provisions in the appropriations bill which recognize important transportation needs in the State of Michigan.

There are a number of important projects in the House appropriations bill which are not included in the appropriations bill before the Senate.

The House-passed bill includes $5 million for the urban airport access safety demonstration project, which would support construction of an additional access road at Detroit Metropolitan Airport. In addition, the House bill includes $1.5 million for the urban highway corridor demonstration project which would make improvements along a 60-mile stretch of M59.

Will the Chairman be receptive to inclusion of these projects in conference?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I understand the importance of these projects to my colleague from Michigan. I will give these projects serious consideration during conference.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Chairman, I thank you for your consideration on these matters.

INTERSTATE 15/STATE STREET CORRIDOR PROJECT

Mr. GARN. It has come to my attention that there is need to make clarification in the report language regarding the Interstate 15/State Street corridor project in Salt Lake City. Inadvertently, the purpose for which the money is being provided is inaccurately stated. The money would best be used for acquiring right-of-way, instead of further engineering and design work.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Do I understand correctly that the purpose for the additional $2,000,000 provided for the Interstate 15/State Street corridor should be for right-of-way acquisition and not for further engineering and design.

Mr. GARN. Yes, Senator, that is correct. The language also details the committee's expectation that UMTA will expeditiously release previously appropriated preliminary engineering funds to facilitate project definition, design, and cost refinement upon selection of a preferred alternative.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. So the language should indicate that the additional $2,000,000 is provided for right-of-way acquisition on the Interstate 15/State Street corridor in Salt Lake City. The language also indicates the committee's expectations that previously appropriated preliminary engineering funds will be expeditiously released upon selection of the preferred alternative in this project.

Mr. GARN. I thank the Senator from New Jersey for that clarification and change.

AMTRAK STATION, KINGSTON, RI

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I want to express my thanks to the committee and to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee for agreeing to provide in this bill funds for the repair of the historic Amtrak train station in Kingston, RI. To make certain that the intended effect of the bill and the intention of the committee are clearly understood, I would appreciate it if the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee would agree to a colloquy on this subject.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I would be happy to do so.

Mr. PELL. It is my understanding that the committee in this legislation directs Amtrak to spend from funds provided in this bill $175,000 for the repair of the train station at Kingston, RI, which was damaged by fire.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. The understanding of the Senator from Rhode Island is correct.

Mr. PELL. It is my further understanding, as stated on page 98 of the committee report, that the expenditure of the $175,000 is to be in addition to commitments already made by Amtrak to pay for the costs of the repairs; so that since Amtrak has made a previous commitment to provide $125,000 for repair of the station, it is the intention of the committee that Amtrak will spend a total of $300,000 for the repair of the rail station at Kingston, RI. Is this a correct understanding of the intention of the committee?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Yes, to the degree that Amtrak has previously agreed to pay $125,000, it is the clear intention of the committee as stated in the legislation and the committee report that the $175,000 would be in addition to that.

Mr. PELL. I thank the distinguished chairman for his responses to my inquiry.

CHICAGO-ST. LOUIS RAIL CORRIDOR IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM AND THE SPRINGFIELD RAIL RELOCATION PROJECT

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, my friend and colleague from Illinois, Senator DIXON, and I would like to engage in a colloquy with our friend, the distinguished Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I will be happy to yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. First, let me say, we are extremely grateful to the chairman and the members of the Subcommittee on Transportation for the attention they have given to the merits of our requests for Illinois. We realize that their job is more difficult each year as funds for key transportation programs, particularly in the rail sector, are falling so far behind national needs.

It is our understanding that the 3-year loan program for trackwork on the Amtrak route between Chicago and St. Louis and funds for the Springfield rail location project are not included in the Senate appropriations bill at this time.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. That is correct. As the Senator knows, we have had a longstanding subcommittee policy that projects funded in the House are automatically to be considered in conference so we do not typically include those House-funded projects in the Senate bill. Furthermore, as long as there is no clear consensus between Congress and the administration on a national rail program our options are severely limited.

Mr. SIMON. I understand the committee's policy. As the Chairman knows, our concern is brought on by the possible loss of Amtrak service on the bankrupt Chicago, Missouri, and Western [CMW] railroad in the busiest travel corridor in Illinois. This is the only Amtrak route in Illinois without continuous welded rail. The two State-supported trains between Chicago and Springfield and two other Amtrak long-distance trains traveling between Chicago and St. Louis now must slow their speed over old deteriorating jointed track.

The State of Illinois already has provided $14 million in loans and grants to keep up with repairs and to allow the CMW trustee to find a suitable buyer. Illinois is committed to a $5 million annual loan for 3 years for the purchaser of the railroad for a total of $15 million, but we badly need a similar commitment on the part of the Federal Government. This will not affect the deficit, and it will be matched by private-sector funding as well.

I again emphasize to the Senator from New Jersey the urgency of this step in restoring the most promising Amtrak service in Illinois on a sound footing.

Mr. DIXON. My colleague, Senator SIMON, and I have placed the preservation and improvement of the Chicago, Missouri, and Western, at the top of our Illinois priorities for some time.

Another high priority is the Springfield rail relocation project which has received $13.8 million from the appropriations committee in the past and $5.5 million for fiscal year 1990 in the House bill.

This project not only is authorized and has received favorable review from the Appropriations Committee in the past, but it is entering the construction phase where the funding is critical to complete the first two phases of the project. The utility of this rail segment to the rail freight service and the safety of citizens at four busy and dangerous grade crossings in southwest. Springfield more than compensates for the cost of the project.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I understand the Senator's concerns and will pledge to you that I will give this every consideration when we get to conference with the House.

Mr. SIMON. We appreciate the support the Senator from New Jersey will offer to the important matters of concern to Illinois.

OREGON GRADUATE CENTER'S RAIL METALLURGICAL STUDIES

Mr. HATFIELD. I would like to take a few moments of the Senate's time to engage the chairman of the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee, Senator LAUTENBERG, in a short colloquy regarding section 319 of H.R. 3015.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I would be pleased to enter into such a colloquy with the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Is it the Senator from New Jersey's understanding that section 319 of the bill allows the Department of Transportation to provide sole source funding for studies, reports, or research to be conducted through educational institutes that are specified in the act or report accompanying such acts?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Yes, that is correct.

Mr. HATFIELD. In that case, I would like to bring to the Senator's attention a small provision that was inadvertently omitted from the Senate report, and request that it be included in the conference report. Although funding is included in the bill for a $170,000 grant to continue the Oregon Graduate Center's rail metallurgical studies, the absence of an earmark in the report makes it impossible for the Department of Transportation to award the grant. Considering that this same grant to the Oregon Graduate Center has been awarded in prior years, and that this is a continuation of the same research program, I request the Senator's assistance in securing an earmark for the grant in the conference report.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I do not believe that this is an unreasonable request from the Senator from Oregon, and will work in conference to provide an earmark for the grant in the conference report.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the Senator from New Jersey.

PROPOSED SMOKING BAN ON DOMESTIC FLIGHTS

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I strongly support the amendment offered by my friend, Senator LAUTENBERG, to ban smoking on all domestic airline flights.

Mr. President, I believe Congress took a significant step in 1987 when it banned smoking on all domestic flights lasting 2 hours or less. As a supporter of that measure and cosponsor of legislation to ban smoking on all domestic airline flights, I believe this amendment is the next logical step.

Nonsmokers who use our Nation's airlines should not be forcibly subjected to indiscriminate cigarette smoke that threatens their health and well-being. There is scientific evidence that shows people can get sick from sitting beside someone who is smoking.

In fact, the National Academy of Sciences has estimated that 5,000 nonsmokers die each year from exposure to the cigarette smoke of others. Twice as many nonsmokers die from second-hand smoke as from any other carcinogen currently regulated as a hazardous air pollutant under the Federal Clean Air Act.

Mr. President, since the time I was Secretary of Transportation, I have also believed that a smoking ban would be an important safety step for the airline industry. Fatal aircraft fires have been linked to careless cigarette smoking. A Federal Aviation Administration study showed 6 percent of all in-flight fires are caused by smoking.

In closing, Mr. President, what Senator LAUTENBERG is proposing will save lives, and it is an idea whose time has come.

Thank you, Mr. President.

PERMANENT SMOKING BAN ON DOMESTIC AIR TRAVEL

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of the provision within the Department of Transportation's fiscal year 1990 appropriations bill that would permanently ban smoking on all domestic air travel, and I commend my distinguished colleague, Senator LAUTENBERG, for his leadership in bringing this important public health issue before the Senate.

I believe it is time that we take the excellent advice of the former Surgeon General of the United States, Dr. C. Everett Koop, and expand the current smoking ban on flights of 2 hours or less to all domestic flights, regardless of length.

That passive smoke endangers the lives of nonsmokers has been clearly demonstrated. Last year alone, former Surgeon General Koop estimated that 5,000 Americans died from the effects of passively breathing cigarette smoke. And a landmark study published earlier this year in the Journal of the American Medical Association found that flight attendants and passengers seated in the nonsmoking sections of aircrafts are exposed to nicotine and other smoke products at levels comparable to those found in the smoking sections of airplanes. The study, conducted by researchers at the National Cancer Institute and the Environmental Protection Agency, makes clear that separating the seating does not separate the air that passengers breathe.

The simple truth is that airline cabins are particularly confining. Their nature subjects all passengers to the dangerous byproducts of smokers. Yet we know that the existing temporary ban is effective and widely supported among smokers and nonsmokers alike.

Since the ban's implementation 2 years ago, only slightly more than 100 minor incidents have been reported to the Federal Aviation Administration. That statistic becomes even more impressive when one considers that more than 455 million passengers traveled by air during the same period of time. Equally difficult to ignore are polls showing that two-thirds of the public support a more extensive ban to cover all domestic flights.

As a Senator committed to working to improve the health and well-being of all Americans, I am encouraged by the progress we as a nation have made toward creating healthier living and working environments. Measures now are in place in many communities giving more nonsmokers the opportunity to breathe smoke-free air in public places and workplaces. Increasingly, we are beginning to realize that "healthy living" does not just mean eating right and exercising regularly. It also means avoiding tobacco. At least on the ground we are beginning to minimize our exposure. But in the air, we often have no choice.

By making permanent a smoking ban on all domestic airline flights, we have the opportunity to protect and improve the health of all air travelers and flight attendants. I urge my colleagues to support the efforts of Senator LAUTENBERG and the members of the Appropriations Committee and vote to protect the antismoking provisions of the Department of Transportation appropriations bill.

But we must not stop there. As many of my distinguished colleagues recognize, the health and safety dangers of smoking extend well beyond airline cabins. They permeate throughout our society and tragically touch the lives of individuals and families across the country. It is time, I believe, to seriously address the issue of tobacco use from broad-based health, safety, and economic perspectives.

It is time, I believe for the Federal Government to take an active role in regulating the manufacture and sale of tobacco products. And it is time for the Federal Government to provide the American public with the facts they need to make informed decisions about the use of tobacco products.

Based on these convictions, earlier this year I introduced S. 769, the Tobacco and Nicotine Health and Safety Act of 1989. This legislation will lay the foundation for a strong, constructive Federal role in tobacco regulation, and it will lead to a safer, healthier America.

The act will:

Provide the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services with the authority to reduce the levels of harmful additives in tobacco products or prohibit the use of those additives entirely;

Provide the Food and Drug Administration with the authority to regulate nontobacco products that contain nicotine, which shall be categorized as drugs;

Require that tobacco manufacturers fully disclose all chemical additives in tobacco products; and Prohibit the distribution of free samples and coupons for cigarettes.

This legislation represents an important step toward accepting our responsibility to protect consumers from unsafe products, ones that not only pose significant health risks, but contribute to considerable economic and social loss as well. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Without question, the Federal Government should speak with one voice about smoking. We cannot, for example, afford to spend millions of dollars in health campaigns that highlight smoking dangers while also allowing the tobacco industry pricing and tax advantages. The cost to individuals and to our society from smoking—in the tens of billions of dollars annually—simply is too high. I am convinced that FDA regulation of tobacco products and a total smoking ban on air travel are not unreasonable intrusions on the rights of smokers when weighed against the health and safety considerations of smokers and nonsmokers alike.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, this morning I rise in support of the DOT appropriations bill. The bill appropriates funding for many programs critical to maintaining a comprehensive and integrated transportation network.

One of the most important programs is the Essential Air Service Program.

EAS ensures that minimum air service is made available to 155 of the most rural communities in the country. It is an economic lifeline for the communities it serves.

I commend Senators BYRD and LAUTENBERG for fully funding EAS at $35.5 million.

But, they are going to have a tough fight when they go to conference with the House.

The House, with all its urban narrowmindedness, voted to gut the program. The House appropriated only $12.4 million for a program that costs three times that much.

I want to put the House on notice as of this moment that if the conference report comes back to the Senate and does not fund the full EAS Program, I will personally wage an all out war to defeat the conference report.

No Essential Air Service, no conference report. It's that simple.

Some urban Congressmen joke about EAS. They say its a boondoggle for a few hayseeds in the sticks.

I challenge them to come down from their ivory towers—or up from their subsidized, high tech subway systems—and come out to Wolf Point, MT.

Spend some time with rural families who are struggling to make ends meet. These families are trying to rebuild businesses that have been devastated by economic downturns in the agriculture, timber, energy and mining industries over the past decade.

Spend some time at Wolf Point's Woods' Power Grip, a business which manufactures suction cup devices and employs 50 of the most well-educated people in the community. See how hard they are working to make a go of it and see how critical air service is to their survival.

Woods' Power Grip depends on EAS to send emergency spare parts to its customers and to ship its products throughout the world. Without air service, the company would be forced to relocate and the community's economy would be devastated.

And then, after the Congressmen have spent some time at Woods', I would like them to drive down the road to Poplar and spend some time at A&S Industries.

A&S is the largest manufacturer in the State and is almost 300 miles away from alternative air service. Driving a round trip takes 2 days.

I think these Congressmen should stay in Poplar for 1 month and drive that round trip 17 times which is how often per month A&S depends on EAS flights to transport potential suppliers and customers.

Then, I think these Congressmen should work for a while in a rural hospital and drive the elderly and the sick who need special treatment 300 miles to get the necessary care. If they are lucky, the patients will make it alive.

Then, after they have transported equipment, suppliers and customers, and the sick, I think they should spend time at a farm during the harvest season.

This is a time when machinery often breaks down and timing of putting up the crops is critical.

They should drive the 300 mile round trip to get a part, fix the tractor, continue to harvest, and have the tractor break down again. Then they should drive the 300 miles to get the other necessary part.

I will bet after this experience, I would never have to fight another urban Congressman for EAS again.

I just wish these Congressmen could think beyond their own districts and recognize that rural areas are important to the economy of their state and the Nation.

The businesses I described above are vital to the well-being of Wolf Point and Poplar, the State of Montana, and the rest of the Nation. Without these businesses, these communities' very survival is threatened; the State will lose well-educated taxpayers; and the Nation will eventually lose its rural areas.

Preserving EAS should not be a yearly battle. EAS should be a given; it should be locked in.

Just as urban areas are able to depend on continued air service, so should rural areas be able to depend on it.

Air service should not be a privilege. It should be an entitlement.

Therefore, in an effort to preserve air service to rural communities and put an end to the yearly funding battle with the House, I recently introduced S. 1412, the Essential Air Service Preservation Act of 1989. My bill makes the EAS Program an entitlement to be funded out of the airport and airway trust fund.

Under my bill, rural businesses and communities throughout the country will be able to plan for the future without having the constant threat of loss of air service looming over their heads.

I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the DOT appropriations bill now before the Senate so that EAS will be secure for 1990.

I also urge my colleagues to vote against the conference report if the House does not agree to fund the full EAS Program.

Finally, I urge my colleagues to support my bill when it comes to the floor, possibly as part of reconciliation, so that EAS will be designated an entitlement and not be subject to the yearly budget ax.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, in keeping with the order of the Senate, the Senate be recessed now until the hour of 2:15.

There being no objection, at 12:29 p.m., the Senate recessed until 2:15 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. SANFORD].

EXECUTIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the hour of 2:15 having arrived, the Senate will now go into executive session and proceed to consider the nomination of Donald Phinney Gregg, of Maryland, to be Ambassador to the Republic of Korea.

The clerk will state the nomination.

NOMINATION OF DONALD PHINNEY GREGG OF MARYLAND TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF KOREA

The assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of Donald Phinney Gregg of Maryland to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States to the Republic of Korea.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time for debate on this nomination is limited to 4 hours to be equally divided and controlled by the Senator from California, Mr. CRANSTON, and the ranking minority member of the Foreign Relations Committee, Mr. HELMS, or their designees and a vote to occur thereon at 6:15 p.m. without any intervening action.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from North Carolina if he will yield me 3 minutes just to make a statement on another matter, as in legislative session.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished minority leader all the time he desires.

BYRD AMENDMENT TO THE TRANSPORTATION APPROPRIATIONS BILL

Mr. DOLE. I thank my colleague and I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I just wanted to indicate that we have had a policy luncheon meeting of Republicans. It is our hope that we can take a look at the so-called Byrd amendment to the Transportation appropriations bill.

It is the first idea we had that some on the other side want to raise taxes to pay for drugs. We cannot support the Byrd proposal in its present form, but we do believe we will have an opportunity throughout the day and maybe tomorrow to talk about, negotiate, find out more details about the Byrd plan.

First of all, in addition to being more money than the President requested by $2 billion, it also changes the mix from a 70-to-30 mix to a 53-to-47 mix, as far as where the moneys should go. That, of course, changes the President's entire drug program.

So we will be having a 3 o'clock meeting, if we can arrange the meeting, with members of the White House—Mr. Bennett, Mr. Sununu—and key Republican Members, and then if we can get some indication from the Secretary of Defense and others, we will hopefully meet with our Democratic counterparts after that.

We want to accommodate the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, if we can, on getting all the appropriations bills passed by the 1st of October, but we are not going to dispose of this amendment without full discussion and, if necessary, full debate, but hopefully, some agreement.

The concept of an across-the-board cut is not used as raised in a White House briefing a week ago. That was at a much lower level and not at this level, and with a mix of 70-to-30, not 53-to-47.

We heard from the Secretary of Defense that this is just like a sequester. There is no flexibility at all for the Secretary in how the cuts will be made. The number of areas that need to be addressed, I think it is fair to say in its present form, if this amendment were adopted and went to the White House, the bill would be vetoed. There is no question about it.

I talked with the President about it this morning. That is the position of this Senator in support of the President. We will do our best to try to accommodate some of the changes that have been requested, and we will be able to report maybe later to the majority leader and the chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

I thank the Senator from North Carolina.

NOMINATION OF DONALD PHINNEY GREGG

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, are we now on the Gregg nomination?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We are.

Mr. CRANSTON. I am going to yield to the distinguished chairman of the committee for a few remarks that he will make, and then I will yield to the Senator from Tennessee. If nobody shows up who has an urgent time problem, I will then make a statement on behalf of the view that the Gregg nomination should be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL. I thank my colleague from California.

Mr. President, the nomination of Donald P. Gregg to be Ambassador to the Republic of Korea was debated extensively in the Committee on Foreign Relations. Senator ALAN CRANSTON in his capacity as chairman of the Subcommittee on East Asian and Pacific Affairs ably chaired two sessions in which testimony from Mr. Gregg was received under oath.

I would like to commend Senator CRANSTON, his staff, and the staff of the committee for their detailed preparation for these hearings. An extremely thorough and intensive investigation was undertaken. Hundreds of pages of material, including information from the Iran-Contra investigation, were reviewed. Based on this information, the committee was able to question and examine Mr. Gregg's record and qualifications for the extremely important post to which he has been nominated.

Senator CRANSTON was correct when he observed that the investigation was "not about building up or tearing down" the President, nor was it about "who was for or against the Contras," and finally, it was not "a vendetta against an individual."

The investigation was about the integrity of the relationship between Congress and the executive branch. Congress needs honest facts and honest testimony from honest men and women if this Nation's Government is to function.

I must say that many troubling issues were raised during these hearings concerning Mr. Gregg's credibility and judgment: Credibility with regard to whether he was telling the truth; and judgment as to why he did not inform the then Vice President of such an important subject. I believe Mr. Gregg tried to answer those issues to the best of his ability although in so doing he did not dispel the doubts about what he knew about the Iran-Contra affair.

The committee was deeply divided on Mr. Gregg's nomination, voting 12 to 7 to report out favorably his nomination. This was a very difficult vote to make. I voted in favor although it was an extremely close call of about 51 to 49 in my own mind, but ultimately I decided to give the President the benefit of the doubt given Mr. Gregg's many years of service to the President as his personal assistant on national security issues, when he was Vice President.

Mr. CRANSTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. CRANSTON. How much time does the Senator from Tennessee wish.

I yield 15 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from California, for yielding time, and I wish to acknowledge that my own concerns about this nomination began when I listened to the Senator from California make his arguments before the Foreign Relations Committee. As someone who is not a member of that committee, I undertook an independent look at the documents to which the Senator from California referred; to the record that was made in the committee; and elsewhere; and came to an independent conclusion which parallels the conclusion reached by the Senator from California.

Several weeks ago we had a debate here in this Chamber on an amendment in which I proposed to limit the abuse of political appointments to the post of ambassador. That amendment was defeated after a debate which showed that despite the unease that many of us share about these appointments, there is not enough support for that kind of systemic change to the appointments process partly because Senators believe that the President is entitled to the widest possible latitude in selecting his diplomatic emissaries, but largely because many Senators argue that the remedy for an unwise appointment is laid out right in the text of the Constitution. This body has an independent responsibility to the American people to review nominations and look carefully at the merits of each nomination.

So this nomination comes before us in the wake of a debate over the Senate's solemn responsibility to check the credentials, qualifications, credibility, and suitability of a nomination sent to us. That carried the day.

I think it is considerably overoptimistic, but on principle it is perfectly reasonable. And we have an opportunity to put that view of our responsibility into practice in the matter of the nomination of Donald Gregg to be the United States Ambassador to the Republic of Korea.

Indeed, Mr. Gregg's nomination represents an especially pure test of principle, in my opinion. We are not here to debate whether he has the experience to merit consideration for this post. Quite clearly he does. Mr. Gregg has spent his professional lifetime as part of the national security apparatus of this country. He has served as the Central Intelligence Agency's senior official in the capital of the Republic of Korea. Mr. Gregg is no amateur. He did not gain the attention of the President or the gratitude of the President by contributing large sums of money to his campaign and then asking for the post of ambassador in return. He earned the gratitude of the President of the United States by placing himself in the thick of things that most people would have neither the nerve nor the stomach to dwell upon, let alone dwell in. His loyalty to the President has been a matter of deeds, not dollars.

Mr. President, the problem with Mr. Gregg is that some of the events to which he was very near were illegal, and have caused the downfall and even the criminal prosecution of a number of his closest colleagues. Robert McFarlane has been prosecuted and convicted for criminal actions arising from the Iran-Contra scandal. Oliver North has been prosecuted and convicted similarly. Admiral Poindexter's trial is pending.

Donald Gregg has not been indicted for any crime. We need to state that clearly. However, a number of Senators are morally certain that he has, though, lied to this body in explaining the nature of his activities. I wish in my statement to describe the facts and circumstances which I think make it almost impossible to escape the conclusion that Mr. Gregg has not been truthful with the U.S. Senate.

It is not unusual, let me say, for Members of the Senate to entertain doubts about the wisdom of Presidential nominations for senior officers in the Government. But almost always the basis for these concerns is the disagreement over policy rather than the issue of honesty.

In the case of Mr. Gregg's nomination however attention has focused almost entirely on the latter issue. As an outsider to that process as I mentioned earlier, I have had to study the record to appreciate what is behind so damaging a view of an ambassadorial candidate.

So here in brief is what that independent examination of the facts showed me. First, Mr. Gregg came to the Reagan White House with a professional lifetime of experience in covert action. Indeed, he was sent to the White House on detail from the Central Intelligence Agency to serve as the chief of the NSC's intelligence directorate, which is responsible for all covert action findings.

At a time, I was a member of the Select Committee on Intelligence on the other side of the Capitol, in the other body.

In this capacity Mr. Gregg was at the heart of all covert activity undertaken in the name of the United States. It is a matter of record that he was not only present at the creation of the administration's covert programs in Central America, but that he was one of the architects of those programs including paramilitary action in Nicaragua.

That is not what I think disqualifies him, but it is rather how he has responded to questions about that activity when those questions were posed to him by the U.S. Senate.

By way of background, we have to realize that Mr. Gregg not only had to know what the plans were, but that he undoubtedly knew many of the principal operators charged with carrying them out on the ground, once those plans were approved. Indeed, it is also a matter of record that one of the foremost individuals in this circle of operatives, Felix Rodriguez, was a long-time friend of Mr. Gregg and in frequent touch with him as events in Nicaragua unfolded. We need to realize that by training, Mr. Gregg was equipped to understand any nuance of what was taking place in Central America. He was not some wide-eyed novice, confused and disoriented in unfamiliar circumstances. He was a professional who got to the top by knowing all the ins and outs of his field, and his field was covert action.

Nevertheless, if we are to believe Mr. Gregg's testimony to the U.S. Senate, he suddenly forgot these skills and instincts of a lifetime, when, after August of 1982, he joined the staff of then Vice President Bush, as principal foreign policy adviser. Mr. Gregg asks that we believe that he and the Vice President never discussed the Contras. He asks us to believe that for 4 years his continuing working association with Mr. Rodriguez dealt only with El Salvador, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Rodriguez was mainly occupied with matters pertaining to the Contras. He asks us to believe that at two meetings that he set up between the Vice President and Mr. Rodriguez, the subject of El Salvador was discussed, but not a word about Nicaragua and the Contra program.

Now, at some point, Mr. President, you have to wonder whether or not Mr. Gregg takes the U.S. Senate to be filled with incredibly gullible people. On one of the memoranda pertaining to these meetings where the Vice President was present, Mr. Gregg has written the handwritten notation, "resupply of the Contras." Well, he was asked: "You have told us you did not discuss the Contras; how do you explain your handwriting when you say you discussed resupply of the Contras?" With a straight face, he told the committee that he must have meant "copters," not Contras, yeah, that is it. He was discussing the copters in that other country next door. Sure, that is it.

What does he take the Senate for? What do we take ourselves for? Are we going to seriously accept a bald-faced presentation of that kind? How can we? It is absurd on its face.

In any event, from October of 1984 onward, the Boland amendment made it illegal for U.S. personnel to aid the Contras. The Contra program, again, is not the central issue here. It is Mr. Gregg's candor about his role in it. Records demonstrate continuing contacts between Mr. Gregg, Colonel North, and Mr. Rodriguez, along with other principals of the subsequent scandal, all during the ensuing time. But still Mr. Gregg would have us believe, and again tells us with a straight face, that he remained completely ignorant of illegalities and unsuspecting of the extent and character of Colonel North's activities. Instead, he claims not to have known what was going on until August 8, 1986, when Mr. Rodriguez explained to him in detail his work with Colonel North in providing military aid to the Contras.

Then even after Mr. Gregg concedes he was in possession of information about criminal misconduct, he would have us believe that he alerted no one, including the Vice President. Finally, he would have us believe that the Vice President never knew what his national security adviser was sitting on, until Mr. Gregg some months later, in December of 1986, granted an interview to the New York Times. In other words, the Vice President's principal national security adviser, who had been all wrapped up in these conversations, goes to the New York Times and gives this interview, and then after it appears in the New York Times, that is the first time he tells his boss about it.

Again, what do they take us for? Are we going to seriously pretend that we believe this? It is patently absurd. Yet, we have to accept it on face value, in order to reach the conclusion that the nominee before us today did not come up to the U.S. Senate and lie brazenly and repeatedly, time after time after time, and then ask us to vote for him for this post. Well, I just think that it is a little difficult to swallow. He would have us believe that his boss read about it in the newspaper, even though he, Mr. Gregg, had earlier been told by Rodriguez that this could be bigger than Watergate. He would not warn his principal about that? I think that is difficult to believe.

Now, there is a great more detail, and I expect that other Members who join me in opposing this nomination and whose knowledge is more extensive than mine, will cover it.

Let me just say this: In the good old days, so called, of covert intelligence, Presidents enjoyed something called "plausible deniability." Plausible deniability is the ability to disclaim personal responsibility for covert actions gone public or gone sour or both. Maintaining it was at one time a crucial part of the working relationship between the CIA and Presidents, it was the means by which a President could minimize the political and diplomatic risks of resorting to an instrument of policy in the shadow of the law, so much at variance with the way most persons understand the workings of their government.

After the great intelligence scandals of the 1970's, Congress insisted that Presidents be accountable for covert action. It became a matter of law that every covert action must be traceable in the end, not publicly, but traceable in the end to a signed order issued by the President and no one else.

By and large, the intelligence services have become accustomed to this idea, although many believe it eroded substantially during the Reagan years. After reading the record concerning Mr. Gregg, it seems to me that the essence of the problem is that he may have been determined to preserve deniability for his boss, the then-Vice President, and that he was prepared to go to extraordinary lengths to do so. In fact, the evidence suggests that Mr. Gregg, like others who were serving with him in the Reagan White House, may well have had to weigh the law against other values. In the case of Mr. Gregg's colleagues, we know how they came down. In his case, we are left with some profound suspicions, to say the least. Mr. Gregg is innocent in the eyes of the law. He has been charged with no crime.

I would ask my colleague if I could have 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CRANSTON. I yield 2 additional minutes.

Mr. GORE. He is innocent in the eyes of the law and has been charged with no crime. His testimony before the Senate of what he was doing during that time, and his explanations for a number of documents which some would call "smoking guns," pointing toward involvement in illegalities, are very hard to take. There is no way that Mr. Gregg's reputation emerges free of doubt from these pages. How could he not have known what was going on for so long? And once he knew, how could he have kept silent from everyone, including the man who relied upon him to be his eyes and ears?

If Mr. Gregg was, indeed, unaware for a period of years about what was going on, in spite of his experience and in spite of his lifetime in the same field, what shall we think of the acumen so necessary in the role of Ambassador? If Mr. Gregg did in fact never tell the Vice President about illegalities when they were plainly in view by his own admission, what shall we think of his ability to discriminate between what is important and what is not?

The record thus represents us with the story of a man who was either too clever to be caught or too naive to know what was going on under his nose. Either way, we in the Senate must now make individual, very personal judgments about whether we are comfortable with the idea that such a person ought to be confirmed as our Ambassador to a post of extraordinary importance. Each of us must decide whether this man is trustworthy, whether his judgment is sound under pressure, whether his loyalties are to other men of power, or to the rule of law superior to any individual.

When it was first learned that the President intended to nominate Mr. Gregg for this position, Members of the Senate appealed to him not to go forward. That was wise counsel, but the President exercised his prerogative and submitted the nomination. It certainly would have been better if Mr. Gregg himself had withdrawn: not as an admission of fault, but as a concession to the needs of the Nation. For though he is an able man, Mr. Gregg is surely not the only person who might serve the United States as ambassador to South Korea. He must surely realize that he does not have the full confidence of the Senate, and that this is a disability which ought not to be borne at the expense of our diplomatic relations with an important military ally and a trading and economic power of rising significance.

As a matter of fact, we should also be wondering whether Mr. Gregg can ever fully have the confidence of the people of the Republic of Korea. They are struggling to emerge from a long twilight of half-freedom or worse, at the hands of a succession of authoritarian governments. And we are in the process of trying to secure the support of the people who associate us not only with protection against the North, but with their own politically oppressed past. It is not Mr. Gregg's fault, that he served as station chief in Seoul during a period when this repression was particularly severe. In fact, I am told that he did a number of good things during that time to mitigate the punishment of some important Korean opposition leaders at the hands of the government.

Nevertheless, it seems clear to me that Mr. Gregg will personify for many South Koreans a consortial relationship between our Government and their former dictators. Quite aside from the issue of the Senate's lack of full confidence, I wonder if Mr. Gregg is not concerned that—as the ambassador of the United States—he will present the enemies of good United States-Korean relations with a ready, living symbol of the repressive past.

Mr. Gregg, of course, has not withdrawn his candidacy. And so it falls to us to choose. I believe the United States should be represented by a person of talent who leaves Washington with the full confidence of this body. I believe such persons are available. And I believe by rejecting Mr. Gregg's nomination, we can induce a new choice: hopefully a better one. I think we can do this without passing judgment on the ultimate truth or falseness of Mr. Gregg's testimony, and without reviving the old issue of what Mr. Bush knew and when he knew it. We can simply vote on the conviction that the United States has other resources to draw upon for an ambassador, who would bring with him none of Mr. Gregg's disadvantages.

I urge my colleagues to reject this nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Tennessee very much for his fine and forceful statement on what I consider and many of us do, a very important issue, and his thoughts are very, very helpful to this body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS].

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, Donald P. Gregg, hereinafter to be referred to by me as Don Gregg, is one of the most decent and dedicated public servants I have known in my nearly 17 years in the Senate. If you examine the credentials, they are impeccable. He is a man of integrity and honesty. I think it is a testament to his fine qualifications that the President nominated him to represent the United States as Ambassador to the Republic of Korea.

Throughout the long ordeal involving the reporting of the Gregg nomination to the Senate, I listened carefully to what was said about him, and I read carefully the documents relating to his alleged activities. Frankly I found them spurious.

It appears that there are some in this body and certainly in the news media who just hate to let go of this Iran-Contra issue because that is a good way to bash George Bush. It was a good way to bash Ronald Reagan before him. I sense a high degree of disappointment among some that the Iran-Contra ordeal no longer is important to the American people. You never hear about it any more now that the nomination has been reported to the Senate and will be voted on no later than 6:15 p.m. this evening.

I thank the Senate leadership for finally bringing Mr. Gregg's nomination to the floor. As a matter of record and for the record, this nomination was received by the Senate on March 6. I think it is fair to say, and I say it with all charity to those Senators involved in the in-depth examination of Mr. Gregg's reputation and activities, that there was an effort not merely to delay the nomination, but to intimidate Mr. Gregg and to withdraw his name from consideration.

As a matter of fact, my friend from California was candid enough to say that was his intent in one of his press releases earlier this year.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield just at that point.

Mr. HELMS. Yes.

Mr. CRANSTON. I would like to say that there was certainly never any effort on my part, acknowledged or not acknowledged, to intimidate Don Gregg. I did intend to get the nomination withdrawn in the interest of the country and the President, and I think the Senator knows so did some Republican Senators.

Mr. HELMS. We will see when the roll is called up yonder.

Notwithstanding that, and I thank the Senator, this had an appearance of one of the old westerns on television: Hang him and then give him a fair trial.

This Senator, along with the rest of my Republican colleagues on the committee, saw the handwriting on the wall, saw it early, and perhaps that is where Republicans saw no point in coming to committee meetings when the majority was not interested in the orderly conduct of committee business.

Whatever the reason, a date was set to vote on Mr. Gregg's nomination, and the interest of my colleagues returned. On June 20, Mr. Gregg was reported favorably by the Foreign Relations Committee. The vote was 12 to 7.

I think this vote demonstrates that this was not a partisan matter, because we had some Democratic votes. There may be some few Republican votes against Mr. Gregg. I do not know how many. But we will have some Democrats, too. So it is bipartisan both ways.

Mr. President, during his 2-day appearance before the Foreign Relations Committee, if you read the record, I think it is fair to say that Don Gregg was rather masterful in refuting each and every one of the allegations against him.

In fact, in his opening statement at the second hearing on June 15, Don Gregg categorically listed the 12 major allegations that had been made as of that time, and he responded to each.

At the appropriate time, and I do not do so now, I will ask that the full text of Mr. Gregg's testimony from June 15 be inserted in the RECORD.

It seems that much of the controversy surrounding this nomination centers on Mr. Gregg's friendship with a Felix Rodriguez. As the conspiracy theory, as it was built up, put it, this friendship combined with Don Gregg's training in secrecy led him "to sponsor a freelance covert operation out of the Vice President's office."

See the careful little design: Let us get George Bush, and that is what this is all about. Get George Bush. Tear him down. Unfortunately, according to the latest polls I have seen, George Bush's popularity is so high I think it is exceeding that of Ronald Reagan's. So it did not work.

Yes, Don Gregg is a friend of Felix Rodriguez. They served together in Vietnam. He made no effort whatsoever either to deny it or to discount it. And yes, it was Don Gregg who encouraged Mr. Rodriguez to work in El Salvador with the Salvadoran Air Force, to assist in that country's efforts to fight the Communist insurgency in El Salvador.

That is pretty terrible stuff.

We now know that Mr. Rodriguez became involved in an effort to resupply the Contras. There were a lot of us interested in that. If it is of any interest to anybody, I participated in this effort, did the best I could to encourage people across this country to help the freedom fighters in Nicaragua.

So, yes, Mr. Rodriguez tried to help the freedom fighters in Nicaragua, but so did an enormous number of other Americans. And yes, it is a fact—confession is good for the soul, I guess—Mr. Rodriguez did come to visit Don Gregg for about 20 minutes on August 8, 1986, in which he, Mr. Rodriguez, raised the Contra issue. Everybody in this town was talking about it. You sat down for 5 minutes with almost anybody in Washington at that time, and everybody was talking about the freedom fighters and how could they be helped; or in the case of some Senators and some Members of the House of Representatives, how the freedom fighters could be thwarted in their efforts to prevent a Communist takeover in all of Central America.

But, at this meeting Mr. Rodriguez did not provide anything that even approached being a "full briefing" of what he knew to be going on in Central America at that time. If there is any doubt about it, just take a look—and it is in the record—take a look at Mr. Gregg's notes on that meeting. The committee has them. The committee studied them. And another red herring was dragged off the stage.

Mr. Gregg brought all of these notes to the committee for inspection on June 15.

So far, nothing on Mr. Gregg. But let me go back. Mr. Rodriguez did come see Don Gregg, and he told him there was some type of ripoff under way with regard to the Contras. All of us, have 20-20 hindsight from all of the Iran-Contra hearings. We even have 20-20 hindsight about what happened to the Redskins last night. Oh, we are all experts after the fact.

But Don Gregg had no knowledge of what anybody was doing. It has not been even remotely established that he had anything to do with what was going on among some people in this town, and he certainly had no knowledge of a clandestine resupply effort being orchestrated at the NSC.

This was raised suspiciously over and over again to keep this Iran-Contra thing going, to keep it in the headlines, keep it on the evening news. But did Don Gregg cover up this information, as might be expected of someone involved in the freelance, covert operation out of the Vice President's office? And that was the kind of charge made, aimed at George Bush because he was Vice President. He is now President. Of course he did not.

He did not cover up anything.

Four days later he called together those individuals he thought should be aware of the reported problem, the problem that he knew it or believed it to be, based on a 20-minute meeting with his old friend, with whom he had served in Veitnam, Felix Rodriguez. And he outlined those concerns. And, when he was assured several weeks later that the problem had been fixed, he had no reason to question it further and he did not.

But, nevertheless, there came all of the criticism of Don Gregg for not taking this information to the Vice President, his friend George Bush; now the President, now at the height of his popularity.

So, a friend came to Don Gregg and raised an issue. And Don Gregg within 4 days, to be precise on August 12, 1986, convened a meeting to examine this issue. This is all in the record. Nothing came up at the August 12 meeting to raise any concerns and, as Mr. Gregg told the committee: Had the extent of the involvement by Ollie North or anybody else been revealed to him at the August 8 meeting, he would have done more. I have no reason to doubt that. I do not think anybody else does.

Several months later, when Edwin Meese appeared on national television and uncovered what was going on at the NSC, Don Gregg was able to put his sketchy August 8 meeting into the proper context, against the background of the Attorney General's comments. And, as he testified, feeling that he had "failed to put in correct context earlier" what he had been told in August, he then went to the Vice President and offered to resign his job in December of 1986. Not because he had done anything wrong, but because he felt, in retrospect, using that 20-20 hindsight, that he had not done enough; and the Vice President refused to accept Don Gregg's resignation.

Those are the facts. The record was clear, I think, before the Don Gregg hearings. It seems to me, having looked at the documents and having sat in the Foreign Relations Committee meetings, it is even clearer. This whole Contra resupply, involving the freedom fighters in Nicaragua, had been investigated by the Tower Commission, the Iran Contra Committee, the Independent Counsel, and numerous hours of testimony in Federal Court. It has been delved into, studied, probed, pried, investigated, inspected, scrutinized, examined, analyzed, decomposed, and recomposed. Not to mention it was the subject of a television network miniseries, and just a few books.

Thousands of memos, cables, diaries, interviews, and they have turned up no solid evidence of Don Gregg's involvement in the unhappy aspects, as they may be, of the Iran-Contra episode. I am sure this disappointed a lot of folks.

Columbo would be beside himself if he found no more evidence than has been found. Sometimes the truth is disappointing, and I am sure there were some disappointed folks, including the media, including some Senators, including some other people.

Mr. President, obviously I think the Senate should confirm Don Gregg and do it overwhelmingly. There is going to be some debate, but I think this Nation can ill afford to deprive itself of his talents and his integrity. And they are certainly needed in the Republic of Korea, at this difficult time in that part of the world.

He is a fine nominee and I look forward to meeting with Ambassador Gregg, as I hope we shortly will be, to discuss the real issue surrounding the nomination. And that issue, when all is said and done, is: How can Don Gregg best put his abilities to work in Seoul, South Korea?

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, Mr. MCCONNELL, has taken a lead in this nomination, for which I thank him and commend him. And I am going to designate him as the manager of this nomination on this side.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the aforementioned testimony of Mr. Gregg be printed at this point in the RECORD.

I thank my friend from California and I yield the floor.

There being no objection, the testimony was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY DON GREGG, JUNE 15, 1989

Mr. Chairman, Members of the Committee, I am happy to appear before you again. This renewed hearing gives me an opportunity to address in some detail the bill of particulars included in the Chairman's opening statement of 12 May 1989. I believe the record will show that the principal charges in the statement are conclusory, exaggerated, and unfair. Repeatedly, the statement asserted as facts conclusions which I most emphatically deny are accurate. The few questions that arise from the evidence, it should be remembered, stem largely from documents which I preserved and supplied this Committee. And fairly examined, the evidence does not establish the Chairman's assertions. Had I truly been involved in the manner charged by the Chairman the evidence against me would not have been so fragmentary and ambiguous, but far more substantial, and more meaningful in its content. I believe it is essential that the Committee examine carefully each of the Chairman's assertions.

1. The Chairman's statement asserts: "You came to work at the Reagan White House with responsibilities which included heading the National Security Council's Intelligence directorate. It was in this capacity in 1982 that you first came to be professionally involved in advocating military assistance to the Contras. For example, the Intelligence Committee is in receipt of a document entitled 'Proposed Covert Action Finding on Nicaragua' from Donald Gregg dated July 12, 1982."

Response: It is correct that in 1982 I advocated military assistance to the Contras. So did the Congress. I also supported the policies of both the Carter and Reagan Administrations concerning Nicaragua. But the finding referred to by the Chairman, rather than indicating that I have long been part of an improper effort to deceive Congress, in fact is a clear example of my belief that any support for the Contras had to be given in a lawful manner. As the Iran/Contra Report of Congress stated, the proposed July 1982 finding was an effort to have the Congress brought up to date on expanded intelligence activities in and around Nicaragua that were not covered by the December 1981 finding.

The Congressional report specifically found that "Gregg, like Admiral Inman, believed that broad support for Pastora was outside of the scope of December 1981 finding. He wrote to William Clark, the National Security Advisor, that 'additional actions not covered by previous authority, are now being proposed' * * * Vice Admiral Poindexter, then military advisor to the National Security Advisor disagreed." I believed then, and I believe now, that Congress must be kept fully informed.

2. The Chairman stated—"You have told Congress under oath that prior to public revelation of the Iran Contra scandal in November 1986 you and Vice President Bush 'had never discussed the Contras. We had no responsibility for it. We had no expertise in it.'"

Response: As the Committee must realize, that quote was not meant to convey the claim that I had never discussed any aspect of the Contras. I have elsewhere repeatedly stated that I discussed the broad issue of the role of the Contras with the Vice President. That quote, placed in its proper context, was intended to make clear that I had not reported Felix Rodriguez' 8 August 1986 concerns to the Vice President. The questions and my full answers before the Iran Contra Committee on 18 May 1987 follow:

Q. Now did you report any of this to the Vice President?

A. I did not.

Q. None of what Felix told you?

A. None.

Q. What was the reason you decided not to make such a report?

A. Well, I felt that it was a very murky business. I spend a great deal of my time trying to send things to the Vice President that I think are really Vice Presidential. I try to keep him focused, help him keep focused on arms control or Mideast peace or things of that nature. We had never discussed the Contras. We had no responsibility for it, We had no expertise in it. I wasn't at all certain what this amounted to.

I had the name of four or five Americans on an obscure air base in Central America who apparently were ripping off donated funds and making unseemly profits. I felt I had passed along that material to the organizations who could do something about it, and I frankly did not think it was Vice Presidential level."

3. The Chairman's statement accepts as fact Col. North's testimony that I introduced him to Felix Rodriguez. It says that "the record shows that two months after the President signed the (Boland) legislations you met on December 21, 1984, with your long-time friend and former CIA operations colleague Felix Rodriguez and that you introduced him that day to Oliver North."

Response: This assertion is false. The record shows that Col. North was incorrect.

The only evidence in the record that supports the assertion that I introduced Rodriguez to North is North's testimony at trial.

All the other evidence available demonstrates that North was wrong.

Both Rodriguez and I, under oath, have denied North's version.

William R. Bode has written to confirm that he, and not I, introduced Rodriguez to North.

4. The Chairman's statement quotes from a cable dated 15 February 1985 in which General Gorman is quoted as having discussed support for the Contras with Rodriguez.

Response: Gorman has repeatedly denied under oath having associated Rodriguez with the Contras, and Rodriguez has confirmed Gorman's testimony in this regard. In one of many such statements for example, Gorman swore on 22 July 1987:

"At no time was there ever communication from Felix to me about Nicaragua or the resistance or anything else . . . I never associated Felix Rodriguez, to my knowledge, with Ollie in any context related to the Nicaragua resistance." But whatever happened between Gorman and Rodriguez, I was no part of it. I did not know Rodriguez was knowledgeable about FDN resupply activities until 8 August 1986.

5. A particularly distressing charge in the Chairman's opening statement is the description of an alleged "meeting between you, Oliver North and James Steele who coordinated Contra resupply from our El Salvador Embassy at 4:30 p.m. September 10, 1985 in the Old Executive Office Building." The Chairman asserts that "North's handwritten note confirms that details of the then prohibited military resupply of the Contras was discussed * * *," and the Chairman concluded that "Steele has confirmed to Congressional investigators that you did meet with him and North that afternoon."

Response: As I have repeatedly said, I recall no such meeting. North's diary includes a reference to such a meeting, and he has some notes apparently prepared by him for use at that meeting. But no such meeting occurred at which I was present. No mention of that meeting occurs anywhere in my records, including my calendar. North's desk calendar in fact contains no notation of such a meeting. He may well have planned such a meeting, but it did not occur with my participation.

But the most disturbing aspect of the Chairman's statement was the allegation that Steele had confirmed the meeting on that date. The allegation is simply untrue. Here is what Col. Steele is quoted as having said to the GAO: "Colonel Steele said that the only contact on the Contra issue he has had since his interviews with the Committee's investigators was a call a few months ago from Donald Gregg. He said that Gregg asked him if he could remember a meeting of the three of them (North, Steele and Gregg) in September 1985. He said that he told Gregg that he did not remember any such meeting."

As Senator Kerry graciously acknowledged on 12 May 1989, the GAO document then becomes confusing. Steele remembers that I introduced him to North but cannot recall when. Steele said that it is possible that the meeting took place in September 1985 but that he has no record or recollection of such a meeting. He then goes on to state, according to the GAO report, "he does remember the meeting as just an introduction without any substantive discussions. Col. Steele said that this was the only time that he remembers meeting Gregg and North at the same time. He noted that he had subsequent meetings with North as part of his efforts to increase military aid to El Salvador and that they also had some discussions about the Contras. He also said that until the 12 August 1986 meeting he never discussed the issue of the Contras with Donald Gregg."

To get Steele's position on this confusing GAO report, I asked an attorney at the Legal Adviser's office to call Steele, after the last hearing. Steele confirmed unequivocally under oath that he recalls no such meeting with my presence or participation as that alleged in the Chairman's opening statement.

6. The Chairman's statement also attempted to portray me, not only as knowledgeable of Rodriguez' activities, but in control. It states: "It was North who contacted you for help in reining in Rodriguez' operations. Your sworn testimony is that North said 'You, meaning you Don Gregg, are the only one who can control Felix.' "

Response: As the Committee is well aware, North called me in August 1986 and made the statement quoted above because Felix had gotten wind of corruption in the Contra resupply organization and was determined to stop it. North was attempting to use my long-standing relationship with Rodriguez to keep him from interfering in what Rodriguez regarded as corrupt activities. Of course, I would have told Rodriguez to stop doing anything improper. In this instance, however, I supported him in opposing what he claimed was corruption. I did not, however, "control" his activities.

7. The Chairman understandably focused on two memos from my office which refer to "resupply of the Contras." But his analysis of these incongruous references fails to cite the strong evidence that shows that I was not responsible for these references. Here is what the Chairman stated: "You claimed under oath that you 'just can't account for' why two not one, but two separate memos of yours to the Vice President in April 1986 told him that Felix Rodriguez would see you both to provide a briefing on 'resupply of the Contras.' You claimed under oath that you never saw the memos to the Vice President that bear your name and initials."

Response: I did so testify, and my testimony is true. I did not dictate, sign or see the memos. This is fully supported by my Deputy and the secretary who prepared the memos, facts which the Chairman regrettably did not see fit to include in his presentation.

In sworn testimony, Phyllis Byrne, my secretary, and Colonel Samuel Watson, my deputy, testified that the memoranda were prepared without any involvement by me, typed by Mrs. Byrne and initialed by her. All three of us have testified that the phrase, "Resupply the Contras" is inexplicable, since everyone at the 1 May 1986 meeting with the Vice President, including Secretary of Treasury Nicholas Brady, has testified that there was no mention whatsoever at the meeting of the Contras, or resupply of the Contras. The phrase must have arisen out of verbal miscommunication between Mrs. Byrne and Colonel Watson.

During the last few days, contact has been made with Stephanie A. Vandevander, another secretary who was in my office at the time these memos were prepared. She in fact worked directly for Colonel Watson. She has supplied a written statement confirming that she, as well, recalls that I had nothing to do with preparing the memos. She recalls they were prepared by Mrs. Byrne, in conjunction with Colonel Watson.

Last May 12, I gave you a speculative explanation of this isolated reference to resupplying the Contras—which does not appear in the files before or after the memos in question. I speculated that Colonel Watson may have said or Mrs. Byrne might have heard "resupply the copters," since the resupply of helicopters in El Salvador was in fact a topic discussed with the Vice President during the May 1 meeting. Of course, I do not know how this reference actually appeared. But irrespective of this speculation, my explanation concerning that reference is that I was unaware of the content of those memos, and did not see them until December 1986, when I immediately took them to the House Intelligence Committee; and that, most importantly, resupply of the contras was not discussed at the 1 May 1986 meeting.

8. The Chairman preemptorily rejects my claim under oath that there was nothing unusual in the fact that the first notification to Washington officials about the downing of the Hasenfus plane, came from a Felix Rodriguez phone call to my deputy, Sam Watson.

Response: I testified on 12 May 1989 that, as I learned much later, Rodriguez had broken with North on 25 June 1987 and was no longer on speaking terms with the man. He apparently felt someone in Washington should know of the crash and thus called my office. Now, if the call is nonetheless unusual in the view of this Committee, it is so only in retrospect with the full knowledge of Rodriguez's role in contra supply. I did not then have that knowledge, and I treated the call as an old friend passing on information he felt was important.

9. The Chairman flatly asserts that "you [Gregg] concede that on August 8, 1986, you were briefed in detail by Rodriguez about NSC staff involvement in proscribed contra military resupply activities," and that on that day Rodriguez provided me a "briefing on his collaboration with North to provide then-proscribed military assistance to the contras." The Chairman repeated this gross exaggeration several times at the hearing.

Response: The Chairman greatly overstates the extent of my knowledge about Contra resupply as of 8 August 1986. I did not concede or testify, as the Chairman recites, that I was "briefed in detail by Rodriguez about NSC staff involvement in proscribed Contra military activities" on that date. I testified that Rodriguez' report to me was not in great detail and at that time, August 1986, and that the details of what was going on were not at all clear to me. The meeting related to a rip off on grenades and other items by a private group that North was using. This information was only the tip of the iceberg. I knew at that time, along with everyone else, that the Contras were being supplied from a variety of sources. On that day I discovered that North was knowledgeable and at least tangentially involved, and that some corruption might be occurring in the support operation. Of the size, avarice, and permanence of the secret organization North had set up, however, I knew nothing at that time. Rodriguez did not then supply me a "briefing on this collaboration with North. . . ." I did not then know, nor was I led to conclude on the basis of the information I was told, that any illegal actions were being taken by U.S. officials. I sensed possible corruption on the part of private citizens, and took action to have it stopped. Rudolf A. Enders has stated in a recent letter that Felix was determined as late as the spring of 1986 not to tell me about U.S. government involvement in Contra resupply. He knew if I were fully informed I would have intervened and stopped the program.

10. The Chairman's opening statement makes much of an on-the-record interview I gave to the New York Times on 13 December 1986.

Response: In the weeks leading up to that interview, I had had many discussions about these issues with Craig Fuller, the Chief of Staff to the Vice President. As soon as I got the August 8 meeting in clearer focus—as a result of finding my own notes on the meeting as I was searching the files—I talked it over with Fuller and we decided that the best course was to go on the record in the interview with the New York Times. The Vice President obviously felt we correctly handled the issue. When asked, in December 1986, by representatives of the press whether he was concerned at my not having told him of the problem of possible corruption in Contra supply, the Vice President replied "Not in the least." I believed then, and I believe now, that the actions I took on 12 August 1986 in calling together the US officials with direct responsibility for Central America, was the appropriate step to have taken. Had I known the extent of North's involvement, I certainly would have done more, and would have told the Vice President.

11. The Chairman claims that my testimony, even if believed, "betrays a serious lack of professional judgment on your part—a failing which raises fundamental questions about your suitability to be a U.S. Ambassador."

Response: The Senator is of course entitled to be as "subjective" as he indicated in his statement he intended to be in his judgment of me. But his claim that my failure to tell the Vice President about the August 8 briefing reflects a disqualifying lack of professional judgment is unfair. As I have noted, the Senator vastly overstates what I learned at that meeting. If my actions are judged objectively in the light of what I learned, it is clear to me even now that I acted reasonably in not informing the Vice President, since I sincerely believed that the limited problem that I had addressed had been solved. I did not know that the problem stemmed from an extensive, U.S. controlled operation.

Yet, even if one assumes that I should have told the Vice President what I had learned, I would respectfully submit the Chairman's judgment is far too harsh. Surely my professional judgment should be evaluated on the basis of my entire career, my experience, my performance in my many jobs. And surely this issue should turn in large part on what the man for whom I worked for six years believes about my professional judgment. In my capacity as national security adviser to the Vice President I did many things, and did them right. Before that I spent about 30 years in what the Chairman calls "commendable service," but then ignors. My professional judgment should be evaluated on the basis of all my years of service, my entire record. On that basis I believe it is unfair to call me unfit to serve as a U.S. ambassador, particularly in a country in which I am peculiarly well suited to serve.

12. The Chairman's opening statement ends with the following, sweeping accusation: "In conclusion, I believe the record suggests that the following happened. After Boland II was signed in October 1984, you and certain others in the White House were encouraged to secure military aid for the Contras through unorthodox channels. Your career training in establishing secrecy and deniability for covert operations and your decades-old friendship with Contra supporter Felix Rodriguez apparently led you to believe you could serve the national interest by sponsoring a free-lance covert operation out of the Vice President's office."

Response: This is a monumental exaggeration of what "the record suggests." The Chairman's accusation, I regret to say, takes a handful of evidentiary fragments and infers from them a role for me in the Iran/Contra conspiracy. It is simply unfair to assign me a role as knowing participant in this major and thoroughly documented operation on the basis of a marginal note written on a memo, a quote taken out of context, the erroneous testimony of North as to how he met Rodriguez, a phrase recited in a memo that had no functional meaning, and a diary entry of North's that is refuted by witnesses and other documents. I appeal to you, Mr. Chairman, and any others who have doubts about me to place these disparate fragments in focus both as evidence of an involvement and as a basis for denying my suitability for an ambassadorial post after 38 years of public service.

First, in terms of the significance or value of the pieces of evidence we have repeatedly examined, I ask you to place those items in context, The record against which the evidence of my knowledge should be judged is well known, and massive. It is the product of investigations by the Tower Board, the Iran/Contra Committee, and the Independent Counsel. FBI agents and other investigators have gone through all the documents, computers, and depositaries available. They have found thousands of memos, cables, and perhaps most significantly diaries and internal exchanges in which participants in the Iran/Contra affair secretly planned and discussed their activities. Had the real players in the Iran/Contra affair considered me a participant, their plans, briefings and secret internal discussions would certainly have included multiple and meaningful references to my supposed role. But the record—the real record—contains no evidence of my involvement. The isolated references discovered are so lacking in coherence that they fail to reflect any meaningful role on my part. I would respectfully submit to this Committee, and to the Senate, that this lack of evidence in the truly relevant body of evidence reflects the truth of the matter—I was not involved, or even aware.

Consider, also, the conspiracy of which the Chairman suspects I am a part. That conspiracy is no longer a scheme that is mysterious to us. It is described in great detail in the report of Congress' Iran/Contra Committee, and in the indictment returned by the grand jury. Had I truly been a conspirator, as the Chairman says the evidence suggests, those investigations would have uncovered and laid out the proof. But they include no such claim, and suggest no such conclusion, because the truth is that I played no part. The Office of Independent Counsel confirmed when I testified before the grand jury that I was not a target of his investigation. They reconfirmed this fact as recently as last week.

Finally, in evaluating the probability of the conspiracy theory of the Chairman, I ask that you weigh my conduct after December 1986, when the Vice President instructed all officials in his office to be fully responsive to the developing investigation of the Iran Contra affair. In response to this directive, my office undertook a document search, pulling together all material judged to be in any way relevant to the points being examined. In viewing these documents, the two perplexing memoranda prepared for the 1 May 1986 meeting with the Vice President jumped out at me. I did not shred them. Rather, I volunteered their existence to the House Intelligence Committee on 17 December 1986. I met with several staffers of that committee, including Michael O'Neill. I told them, as I handed them over, that these were the most damaging documents we could find in the files. Had I been the calculating specialist in deception of the Chairman's theory I would not have preserved those two memoranda. Instead, knowing my duty to the Vice President, to you, and to the law, I preserved and supplied these documents. And I have testified repeatedly, and fully, without invoking any privilege or seeking any deal. My conduct in these respects bears no resemblance to the activities of some of those who are alleged to have been my co-conspirators.

I devoutly hope that my qualifications for the post to which I have been nominated are not disregarded on the basis of the fragmentary and unreliable evidence so unfairly described in the Chairman's statement.

Thank you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from California.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I myself will be just a few moments and then I intend to yield to the Senator from New York.

I would like to comment on the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina to say the issue involved in this nomination of Donald Gregg to be Ambassador to South Korea has nothing to do with whether aid to the Contras was good, bad, wise, or unwise. That was a separate issue.

The opposition to the nomination does not in any way, shape, or manner represent an effort to get at the President of the United States. The question is the wisdom of this particular nomination.

We have a President. He has been elected our President. We all wish him well. We wish him to be successful because that would be a success for the Nation.

That is not the point in the minds of those who are concerned about this particular nomination.

I would also just like briefly to note, as the Senator from North Carolina said, that by August 8 of the year in question, when Felix Rodriguez filled in Donald Gregg on the looming Watergate-type explosion, the Senator from North Carolina said: "By then, everybody in town was talking about the Contras and aid to the Contras."

Donald Gregg would have us believe, when he gave his testimony under oath, in effect, that two people in this town were not talking about the Contras; namely, Donald Gregg and George Bush. And that is just very, very hard to swallow given the evidence to the contrary, some of which has already been presented, more of which will be presented in the course of this debate.

I am now delighted to yield 15 minutes to the distinguished Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERREY.) The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise with mixed feelings and a very deep concern in opposition to this nomination. I have twice myself been before the Senate for confirmation, as an ambassador, in the first instance to India and then as permanent representative to the United Nations with the rank of ambassador. I am fully aware of the honor of the post and the responsibilities that lie with those U.S. citizens given the mission by their President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, of representing the Nation abroad.

There will be many aspects of this matter that will be discussed and have been. The distinguished Senator from Tennessee spoke with great clarity and great force, as did the Senator from California, our friend, and the man we have chosen to provide our leadership, the majority leader, will speak. Most specially the Senator from Maryland, who has previously raised these matters in the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I would like to address myself to one subject which I brought up in the first instance in the hearing which we held before the Committee on Foreign Relations on May 12 having to do with Ambassador-designate Gregg. My learned friend and seatmate Senator SIMON later added his comments on the subject. And that is the question of the mining of the Nicaraguan harbors, which took place in the early weeks of 1984 and for several months thereafter. Three harbors were mined directly by the United States, not just in violation of the understandings of this body and the statute on intelligence oversight. The Intelligence Committees were not informed of this hugely significant anticipated activity. The statute said we were to be told. We surely were not told.

An effort was made that was painful to every Member of this Chamber; namely, to suggest that when Senator Barry Goldwater, chairman of the Select Committee on Intelligence, stated that he was not told about this activity that this was a failing on his part, that somehow advanced age or whatever had led him to be inattentive.

Later, under oath, the facts came out in testimony before the Iran-Contra Committees, when the distinguished Senator from Maryland asked Mr. McFarlane, then National Security Adviser, about this event. On the week in which this all came forward Mr. MacFarlane had gone to the Naval Academy and assured the Academy that the committee was informed. If ever there was a place for an alumnus not to tell an untruth, it was at the Naval Academy. But that untruth was told, and only later was the event somewhat cleared up. Mr. SARBANES asked Mr. McFarlane:

Did you know about the mining of the Nicaraguan harbor? Mr. McFarlane replied, "Yes, sir."

The exchange continued as follows:

Mr. SARBANES. Did you think that should have been consulted with the Intelligence Committees?

Mr. MCFARLANE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SARBANES. It wasn't done.

Mr. MCFARLANE. No, sir.

We know in the aftermath—that this effort to discredit Senator Goldwater was the first appearance of the persistent, the endemic lying that went on in this matter, a pattern of lying then mutated into a Government by deceit.

We have all been shaken by it. And we are not over it. It is regrettable that it comes back to us in this form. But we have responsibilities which are ours under the Constitution, not to be avoided or evaded.

I would like to bring up in a very brief compass the fact that the mining of the Nicaraguan harbors was clearly an illegal act. It was a violation of customary international law, and a violation of treaty law. Treaties are the supreme law of the land under the Constitution of the United States. The Congress, under article 1, section 8, is given the power to define and punish offenses against the law of nations; treaties become the law of particular parties and there is also general customary law, which is binding on the United States by its very own assertions, and has been from the very outset in the Constitution.

One of the questions that has never been resolved, never really properly asked is, "How could the mining of the harbors in Nicaragua occur in clear violation of law?" Of course, the Government of Nicaragua subsequently took us to the International Court of Justice. Shamefully, we declined to go, against all the commitments made by this body in 1945 when we said we could withdraw compulsory jurisdiction with a 6-month notice, but only with a 6-month notice, and even then never to avoid jurisdiction in a particular case. We did just that, shamefully.

And of course, the International Court held, as it had to do, that the United States was in violation of law. The first time in my knowledge, Mr. President, that the United States had ever been held in violation of international agreements, understandings and rules where the use of force was involved—the first time in our two century history, I believe. It happened here.

And so, at the Committee on Foreign Relations hearing I asked the witness, our witness, Mr. Gregg, an experienced Government official and a White House official: At the time—when the laying of the mines in the harbors was being discussed in the White House—had anyone raised the question that this would be, might be, a violation of treaty obligations which under the Constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the land?

Mr. Gregg replied—I somewhat paraphrase his statements. I will put them in the record completely. "I do not remember that particular point being raised. I think there were discussions of what our relations were with Nicaragua but I do not remember that particular concern being voiced."

And I went on to say:

The Constitution of the United States says that treaties are the supreme law of the land and we looked up in the Intelligence Committee to find that our Executive Branch had deliberately violated that law and that cannot be—well, did no one ever say that was against the law? Did it never even come to the fore of the discussion?

We are a country that had diplomatic relations with Nicaragua. This was clearly intervening in its internal affairs. However you might describe the extent of the use of force involved in the mining, it raises questions under the Charter of the United Nations; it obviously had to do.

And Mr. Gregg replied, "Which treaty and which law are you referring to, Senator?" And I thought for a moment and said, "Well, the Ninth Hague Convention of 1907." I am not even sure that the Hague Convention would apply in peacetime. It might just during wartime. But I could have as easily added the Charter of the Organization of American States, the Rio Treaty, and the Charter of the United Nations.

And the response from Mr. Gregg, a man of apparent openness, was an honest response: He did not really know what I was talking about. He said "I remember there was a discussion of the fact that the mines to be used were low power; that the effort was to try to sink, I believe, a Soviet ship or a ship bringing supplies—military supplies—into the Sandinistas or to block a channel through which a lot of the military supplies to the Sandinistas came and there was a discussion of trying to do this in a way so that casualties would be nonexistent, or at least minimized."

Mr. President, I am not standing here to state my alarm that we contemplated casualties or sinking Soviet ships. The use of force is thoroughly contemplated in the law of nations. It is this country that went to war with Imperial Germany in 1917 because they had sunk American ships, and Woodrow Wilson came to this Capitol and said it is a dreadful thing to take this Nation to war, but we have no choice; the law of nations has been violated, and we will not have that.

I do not speak from the point of view of someone alarmed by the use of force in world affairs. It has its role. It has ever had its role. The right to use force in certain circumstances is as much a part of law as the use of force in domestic law. But it is force under law, and not to know that, it seems to me, is not to have the most elemental understanding of what America has stood for in the world; what Franklin D. Roosevelt meant when he proclaimed the Four Freedoms. No understanding of what he meant when he asserted to the Foreign Policy Association in 1944 that the American representative on the Security Council should have to have the right to commit American forces in circumstances where the charter had been violated and there was no time to deliberate a response. That was a position which on this floor, in this Chamber, Senator Connally of Texas, and Senator Austin of Vermont said, of course, the President's representative had to have that right. The Congress and Senate would deal with the declaration of war in other circumstances, but this was a treaty we were signing.

This treaty imposes on its members obligations for the maintenance of international peace. It included us, and our representative could act to fulfill our obligations. We have been very serious about this. We went into two great wars with the object that the use of violence, use of force would be under law and according to treaty.

Here we have in this White House a discussion of sinking Soviet ships, perhaps without too many casualties, and no response, no response of any of the principals. They are certainly more to be held accountable than Mr. Gregg. But Mr. Gregg was there, and he represented the Vice President of the United States. He has taken an oath, as the Vice President has taken an oath, as we take oaths in this Chamber, to uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic, because the framers knew something of these matters.

A duty to uphold the law. The sense of law seems to have just evanesced. Now, in the aftermath, it is said that the mining was not right. By the time we held this hearing in May, the World Court had already handed down its decisions. The judgment of the nations could have been more clear.

Mr. President, at the close of the hearing with Mr. Gregg, my distinguished and learned friend, the Senator from Illinois, returned to this question and said, could he not know just a little more about this matter?

He said: "You said first, there was no discussion when you were talking about mining the harbors in Nicaragua, no discussion of a violation of international law, which I find incredible." Those are the words of Senator SIMON.

And then this response from Mr. Gregg: "You are getting me into an area where I am feeling uncomfortable, because I do not remember the denouement—the ending—of what was discussed there."

Mr. President, may I ask for 2 additional minutes?

Mr. CRANSTON. I yield 2 additional minutes to the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. And then this sentence: "And I did not realize Senator MOYNIHAN was talking about international law. I thought he was talking about American law."

Sir, we are being asked to send this honorable and able man—even so a man with this testimony and this past—to South Korea, where we still maintain some 50,000 American troops. They went there because North Korean forces had acted in direct violation of the Charter of the United Nations, which is international law, treaty law, and therefore, the law of the United States. Because they had violated that law, and the General Assembly in the United for Peace Resolution agreed, 14 nations went with us.

There is one place in the world today which stands for the integrity of the United Nations Charter with respect to the use of force in international affairs and aggression against the territorial integrity of other members. That is Korea.

That, sir, in my judgment, is not a place for someone with this record. Mind, it is the U.S. record. This is not an individual failing alone, but a matter, in my view, of large consequence.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the complete record of my questions to Mr. Gregg and Senator SIMON's additional question be printed at this point, and I thank the distinguished manager.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senator MOYNIHAN. Just out of curiosity—I will go to my grave wondering about this thing—did anybody ever say at this meeting, at the meeting you were at, or the number of meetings, whichever, I am not trying to press you on that—that for the United States to lay mines in Nicaraguan harbors was a violation of treaty obligation and under the Constitution of the United States a violation of the supreme law of the land?

Mr. GREGG. I do not remember that particular point being raised. I think there had been discussions of what our relations were with Nicaragua, but I do not remember that particular concern being voiced.

Senator MOYNIHAN. I am just imposing on your time to ask, but Mr. Chairman, one of the problems we have here is a problem—and we have no choice, sir. Just as you have kept your oath, we try to keep ours. We take an oath to defend and protect the Constitution of the United States.

The Constitution of the United States says that treaties are the supreme law of the land and we looked up in the Intelligence Committee to find that our Executive Branch had deliberately violated that law and that cannot be—well, did no one ever say that was against the law? You could have said—did it never even come to the fore of the discussion?

I am not asking you to look at your notes, you did not take notes. This is something that did not happen.

Mr. GREGG. Which treaty and which law are you referring to, Senator Moynihan?

Senator MOYNIHAN. I will start with The Hague—is it the 9th Hague Convention of 1908? The treaty law and conventional law would declare mining of harbors a belligerent act.

Mr. GREGG. I think that there have been—and I do not remember the day numero of that particular action. I remember there was a discussion of the fact that the mines to be used were low power; that the effort was to try to sink, I believe, a Soviet ship or a ship bringing supplies—military supplies—in to the Sandinistas or to block a channel through which a lot of the military supplies to the Sandinistas came and there was discussion of trying to do this in a way so that casualties would be nonexistent, or at least minimized.

Senator MOYNIHAN. I would like for the record—this is the Committee on Foreign Relations. Treaties come before us. We presumably take some considerable care before we recommend their ratification and when they are ratified they become the law of the land.

It is not optional and all this that we are still reviewing and I think Senator Cranston has had to do this as a matter of his sense of obligation, you know, we try to be honorable and we try to be careful. There was just a casualness about what is the law and what is not, what is legal and what is illegal, that seems to me to have been an institutional lapse.

Mr. GREGG. I had observed other instances of that in my own career earlier on, where there would be a frustration on the part of the Executive Branch about an intractable problem and the agency would often ask to do something which did not flow from policy but was a substitute for policy and in my view, sir, that is a recipe for disaster.

Senator MOYNIHAN. Well, we almost had a crisis of the regime. It began with the mining of the harbors. It could very well have ended with the impeachment of a President and if only at those first meetings someone had said well, it would be a nice thing if we could do it but we cannot do it because we are bound by treaty not to do it and we cannot break the President's word to the world. Treaties are after all negotiated by the Executive Branch. It is not some legislative imposition, as you know.

Thank you very much. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator CRANSTON. Thank you very much, Senator Moynihan. Senator McConnell?

* * * * *

Senator SIMON. Then in response to Senator Moynihan, you said first, there was no discussion when you were talking about mining the harbor in Nicaragua, no discussion of a violation of international law, which I find a little incredible.

But then you said in response, and I have written this down, and I think accurately, you said, "Our aim was to sink a Soviet ship or ship bringing supplies." Was there any discussion of what would happen if a Soviet ship were sunk?

Mr. GREGG. Yes, there was. And there was concern about it. And there was—you are getting me into an area where I am feeling uncomfortable, because I do not remember the denouement of what was discussed there. And I did not realize that Senator Moynihan was talking about international law, I thought he was talking about American law.

Mr. CRANSTON. I thank the distinguished Senator from New York for his very fine and eloquent and thoughtful statement on another aspect of this nomination that does deserve very serious consideration in this body. I thank him for that major contribution.

Mr. President, today the integrity of this distinguished body is being challenged.

Today we are being asked to promote a man who, the record shows, has not been straight with us in his testimony.

We are being asked to reward a man who is lacking in both the credibility and the judgment necessary to perform the very important duties of the U.S. Ambassador to South Korea.

The nomination of Donald Gregg presents Senators with a dilemma. None of us like to sit in judgment of others. We are not eager to rehash Iran-Contra. We are not eager to raise questions about what George Bush knew about the disastrous Iran-Contra scandal and when he knew it. Yet it is clear that Senators do have a duty to cast our vote on the question of whether to give our advice and consent to the promotion of Mr. Gregg. This is our responsibility, it is an obligation we cannot and must not avoid.

The investigation of Mr. Gregg's conduct was not one we on the Foreign Relation's Committee welcomed. Indeed, it was forced on us by the insistence of the White House upon nominating this very controversial individual. Efforts to obtain Mr. Gregg's withdrawal and to avoid a public confrontation failed. It then fell to me, as chairman of the Asia and Pacific Affairs Subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, to lead the committee's inquiry.

Let me state for the record at this point very clearly what the central purpose of this investigation was about, and, in my view, what it was not about.

It was not about who was for or against the Contras—that war is over, and it is time for us to work together, Republicans and Democrats, to build a bipartisan approach in Central America for the future.

Similarly, this investigation was not about building up or tearing down the new administration. We have tried throughout the Foreign Relations Committee's proceedings to avoid partisan attacks—indeed Republicans and Democrats alike sought Mr. Gregg's withdrawal as one way to avoid casting aspersions upon the White House.

At issue here is the integrity of the relationship between Congress and the executive branch.

Let me state the problem clearly: Congress cannot function effectively without honest facts, without honest testimony, without honest men and women who will respond truthfully to legitimate inquiries. That, above all else, should be the lesson we learned from the whole sorry Iran-Contra episode. And that, I submit, is the lesson we must apply in the case of Mr. Gregg's nomination.

As Mr. Gregg himself conceded in his committee testimony, there are substantial reasons for Senators to suspect his version of events and to raise questions about his judgment.

It does not take a suspicious or partisan mind to look at all the documentary evidence, the back-channel cables, the "eyes only" memos and then to conclude that Mr. Gregg has not been straight with the U.S. Senate. Indeed, more than one Republican Senator who looked at the accumulated weight of the evidence against Mr. Gregg remained unconvinced and sought Mr. Gregg's withdrawal. We are beyond that point now, however.

I recognize that most of my colleagues on the Republican side feel intense pressure to vote in lockstep for the President's man. I regret that. But I believe such a decision would be most unwise and would do significant injury to this body.

This Senate has a fundamental dilemma. If we were to promote a man we believed to have misled us under oath, we would invite contempt for our inquiries; we would encourage frustration of our constitutional obligations. Even Mr. Gregg appears to understand this fact. Indeed, Republicans have reported to me that Mr. Gregg offered to step down in the past—both as the then-Vice President's national security adviser and, more recently, as George Bush's nominee for the ambassadorship to South Korea.

But that option has been foreclosed by White House intransigence. And the hour will soon come for the full Senate to vote on the question of Mr. Gregg's promotion.

MR. GREGG'S DEFENSE

The full Senate must therefore today weigh the facts uncovered by the Foreign Relations Committee during our extensive hearings on the Gregg matter, facts which I believe militate against a vote to confirm Mr. Gregg. These hearings documented a whole series of instances in which Mr. Gregg demonstrated a lack of credibility as well as an appalling lack of professional judgment. Worse yet, they showed how Mr. Gregg reacts when confronted with his own errors. The hearings demonstrated that when Mr. Gregg is confronted with written evidence undermining his story, he repeatedly points the finger of blame elsewhere. During the Foreign Relations Committee hearings he challenged Gen. Paul Gorman's testimony, he challenged numerous contemporaneous back-channel cables, he challenged sworn court testimony and contemporaneous notes from his NSC staff colleagues. Mr. Gregg even concocted the comical theory that his aide Col. Sam Watson and his secretary erred twice by writing "Contras" instead of "helicopters" on those infamous briefing memos for the Vice President.

So here is a man who gets in a mess of trouble and offers to resign. That is understandable. But when he then, quite surprisingly, is offered a promotion and must explain his unprofessional behavior, he tries to blame his past troubles on his colleagues, his subordinates—even his secretary for goodness sake. That type of conduct is not worthy of respect.

The defense advanced by Mr. Gregg is an elaborate tale in which his professional colleagues and long-time friends allegedly conspired to keep him ignorant of crucial facts through days of meetings, monthly phone calls, and nearly 2 years worth of cables and memos. Yet, in a preverse twist, when Senators confronted Mr. Gregg with the documentary evidence which undermines his story, he accused us of concocting "conspiracy theories." And he did so with a straight face.

ADMINISTRATION CONTEMPT

I will begin in a few moments to set out once again the details of some of these flimsy excuses by Mr. Gregg. But before I do so, I think it is worth noting the contempt with which the administration has treated the Senate in the matter of this nomination. It is clear by now that many important questions will never be answered satisfactorily—especially because we have been stonewalled by the administration in our requests for specific documents relevant to the Senate's exercise of its constitutional advise and consent responsibilities. The National Security Agency rejected our legitimate inquiries out of hand. The Central Intelligence Agency provided an initial response with access restrictions so severe as to be laughable. The State Department's response was utterly nonresponsive. They answered our letter after their own self-imposed deadline and failed to produce specific documents as requested—and which we know exist.

The Senate has also been stonewalled by Oliver North. He has not complied with the committee subpoena for his unredacted notebooks. The redacted notebooks contain repeated January 1985 references to Felix Rodriguez which suggest North's involvement in Rodriguez' briefings of the Vice President. The executive branch has refused to take possession of these notebooks from North's lawyers—for fear the administration might then be forced to give them to Congress in response to our legitimate inquiries. It is, in short, I submit, a travesty.

But the time will soon come for the Senate to vote and we must vote on the basis of the information we already have, information which I believe makes a very compelling case for voting against Mr. Gregg's promotion.

SUMMARY OF THE CASE AGAINST THE GREGG NOMINATION

Having sketched the broad outlines of the case against Mr. Gregg, permit me now to revisit this case in greater detail. I believe the record we have established provides at least two compelling grounds for opposing Mr. Gregg's promotion to a key ambassadorial post: judgment and capability. There are sufficient grounds for rejecting his nomination on either basis.

On the issue of credibility, Mr. Gregg has failed to set to rest legiti-mate concerns that he did not tell Congress "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth" in his sworn testimony on the following points:

First. Gregg claims he "never discussed the Contras" with George Bush. The hearings revealed five substantive memos from Gregg to Bush on the Contra policy issue. In addition, there are two memos from Gregg to Bush setting up a May 1, 1986, meeting for Bush to be briefed by Felix Rodriguez on "resupply of the Contras."

Second. Gregg claims he had no discussions concerning the Contras' specific military needs with his long-time friend and former CIA colleague, Felix Rodriguez, who was engaged with Oliver North in a prohibited Contra resupply scheme. Gregg could not explain notes he had handwritten to Bush regarding Rodriguez' assessment of the Contras' military logistics needs, notes written during the period of the Boland II prohibitions. Mr. Rodriguez, I must explain, was a man sent down to Central America by Gregg and proceeded to get himself very, very deeply involved in the Contra supply matters.

Third. Gregg claims he was totally ignorant until August 1986 of the fact that Rodriguez, whose mission to El Salvador Gregg promoted with key United States officials, was involved in illegal Contra resupply. The hearings revealed a series of more than a half dozen memos indicating that virtually all officials Gregg dealt with on the Rodriguez matter—including Gen. Paul Gorman, Ambassador Thomas Pickering, and Lt. Col. Oliver North—were clear from the outset in early 1985 that Contra resupply was Rodriguez' priority.

Fourth. Gregg claims he never discussed Rodriguez' Contra resupply mission with North. North's contemporaneous, highly reliable notebooks indicate that Gregg did do so on September 10, 1985, and North has stated under oath that Gregg was told by North during this time period of Rodriguez' Contra resupply mission.

Fifth. Gregg claims he did not learn until December 1986 that Rodriguez had been recruited to work with North on Contra resupply and that Rodriguez told him he started that work in September 1985. Our hearings revealed documents making clear that Rodriguez and North were working together in an illegal Contra resupply scheme from January 1985—the same week Gregg introduced Rodriguez to Vice President George Bush. The hearings also revealed documents making clear that in August 1986, Gregg and his deputy Watson were aware of Rodriguez' and North's cooperation in then-prohibited military resupply. Rodriguez warned Gregg of a potential Watergate-size scandal. Watson noted that it was clear their NSC staff colleague North was "Chairman of the Board" of an operation which constituted an illegal Contra resupply scheme.

Sixth. Gregg claims he did not inform Vice President Bush about the information he received in August 1986 regarding the Wilson-Clines ripoff of the Contras, the involvement of NSC staff in illegal Contra military aid, or the potential for another Watergate-size scandal. Gregg claims Bush learned of this only through a New York Times interview Gregg gave in December 1986.

I recognize how difficult it is for some Senators to state the conclusion, shared by a majority of us on the Foreign Relations Committee—including even several Senators who voted to approve his nomination—that Mr. Gregg has clearly not been straight with us. The implications of this fact for Mr. Gregg—and for the President—are not pleasant ones. Thus it is important to recognize that there are also substantial grounds for opposing Mr. Gregg exclusively on the basis of his clearly faulty judgment.

An ambassador is expected to know what's going on in the country of his assignment, and to report what he knows to his superiors. If you believe Mr. Gregg's testimony, he not only didn't know what was going on right around him in the Government of his own country—despite repeated indications which he failed to consider or pursue—but when he belatedly figured it out, he failed to report what he learned to his superiors. He admitted to the Foreign Relations Committee that he twice offered to resign from the Vice President's staff because of his recognition that his own performance was unprofessional. Certainly the U.S. Senate is entitled to entertain similar doubts when he comes before us for a promotion.

Our hearings methodically demonstrated that—even if you believe Mr. Gregg's version of events—his professional judgment was unacceptably poor on the following grounds:

First. According to Gregg, he failed to inform his boss, a statutory member of the NSC, when he heard evidence of criminal activity by NSC staff.

Second. According to Gregg, he failed to "remember" or "think about" the vital information he learned in August 1986, when in October 1986—after the Hasenfus plane was shot down—he gave false information to Marlin Fitzwater. When Fitzwater and Bush subsequently made incorrect statements to the American people, Gregg still claims he failed to tell them what he knew about North and what his role was with Rodriguez.

Third. According to Gregg, he sat silently through NSC meetings at which the illegal mining of Nicaraguan harbors was discussed. In a similar manner, Gregg failed to call in any legal authorities when he learned in August 1986 details of Nicaragua involvement in illegal Contra resupply efforts.

Fourth. According to Gregg, he continued to encourage the Rodriguez mission to El Salvador despite repeated objections from senior U.S. military and intelligence officials in the region. Gregg also claims he was ignorant of widely publicized congressional inquiries into NSC activities in Central America, and that he was ignorant of legal restrictions on United States involvement in combat activities, such as those engaged in by Rodriguez in El Salvador.

Let me say in conclusion that I believe it is truly regrettable that the White House has insisted on pressing for Mr. Gregg's confirmation. I believe this decision did a disservice to the cause of bipartisan comity in interbranch relations.

But we have crossed that bridge, and soon it will be time to vote.

I firmly believe that if we confirm a man justifiably suspected of misleading Congress, it will be a blow to the integrity of this institution: It will invite contempt for the legitimate inquiries of Congress. Few who have carefully reviewed the record have come away with any confidence in Mr. Gregg's veracity. Republican Senators may feel obliged to back the choice of their party's leader, but I urge my colleagues to vote the merits of this nomination instead, and to consider the implications for this institution if they promote a man who has conducted himself in such a manner as has Mr. Gregg.

On the grounds of both credibility and judgment, Mr. Gregg's promotion should be defeated. One is not entitled to an ambassadorship.

I yield the floor.

Mr. McCONNELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I notice that my friend from Maryland has been on the floor, and I am going to let him go ahead of my statement. I did want to make one observation about the comments of my colleague from California, which are very similar to those which he made in committee.

Mr. SARBANES. I would be happy for the Senator to make his statement.

Mr. McCONNELL. I would say I am having a lot of trouble with my voice, and I am more than happy for him to go ahead, if he would like,

I wanted to, however, Mr. President, indicate I felt that Don Gregg made a more than adequate refutation of all of the allegations referred to by my friend from California. I ask unanimous consent that the testimony of

Mr. Gregg be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the testimony was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY DON GREGG, JUNE 15, 1989

Mr. Chairman, Members of the Committee, I am happy to appear before you again. This renewed hearing gives me an opportunity to address in some detail the bill of particulars included in the Chairman's opening statement of 12 May 1989. I believe the record will show that the principal charges in the statement are conclusory, exaggerated, and unfair. Repeatedly, the statement asserted as facts conclusions which I most emphatically deny are accurate. The few questions that arise from the evidence, it should be remembered, stem largely from documents which I preserved and supplied this Committee. And fairly examined, the evidence does not establish the Chairman's assertions. Had I truly been involved in the manner charged by the Chairman the evidence against me would not have been so fragmentary and ambiguous, but far more substantial, and more meaningful in its content. I believe it is essential that the Committee examine carefully each of the Chairman's assertions.

1. The Chairman's statement asserts: "You came to work at the Reagan White House with responsibilities which included heading the National Security Council's Intelligence directorate. It was in this capacity in 1982 that you first came to be professionally involved in advocating military assistance to the Contras. For example, the Intelligence Committee is in receipt of a document entitled 'Proposed Covert Action Finding on Nicaragua' from Donald Gregg dated July 12, 1982."

Response: It is correct that in 1982 I advocated military assistance to the Contras. So did the Congress. I also supported the policies of both the Carter and Reagan Administrations concerning Nicaragua. But the finding referred to by the Chairman, rather than indicating that I have long been part of an improper effort to deceive Congress, in fact is a clear example of my belief that any support for the Contras had to be given in a lawful manner. As the Iran/Contra Report of Congress stated, the proposed July 1982 finding was an effort to have the Congress brought up to date on expanded intelligence activities in and around Nicaragua that were not covered by the December 1981 finding.

The Congressional report specifically found that "Gregg, like Admiral Inman, believed that broad support for Pastora was outside of the scope of December 1981 finding. He wrote to William Clark, the National Security Advisor, that 'additional actions not covered by previous authority, are now being proposed' * * * Vice Admiral Poindexter, then military advisor to the National Security advisor disagreed." I believed then, and I believe now, that Congress must be kept fully informed.

2. The Chairman stated—"You have told Congress under oath that prior to public revelation of the Iran Contra scandal in November 1986 you and Vice President Bush 'had never discussed the Contras. We had no responsibility for it. We had no expertise in it.' "

Response: As the Committee must realize, that quote was not meant to convey the claim that I had never discussed any aspect of the Contras. I have elsewhere repeatedly stated that I discussed the broad issue of the role of the Contras with the Vice President. That quote, placed in its proper context, was intended to make clear that I had not reported Felix Rodriquez' 8 August 1986 concerns to the Vice President. The questions and my full answers before the Iran Contra Committee on 18 May 1987 follow:

Q. Now did you report any of this to the Vice President?

A. I did not.

Q. None of what Felix told you?

A. None.

Q. What was the reason you decided not to make such a report?

A. Well, I felt that it was a very murky business. I spend a great deal of my time trying to send things to the Vice President that I think are really Vice Presidential. I try to keep him focused, help him keep focused on arms control or Mideast peace or things of that nature. We had never discussed the Contras. We had no responsibility for it. We had no expertise in it. I wasn't at all certain what this amounted to.

I had the name of four or five Americans on an obscure air base in Central America who apparently were ripping off donated funds and making unseemly profits. I felt I had passed along that material to the organizations who could do something about it, and I frankly did not think it was Vice Presidential level."

3. The Chairman's statement accepts as fact Col. North's testimony that I introduced him to Felix Rodriguez. It says that "the record shows that two months after the President signed the (Boland) legislations you met on December 21, 1984, with your long-time friend and former CIA operations colleague Felix Rodriguez and that you introduced him that day to Oliver North."

Response: This assertion is false. The record shows that Col. North was incorrect.

The only evidence in the record that supports the association that I introduced Rodriguez to North is North's testimony at trial.

All the other evidence available demonstrates that North was wrong.

Both Rodriguez and I, under oath, have denied North's version.

William R. Bode has written to confirm that he, and not I, introduced Rodriguez to North.

4. The Chairman's statement quotes from a cable dated 15 February 1985 in which General Gorman is quoted as having discussed support for the Contras with Rodriguez.

Response: Gorman has repeatedly denied under oath having associated Rodriguez with the Contras, and Rodriguez has confirmed Gorman's testimony in this regard. In one of many such statements for example, Gorman swore on 22 July 1987:

"At no time was there ever communication from Felix to me about Nicaragua or the resistance or anything else . . . I never associated Felix Rodriguez, to my knowledge, with Ollie in any context related to the Nicaragua resistance," But whatever happened between Gorman and Rodriguez, I was no part of it. I did not know Rodriguez was knowledgeable about FDN resupply activities until 8 August 1986.

5. A particularly distressing charge in the Chairman's opening statement is the description of an alleged "meeting between you, Oliver North and James Steele who coordinated Contra resupply from our El Salvador Embassy at 4:30 p.m. September 10, 1985 in the Old Executive Office Building." The Chairman asserts that "North's handwritten note confirms that details of the then prohibited military resupply of the Contras was discussed . . .," and the Chairman concluded that "Steele has confirmed to Congressional investigators that you did meet with him and North that afternoon."

Response: As I have repeatedly said, I recall no such meeting. North's diary includes a reference to such a meeting, and he has some notes apparently prepared by him for use at that meeting. But no such meeting occurred at which I was present. No mention of that meeting occurs anywhere in my records, including my calendar. North's desk calendar in fact contains no notation of such a meeting. He may well have planned such a meeting, but it did not occur with my participation.

But the most disturbing aspect of the Chairman's statement was the allegation that Steele had confirmed the meeting on that date. The allegation is simply untrue. Here is what Col. Steele is quoted as having said to the GAO: "Colonel Steele said that the only contact on the Contra issue he has had since his interviews with the Committee's investigators was a call a few months ago from Donald Gregg. He said that Gregg asked him if he could remember a meeting of the three of them (North, Steele and Gregg) in September 1985. He said that he told Gregg that he did not remember any such meeting."

As Senator Kerry graciously acknowledged on 12 May 1989, the GAO document then becomes confusing. Steele remembers that I introduced him to North but cannot recall when. Steele said that it is possible that the meeting took place in September 1985 but that he has no record or recollection of such a meeting. He then goes on to state, according to the GAO report, "he does remember the meeting as just an introduction without any substantive discussions. Col. Steele said that this was the only time that he remembers meeting Gregg and North at the same time. He noted that he had subsequent meetings with North as part of his efforts to increase military aid to El Salvador and that they also had some discussions about the Contras. He also said that until the 12 August 1986 meeting he never discussed the issue of the Contras with Donald Gregg."

To get Steele's position on this confusing GAO report, I asked an attorney at the Legal Adviser's office to call Steele, after the last hearing. Steele confirmed unequivocally under oath that he recalls no such meeting with my presence or participation as that alleged in the Chairman's opening statement.

6. The Chairman's statement also attempted to portray me, not only as knowledgeable of Rodriguez' activities, but in control. It states: "It was North who contacted you for help in reining in Rodriguez' operations. Your sworn testimony is that North said 'You, meaning you Don Gregg, are the only one who can control Felix.' "

Response: As the committee is well aware, North called me in August 1986 and made the statement quoted above because Felix had gotten wind of corruption in the Contra resupply organization and was determined to stop it. North was attempting to use my long-standing relationship with Rodriguez to keep him from interfering in what Rodriguez regarded as corrupt activities. Of course, I would have told Rodriguez to stop doing anything improper. In this instance, however, I supported him in opposing what he claimed was corruption. I did not, however, "control" his activities.

7. The Chairman understandably focused on two memos from my office which refer to "resupply of the Contras." But his analysis of these incongruous references fails to cite the strong evidence that shows that I was not responsible for these references. Here is what the Chairman stated: "You claimed under oath that you 'just can't account for' why two not one, but two separate memos of yours to the Vice President in April 1986 told him that Felix Rodriguez would see you both to provide a briefing on 'resupply of the Contras.' You claimed under oath that you never saw the memos to the Vice President that bear your name and initials."

Response. I did so testify, and my testimony is true. I did not dictate, sign or see the memos. This is fully supported by my Deputy and the secretary who prepared the memos, facts which the Chairman regrettably did not see fit to include in his presentation.

In sworn testimony, Phyllis Byrne, my secretary, and Colonel Samuel Watson, my deputy, testified that the memoranda were prepared without any involvement by me, typed by Mrs. Byrne and initialed by her. All three of us have testified that the phrase, "Resupply the Contras" is inexplicable, since everyone at the 1 May 1986 meeting with the Vice President, including Secretary of Treasury Nicholas Brady, has testified that there was no mention whatsoever at the meeting of the Contras, or resupply of the Contras. The phrase must have arisen out of verbal miscommunication between Mrs. Byrne and Colonel Watson.

During the last few days, contact has been made with Stephanie A. Vandevander, another secretary who was in my office at the time these memos were prepared. She in fact worked directly for Colonel Watson. She has supplied a written statement confirming that she, as well, recalls that I had nothing to do with preparing the memos. She recalls they were prepared by Mrs. Byrne, in conjunction with Colonel Watson.

Last May 12, I gave you a speculative explanation of this isolated reference to resupplying the Contras—which does not appear in the files before or after the memos in question. I speculated that Colonel Watson may have said or Mrs. Byrne might have heard "resupply the copters," since the resupply of helicopters in El Salvador was in fact a topic discussed with the Vice President during the May 1 meeting. Of course, I do not know how this reference actually appeared. But irrespective of this speculation, my explanation concerning that reference is that I was unaware of the content of those memos, and did not see them until December 1986, when I immediately took them to the House Intelligence Committee; and that, most importantly, resupply of the contras was not discussed at the 1 May 1986 meeting.

8. The Chairman preemptorily rejects my claim under oath that there was nothing unusual in the fact that the first notification to Washington officials about the downing of the Hasenfus plane, came from a Felix Rodriguez phone call to my deputy, Sam Watson.

Response. I testified on 12 May 1989 that, as I learned much later, Rodriguez had broken with North on 25 June 1986 and was no longer on speaking terms with the man. He apparently felt someone in Washington should know of the crash and thus called my office. Now, if the call is nonetheless unusual in the view of this Committee, it is so only in retrospect with the full knowledge of Rodriguez's role in contra supply. I did not then have that knowledge, and I treated the call as an old friend passing on information he felt was important.

9. The Chairman flatly asserts that "you [Gregg] concede that on August 8, 1986, you were briefed in detail by Rodriguez about NSC staff involvement in proscribed Contra military resupply activities," and that on that day Rodriguez provided me a "briefing on his collaboration with North to provide then-proscribed military assistance to the contras." The Chairman repeated this gross exaggeration several times at the hearing.

Response. The Chairman greatly overstates the extent of my knowledge about Contra resupply as of 8 August 1986. I did not concede or testify, as the Chairman recites, that I was "briefed in detail in detail by Rodriguez about NSC staff involvement in proscribed Contra military activities" on that date. I testified that Rodriguez' report to me was not in great detail and at that time, August 1986, and that the details of what was going on were not at all clear to me. The meeting related to a rip off on grenades and other items by a private group that North was using. This information was only the tip of the iceberg. I knew at that time, along with everyone else, that the Contras were being supplied from a variety of sources. On that day I discovered that North was knowledgeable and at least tangentially involved, and that some corruption might be occurring in the support operation. Of the size, avarice, and permanence of the secret organization North had set up, however, I knew nothing at that time. Rodriguez did not then supply me a "briefing on his collaboration with North. . . ." I did not then know, nor was I led to conclude on the basis of the information I was told, that any illegal actions were being taken by U.S. officials. I sensed possible corruption on the part of private citizens, and took action to have it stopped. Rudolf A. Enders has stated in a recent letter that Felix was determined as late as the spring of 1986 not to tell me about U.S. government involvement in Contra resupply. He knew if I were fully informed I would have intervened and stopped the program.

10. The Chairman's opening statement makes much of an on-the-record interview I gave to the New York Times on 13 December 1986.

Response: In the weeks leading up to that interview, I had had many discussions about these issues with Craig Fuller, the Chief of Staff to the Vice President. As soon as I got the August 8 meeting in clearer focus—as a result of finding my own notes on the meeting as I was searching the files—I talked it over with Fuller and we decided that the best course was to go on the record in the interview with the New York Times. The Vice President obviously felt we correctly handled the issue. When asked, in December 1986, by representatives of the press whether he was concerned at my not having told him of the problem of possible corruption in Contra supply, the Vice President replied "Not in the least." I believed then, and I believe now, that the actions I took on 12 August 1986 in calling together the U.S. officials with direct responsibility for Central America, was the appropriate step to have taken. Had I known the extent of North's involvement, I certainly would have done more, and would have told the Vice President.

11. The Chairman claims that my testimony, even if believed, "betrays a serious lack of professional judgment on your part—a failing which raises fundamental questions about your suitability to be a U.S. Ambassador."

Response: The Senator is of course entitled to be as "subjective" as he indicated in his statement he intended to be in his judgment of me. But his claim that my failure to tell the Vice President about the August 8 briefing reflects a disqualifying lack of professional judgment is unfair. As I have noted, the Senator vastly overstates what I learned at that meeting. If my actions are judged objectively in the light of what I learned, it is clear to me even now that I acted reasonably in not informing the Vice President, since I sincerely believed that the limited problem that I had addressed had been solved. I did not know that the problem stemmed from an extensive, U.S. controlled operation.

Yet, even if one assumes that I should have told the Vice President what I had learned, I would respectfully submit the Chairman's judgment is far too harsh. Surely my professional judgment should be evaluated on the basis of my entire career, my experience, my performance in my many jobs. And surely this issue should turn in large part on what the man for whom I worked for six years believes about my professional judgment. In my capacity as national security adviser to the Vice President I did many things, and did them right. Before that I spent about 30 years in what the Chairman calls "commendable service," but then ignores. My professional judgment should be evaluated on the basis of all my years of service, my entire record. On that basis I believe it is unfair to call me unfit to serve as a U.S. ambassador, particularly in a country in which I am peculiarly well suited to serve.

12. The Chairman's opening statement ends with the following, sweeping accusation: "In conclusion, I believe the record suggests that the following happened. After Boland II was signed in October 1984, you and certain others in the White House were encouraged to secure military aid for the Contras through unorthodox channels. Your career training in establishing secrecy and deniability for covert operations and your decades-old friendship with Contra supporter Felix Rodriguez apparently led you to believe you could serve the national interest by sponsoring a free-lance covert operation out of the Vice President's office."

Response: This is a monumental exaggeration of what "the record suggests." The Chairman's accusation, I regret to say, takes a handful of evidentiary fragments and infers from them a role for me in the Iran/Contra conspiracy. It is simply unfair to assign me a role as knowing participant in this major thoroughly documented operation on the basis of a marginal note written on a memo, a quote taken out of context, the erroneous testimony of North as to how he met Rodriguez, a phrase recited in a memo that had no functional meaning, and a diary entry of North's that is refuted by witnesses and other documents. I appeal to you, Mr. Chairman, and any others who have doubts about me to place these disparate fragments in focus both as evidence of my involvement and as a basis for denying my suitability for an ambassadorial post after 38 years of public service.

First, in terms of the significance or value of the pieces of evidence we have repeatedly examined, I ask you to place those items in context. The record against which the evidence of my knowledge should be judged is well known, and massive. It is the product of investigations by the Tower Board, the Iran/Contra Committee, and the Independent Counsel. FBI agents and other investigators have gone through all the documents, computers, and depositaries available. They have found thousands of memos, cables and perhaps most significantly diaries and internal exchanges in which participants in the Iran/Contra affair secretly planned and discussed their activities. Had the real players in the Iran/Contra affair considered me a participant, their plans, briefings and secret internal discussions would certainly have included multiple and meaningful references to my supposed role. But the record—the real record—contains no evidence of my involvement. The isolated references discovered are so lacking in coherence that they fail to reflect any meaningful role on my part. I would respectfully submit to this Committee, and to the Senate, that this lack of evidence in the truly relevant body of evidence reflects the truth of the matter—I was not involved, or even aware.

Consider, also, the conspiracy of which the Chairman suspects I am a part. That conspiracy is no longer a scheme that is mysterious to us. It is described in great detail in the report of Congress' Iran/Contra Committee, and in the indictment returned by the grand jury. Had I truly been a conspirator, as the Chairman says the evidence suggests, those investigations would have uncovered and laid out the proof. But they include no such claim, and suggest no such conclusion, because the truth is that I played no part. The Office of Independent Counsel confirmed when I testified before the grand jury that I was not a target of his investigation. They reconfirmed this fact as recently as last week.

Finally, in evaluating the probability of the conspiracy theory of the Chairman, I ask that you weigh my conduct after December 1986, when the Vice President instructed all officials in his office to be fully responsive to the developing investigation of the Iran Contra affair. In response to this directive, my office undertook a document search, pulling together all material judged to be in any way relevant to the points being examined. In viewing these documents, the two perplexing memoranda prepared for the 1 May 1986 meeting with the Vice President jumped out at me. I did not shred them. Rather, I volunteered their existence to the House Intelligence Committee on 17 December 1986. I met with several staffers of that committee, including Michael O'Neill. I told them, as I handed them over, that these were the most damaging documents we could find in the files. Had I been the calculating specialist in deception of the Chairman's theory I would not have preserved those two memoranda. Instead, knowing my duty to the Vice President, to you, and to the law, I preserved and supplied these documents. And I have testified repeatedly, and fully, without invoking any privilege or seeking any deal. My conduct in these respects bears no resemblance to the activities of some of those who are alleged to have been my co-conspirators.

I devoutly hope that my qualifications for the post to which I have been nominated are not disregarded on the basis of the fragmentary and unreliable evidence so unfairly described in the chairman's statement.

Thank you.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I am more than happy—how much time remains on this side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky controls 98 minutes.

Mr. McCONNELL. If the Senator from Maryland would like to go ahead, it is perfectly all right with me. I am just going to retain our time.

Mr. CRANSTON. How much time do we have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California has 61 minutes.

Mr. CRANSTON. How much time does the Senator from Maryland wish?

Mr. SARBANES. Seven minutes. Is 7 minutes all right?

Mr. CRANSTON. I yield 7 minutes to the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, unfortunately there are some who assert that the President's ambassadorial nominee is the President's man and that the President's choice is determinative. I would like to submit, at the outset, that ambassadors are much more than the personal representative of the President in the foreign country to which they are assigned. They are, in fact, high-level U.S. Government officials, who represent our Government in dealings with foreign governments and in fact are the head of the entire country team; and they play a major role in carrying out our Nation's foreign policy.

The Constitution gives the President the power to nominate. It does not make the President's choice in the matter determinative. In fact, the Constitution says that he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors.

So the Senate clearly has a very important role to play. In fact, if the President's judgment was to be determinative, why did the Founding Fathers give the Senate a role to play in this constitutional process? I submit that in carrying out its constitutional duty, the Senate must thoroughly consider the character, experience, competence, and the judgment of ambassadorial nominees and make its own evaluation of the President's choice.

There would be no reason for a constitutional role for the Senate in this process, if we were simply to consider nominees based on their friendship with the President or the fact that a nominee has worked for the President for a number of years. In fact, it was just such factors that Hamilton warned against at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. He stated in the Federalist Papers in talking about the Senate's role: "To what purpose then require the cooperation of the Senate? I answer that the necessity of their concurrence would have a powerful, though in general, a silent operation. It would be an excellent check upon the spirit of favoritism in the President and would tend greatly to prevent the appointment of unfit characters from state prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment or from a view to popularity."

I want to commend the very able and distinguished senior Senator from California for the leadership which he has shown in carrying out the Senate's advise and consent responsibility with respect to this nominee.

In effect, he was handed a responsibility and he took it seriously. He chaired two long and complex hearings in a very thorough and fair manner. He afforded every opportunity to Mr. Gregg, the administration, and supporters of the nomination to make their case. He met the burden placed by the Constitution on the Senate, developing a record for Senators to make an informed judgment about the nominee.

In fact, the Senate would have been negligent of its constitutional responsibilities if it had not undertaken the very careful and thorough review which was led by the distinguished senior Senator from California, and I, for one, not only commend him for his efforts but thank him for shouldering this very important responsibility.

In light of the extensive evidence that was on the public record and that appears in the hearing record of Mr. Gregg's involvement in the Iran-Contra affair, a detailed review of this nomination was essential. Very serious questions have been raised about the conduct and judgment of Mr. Gregg as National Security Adviser to the Vice President.

Even after two lengthy hearings before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, there still remain many unanswered questions and contradictions between Mr. Gregg's testimony and other evidence that was presented to the committee.

Although the committee was unable to review all the documents requested from the administration, they were not furnished to the committee, as the Senator from California has pointed out, including particularly the North diaries, which still have not been provided.

I believe that the record before us is sufficient to cast severe and serious doubt on Mr. Gregg's credibility, and the Senator from California has made reference to those issues, as did the very able Senator from Tennessee.

We even have one situation in which on a memo it appears that the aid to the Contras was to be discussed with the Vice President and Mr. Gregg then sought to have the committee accept the proposition that what was really intended was to say aid to the copters instead of the Contras. This was the extent to which the committee was asked to go in terms of explaining away doubts about Mr. Gregg's credibility.

However, even if the many contradictions were resolved in a manner favorable to Mr. Gregg and even if his version of the events were accepted, in other words, even if you took it all in the most favorable light to him, despite the implausability of so many of the explanations, you are still left with very severe questions about Mr. Gregg's judgment and competence to be Ambassador to Korea.

Mr. Gregg testified that when he was National Security Adviser to Vice President Bush throughout the Iran-Contra affair, he never discussed resupply of the Contras with the Vice President. He also testified that even though he himself had worked on Contra matters as a staff member of the National Security Council and acknowledged that the Vice President had strong views about Nicaragua, there was no such discussion.

Yet on August 8, 1986, when Mr. Gregg heard from his trusted friend Felix Rodriguez about possible corruption of the Contra resupply operation by former renegade CIA agents, of whom Mr. Gregg strongly disapproved, he did not tell the Vice President about this conversation even though Mr. Gregg by his own admission and I quote him——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senators's time has expired.

Mr. SARBANES. Could I have 4 additional minutes?

Mr. CRANSTON. I wish the distinguished Senator would go on for an hour. I am glad to yield him 4 minutes.

Mr. SARBANES. Even though Mr. Gregg recognized that this would have "set off bells in his"—meaning the Vice President's—mind. By Mr. Gregg's own admission, he was the Vice President's eyes and ears. And yet, according to his own testimony, the Vice President learned about Mr. Gregg's meeting with Rodriguez in August over 4 months later in an interview with Gregg in the New York Times.

There are serious contradictions as to whether earlier than August 1986 Mr. Gregg had such knowledge, and in fact there is the basic contradiction of the purpose for which Rodriguez was sent to Central America in the first instance. But in any event, Gregg, by his own admission, on August 8, 1986, was informed, and yet the Vice President found out about it in a newspaper article in December, 4 months later, in an interview that Gregg gave to the paper.

In other words, Mr. Gregg did not tell his superior about an extremely important development in a volatile area of major and immediate concern, even after Rodriguez, in the August meeting, reported corruption that could result in another Watergate. This was Rodriguez' warning.

Likewise, Mr. Gregg, in October, misled Mr. Fitzwater by saying, and I quote now. Fitzwater, on the basis of a representation made to him by Gregg, said on October 12, "Gregg has said he had no knowledge of anything involving Contras," Mr. Fitzwater said. This is in October 1986. However, Gregg, by his own admission 2 months earlier in August 1986, at least in August, learned about this from Rodriguez, let alone whether in fact he might have known about it sooner. This all took place after the Hasenfus shooting in early October.

I want to quote some questioning of Gregg in the committee. I think it is very important. This all comes straight from Mr. Gregg. This is uncontested.

I said to him:

Mr. Gregg, I want to address a question of judgment. For the moment, I want to focus on the period from August 8, 1986, forward. Now, it is your testimony that the first you learned that Felix Rodriguez was involved in the resupply of the Contras was when he came to see you August 8, 1986. Is that correct?

Mr. GREGG. That is correct.

You said you were very concerned about that matter. I recall it from your previous testimony, because there was a rip-off going on.

Mr. GREGG. Right.

Also, there was a possibility the rip-off artist was going to try to sell part of the operation to the CIA, make a large profit out of it. Is that correct?

Mr. GREGG. Right; that is correct.

Then later on, I said:

Now, it is your own testimony that Rodriguez told you, as I understand it, that you potentially had another Watergate situation on your hands? Is that correct?

Mr. GREGG. He used that phrase.

And then, later he said that:

Had he been fully briefed by Rodriguez, that he would have told the Vice President and taken steps to stop it.

And then, finally I said:

Rodriguez came to see you. Rodriguez says we have got a potential Watergate here. He says we have got a rip-off going here. North is involved in this thing. You immediately tried to get to North, as I understand it?

Mr. GREGG. Right.

Senator SARBANES. You convened a meeting but you didn't tell the Vice President any of this; is that correct?

Mr. GREGG. That is right.

Although, if you had been fully briefed by your testimony this morning, you would have told the Vice President.

Mr. Gregg said:

Well, if I had been fully understanding, or, yes, if he had been fully briefed, that is fine.

Now, in October the plane, the resupply plane was shot down with Hasenfus aboard and Rodriguez immediately called Gregg's office. Gregg did not go to the Vice President about that. In fact he told Fitzwater that he had no knowledge of anything involving Contras, and that is the statement that was given out to the press and the American people.

So, all I can say is: Some eyes and some ears; in terms of meeting his responsibilities.

In fact, we asked Mr. Gregg about these developments and he said, "I did not mention the August 8 meeting to the Vice President at that time because I did not have it in correct focus."

This is after the Hasenfus plane was shot down.

Then Mr. Gregg said:

So my efforts in early October were in fending off the small fire storm of press attention about why I had sent Rodriguez to El Salvador in the first place.

To Mr. Gregg's credit, and in many respects I think Mr. Gregg has served his country with commitment over the years, he recognized himself that he had fallen short of his responsibilities, and, in fact, offered to resign as National Security Advisor to the Vice President in late December 1986. And I asked him: "Why did you offer to resign or what was it that you failed to do that led you to offer this resignation?"

Mr. Gregg said:

Well, I had a very strong mixture of emotions. My greatest feeling was that I had failed to put in correct context earlier what Felix had told me in August. I also felt that I had been very much deceived by Colonel North. I was furious at him. I felt very much let down by Felix.

I felt that my decision to help Mr. Rodriguez to go to El Salvador had turned into potential embarrassment to the Vice President, and I faulted myself for not having been able to put the pieces together in their correct perspective previously. And I thought the proper thing to do was to offer to resign.

I asked him: "So, in effect, you felt you had fallen short in terms of handling this?"

And Mr. Gregg said: "I did."

That offer to resign was not accepted. Later he subsequently, again offered to resign, and again it was not accepted.

By his own admission he felt that his conduct was such in this matter that he ought to offer his resignation.

I think the flawed judgment that he reflected through this period, the serious lapses in carrying out his responsibility as National Security Advisor, in and of themselves are sufficient for this body to vote against his confirmation to be Ambassador, and I urge my colleagues to reject this nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. CRANSTON. I thank the Senator from Maryland for his very, very fine statement setting forth very precisely and very forcefully the reasons that he and I and others oppose this nomination. I thank him for the strength that he has brought to this effort. I also want to thank him for his kind remarks about my responsibilities and my efforts here. That is particularly meaningful because he has become the committee's, and I think the Senate's, expert on the wisdom or nonwisdom of Presidential nominations for ambassadorships. I applaud the work he has been doing, not only on this nomination but on several others that are not really the sort that we in this country are entitled to expect to represent the United States elsewhere.

I now am happy to yield 15 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I rise to voice my strong opposition to the nomination of Donald Gregg to the post of Ambassador to South Korea.

I want to join my colleague from Maryland in congratulating and complimenting our distinguished colleague from California, Senator CRANSTON, for his clear perception of this issue and his leadership. I believe bringing to the Senate the knowledge about this nominee's past and why this nominee is unfit to be an ambassador anywhere, let alone to the Republic of South Korea.

Senator CRANSTON has done a great service to the Constitution, to the people of this country and to this body, by bringing to light the reasons why Donald Gregg should not be an Ambassador of the United States of America.

I do not take this position lightly but I do so in keeping with the responsibilities placed on each of us by the Constitution. I hear a lot of people saying the Constitution gives the President the power to appoint ambassadors. But the Senate was given an equally important power, the power of advise and consent.

Well, if there was ever a case where that power of the Senate and the integrity of this body was tested, the nomination of Donald Gregg is that case.

The issue of Mr. Gregg's nomination is not a question of foreign policy or who gets to run foreign policy. It is not even a debate of whether you supported this or the past administration's Contra policy. Nor is it a partisan matter.

The issue is whether the Senate has the courage to fully exercise its power of advice and consent. More than a test of Mr. Gregg's honesty of judgment, this nomination is a test of the mettle of the U.S. Senate.

Again, I know a lot of people will argue that the Senate ought to rubberstamp whatever nominee the President sends down here.

But, Mr. President, there are two things to keep in mind: An ambassador just does not represent the President of the United States, an ambassador represents the people of the United States of America. He represents this country and what we stand for.

If the President wants to have an aide next to him who does not come up here for advice and consent, he can have Donald Gregg around him night and day, if he wants, at the White House.

But, as an ambassador, Mr. Gregg does not represent the President. He represents America. It is not just enough to say, "Well, the President ought to have his appointments as ambassador." We, the representatives of the people of the United States, exercising our constitutional responsibilities, ought to have something to say about that, also.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield on the point?

Mr. HARKIN. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. SARBANES. The Senator is making a very important point.

I do not know where this notion came from that the President is somehow entitled simply to have his nominee when the Constitution is very clear that the Senate has to vote.

Why did the Founding Fathers ever give the responsibilities to the Senate in the first place? In fact, when they had the debates in the Constitutional Convention, there were some who wanted to give the President the power to make these choices, with no review, no checks and balances. In other words, the President would pick them and that would be it. That approach was rejected, and the Senate was given a role to play.

Now, we have to play that role responsibly, advisedly. We have to recognize what the President's desires are, but we still have a judgment ourselves to make about the qualities and the character and the ability of those nominees.

Mr. HARKIN. The Senator is absolutely right. I support what he said about the Constitutional Convention. The Founding Fathers in the early draft of the Constitution, gave the Senate the power to appoint ambassadors and Justices of the Supreme Court, because they felt that we, as the representatives of the people, should have that power. The Senator correctly noted there were those monarchists who wanted to give the President sole power over appointments. The Founding Fathers made appointments a shared responsibility between the President and the people's representatives in this body. We should not take that power lightly and turn it over to the President alone.

Unfortunately, I believe the defenders of Mr. Gregg misread the intention of the Constitution. They contend we must prove Donald Gregg unfit.

Again, there are those that contend the Senate must prove that Donald Gregg is unfit just as a prosecutor must show that a defendant is guilty of a criminal act. Well, the Founding Fathers thought otherwise.

Mr. Gregg, the nominee, must prove to the Senate that he is fit to be rewarded—yes, rewarded, the post of a U.S. ambassador.

Based on Mr. Gregg's previous testimony and hearings of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, it is my judgment that Donald Gregg has failed the test.

Too many questions about Mr. Gregg's credibility remain unanswered.

Too many doubts about Mr. Gregg's judgment linger.

For the Senate to approve the appointment of Donald Gregg to Ambassador of South Korea simply because it does not want to embarrass President Bush is an abdication of our responsibility to the Constitution and to the American people.

I might also add, aside from too many questions and too many doubts, there are still cases coming up. The Poindexter case is now being considered by the courts. It is better that we proceed cautiously than to have to come back and find that an Ambassador of the United States has been involved in countermanding the laws of the United States of America.

If the President wanted to avoid embarrassment, he could have withdrawn Mr. Gregg's name from consideration, as Senators PELL, CRANSTON, and others have suggested.

We are not deciding on Mr. Gregg's guilt or innocence. We should base our decision on a higher test—not of a criminal defendant but of an ambassador who is fit to be an ambassador or a representative to the people of America.

Let's look at the questions regarding Mr. Gregg's credibility.

Mr. Gregg claims that in his capacity as Vice President Bush's National Security Adviser he "never discussed the Contras" with then Vice President Bush. In fact, Mr. Gregg swore in his deposition before the Iran Contra Committee, that Contra-related issues were not "Vice Presidential."

Yet in September 1984, I believe the hearings show that Gregg briefed the Vice President on Contra resupply efforts. Yet in February 1986, he gave the Vice President his and Felix Rodriguez' views on Contra military needs.

Also, in April 1986, Mr. Gregg organized a meeting with the Vice President, the purpose of which was for Felix Rodriguez to brief Gregg and the Vice President on "the status of the war in El Salvador and resupply of the Contras."

Mr. Gregg also claims he was totally ignorant until August 1986 of the fact that his long-time CIA associate and close friend, Felix Rodriguez, was involved in illegal Contra resupply.

Yet the record shows that, in late 1984, Mr. Gregg recommended Rodriguez to a series of top United States-Latin American policymakers, and that as a result of these connections, Rodriguez was sent to see Gen. Paul Gorman at the U.S. Southern Command's Panama headquarters and then Ambassador Tom Pickering in El Salvador.

Now, listen to this: General Gorman's February 15, 1985, written communication with Pickering makes clear the real purpose of Rodriguez's Central America mission: "Rodriguez's primary commitment to the region is in [deleted] where he wants to assist the FDN."

So it is clear from General Gorman's communication that Gorman understood what Rodriguez was doing there and he still wrote to Thomas Pickering on February 15, 1985.

Yet we have Gregg's statement that he did not know about Rodriguez' involvement in August of 1986.

Well, you might say, "Well, basically, Rodriguez went and talked to Gorman and Gorman talked to Pickering, but no one talked to Gregg."

Pickering confirmed his arrangements with Rodriguez in a February 15 "eyes only" cable back to the State Department with the postscript instruction, "Please brief Don Gregg in the VP's office for me."

Mr. Gregg further claims that he never discussed Rodriguez' Contra resupply mission with Oliver North.

Yet, North's notebook—and I have a copy of it right here, a xeroxed copy of North's own notebook—indicates that Gregg held a detailed discussion on the 10th of September, 1985, with North and with then Lt. Col. James Steele, who was then the United States milgroup head in El Salvador, about the details of the then-prohibited military resupply of the Contras. This is North's own written notebook. Following that meeting, later on, on September 16, Colonel Steele called North about getting Gregg's friend Rodriguez to do more on maintaining aircraft used for air drops of military aid to the Contras.

So there is ample supporting evidence that the course of action outlined in North's September 10 note was subsequently pursued. In other words, on September 10, North, Steele, and Gregg met. On September 16, Steele calls North about getting Rodriguez to do more. On September 20, North writes Rodriguez directly saying, "Go ahead and help in servicing the Contra resupply effort" directly out of that September 10 meeting.

For Donald Gregg to contend that that meeting either did not take place or that one Contra issue was not raised is completely countermanded by the subsequent notes of Colonel North and Colonel Steele, and the letters from North to Rodriguez in El Salvador.

Then there is also the testimony of Colonel Steele during an interview with GAO that a September 10 meeting took place. However, Donald Gregg says that the September 10 meeting did not even take place. Yet the meeting is referred to in North's notebook and later Colonel Steele, swore that that September 10 meeting did, in fact, take place; yet Mr. Gregg denies there was ever such a meeting.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that Mr. Gregg, after so many years in the CIA, first in Vietnam and then later on with the Contras, all his life he has been involved in subterfuge and covering things up. It is hard to tell if Mr. Gregg even understands what the truth really is or what honesty is, or how to be forthright. Maybe there is some room for that attitude in the CIA, not for countermanding laws, but for subterfuge, for quietly doing things under the cloak of secrecy. But these traits do not work for an Ambassador of the United States and never, never—even in the CIA—violating the laws passed by the U.S. Congress.

Following that September 10 meeting, Steele helped Rodriguez in obtaining fuel and other supplies for the Contra operation. I personally asked the General Accounting Office to do a study of the transfer of fuel, and this is their report, in which they came back and said, yes, over $109,000 illegally transferred of U.S. fuel to the aircraft resupplying the Contras. Rodriguez knew exactly what was going on. He was involved in it and he was in constant contact with Donald Gregg.

First, we have to question Donald Gregg's veracity. Second, we have to question his judgment because it seems like we have the twin horns of a dilemma here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DIXON). I regret to inform the distinguished Senator from Iowa that his time has expired.

Mr. HARKIN. If I can have 3 more minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRANSTON. Can the Senator make it 2 minutes? The majority leader wishes to speak and the former majority leader wishes to speak.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the Senator. Either Mr. Gregg is openly not telling the truth about his involvement or he has terrible judgment, either one of which is enough that we should deny him this ambassadorial post. Mr. Gregg claims he never told the Vice President about Felix Rodriguez, Oliver North, and their involvement in the Contra supply operation. But, in fact, he knew about it in August 1986. Yet he did not tell his boss, the Vice President, about an illegal operation going on which he was warned had all the earmarkings of another Watergate. Instead, he waited 4 months to give an interview to the New York Times on December 13, 1986, and that, he says, is when the Vice President found out about it, when he opened his morning New York Times and read about it. So you have to ask if Donald Gregg, as an ambassador to South Korea, is going to keep the President informed or will the President have to read about it in the New York Times or the Washington Times or the Washington Post? Will Donald Gregg keep the Congress informed of what is happening in South Korea which is a very vital position in a vital part of Asia, vital to the security of the United States, or is he going to cover it all up as he has wanted to do all of his adult life in working for the CIA.

Mr. President, we have a case here of an individual who may possibly violated the laws of the United States and who has basically covered up his involvement and exercised extremely poor judgment in fulfilling his responsibilities to the then Vice President. For those reasons, his nomination as Ambassador ought to be denied by the U.S. Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa yields the floor. Who yield time?

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Virginia such time he may need to address this nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia is recognized for so much time as he may require. It is the understanding of the Chair that his side still retains 96 minutes.

Mr. ROBB. I thank the Chair. I apologize for not being able to be present for the first part of the debate on the nomination today. I have been involved in the impeachment trial of Judge Nixon, and I have just been able to break away a few minutes to come over and make this presentation.

Mr. President, I rise today to support the nomination of Donald P. Gregg to be this country's Ambassador to South Korea.

I do so, knowing that many of my party's most respected leaders do not share my conclusions, with regard to this difficult case, but feeling compelled to support the nomination, as a matter of conscience, and conviction. This is not, in any sense, just another ambassadorial nomination.

Because of the special circumstances surrounding the Gregg nomination, we are in effect passing judgment on the entire professional career of a man who has served our country honorably for 38 years. And because of his relationship to the President and what the President has said about him, we are also passing judgment on the veracity of the President himself.

With regard to the other ambassadorial appointments, we have considered or will consider, I share some of the general concerns expressed by Senator SARBANES and others—even though I am often inclined to grant the President wider latitude than many of my colleagues in this exercise of our constitutional duty to advise and consent. My support for Donald Gregg, however, is based on very different grounds than Presidential deference.

There is no doubt in my mind that Mr. Gregg's nomination would sail through virtually uncontested if he had not been linked to the Iran-Contra investigation, and I hope today to relieve you of any anxiety that Mr. Gregg's alleged link to the Iran-Contra affair might cause.

Before I attempt to address specific concerns that have been raised, however, I would like to discuss briefly Mr. Gregg's background and qualifications to serve as our Ambassador to South Korea, and some of the factors relating to how Mr. Gregg operated as then Vice President Bush's National Security Advisor.

Donald Gregg is, by all standards, a career public servant in the old-fashioned sense, with strong professional credentials.

He served with the CIA for 31 years, from 1951 to 1982. He spent 18 of those years in Asia, the region in which he is slated to represent our country.

For three of those years, 1973–75, he was our station chief in Korea.

Later, from 1979 to 1982, when he headed up the Intelligence Division of the National Security Council, he was also responsible for Asian affairs. He knows this part of the world well.

As the assistant to the Vice President, he was responsible for supporting Mr. Bush, in all the areas of foreign policy, defense, and intelligence. He had a small professional staff of three to cover all regional and functional responsibilities, and an overall staff of 10.

Many individuals have testified to his personal as well as his professional qualifications. My staff and I have spent considerable time assessing Mr. Gregg's qualifications and his credibility. We have talked with a range of people, on both sides of the political aisle, who have worked with or have come to know Mr. Gregg over the years. Without exception, these individuals have spoken about Mr. Gregg's exemplary skills and experience, and his integrity. Several individuals in my own State, and across the Nation, who have known Mr. Gregg since the 1950's, have contacted me to endorse his nomination enthusiastically and without qualification.

I regret my experience has not been the same with respect to every nomination we have considered to date.

One career foreign service officer I spoke with, just recently served at our Embassy in South Korea when Gregg was there. He described Gregg in the following way: "Professional, goes-by-the-book, straitlaced, thorough, and openminded."

Not too long ago, three respected academics, including the dean of the Georgetown School of Foreign Service, wrote a joint piece in the Washington Post about Mr. Gregg.

In response to criticism of Mr. Gregg, by some in the press, they wrote: "It is high time to blow the whistle on the cottage industry of character assassination" surrounding Gregg. With respect to his professional credentials, they added: "Don Gregg is one of America's most distinguished Asian experts.

"He has served a number of administrations with integrity. * * * On the basis of long and distinguished experience, and in consideration of the high esteem in which he is held by colleagues, as well as at this university, Don Gregg is singularly qualified to serve honorably and with professional distinction as Ambassador of the United States."

His credentials are attested to by Koreans themselves.

When his nomination was announced, Choi Woonsang, an adviser to Kim Dae Jung, the head of the largest opposition party, had this to say: "When he [Gregg] was here as station chief, he worked behind the scenes to help the course of the democratic movement and tried to help Kim Dae Jung quietly."

While some Koreans may bristle at his former CIA background, many also remember his quiet efforts in standing up for human rights and against abuses by the Korean Intelligence Agency [KCIA]. When the KCIA, which had been responsible for numerous human rights abuses, kidnaped Mr. Kim in Japan in 1973, Mr. Gregg conveyed strong United States displeasure about the kidnaping to Seoul. He also played an important role in persuading the Korean Government to replace Lee Hu Rak, then head of the KCIA, in an effort to make the regime more humane and respectful of human rights.

I have spoken with reputable individuals involved in the Iran-Contra inquiry. In the course of collecting information for this lengthy investigation, they came into contact with a broad range of individuals and came to know them with a degree of intimacy.

Don Gregg stands out as one who was singularly cooperative and one they hold in high esteem. Indeed, no less than the respected counsel to the Iran-Contra Committee, Arthur Lyman, has told me, that during the course of his inquiry, he came to view Gregg as a man of integrity and of principle.

In describing Mr. Gregg, his professional colleagues most often refer to him as straight-laced, in his work, and as a man who follows by-the-book behavior on the job.

As a professionally trained intelligence officer, Gregg is not prone to idle gossip. He knows what it is to work in a compartmentalized environment as a professional, observing the "need to know" dictum almost to a fault. The theme that emerges is of a man whose tasks were always done by the book cleared through the organizational hierarchy, and consistent with the law and respect for our institutions.

Despite this consistently praiseworthy picture of Donald Gregg's skills, of his record of service to his country, and of his integrity, concerns have arisen about his nomination—concerns, that I fully understand and that merit examination. I want to praise the distinguished majority whip, Senator CRANSTON, for appropriately raising these concerns.

But in examining these concerns, we must do so within the overall context of the Iran-Contra affair, how the Vice President's staff operated, and how Mr. Gregg himself operated. These items are crucial to a reasoned evaluation of the evidence.

I do not think I need say much about the Iran-Contra affair, in its entirety. Many of you lived through it as it unfolded here in Congress, and I understand better since coming to this institution how deep some of these scars are.

We also know the degree to which high-ranking U.S. officials, who had both the operational authority and the institutional resources neither knew about the scope and magnitude of the secret North operations, nor were able to bring what they sensed to a halt. This was true even for the two most important Cabinet Secretaries in this affair, the Secretary of State and Secretary of Defense.

On the Vice President's staff, Gregg operated with limited resources while dealing with an almost unlimited portfolio. He did not have a whole department at his disposal. His priorities were to staff the Vice President and assist him on those issues in which Mr. Bush showed the keenest interest. Given the Vice President's strong interest in foreign affairs, Mr. Gregg's days were full, trying to keep track of quite literally the whole world.

Time did not permit Mr. Gregg to focus exclusively on any one issue unless the Vice President made it a clear priority such as supporting the INF deployments in Europe, and any broad involvement in other issues had to be left to agencies specifically charged with those responsibilities.

Some have asked whether it is "possible" that Gregg didn't know about his close friend, Felix Rodriguez' role in Oliver North's illegal Contra resupply operation.

Understanding Mr. Gregg's CIA training becomes important in considering this question. As a professional, Gregg was used to asking questions on a "need-to-know" basis. If there were an issue with which he was not dealing, he did not delve into it, unless there were a compelling need.

For Rodriguez' part, he was a seasoned operative, who fully operated under the principle of "need-to-know."

And it is wholly consistent with Rodriguez' profile that he did not discuss his activities in the Contra resupply operation until he started to let out bits of information after August 8, 1986. Rodriguez said that Oliver North instructed him not to "discuss his activities" with Gregg, and it was only after his falling out with North that he said anything at all to Gregg. And even then, by his testimony, he only revealed limited parts of the problem, still omitting the true nature of his involvement and the existence of a permanent illegal, resupply operation.

But once Gregg learned about "improprieties" in what he believed to be the privately funded, widely known, and otherwise legal Contra resupply operation, he did ask questions. He immediately attempted to contact North for an explanation, and when his phone calls were not returned he convened a meeting of relevant officials who had institutional responsibility for Central America to look into the problem.

In the context of the overall Iran-Contra affair, where—quite literally—almost a whole government was ignorant of the secret operations taking place, it is understandable that Gregg did not piece together the disparate bits of information he had. He was not alone among many honorable men and women in this regard. Oliver North's interest in the perfectly legal "private" Contra aid effort was well known.

The administration's sympathies were no secret. But it was only after the shocking revelations in November 1986 that we learned about the size, scope, and highly secretive nature of North's illegal involvement, in which all the people who should have been involved or knowledgeable simply were not.

Indeed, it is only in hindsight, after we learned what we now know about this affair and have put the entire episode under a microscopic examination, that we ask if Gregg could have known or done more—and he himself has acknowledged asking himself these same questions. And on two occasions he even "offered to resign" because he felt if he had recognized and pinpointed the illegal activity earlier he could have alerted his boss and others to what was going on and perhaps saved him and many other high Government officials from much of the anguish of the whole Iran-Contra affair.

Nonetheless, I realize how deep the sense of betrayal Congress felt when it was revealed that executive branch officials had deliberately lied and deceived congressional panels, and understandably you want some reassurance that Donald Gregg has not lied to the U.S. Senate in his confirmation process.

I am going to try to clear up the factual concerns that have been raised, but I ought to add that if I thought after a thorough review of the relevant facts, that Donald Gregg had lied to this Congress, particularly in light of the fact that he was required to testify under oath, I would not only urge you to vote against him, but I would want to see him indicted for perjury.

So let me address the specific concerns that have been raised, and give you my assessment of them.

Concern has been expressed because Gregg wrote a proposed covert action finding in 1982 while he was seconded to the NSC and advocated military assistance to the Contras. Response: Indeed he did. It was consistent with administration policies, consistent with his personal views, consistent with the law, and perhaps most important, consistent with a desire to bring Congress up to date on expanded intelligence activities not covered in the previous year's intelligence finding.

Concern has been expresed in connection with the allegation that Gregg introduced his longtime friend, Felix Rodriguez, to Oliver North. Response: Even if Gregg had introduced Rodriguez to North, it would not demonstrate impropriety on Gregg's part. But in fact, William Bode, then a special assistant to the Under Secretary of State for Security Assistance, Science and Technology, acknowledged in a 1989 letter that he made the introduction between North and Rodriguez.

Concern has been expressed about Gregg's statement under oath that prior to November 1986, he and Vice President Bush "had never discussed the Contras. We had no responsibility for it. We had no expertise in it." Response: Gregg and the Vice President did discuss the Contras, in a general sense, as he has made clear in a number of statements. His staff also periodically sent memos to the Vice President updating him on the situation in Latin America.

The quote in question, however, is taken out of context from his deposition before the Iran-Contra committee investigators. It refers to the time when Felix Rodriguez came to Gregg, on August 8, 1986, and told him that gun-running types including Gen. Richard Secord, were ripping off privately donated funds from the Contras, and that North had some kind of a tangential connection. Gregg called North numerous times to clarify the situation, but North never returned his phone calls.

Therefore, Gregg continued to look into the matter, by convening a meeting on August 12 with senior Central American policymakers who had direct operational and institutional oversight for Central American policy.

Representatives were there from the State Department, the head of Latin American affairs on the NSC, Defense, CIA, as well as our Ambassador to El Salvador and a deputy from North's office.

As Robert Earle, North's deputy who attended the August 12 meeting, said in his May 30, 1987, testimony before the Iran-Contra committee:

> * * * he [Gregg] had been made aware of a "problem" and wanted to make sure the appropriate parts of the U.S. Government that had differing degrees of concern with it were aware of it so they could deal with it.

In short, absent a response from North, Gregg alerted those offices with direct responsibility for the implementation of Central American policy to a potential problem, and trusted that they would address it. Given what he knew then, it was anything but clear that the Boland amendment was being violated. The information Gregg operated on dealt primarily with problems relating to the diversion of privately related funds and the involvement of unscrupulous individuals; "North's illegal involvement" was still unclear.

There are those who say that Gregg should have alerted the Vice President, and in hindsight Gregg certainly agrees. But at the time, it was still unclear exactly what was happening, and by this time—August 1986—the Government was gearing up for the legitimate resupply of the Contras approved by the House on June 25. Rather than pass on still ambiguous information, or what Gregg called murky business, he acted in an organizationally appropriate sense.

To repeat, what I stated, at the outset, it is only in retrospect, that illegal activity in Nicaragua, is a subject of such focus. Given his breadth of responsibilities, and the ambiguous details he had, it is by no means axiomatic, that this sketchy information, should have been brought immediately to Vice President Bush's attention. But I will concede that there is room for honest difference of opinion on whether he should have acted in some other way.

Finally, we must recognize a contradiction here. If Gregg were the seasoned operative who was going to great lengths to secretly aid the Contras it simply would not make sense, for him to fail to take the necessary steps to ensure that they would not be undermined. Yet, the evidence overwhelmingly points to the latter, strongly suggesting that like so many others, he was still operating essentially in the dark.

Concern has been expressed about two April 1986 memos, to the Vice President, sent over Gregg's signature, to set up a briefing by Rodriguez for the Vice President on the status of the war in El Salvador and the "resupply of the Contras." The testimony is uncontroverted that Gregg neither saw nor had a hand in the preparation of these two scheduling memos. It was routine procedure, for Gregg not to be involved in scheduling documents, unless they dealt with heads of state. In sworn testimony, we have been told that the senior staff secretary, Phyllis Byrne prepared these memos under the supervision of Sam Watson, Gregg's deputy with responsibility for Central America. Watson, Byrne, and Stephanie Vandevander, Watson's secretary, have all testified to these facts under oath.

In short, Gregg never saw the memos.

And perhaps most important, when Gregg did discover these memos during the Vice President's document search in December 1986 he noted the ambiguous references to the Contras and promptly turned them over to the House Intelligence Committee. These memos were not put in a burn bag, or lost, or shredded.

Nonetheless, Gregg, in seeking to explain the reference to the "resupply of the Contras," speculated that it meant "resupply of copters." This has led some to doubt Gregg's credibility, but let's look at the facts.

Helicopter resupply for the Salvador counterinsurgency was discussed in Rodriguez's meeting with the Vice President. But Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady, who attended the meeting, has testified that "no discussion of the Contras occurred at the meeting in question."

The meeting's discussion of helicopter resupply for El Salvador, however, prompted a followup June 3 memo by Sam Watson to the Vice President discussing the issue of spare parts for the Hughes helicopters in El Salvador eliciting a handwritten response on the memo by Vice President Bush "SW, which stands for Sam Watson, Good! GB, standing for George Bush."

To recap here, the facts are the following. The memos were not prepared or seen by Gregg. Helicopter resupply in El Salvador for counterinsurgency efforts was the topic of discussion, not the Contras. There was followup to the discussion to which the Vice President responded directly. And finally, when these memos were uncovered by Gregg, he voluntarily turned them over to the appropriate people because of the ambiguous reference.

Another item, that has caused concern is a 1985 cable from Gen. Paul Gorman, United States Southcom in Panama, to Tom Pickering, then our Ambassador in El Salvador, after Gorman met with Rodriguez, in early 1985. Gorman wrote that "Rodriguez wants to assist the FDN—the Contras." Despite the reference here, Gorman testified under oath on July 22, 1987, "That he never associated Rodriguez with North or the Resistance." But most important, there is no evidence to suggest that Mr. Gregg ever saw the cable or knew of its contents.

Concern has also been expressed about a cable from Tom Pickering, our United States Ambassador to El Salvador. After he met with Rodriguez his cable to Assistant Secretary of State Langhorne Motley included: "Please brief Don Gregg in the VP's office for me." Gregg testified under oath before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on May 12, 1989, "that he was never briefed on this cable," and no evidence that such a briefing actually took place has been cited. This request to brief Gregg was the last item in a memo that discussed in detail Rodriguez's ideas on counterinsurgency tactics in El Salvador.

Concerns have been expressed about Oliver North's testimony at his criminal trial on April 11, 1989, when he said "That in the fall of 1985 he discussed details of Rodriguez's mission to aid military resupply of the Contras with Gregg." This statement needs to be compared with North's original July 8, 1987, original testimony. When asked about Gregg, North pointedly said, under oath; "I don't know what he knew." In contrast, when North was facing criminal charges he had every incentive to implicate as many high level officials as possible. If one were to choose between the two statements, I would contend that greater weight should be given to North's original testimony.

Concern has been expressed in response to a February 4, 1986, trip report, routed through Gregg, to the Vice President on United States strategy in Central America. It bore a marginal note, from Gregg, stating: "Felix agrees with this. It is a major shortcoming." The this, refers to the memo's discussion, of the administration's inability actively to assist the Contras because of congressional restrictions. A thorough reading of the memo demonstrates that its discussion of the situation in El Salvador, and the United States efforts to oppose the Sandinista regime, reflected a frustration with the Boland amendment, which prohibited United States assistance to the Contras.

If Gregg knew about the Rodriguez operation, he would have had little reason, or incentive, to make this notation. The notation actually suggests that when Gregg and Rodriguez did discuss Nicaragua before August 1986, Rodriguez was indeed successful in discussing the Contras in only the most general terms as North had asked him to do.

Concern has been expressed because Rodriguez called Gregg's deputy, Sam Watson, in early October 1986, to tell him that a plane loaded with supplies for the Contras was missing after a flight to Nicaragua. Response: Rodriguez had a falling out with North when he learned that Secord and others were overcharging the Contras for items, and as of June 25 the two ceased speaking. Rodriguez says he wanted someone in Washington to he alerted to the plane crash. Unable to call North, he instead called Watson. In fact, the news of the plane crash was all over the media almost simultaneously with the phone call, and as such, was a futile gesture. The phone call says more about Rodriguez' desire to be a player than any alleged Gregg role.

Concern has been expressed about North's declaration to Gregg that he was the "only one who could control Felix." Response: There is not a shred of evidence that Gregg controlled Rodriguez' activities, and this phrase is hyperbole. Second, this was North's characterization, used after he and Rodriguez had their falling out, and Rodriguez said he was determined to put a halt to the corruption in the Contra resupply operation. North called Gregg in the vain hope that he could get Gregg to intercede and prevent Rodriguez from interfering in his activities.

Finally, concern has been expressed about the plausiability of Gregg's sworn statements that he did not discuss Rodriguez' allegations with the Vice President until after Gregg's interview with the New York Times on December 12, 1986. Response: Between August 8 and December 12, as more information came to light, Gregg and his superior, Craig Fuller, the Vice President's Chief of Staff, discussed the unfolding story numerous times. Eventually, Fuller approved a Gregg interview with the Times, in which Gregg sought to set the record straight. Given the organizational hierarchy of the staff, it would have actually been more appropriate, for Fuller to have alerted Vice President Bush of the interview, and for that matter, to have gone to the Vice President to say that there was a problem he needed to raise to Vice President Bush's attention. This is all the more the case since Gregg and Fuller discussed the issue countless times.

In retrospect, Gregg feels that he should have pieced together, more of the information and gone more forcefully to Fuller, or to Bush to say there was a problem, although at the time he acted in an organizationally correct manner in calling together the August 12 meeting.

There is a revealing vignette here. During the October-December timeframe, one of Gregg's superiors has described him, as being "obsessed with clearing his name" and "getting the truth out." Indeed, Gregg's interview with the times was done against the advice of Craig Fuller and others in positions of political responsibility, who felt "the less said the better." But Gregg was adamant that the story be told.

Rather than the crafty, all-knowing political operative, we get a picture here of a dedicated public servant, concerned with the issues and setting the record straight.

These, are the primary concerns. What has been too little discussed is the fact that the Iran-Contra committee, the Tower Investigation and the Independent Counsel turned up hundreds of thousands of cables, memos, diary entries, and exchanges and discussions between those who we know played a role in planning and carrying out the activities of the Iran-Contra affair. All told, more than 300,000 documents were examined, and over 500 witnesses were interviewed.

Throughout, these three investigations, only a handful of isolated references to Don Gregg have been found.

Instead of multiple references to Don Gregg, we find only handful of discreet references with seeming inconsistencies. In this sense, Gregg's standing is actually similar to that of Paul Gorman, Tom Pickering, Craig Fuller, and others who have cropped up anomalously in one memo or another, but whose credibility has not been questioned.

And in the instance of Tom Pickering, he has already been confirmed for the important post of representing our country, at the United Nations.

There may still be unanswered questions in the Iran-Contra affair. I believe that if there were riveting concerns that were uncovered, far from shying away from them, we should not fear to follow them. But after a reasonably thorough examination of the evidence relating in any way to Donald Gregg, I do not believe that this nomination is the place for these questions, and this is not the man to be held hostage to them.

There is a temptation in a situation such as this where legitimate concerns were raised about a highly unique event in our history, and where an individual, has been put in the position of making repeated denials to assume that he must be guilty of something.

But when we take the time to consider each concern, we find an explanation. And when we evaluate the integrity and credibility of the nominee, we find every reason to believe them and little reason to doubt them.

His biggest sin seems to be that he served in Government when our system broke down. But the integrity of our system demands that we not allow a whole generation of public servants to be tainted unjustly.

When questions are raised we should look at them. But when there are answers, let us move on.

Honest and decent individuals will differ in their assessment of these concerns. But a truly rigorous analysis reveals that there are at most a few discrete anomalies that there is no solid evidence, and that this is a case of guilt, by association.

In weighing, the concerns, I relied not only on my personal assessment of Donald Gregg, but because of my great respect for the distinguished majority whip, and others involved, in this debate I spent a good deal of time, evaluating the evidence, and talking with a wide range of people.

I, or my staff, have spoken, to Felix Rodriguez, Sam Watson, various staff members in the State Department, and Craig Fuller. Their stories, all basically match, and substantiate Gregg's lack of involvement.

I have received assurances, from the Office of the Legal Adviser, headed by Judge Sofaer, who has overseen Gregg's nomination, and stands behind his testimony, that if he believed Gregg, had misled Congress in any way, at a minimum, Sofaer and his staff, would have withdrawn from standing behind Gregg's nomination.

I have talked to career foreign service officers who have known Donald Gregg well over many years.

I have talked with the Secretary of State, Jim Baker, who assures me that he has no reason not to believe Don Gregg and his complete testimony.

My staff and I have querried Don Gregg at length, and have concluded that Gregg has been consistent in all of his statements and consistently loyal to his country. He is described by friends and professional acquaintances alike as a straight-laced player who would not go outside of the law.

Finally, and significantly, I have spoken directly to President Bush.

He has given Don Gregg his unqualified endorsement as well as reassuring me that he knows of no potential revelation in the future that would cause me or any Senator to regret voting to affirm Donald Gregg, as our Ambassador to South Korea. He has thus put his own prestige and credibility on the line as well.

As I indicated earlier, Donald Gregg has acknowledged, in hindsight, that he could have done more, particularly during the critical August to December timeframe, and offered to "resign" not once but twice, because he felt that he had let the Vice President down. But both times, George Bush chose not to accept his resignation.

I would also like to note that Gregg was hardly alone among honorable men and women who, if their instincts had been more finely tuned, possibly could have brought the unique and highly distressing Iran-Contra affair to an end earlier.

I'd have to concede that a vote against Donald Gregg carries little if any political risk. Few Americans will ever hear of his detailed defense. But for me, it's a matter of conscience. Just as the integrity of our institution was violated during the Iran-Contra episode by those who ran a separate operation in violation of laws passed by Congress, and further flouted these laws by lying to Congress simply because in the course of repeatedly addressing this body's concerns, the appearance has been created that Gregg must have been involved in the Iran-Contra affair and therefore certainly should not be rewarded with an ambassadorship.

I believe we would be treating Don Gregg unfairly if we reject him, and I believe we would be sending our career professionals a very troubling message.

My vote to confirm Mr. Gregg is going to be made after searching my conscience and examining the evidence.

It is done in the hope that we can put the unfortunate period of executive-legislative mistrust behind us and begin anew in the spirit of a sustainable, bipartisan foreign policy, based upon genuine and full cooperation between both branches of government.

And finally, I hope my colleagues will join me in voting to confirm Mr. Gregg and let him proceed with the challenging role of representing the United States in South Korea.

Mr. CRANSTON. Will the Senator from Virginia yield?

Mr. ROBB. I will be happy to yield to my friend, the distinguished Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PRYOR). The Senator from California.

Mr. CRANSTON. Let me first say I am looking forward to working with the Senator from Virginia on many matters in the future as we are working today, together, to seek to generate support for people of Poland and Hungary as they escape from communism; something that we have witnessed together.

I regret we differ on the Gregg nomination. Let me say it has been a matter of conscience and conviction with me, too. Conscience led me to do the thorough job I sought to do with regard to this nomination and conscience and conviction led me to oppose the nomination after going through that exercise.

When one is sworn in before a Senate or a House committee, one takes the following oath: "Do you swear that the testimony you are about to give will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth so help you God?"

Gregg took that oath before two committees, at least, and he proceeded to state under oath that he had never discussed the Contras with President Bush.

Does the Senator from Virginia really believe that Gregg told the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth before those committees?

Mr. ROBB. I would have to tell the distinguished Senator from California, after complimenting him on the leadership of the delegation to Poland which he referred to earlier, that I do, indeed, after a long searching examination of every point and concern that has been raised, to the best of my ability, and in concert with checking with any body of officials both inside and outside the administration as well as career Foreign Service officers, and others, that, yes indeed, Donald Gregg was telling the truth to the best of his ability on each of the appearances that he had before the Committee on Foreign Relations as he was in other circumstances.

Mr. CRANSTON. The Foreign Relation Committee, as the Senator knows since he serves on that committee, received subpoenaed documents covering the record very, very thoroughly. In the committee files there is a stack of memo after memo from Donald Gregg to Vice President Bush, initialed by Donald Gregg—the Senator has referred to several of them—on the subject of Contra policy.

There are margin comments in Gregg's hand about Felix Rodriguez' views of Contras' military needs, on memos to Vice President Bush; there are memos from Gregg to Bush telling him Rodriguez will come to brief the Vice President on the status of Contra resupply efforts. The Senator has commented on that, has his interpretation on that. There are also a host of memos to Gregg to help him brief the Vice President on a whole series of NSC meetings that were about Contra policy.

I refer, in the Iran-Contra committee report to September 18, 1984, two pages; April 12, 1985, six pages; April 22, 1985, two pages; January 9, 1986, two pages; May 26, 1986, two pages; December 12, 1986, two pages.

Given all that documentary evidence, how does that square with the statement given under oath, "I never discussed Contras with the Vice President?"

Mr. ROBB. I suggest to the distinguished Senator that I thought I had responded to all of the specific matters of concern in my prepared statement. He did repeatedly discuss the Contras in a general sense with any number of officials. That has been fully testified to on repeated occasions.

What he did not discuss with the Vice President at that time was any of the North illegal resupply operation. The Contras, generally, as you know during that particular period of time, remained a priority for the administration. It was a part of an ongoing discussion. But many key officials, including the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Defense, were simply among those out of the loop. And all of the evidence that I have cited and had been previously raised by the distinguished Senator and others, indicated that there Donald Gregg simply was not in the loop with respect to Iran-Contra matters as they are generally understood; that is, the illegal resupply operation.

Indeed, Felix Rodriguez testified that Oliver North specifically told him not to tell Donald Gregg about that activity.

Mr. CRANSTON. What the transcript of the Iran-Contra hearings reveals, and I have it before me; Gregg was asked:

"Now, did you report any of this to the Vice President?" That was the August 12 meeting after the August 8 meeting where, August 8, Rodriguez had told Gregg about all this involvement of his with Contra activities, and other people, that alarmed him and led him to believe there would be a Watergate-type scandalous situation develop.

Then Gregg convened a meeting on August 12 with a number of people in the Government to discuss all this.

And then, after talking about all that, and answering questions on all that he was asked:

"Now, did you report any of this to the Vice President?"

After a moment or two he says, "I spent a great deal of my time trying to send things to the Vice President that I think are really Vice Presidential. I try to keep him focused, keep in focus arms control or Mideast peace or things of that nature. We had never discussed the Contras. We had no responsibility for it."

I do not see how that can mean anything but he never discussed the Contras?

Mr. ROBB. I suggest that is entirely consistent with what I mentioned in my remarks today about the relationship.

One thing I did not include in my remarks and could have, although I thought that about 45 minutes or whatever I took was adequate to address all of the topics and concerns that had been raised, was the kind of relationship that Donald Gregg had with the Vice President in that particular capacity. It was a largely formal relationship. He reported through, for the most part, Craig Fuller.

He did have a very large portfolio. He felt that he should bring to the Vice President's attention those matters that he considered vice presidential, and at that point he did not, as he has acknowledged—and any number of others acknowledged—understand that Oliver North was involved in an illegal resupply effort to the Contras. He continued to talk about it. As I indicated, he talked to Craig Fuller repeatedly.

But, as others have testified and, indeed, as Donald Gregg mentioned to me, he said: George Bush simply did not gossip about these types of affairs. He received formal briefings from staff officers and that his role was much more limited. He tried to focus on international affairs, on matters that were truly what he believed to be vice presidential.

We do not have to agree with his assessment, but that is what he explained, and it is consistent.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield on that point? Who was it that brought Felix Rodriguez in to see the Vice President? It was Donald Gregg, was it not?

Mr. ROBB. If I recall correctly——

Mr. SARBANES. It was Donald Gregg, was it not? Donald Gregg brought Felix Rodriguez to see the Vice President, is that not correct?

Mr. ROBB. On the Contra resupply operation in El Salvador, I have just demonstrated——

Mr. SARBANES. How does that square with the Senator's notion of Gregg being removed from the Vice President and doing everything on a formal basis and reporting it through Fuller when he trots Rodriguez into the Vice President's office to have a meeting with Felix Rodriguez?

Mr. ROBB. Helicopter resupply in El Salvador was discussed. The Secretary of the Treasury attended that meeting, and indicated that Contra resupply, as we understand it, was not discussed.

All I can tell my colleague is that all of the people who purported to take part in that meeting have a consistent story.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD right at this point, since we are back to this resupply of the Contras and this extraordinary effort to portray it as resupply of the copters, two editorials from the New York Times, one of which is headed "The Iran-Copter Affair."

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, May 22, 1989]

THE IRAN-COPTER AFFAIR

Donald Gregg, who was Vice President Bush's national security adviser during the Iran-contra affair, can't explain how the words "resupply of the contras" appeared in two memos about a White House meeting he and Mr. Bush attended in the spring of 1986. One reason he needs to explain those words is that both he and Mr. Bush deny early knowledge of the illegal arming of the rebels in Nicaragua. Another is that President Bush has nominated him to be Ambassador to South Korea.

So what explanation does Mr. Gregg give the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in its hearings on his nomination? He says there must have been a misunderstanding. It wasn't contras at all. Those words must be "a garbled reference to something like resupply of the copters" in El Salvador. "I've been thinking about this for two years, and it's the only thing that I can come up with that would come close to explaining that agenda item."

That's hardly credible. Neither are other aspects of Mr. Gregg's testimony. He admits learning about White House involvement with the contra resupply operation in August 1986, yet claims he didn't tell the Vice President. He says he didn't even tell Mr. Bush what he told The New York Times the following December, after the scandal broke, leaving his boss to read it in the newspaper.

Mr. Gregg asks the Senate to believe that he never discussed the contras with Mr. Bush. He did recommend Felix Rodriguez, an old C.I.A. comrade, for service with Oliver North of the National Security Council staff, and introduced Mr. Rodriguez to Mr. Bush. But he maintains that nobody realized that Mr. Rodriguez then became Mr. North's contra helper in Central America. These propositions will be so hard for the senators to accept that the wonder is President Bush's willingness to expose Mr. Gregg to confirmation hearings.

He risks similar exposure with the nomination of John Negroponte, who ran the covert contra operation in Honduras, to be Ambassador to Mexico. Mr. Negroponte faces questioning about American inducements to Honduras to help the contras and Mr. Bush's denial that aid to Honduras entailed any "quid pro quo" of hidden contra support.

Some Republicans on the committee complain about all the questioning. It amounts to harsh partisanship, they insist. A President is usually entitled to have the ambassador of his choice approved; besides, Mr. Gregg has rendered long and loyal service to the C.I.A. and other Government agencies.

But the flaws exposed here are in Mr. Gregg's answers, not the senators' questions. Even his Republican supporters left the room during hard questioning of his veracity.

Describing his contra-copter explanation to a senator who came in late, Mr. Gregg testified: "I don't know how it went over, but it was the best I could do." It didn't go over. Mr. Gregg is obviously loyal—but to what and to whom? The question at the heart of the Iran-contra affair is, Did high officials recognize their loyality to law, not only their superiors? Mr. Gregg has not yet given the Senate a satisfactory answer.

[From the New York Times, June 20, 1989]

MR. GREGG STILL LACKS CREDIBILITY

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee continues to consider Donald Gregg for ambassador to South Korea despite a second round of incredible testimony. Mr. Gregg, who was Vice President Bush's national security adviser during the Iran-contra affair, persists in saying he knew little about and told his boss nothing about illicit aid to the Nicaraguan rebels before late 1986—after the general public learned of it.

In testimony a month ago, Mr. Gregg tried to explain that two White House briefing memorandums about "resupply of the contras," which was forbidden by Congress really meant "resupply of the copters," a legal operation in El Salvador. That kind of testimony left the committee with a dilemma: doubt his testimony, and thus doubt his candor and loyalty to law, or believe it, and seriously question his judgment. Last week he testified again but leaves the committee the same distasteful choice—flagrant falsehood or flawed judgment. Either way, he has not earned confirmation.

In the Vice President's office, Mr. Gregg was supposed to be George Bush's eyes and ears on the world. Yet he claims to have known little of the contra involvement and withheld for months the clues he admitted learning in the summer of 1986. He contended again last week that he informed Mr. Bush of his knowledge by way of a December 1986 interview he gave the New Times. The Iran-contra affair came to public light the previous month.

Some committee Republicans charge that Democrats are using Mr. Gregg's nomination as a weapon against the President. But that doesn't mean he has convinced them, either, which may explain why the Republicans haven't joined in the questioning.

Another nominee, John Negroponte, has won confirmation as Ambassador to Mexico after somehow persuading the committee that he had no new information about illegal contra aid. But Mr. Gregg can't dispel the suspicions that first arose with the downing of an American cargo plane in Nicaragua in October 1986. That was when Felix Rodriguez, an old friend from years in the C.I.A. and an Oliver North agent in Central America, tried to phone Mr. Gregg with a warning that a secret operation was unraveling. Ever since, investigators have been trying to pin down what Mr. Gregg knew and when.

One of President Bush's admirable qualities is loyalty to staff, but the Senate needs to know about Mr. Gregg's loyalty. Was it to his boss, to the law or to an agenda that required deceiving Congress? The Foreign Relations Committee, which votes on the nomination today, has a right to conclude that the nominee has yet to display the credibility necessary for confirmation.

Mr. SARBANES. Quoting from the editorial:

Describing his contra-copter explanation to a senator who came in late, Mr. Gregg testified: "I don't know how it went over, but it was the best I could do." It didn't go over. Mr. Gregg is obviously loyal—but to what and to whom? The question at the heart of the Iran-contra affair is, Did high officials recognize their loyalty to law, not only their superiors? Mr. Gregg has not yet given the Senate a satisfactory answer.

Mr. ROBB. That is precisely the difficulty that Donald Gregg faces in this whole matter. Little snippets and pieces of information are known. The entire context of most of these matters is not known.

I have spent a great deal of time with both Donald Gregg and various other Members who were involved and I am convinced, based on their testimony on the public record as well as personal conversations, that all of the descriptions of these events square and that Donald Gregg, in particular, is telling the truth. His explanation was, in effect: "I speculate that that might have been why the Secretary and Sam Watson used that particular language. It was simply a mistake and they meant to refer to the "copter resupply, not the Contra resupply."

But, in hindsight, I think that was easily subjected to ridicule and he probably wished he had not speculated because he first said he did not know.

Mr. SARBANES. He said he had been thinking about it for 2 years and then he put that forward as his explanation of it. He did not say he did it on the spur of the moment. He said he had been mulling about that thing for, I do not know, 1½ or 2 years.

Mr. ROBB. I would suggest that this demonstrates precisely the thoughtful individual that I think Donald Gregg is under the circumstances. He was troubled by any inconsistency.

Again, I would remind the Senator that it was Don Gregg, when he went through his files as part of discovery, who discovered these, made note of the fact that there was a potential inconsistency or anamoly in this particular document, and turned them over voluntarily. He did not shred them. He did not burn them. He said, "I can't explain it."

That is the same concern he is demonstrating here. I get the feeling of a very conscientious professional who has spent, as I say, 38 years in the service of his Government, 31 of those years in the Central Intelligence Agency, who was doing everything he could to conscientiously flush out the record and put the whole record before the American people.

Mr. SARBANES. If the Senator will yield further, first let me simply say hallelujah that he did not burn and shred it. When have we reached the point that the failure to burn or shred becomes a very strong positive statement on behalf of an individual? We ought to be able to take it for granted that Government officials will not destroy relevant Government documents.

Mr. ROBB. He voluntarily produced the documents is the point I was making.

Mr. SARBANES. I think earlier the Senator talked about Gregg's CIA background and his exchanges with Rodriguez being very compartmentalized and kept on a need-to-know basis. That was used as an explanation for the fact that Gregg did not probe further to obtain information from Rodriguez about what was happening and therefore becomes, in effect, a validation of Gregg not finding out, as I understand it.

I would submit that this thinking of Gregg is actually more reflected in an exchange that I had with him early on in which I said, "Let me ask you this question as an experienced intelligence officer. We often hear the term 'deniability' used. And I would like to know what your understanding of that term is?"

He said, "Well, there used to be a phrase when I went into the agency in the fifties, there was a phrase that you used to hear a lot called 'plausible deniability' and this was an effort to sort of protect the top from what the people at the lower level were doing."

He then went on to say that President Eisenhower was not happy about it and you had the Powers' affair and you do not really hear much about it any more.

Then I went on and said: "The concept essentially that you establish is in effect a cover story, I take it, that enables you to consistently hold the position that denies something has happened when in fact it has happened."

And Gregg said to that, "Yes, in individual cases, yes."

Now, one has to look at a lot of this perhaps in light of that response.

Mr. ROBB. I would submit to the Senator, if I may, that is simply a description of what plausible deniability is. It had no application to his action in this particular case.

Mr. SARBANES. I understand that.

Just to follow along here, I was particularly struck by the statement of the Senator from Virginia made in the committee at the time of the voting on Gregg in support of him. I quote the Senator now. I do this in light of this exchange that I had with Gregg about deniability. The Senator said: "I feel that his responses to the questions that have been put to him by this committee have been as reasonable and believable as I think we could expect under the circumstances."

Mr. ROBB. If I could take back the words, I would not have qualified it with "under the circumstances." That is one of the reasons I prepared my entire testimony this time, so that I would carefully craft the words and know how they fit with all of the other testimony, because I think, frankly, the man is getting a bum rap.

Mr. CRANSTON. The Senator indicated in earlier remarks that the relationship between Gregg and the Vice President was a fairly formal thing and that he did not get into a lot of matters with him. However, in the testimony, Gregg was asked: "Did you report to the Vice President any of Felix's calls to you?" His response is pretty revealing, the sort of thing he would call to the attention to the Vice President. He said, "Yeah, I reported, I think, in some of the other documents. There was a DIA report. There was a discussion. There was the one that he described"—that is Felix—"and wrote a long letter to me about, and if he called and said he'd had a particular success, I might mention that to him"—meaning the Vice President—"because the Vice President had been so struck by him, just as I had been."

That indicates a pretty casual working relationship of bringing tidbits to the Vice President's attention.

The Senator from Virginia has stated a while back in his formal remarks that the quote from Gregg saying that he never discussed the Contras with Vice President Bush was taken out of context. Would the Senator explain how that was taken out of context?

Mr. ROBB. I indicated it related to a different conversation. I think if you will reread the testimony I gave you, it tries, as best as it can, to put it into the proper context. But I indicated that Gregg repeatedly indicated that he did discuss the situation in Central America in a general way. He continued to discuss, in the August 8 through 12 interview with the New York Times, the situation with Gregg fuller. He never at that point was able to put all of the pieces together in a way that, after the fact, in hindsight, he said he wishes he had. And because of the fact that he did not, he twice submitted his resignation. He felt that he had let the Vice President down in not connecting up the dots in a timely fashion so that the Vice President would fully be appraised of the situation and take some direct action.

Mr. SARBANES. Does the Senator think as Ambassador he would let the President down in failing to connect up the dots? If Gregg himself was so faulty in judgment that he felt his judgment was so lacking that he offered to resign, why does that qualify him to be an ambassador?

Mr. ROBB. There was a professional code. I would point out to the Senator, at the same time the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Defense could not connect up the dots and any of a number of other people could not connect up the dots. After all of these revelations were made public in December 1986, everybody began to look back and the whole Iran-Contra investigation ensued, but at the time, they simply were not attuned to the fact, given the fact that they knew the Contras existed. Given the fact that they knew some private efforts were being made to resupply them or to provide for their needs, they were not attuned to the fact that Oliver North was at that time running an illegal Contra resupply effort.

That is the point we have often missed. It is the illegal component in an otherwise legal framework that causes any association with Central America or any point that is made relating to the Contras to be presumed to be part of the illegal component of that whole process.

Mr. CRANSTON. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. ROBB. I would be happy to yield, but I believe the Senator from Kentucky desires to be heard.

Mr. McCONNELL. I thank my friend from Virginia. I ask the Chair out of whose time the colloquy has been coming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. CONRAD). From the time of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McCONNELL. That is what I thought. I would like to reclaim my time.

Mr. CRANSTON. May I on my time ask two more questions?

Mr. McCONNELL. On your time.

Mr. CRANSTON. On the matter of taking the statement out of context, the context was—this is from the transcript of Iran-Contra hearings, May 18, 1987, there was discussion Felix was meeting with Gregg revealing all. There was the August 12 meeting, and that is now what is under discussion here in the transcript, where Gregg informs some people, not the Vice President, about what was happening.

He was asked:

Now, did you report any of this to the Vice President?

Answer: I did not.

Question: None of what Felix told you?

Answer: None.

Question: What was the reason you decided not to make such a report?

Answer: Well, I felt it was a very murky business. I spend a great deal of my time trying to send things to the Vice President that I think are really Vice Presidential. I try to keep him focused, help him keep focused on arms control, or Mideast peace or things of that nature. We had never discussed the Contras. We had no responsibility for it.

Mr. ROBB. I submit that is entirely consistent with the formal testimony that I just gave.

Mr. CRANSTON. How is that out of context? It is in context.

Mr. ROBB. I was suggesting the connotations applied to it. I think the Senator understands the point I am making here, and I think the Senator understands precisely what he just read to be the facts.

If there were any evidence to the contrary, then I would be concerned. As I have stated, if I felt that Don Gregg had lied to me or, more important, had lied to this committee or the Foreign Relations Committee under oath, or the Congress under oath, then I not only urge that we vote against him, I want to have him indicted for perjury.

I do not suggest that if there is any evidence—I think I mentioned earleir—dissembling to the point of lying or perjury, not only do I not want him as Ambassador, I want him punished for any violation of law of the United States.

Mr. CRANSTON. In regard to the memorandum from Sam Watson through Don Gregg to the Vice President, re U.S. strategy in Central America, dated February 4, 1986, the Senator referred to this memo.

In that memo, on the front page are two sentences which read: "What is lacking is our ability to provide outright logistical support, advice, planning, or even direction of cross-border operations"; which we all know means Contra operations. "As you know, we are proscribed by Congress from any of these more active measures." It is clear the reference was to the cross-border operations.

Mr. ROBB. That is precisely the point. Because of the Boland amendment and the illegality of any cross-border operations that the prospects for success in that region were diminished. That is the point of the whole message.

Mr. CRANSTON. But the further point is the marginal message: "Felix agrees with this—it is a major shortcoming," a shortcoming in advice, planning, or even direction of cross-border operations. It seems to me to be very clear evidence of a statement.

Mr. ROBB. He is making that notation based upon his knowledge and understanding, not upon Felix Rodriguez' knowledge and understanding, who has testified that he simply did not share the full extent of his involvement in the illegal Contra resupply operation with Gregg, at the request of Oliver North.

Mr. CRANSTON. When he writes in the margin, "Felix agrees with this—it is a major shortcoming."

Mr. ROBB. I rest my case.

Mr. McCONNELL. How much time remains, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has 40 minutes, 52 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California controls 20 minutes and 44 seconds.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I want to commend my friend, the distinguished Senator from Virginia, for a truly outstanding statement and for a courageous position in support of this nomination. I listened to the colloquy between the Senators from California and Maryland and the Senator from Virginia.

Essentially, there were three charges about which questions were being asked. The first charge to Gregg said, prior to 1986 he and Bush "never discussed the Contras and had no responsibility for the Contras." The answer, of course, is that that quote is out of context from the Iran-Contra committee hearings when Gregg was testifying about Rodriguez telling him in August 9, 1986, about a private organization ripping off the Contras with overcharges. He explained he did not tell Bush of the Felix meeting because they had no management responsibility for the Contra programs and the details are still murky.

The second charge involved two Gregg memos on the Bush-Rodriguez meetings in April 1986 which were titled "Contra Resupply" which the Senator from California says clearly incriminiates him. In fact, Gregg did not dictate, sign, nor see the memos, in fact, corroborated by his Secretary and deputy. Although they have no explanation of the subject heading, two points are key: First, everyone, including the Secretary of the Treasury Brady, who was present at the meeting in Bush's office, confirms there was no discussion of Contra resupply. Second, Gregg testified he did not see them until his file search in December 1986 when he, as the Senator from Virginia pointed out, immediately provided them to the Intelligence Committee. He did not shred them; he turned them over. This is not the conduct of a man with a guilty conscience.

The next charge is that Gregg said he did not tell Bush of the secret supply network until an interview with the New York Times in December 1986, yet he allegedly knew of the operation as a result of an August 8 meeting with Felix. In fact, on August 8, Felix provided the general report of his concern about a private group ripping off the Contras with overcharges for weapons. No mention was made of NSC involvement. The size, permanence and activities of North's organization were not discussed.

Gregg convened a meeting of representatives of State, CIA, and NSC to discuss Felix Rodriguez' reports. He assumed whatever the problems were would be addressed by the appropriate agency officials. North either would not or did not come to that meeting.

Mr. President, this has been a long debate. Not this afternoon. It has been a rather short debate this afternoon. It has been a long debate over the course of the year. The President sent Don Gregg back in early March. My good friend, the Senator from California, and I have had a marvelous time sparring over this. Most of the sparring took place either in the Senate gym or in the meeting in the room of the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, his hideaway here in the Capitol. So we have had a number of spirited discussions, including appropriate use of the rules of the Senate and other devices available to all of us to try to move something to a conclusion. I want today to thank the Senator from California for finally allowing this to be resolved as it will be no later than 6:15 tonight.

Mr. President, the United States needs an ambassador in Korea and few people have a stronger understanding of issues and events on the peninsula than President Bush's nominee, Donald Gregg. That is the view I share with the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and a 12-to-7 majority of our committee colleagues who voted to send Gregg to Korea. Last January when the President nominated Don Gregg, he did so knowing from firsthand experience he was dispatching one of our most seasoned, tough minded, knowledgeable experts on Asia and Korea. After skillfully serving as his National Security Adviser, George Bush knew Don Gregg would effectively and successfully serve our Nation's vital strategic, trade, and political interests in Korea.

A quick look at Mr. Gregg's record justifies the President's confidence. After a tour with the Army, Don Gregg joined the CIA where he devoted 32 years of his life to public service. Thirty-two years. Eighteen of those years were spent in Asia at a time when posts in the Far East were hardship assignments.

In 1979, he was detailed to President Carter's National Security Council to handle intelligence matters and Asian affairs. He remained on staff, and it was in this position that he came to the attention of Vice President George Bush, who selected him as his National Security Adviser. He retired from the CIA to work for the Vice President on a full time basis begining in 1982. When President George Bush sent Don Gregg's name forward for consideration as our Ambassador to Korea, he knew from personal experience the man's exemplary professional judgment, qualifications and commitment to serve his Nation.

While the Senate has delayed voting on this nominee for 8 months, events have surged on in Korea. even a short list of these issues and events makes a compelling case for an American ambassadorial presence. All of us are concerned about the status of American troops, escalating anti-American sentiment, tough trade problems, and apparent backsliding in Korea with regard to civil liberties and human rights. During the past 8 months, while we have had no Ambassador, the Soviets have opened a trade mission, Korean farmers have taken to the streets in protest over United States trade policy and Kim Dae Jung has been arrested and indicted for violating national security laws. Any of these issues could contribute to major changes in our relationship with Korea; each requires the assessment and representation of a senior American official to ensure our response is measured, thoughtful and effective.

The President and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee think Don Gregg should be our representative in Seoul carrying out those important and sensitive responsibilities. They are not alone. During the committee's extensive debate on the nomination, it was noteworthy who chose to step forward and support President Bush's nominee. I would like to review some of the comments made about Mr. Gregg which I think illustrate his competence, skill and professionalism.

President Carter's Assistant Secretary of State for East Asia and the Pacific, Richard Holbrooke, worked with Don Gregg virtually adding that in spite of the campaign of some of Mr. Gregg's critics, in his many years of friendship and association, Holbrook had never had any reason to doubt Don Gregg's integirty, values, judgment, or competence.

Peter Krogh, the dean of the Georgetown School of Foreign Service and a teaching colleague of Mr. Gregg's wrote to the Washington Post stating, "On the basis of long and distinguished experience, and in consideration of the high esteem in which he is held by colleagues in government as well as this university, Don Gregg is singularly qualified to serve honorably and with professional distinction as Ambassador of the United States to the Republic of Korea." I ask unanimous consent to insert that letter for the RECORD following my remarks, if I may.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit No. 1.)

Mr. McCONNELL. Finally, one of the most moving letters of support came from Kim Dae Jung, made all the more meaningful perhaps, in light of his recent arrest and indictment. Mr. Kim wrote in March of this year:

> Your rich experience on Korean and Asian affairs will certainly stand you in good stead. We are indeed fortunate to have as our next American ambassador a man of your calibre and experience. * * * Personally, I am happy to see you come here as ambassador. For I am deeply indebted to you for saving my life in 1973 and 1980. I am looking forward to working with you in our common task of realizing true democracy in the Republic of Korea.

Mr. President, these are just a few of the letters and statements reflecting the wide range of strong support for Don Gregg from his colleagues in Government, academia, and politics both at home and in Korea. There seems to be no doubt Mr. Gregg's superb qualifications to serve our Nation well in Korea. I think even Senator CRANSTON has conceded, few people are as knowledgeable about Asia as Don Gregg.

Since his expertise is not in doubt, I think we need to get right to heart of the problem involving the President's nominee—the problem is politics and, as Dean Peter Krogh put it, a "cottage industry of character assassination." I do not want to dwell on the negative aspects of this nomination process because I think Mr. Gregg's unquestionable credentials should be the focus of debate.

However, a campaign was waged in the Foreign Relations Committee against Don Gregg and the President which I think warrants brief comment. Having been provided with thousands of documents from the Iran-Contra investigation and the additional material produced in a file-by-file hand search carried out at the Defense and State Departments, CIA and NSC, I believe it was incumbent upon Senator CRANSTON to prove a case that Don Gregg did not tell Congress the truth. The case was simply not made with all due respect to my friend from California.

As a New York Times story said, Don Gregg's opponents "did not produce a single document that decisively contradicts Mr. Gregg's assertions. But, they continue to argue a circumstantial case against Mr. Gregg's credibility." Let me note for my colleagues that this was a straight news story, not editorial comment. I believe the Senate should make a decision on Presidential nominees based on fact, not circumstantial speculation.

My second point about this process is one Don Gregg made in testimony before the committee. If he was as involved in the Iran-Contra situation as alleged, the thousands of documents subpoenaed by Congress would have been replete with references to his activities and conduct. There were no such comments. Instead, the President and Mr. Gregg's critics are relying on a few documents which Gregg personally provided investigators. When the Vice President told his staff to cooperate with the committee investigation, Mr. Gregg scoured his files, found two memos which raised questions and turned them over. He did not shred or withhold them—he turned them over. I think the chief counsel of the Iran-Contra Committee would acknowledge, if Gregg had not provided them, the documents would never have been an issue.

Which brings me to my final point—if the President or Secretary Baker had a moment's doubt about the strength, qualifications or integrity of this nominee, Don Gregg would never have been appointed and subjected to the public congressional confirmation process. You know, you use up a lot of chips in this process. Senator CRANSTON and I have been working on this from different points of view now for some 6 months—and the President has too. I do not think he would have been willing to get into this in the first place had he not had total confidence in his nominee.

To those people who believe President Bush made this appointment out of loyalty and friendship, I would say that President is loyal but not foolish. The President and the nominee had nothing to hide and I believe viewed the confirmation process as an opportunity to lay the questions to rest once and for all.

Mr. President, during the past 8 months, the nominee has been subjected to two hearings totalling more hours than we usually put any four nominees through. On short notice, the foreign relations Committee demanded that the administration go back for a second search of all Iran-Contra-Don Gregg related information. They not only obliged with a hand conducted file-by file search, the search was worldwide.

The documents were provided to the committee in advance of the deadline that Senator CRANSTON and I sat in that meeting.

The President and Don Gregg have been accommodating and patient. Every question has been answered and a case against Mr. Gregg has not been made. After a 38-year distinguished record as a public servant, the nominee now deserves an affirmative vote on the merits of his strong qualifications to serve his President and Nation as our Ambassador in the Republic of Korea.

I want to say to my friend from California, I certain respect his intentions here. I do not in any way cast any aspersions upon him. This has been a very difficult process and it is good that it is now winding to a conclusion. I think the debate today has been quite civil and for which I congratulate all of those who have participated in it. And within about 45 minutes we will dispose of this matter once and for all.

GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY,
Washington, DC, May 16, 1989.

Letter to the Editor,
The Washington Post, Washington, DC.

It is high time to blow the whistle on the cottage industry of character assassination of which Ms. Mary McGrory is an avatar. Her intemperate assault on our friend and colleague, Donald P. Gregg, in her column of today's date, impels us to reply in his defense.

We have no new information to offer regarding Mr. Gregg's alleged involvement in the Iran-Contra affair. We have no first-hand knowledge as to whether Mr. Gregg's secretary misheard the word "copters" for "contras." Not having been present on these and other occasions, we withhold judgment as to what may or may not have occurred.

Ms. McGrory, who, to our knowledge, was also absent from the scenes of events she so acidulously deplores, feels herself under no such restraint. Our purpose, however, is not to address ourselves to the subject of your columnist's penchant for punishing indignation, but rather to address Don Gregg's qualifications for the post for which he is nominated, Ambassador to the Republic of Korea.

Don Gregg is one of America's most distinguished and professional Asian experts. He has served a number of administrations with integrity and is greatly respected by Democratic as well as Republican appointees to the executive branch. His nomination rests on solid professional and bipartisan ground.

We know Don primarily as a colleague. He has for a decade taught an outstanding course at Georgetown in our Master of Science in Foreign Service Program, one that is highly regarded by both faculty and students. He is a committed and accomplished teacher as well as an experienced, highly regarded professional in the fields of diplomacy and intelligence.

Which brings us to our point—one that has received little attention in the press accounts of Don Gregg's confirmation hearing before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and none whatsoever in Mary McGrory's column. On the basis of long and distinguished experience, and in consideration of the high esteem in which he is held by colleagues in government as well as at this University, Don Gregg is singularly qualified to serve honorably and with professional distinction as Ambassador of the United States to the Republic of Korea.

Sincerely,

Peter F. Krogh, Ph.D., Dean, School of Foreign Service, Georgetown University; Allan E. Goodman, Ph.D., Associate Dean and Director, Master of Science in Foreign Service, Georgetown University; Seth P. Tillman, Ph.D., Research Professor of Diplomacy, Master of Science in Foreign Service, Georgetown University.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator retains 26 minutes and 25 seconds.

Mr. McCONNELL. I retain the remainder of my time and yield the floor.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CRANSTON. I ask that the time be qually divided on the quorum call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CRANSTON. We are awaiting the majority leader and the President pro tempore of the Senate, who opposes this nomination, and I will, therefore, make a few closing remarks at this stage.

In a few minutes we will vote on what may appear to be a very modest issue, an ambassadorship to South Korea. It is an important vote for the U.S. Senate, an important vote for this institution, for we should not be in the business of rewarding and promoting men who have misled us.

Don Gregg misled this Senate repeatedly, while under oath. The record on that is very, very clear. You almost have to be a real partisan of George Bush or one who bends over backwards to accommodate the dictates of the executive branch to come to any other conclusion.

What are we saying if we reward a man who behaves in such a manner, an individual who acted so unprofessionally, that he offered to resign, not once, but twice? We would be inviting contempt for the Senate. We would be inviting contempt for the legitimate inquiries of Congress, essential for doing the people's business. We would be inviting contempt for the law.

There are those who say, "Enough of this Iran-Contra business. Let us sweep the remains under the rug and move on to other business." This Senator is all for moving on to other business. Indeed, nearly a dozen Senators join me in pleading with administration officials—and there were Democrats and Republicans who did that—not to force us to revisit this issue by asking us to promote a man who had misled us.

We had a duty, once Mr. Gregg was nominated, to bring out the facts. We took no pleasure or partisan advantage from this most unpleasant task. We simply did our job, met our obligation, and now we must all vote. I firmly believe if we really want to put the Iran-Contra business behind us, we should just say no to a man who played a significant part in the effort to mislead us, to mislead the American people about certain very important, very basic facts.

If we learned anything, anything at all from the whole disastrous, sickening business of Iran-Contra, it was that Congress cannot provide its constitutionally established check and balance function when we are systematically lied to.

So in closing, I say to my colleagues, if you truly want to put an end to this Iran-Contra business, just say no, say no to evasion, say no to obfuscation, say no to those who seek rewards for playing fast and loose with the truth in their sworn statements to the U.S. Senate.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, the nomination of Donald P. Gregg as Ambassador to South Korea is a controversial one. I wish it were not, but if I am to discharge my duty to advise and consent to this nomination, I cannot overlook or sweep under the carpet Donald Gregg's past relationship with Congress, and the implications this relationship will have for his ability to represent the United States in the Republic of Korea.

Hearings before the Foreign Relations Committee reveal many instances where Mr. Gregg misled Congress or misrepresented the facts in his testimony before the Iran-Contra Committee. Mr. President, these instances have been outlined in this debate. Briefly, however, let me say, it has been pointed out that Mr. Gregg claimed to have "never discussed the Contras" with then Vice President Bush. But, the Contra hearings reveal five memos on the Contra policy issued from Gregg to Bush. There were also two memos from Gregg setting up the May 1986 meeting for Bush to be briefed by Felix Rodriguez on "resupply of the Contras." The two memos were to the Vice President. Mr. Gregg claimed that he never discussed Rodriguez' Contra resupply mission with Colonel North. However, Colonel North's notebooks indicate that Mr. Gregg had discussed the resupply mission, and Colonel North testified under oath that Gregg was told of Rodriguez' Contra resupply mission by North in 1985. Mr. Gregg claimed that he did not have any discussions with Rodriguez about the specific military needs of the Contras. Yet, he could not explain his handwritten notes to Bush written during the timeframe of Boland II about Rodriguez' assessment of the Contras' military needs. These are just three examples, and there are several others we can list but will not in deference to time, of those revealed during the committee hearing on the nomination.

Reviewing the record in the most charitable light to Mr. Gregg, assuming his version of the facts, even Mr. Gregg acknowledges his disservice as an adviser in his inclination to resign on two occasions. Finally, I can't go along with congressional policy and herein Senate approval that would lead to Col. Oliver North's indictment as a criminal and for the same activity approve Mr. Gregg as Ambassador.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, the nomination of Donald Gregg to be our Ambassador to South Korea is one which I have given considerable thought to and one which, unfortunately, troubles me deeply. The decision whether to approve or disapprove this nomination is one which, frankly, has been an extremely difficult one for me for a number of reasons.

First and foremost, I know and like Mr. Gregg on a personal level and I believe that he has served our Nation well for many years. My natural inclination would to be to vote for his nomination. But, as we all know, personal like or dislike is not the determining factor in these kinds of decisions. In Mr. Gregg's case, there are other factors which carry greater weight and which have raised some very serious concerns about this nomination.

Specifically, some have openly doubted the veracity of Mr. Gregg's testimony during the Iran-Contra investigation. In particular, they point to his previous testimony on the extent of then Vice President Bush's knowledge of the Contra resupply effort. I was a member of the Senate Iran-Contra Committee and I have, in preparation for this vote, again reviewed the facts surrounding Mr. Gregg's testimony. In doing so, I have found no direct evidence to prove that Mr. Gregg was untruthful in that testimony. I am unwilling to make those kind of conclusions and to reject this nomination on those grounds, in the absence of that type of evidence.

I am, however, deeply troubled by facts, as related by Mr. Gregg himself, which, in my view, demonstrate the exercise of extremely bad judgment by this nominee in failing to advise the Vice President on matters of significant importance.

According to Mr. Gregg, in August 1986, Felix Rodriguez warned him of a possible Watergate-type scandal in the Contra supply operation—specifically that Ollie North was using people tied in to Ed Wilson, who, at that time, had already been convicted on Federal charges of smuggling firearms and explosives to the Libyans. Rodriguez also told Gregg that he feared that the CIA would also get involved with these people. Mr. Gregg states that he knew Wilson to be absolutely bad and that his group was one that he would disapprove of thoroughly. According to Mr. Gregg, Rodriguez asked him to bring this matter to the attention of the appropriate people.

What troubles me is the fact that, despite the obviously serious nature of that conversation, Mr. Gregg tells us he did not bring the matter to the attention of the Vice President because we had no responsibility for it and we had no expertise in it. This was despite the fact that, obviously, the Contra operations were of great importance to the administration and despite the Vice President's past experience and interest in CIA matters.

Moreover, despite the fact that Rodriguez specifically alleged that Ollie North was involved with these people, Mr. Gregg testified that he never confronted North about his role.

Obviously, any man who serves the United States as an ambassador becomes, in effect, the eyes and the ears of the President in the country where he serves. Perhaps above all else, he must possess the good judgment and common sense to recognize those matters which he has an obligation to bring to the President's attention. The success of his mission depends, in the final analysis, on the quality of the information and advice which he delivers to the President.

Unfortunately, on the record before us and accepting as true the facts which Donald Gregg has testified to, I do not believe that this nominee's actions in the Iran-Contra affair demonstrate the kind of good and solid judgment which we must demand in our Ambassadors. In my view, he failed, by his own admission, to bring to the Vice President's attention matters which he obviously should have. Based on that evidence, I feel compelled, regrettably, to vote against his nomination.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am very pleased to speak today in support of the nomination of Don Gregg to be Ambassador to South Korea.

Mr. President, over the last several weeks, we have seen and heard much mention of the so-called gold-plated ambassadorships. This term implies that the Ambassadors being chosen by this administration as political appointees to the various diplomatic posts abroad have been of questionable quality. Mr. President, I will not go into specific details on the history of previous political appointees in ambassadorial posts except perhaps to look at some of the more positive aspects that political appointees have brought to our embassies abroad.

I noted a few days ago that the State Department press spokesperson outlined the qualifications of one Ambassador, a former Congressman, who was sent first to the United Nations, then to Peking. When nominated for his first post abroad, this individual probably would have received some criticism of his nomination if it would have been forwarded today. As most people know by now, nominee in question was our President, George Bush. But there have been others who have brought considerable credit to our country as well, even though they were not career, Foreign Service officers.

Mr. President, they came from both parties. There was John Kenneth Galbraith, William Scranton, John Scali, Shirley Temple Black, and Jeane Kirkpatrick. And yes, one of our own Members in this body, DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN. Each of these individuals brought his or her own particular strengths and qualities to the posts that they served in. That's not to say, Mr. President, that there have not been some political ambassadors who have been less than of star quality. But I think when you look at any group of political appointees, you will find the good ones and the bad ones—that is just human nature.

Mr. President, I firmly believe what we have here today is a quality appointment, to what I feel is a critical post and one that will continue to become even more critical as the years go by. For both economic and strategic reasons, it is extremely important that our Ambassador to South Korea have a solid foundation and background in the workings of that country. And I believe that Don Gregg has just that.

Further, because of the importance of this post, the country in which in he serves is looking for a man who has access to the higher echelons of government. Don Gregg has that access and indeed the confidence of this President.

I believe the South Koreans understand that there are going to be occasions when the message they receive from our ambassador may not necessarily be that which they would like to receive. But I believe Don Gregg is the type of individual who has the background, who has the sensitivity, and who knows the Korean personality well enough to be able to deliver that message without causing undue harm to the relationship between our two countries.

Mr. President, this nominee has come under considerable scrutiny here on the Hill and in the press. Despite the hundreds of staff hours and endless media speculation, there has never been any credible evidence that this gentleman has broken any laws of the United States. Indeed, he has volunteered information on at least one occasion that might have harmed his chances for this post. There has even been occasion when he offered to step down in an effort to defuse political controversy in the office of the Vice Presidency. This is an honorable man, with good judgment and with years of service to his country. I believe he will serve his country well in this post.

Mr. President, I would underscore that it is very important that this critical post be filled with a quality appointee. History shows that over the past few years there have been some differences between our two governments; and in order to keep those differences from becoming major problems, we need his experience, expertise, and leadership for our country team there. I urge my colleagues to confirm Donald Gregg as Ambassador to South Korea.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I voted against sending this nomination to the floor, and I will vote against this nomination again today. I do so, because there remain grave, contradictions between, Mr. Gregg's testimony under oath regarding his involvement in the Iran-Contra affair, and a variety of documents, including some prepared in Mr. Gregg's office.

In essence, the issue is whether Mr. Gregg has been candid regarding his knowledge of and involvement in the secret United States support for the Contras during the Reagan administration.

I have stated in the past that I feel Mr. Gregg deserves the benefit of being judged on the fullest possible record. There remains one set of thousands of pages of important documents that the Congress has never seen, which could shed important light on whether or not Mr. Gregg's version of events involving Felix Rodriguez and Oliver North is consistent with the record. These documents are the Oliver North notebooks in their uncensored state, subpoenaed by the Foreign Relations Committee, which we have now sought to obtain for 18 months without success.

We know from the censored versions of these notebooks provided the Congress by Oliver North and his attorneys that there are some references to

Mr. Gregg, and we have been provided one set of entries that appears to contradict statements of Mr. Gregg made under oath.

I do not think we should vote in favor of a nomination of anyone when substantial questions exist as to whether he has been candid with the Congress regarding events associated with one of the most serious scandals ever confronted by this Nation. Accordingly, I believe this nomination should not have been reported to the floor, and should not be voted favorably now.

There are a number of inter-related questions concerning Mr. Gregg in connection with Iran-Contra, but most involve his relationship with Felix Rodriguez, a former CIA agent for whom Mr. Gregg was a case officer in the 1960's, and with whom Mr. Gregg retained a close relationship through the 1980's while he was the National Security Adviser to Vice President Bush.

Felix Rodriguez was an active participant in the covert Contra supply operation, based at El Salvador. He participated in military supply work for the Contras at a time when it was illegal for United States officials to support the Contras directly or indirectly under the Boland amendment. Mr. Gregg placed Felix Rodriguez in Central America during this period, remained in close contact with him throughout the period, and yet has contended that he knew nothing of Felix's involvement with the Contras.

Initially, when the Iran-Contra affair was revealed in November, 1986 Mr. Gregg stated that neither he nor the Vice President had any knowledge regarding Contra supply operations whatsoever, He modified that position 6 weeks later, after there had been extensive revelations in the press concerning the North-Secord operation and Felix's role. At that time, Mr. Gregg revealed that Felix had come to him complaining about rip-offs in connection with Contra supply operations on August 8, 1986. Mr. Gregg also revealed that there were two anomalous memos, prepared by his office, which stated that Felix was to brief the Vice President on Contra supply operations in April 1986. Mr. Gregg said that despite what the memos said, Felix had not briefed the Vice President on Contra supplies, had not briefed him on Contra supplies, and Mr. Gregg could not explain how the memos were created.

Later, in testifying before the Iran-Contra committees, Mr. Gregg described his August 8, 1986 meeting with Felix in more detail. He explained that Felix told him then that Oliver North was involved with the Contras, but contended that he never passed this information on to the Vice President.

Mr. Gregg explained that he did not tell the Vice President about the information Felix gave him because:

I felt that it was a very murky business. I spend a great deal of my time trying to send things to the Vice President that I think are really Vice Presidential. I try to keep him focused, help him keep focused on arms control or Mideast peace or things of that nature. We had never discussed the Contras. We had no responsibility for it. We had no expertise in it. I wasn't at all certain what this amounted to. I had the name of four or five Americans on an obscure air base in Central America who apparently were ripping off donated funds and making unseemly profits. I felt I had passed along that material to the organizations who could do something about it, and I frankly did not think it was Vice Presidential level.

This is the core of Mr. Gregg's position: He had never discussed the Contras with Felix; it was outside his purview and outside his interests. The problem with this position is that a number of documents contradict it.

For example, on March 17, 1983, Mr. Gregg wrote then NSC head Robert McFarlane to provide him with a plan written by Felix Rodriguez proposing the development of antiguerrilla operations in Central America, enclosing a map which shows the sites of those operations as being not just El Salvador, but Nicaragua—exactly the operations Felix ultimately carried out.

This memo raises doubts about Mr. Gregg's contentions that you never had any idea Felix would be involved with Contra operations, and suggests that such support was part of the plan from the beginning.

On September 18, 1984, Mr. Gregg wrote the Vice President a memorandum on the topic "Funding for the Contras," stating that Dewey Clarridge had advised him that the Contras had been getting funds "from other sources, probably private, not governmental."

This memo conflicts with his statement that he was never involved in the Contra issue, and never discussed it with the Vice President.

On February 14, 1985, General Gorman of the United States Southern Command in Panama wrote Ambassador Pickering of Honduras and Col. James Steele of the United States Military Group in El Salvador regarding employing Felix Rodriguez to assist the FDN, the chief Contra group. Gorman wrote that "the FDN deserved [Felix's] priority," and that Felix's "acquaintanceship with the VP is real enough, going back to latter days as DCI."

A few days later, Ambassador Pickering wrote a memorandum to General Gorman and others noting that Felix would be emplaced in El Salvador working with Steele and General Bustillo, chief of the Salvadoran Air Force at Ilopango Air Base. After noting that Felix would "take on higher priority mission first," the memo ends with a suggestion that Motley brief you on Felix's employment.

On September 10, 1985, Oliver North wrote in his personal notebook about a meeting with Steele and Mr. Gregg at 4:30 p.m. regarding Contra supply operations. The memorandum describes information provided by Mario Del Amico, a Contra supplier working with the Martin/McCoy arms supermarket to supply the Contras, and describes particular weapons sales to the FDN.

Steele has confirmed to the GAO that he was present at a meeting with Oliver North and Don Gregg, that it came about as a result of Mr. Gregg telling him that North was "a Central American guru," and that he did not recall the specifics of the meeting, but that they did not involve the Contras.

The North diary entry wasn't created by the tooth fairy—but by North hour-by-hour. I have personal knowledge of some matters covered by North's notes—references to me, my staff, and my attempts to get the truth regarding some of his activities and links between Contras and drugs. I have found the notes to be somewhat cryptic, but also accurate in terms of what North was told by the people referred to in the notebooks.

Mr. Gregg has stated that he did not participate in such a meeting with North and Steele—that the meeting did not take place. But how does one answer the problem of the documentary evidence in North's notebook to the contrary. Common sense suggests that the contemporaneous records created by North have meaning—and that the meaning is that Mr. Gregg participated in the meeting to discuss Contra supply activities.

On February 4, 1986, Mr. Gregg's assistant, Sam Watson, wrote the Vice President in a memo through Mr. Gregg stating that the United States needed to change its policies in Central America to get outright logistical support for the Contras. Next to this conclusion, Mr. Gregg wrote: "Felix agrees with this—it is a major shortcoming."

Mr. Gregg testified that he never discussed the Contras with Felix prior to August 1986. Yet here on February 4, 1986, Mr. Gregg wrote in the memo to the Vice President that Felix agreed with the idea that the Contras need outright logistical, support and direction.

On February 13, 1986, Mr. Gregg participated in a meeting with officials from the NSC, CIA, Defense, and JCS, regarding the Contra humanitarian assistance program. Mr. Gregg's participation in this meeting again suggests Mr. Gregg was at least monitoring the situation, contrary to his Iran-Contra testimony.

On April 16, 1986, Mr. Gregg's secretary, Debbie Hutton, prepared a memo from Mr. Gregg to the Vice President regarding a meeting with Felix Rodriguez, and I quote:

To brief the Vice President on the status of the war in El Salvador and resupply of the Contras.

On April 30, 1986, the Briefing Memorandum for the Vice President repeated that the purpose of the meeting was as follows:

Felix Rodriguez, a counterinsurgency expert who is visiting from El Salvador, will provide a briefing on the status of the war in El Salvador and resupply of the Contras.

The meeting involving Felix Rodriguez, Mr. Gregg and the Vice President, took place May 1, 1986.

On May 14, 1987, Mr. Gregg stated that Contra resupply was not discussed, that he had no knowledge of such supply operations even existing, and that he had no explanation at all for why his secretary would have made such a statement in a schedule proposal from Mr. Gregg to the Vice President. At the time, Mr. Gregg said that he "realized these documents were anomalous," and that Mr. Gregg "cannot account for the fact that the purpose of this meeting, according to these documents, was to discuss resupply of the Contras in addition to the war in El Salvador."

Even if one believes that Contra resupply was not discussed at the meeting, the question remains, how did Mr. Gregg's secretary—who knew far less about what Felix Rodriguez was doing than Mr. Gregg did—happen to say he was going to talk about Contra resupply unless Mr. Gregg told her to? No one has ever provided an explanation. Either it was Mr. Gregg or Mr. Gregg's staff assistant, Samuel Watson. The Senate has a right to be skeptical about a tooth fairy explanation.

Oliver North has testified under oath that he talked to Robert McFarlane about having Felix Rodriguez assist with the Contras on the Southern front after first telling Mr. Gregg. He further testified that Mr. Gregg was the man who introduced him to Felix Rodriguez.

This testimony also contradicts Mr. Gregg's testimony. Either Oliver North is not telling the truth in stating that he told Mr. Gregg that Felix would work on Contra operations, or Mr. Gregg's candor must be called into question.

On August 8, 1986, Felix told Mr. Gregg about his concerns that the "Ed Wilson" people now involved in Contra operations were ripping off the Contras and that the situation could turn into another Watergate. Mr. Gregg stated this was the first time he learned about United States involvement in Contra supply operations, and that he did not tell the Vice President.

On August 12, 1986, Mr. Gregg met with North aide Robert Earle, NSC aide Ray Burghardt, the Central American task force chief of the CIA, Colonel Steele, Ambassador to El Salvador Edwin Corr, and William Walker, an aide to Elliott Abrams at the State Department, to follow up on the statements Felix made to Mr. Gregg. According to Walker, at the meeting, Corr expressed concerns that Rodriguez was boasting too publicly about his connections to George Bush, and complaining that the Contra supply operation was shoddy.

Again, a meeting at which Contra supply operations were discussed according to another witness; and Mr. Gregg says that the witness was wrong.

To summarize: It is difficult to accept Mr. Gregg's explanation, because to do so, one must explain away a substantial body of documents and testimony to the contrary. If Mr. Gregg's version of events are correct, Oliver North's diary was wrong, his testimony false, the memorandum regarding Felix's meeting with Mr. Gregg appeared by magic, Assistant Secretary of State William Walker was wrong in his memory, and Felix somehow concealed from Mr. Gregg what Ambassador Pickering, General Gorman, and James Steele knew and memoralized in writing—that Felix was going down to Central America with the mission of working for the Contras.

All of this is difficult to believe.

At the Senate Foreign Relations Hearings on this nomination, I told Mr. Gregg that I would vote for this nomination, despite my serious questions concerning the documents and testimony I've described above, if we were able to review all the information in the Oliver North notebooks and none of it implicated Mr. Gregg further.

I did so because I believe that the complete, uncensored North notebooks constitute the best single contemporaneous record of what actually happened with Iran/Contra, and that the absence of Mr. Gregg from any other entries would help clear the air concerning him. I also felt that securing the notebooks, which remains in the power of the Executive branch, was an important objective.

Unfortunately, the White House and Justice Department continue to prevent the Senate Foreign Relations Committee from obtaining those documents. The North notebooks are Government records, created at the White House by a White House employee relating to his governmental work and classified at the highest levels. They belong to the Government and copies of them are in the hands of the independent counsel.

We have sought them from the independent counsel, who in turn has sought approval from the Justice Department, which has not been forthcoming. It is clear to me that the White House does not want us to review the North notebooks in their uncensored form, and until we do, it is clear to me that there will be no final answers as to who knew what in connection with the illegal Contra supply network established by the Reagan administration.

In light of these discrepancies, I regret feeling compelled to vote against confirmation of Mr. Gregg to this position.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the nomination of Donald Gregg, formerly Vice President Bush's National Security Adviser, as Ambassador to South Korea, has been extremely contentious—for good reason. Serious questions—which remain unanswered—have been raised about Mr. Gregg's fidelity to the law, about Mr. Gregg's judgment, and about Mr. Gregg's role in the Iran-Contra affair.

I oppose this nomination for two reasons. I firmly believe that it is fundamentally wrong to confirm a man about whom serious questions have been raised concerning his fidelity to the law. Second, I believe that allegations about Mr. Gregg's role in the unauthorized covert Iran-Contra activity raise serious questions about Mr. Gregg's judgment. South Korea is too sensitive a diplomatic post to be filled by a man whose reputation is tarnished by the sordid Iran-Contra affair.

Mr. President, the Iran-Contra affair is not behind us—although there are many who would like it to be. The 57-to-42 vote in favor of the Moynihan amendment to the State Department authorization bill, which criminalizes the activities that the Iran-Contra participants engaged in, is evidence that the majority of the Senate believes that persons who engage in such activities should be subject to criminal penalties. The Moynihan amendment makes it a felony for a Government official to solicit funds from private or foreign sources to carry out activities prohibited by Congress. It also makes it illegal for officials to channel funds through third countries to accomplish a purpose barred by Congress. While this legislation is wholly prospective in that it applies only to funding prohibitions enacted after the State Department authorization bill becomes law, the kinds of activities which it would criminalize are those which are at the heart of the Iran-Contra affair.

So where does Mr. Gregg fit in all this? Let us briefly examine the allegations made against Mr. Gregg and his responses to them.

The chief allegation is that Mr. Gregg knew about the secret operation to resupply the Contras while he served as Vice President Bush's national security adviser and that either he failed to remember to tell Mr. Bush about it or he did tell Mr. Bush about it and is now participating in a cover-up of what Mr. Bush knew about the affair.

For a variety of reasons, little attention has been given to the latter proposition. Since the Foreign Relations Committee, by necessity, had to deal with Mr. Gregg's version of the affair, I too will focus on his claim that he failed to remember to tell Mr. Bush about the resupply effort. That operation was set up by Oliver North and run by Gregg's longtime friend, Felix Rodriguez. In 1985, Mr. Gregg had helped arrange Rodriguez' position as an adviser to El Salvador's air force. In his recent trial, Oliver North testified that Gregg introduced him to Rodriguez.

In testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Mr. Gregg said that Rodriguez had told him on August 8, 1986, that North was involved with unsavory characters in the resupply operation and that disclosure of the operation could lead to a scandal of Watergate proportions. Mr. Gregg claims that although Rodriguez told him about the resupply operation on August 8, he did not inform the Vice President about it until December 13, 1986, when Mr. Bush learned of it through an interview Mr. Gregg gave the New York Times.

According to this scenario, Mr. Gregg kept the Vice President in the dark for over 2 months after the resupply plane was shot down on October 5, 1986, and the Iran-Contra operation began to unravel.

After the downing of the plane, Mr. Gregg met regularly with Mr. Bush and discussed the plane incident with him, but, as he said in sworn testimony, he failed to remember or think about what Rodriguez had told him in August—until December 1986.

Now, does this make any sense? Is it even feasible to think that this scenario happened as Mr. Gregg related to the Foreign Relations Committee?

I have serious doubts about the veracity of Mr. Gregg's entire scenario and I question whether August 8 was, in fact, the first time that Mr. Gregg learned anything about the resupply effort. Oliver North's testimony in his recent trial that he met regularly with Gregg about the Contra resupply operation shoots enormous holes in Mr. Gregg's claim that he knew nothing until Rodriguez alerted him to it. I am particularly skeptical about Mr. Gregg's testimony—sworn testimony, I might add—that his note-taker's reference in two White House memos about resupply of the Contras, which was forbidden by Congress, really meant resupply of the copters for El Salvador, a legal operation.

At the very least, this testimony strains credulity. At worst, Mr. Gregg may have committed perjury in his testimony before the Foreign Relations Committee. As the New York Times editorial of June 20, 1989, concluded, this testimony left the Foreign Relations Committee—and by extension, all 100 of us—with a dilemma: "Doubt his testimony, and thus doubt his candor and loyalty to law, or believe it, and seriously question his judgment."

So, today we are being asked to confirm as Ambassador to South Korea, a man who either has engaged in deliberate falsehood in sworn testimony to the Congress or exercised flawed judgment in his conduct as National Security Adviser to the former Vice President. Either he lied to Congress about his knowledge of and involvement with the Iran-Contra affair—or he withheld the information he had about it from the Vice President, and then so informed the Vice President through an interview given to the New York Times. Or, he is participating in a coverup of what exactly Mr. Bush knew of the Iran-Contra affair and exactly when he knew it.

Either way, Mr. Gregg does not deserve confirmation. It is apparent that for now, it will not be possible to Determine the truth about Mr. Gregg's role in the Iran-Contra affair. The administration could have cooperated with the Foreign Relations Committee and provided documents requested by the committee which might have shed light on whether Mr. Gregg was telling the truth about his role in the Iran-Contra affair. The administration did not do so.

I believe the burden of proof is on Mr. Gregg—as it is on all ambassadorial nominees—to demonstrate that he has the soundness of judgment, fortitude of character, and integrity of spirit which I believe those who represent the United States abroad ought to possess. I do not believe that the Senate has to give Mr. Gregg the benefit of the doubt. As Ambassador, Mr. Gregg would represent the U.S. Government and the U.S. people. Merely being qualified for the job is insufficient reason to ensure confirmation.

I believe that Mr. Gregg has not demonstrated the necessary soundness of judgment to merit confirmation. Even if we were to conclude that Mr. Gregg told the Foreign Relations Committee the truth about the extent of his knowledge of the illegal Iran-Contra activities, I, for one, must conclude that he demonstrated flawed judgment in withholding that knowledge from the Vice President. Withholding that knowledge from the Vice President was not a minor error—it was a major one, and one, which in my eyes, is sufficient to disqualify Mr. Gregg to be Ambassador to South Korea—or to any other country, for that matter.

Nor do I believe that the administration deserves to have Mr. Gregg confirmed. Even if we believe that the burden of proof is on those who oppose Mr. Gregg's nomination, the administration's lack of cooperation in providing evidence in support of Mr. Gregg's story should ring all sorts of warning bells in the minds of Senators.

Now that we have looked at Mr. Gregg's claim that he merely "failed to remember" to inform the Vice President of his knowledge of the Iran-Contra activities, let us examine the possibility that Mr. Gregg had, in fact, kept the Vice President informed all along about the resupply effort. If that is the case, then we have to conclude that Mr. Gregg values loyalty to his boss more than he values fidelity to the law.

The report of the Iran-Contra committees concluded that the Iran-Contra affair resulted from the "failure of individuals to observe the law, not from deficiencies in existing law or in our system of Government." Let me repeat that. The Iran-Contra affair resulted from the "failure of individuals to observe the law, not from deficiencies in existing law or in our system of Government."

Mr. President, I oppose the confirmation of Donald Gregg as ambassador to South Korea because in his behavior and conduct, both as National Security Adviser to the former Vice President and in his testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, I believe Mr. Gregg exemplifies why and how the Iran-Contra affair took place.

Arrogant, wrongheaded people, who believed they and only they knew what was right for America, acted in defiance of the law. We do not know today—and we may never know—the truth about Donald Gregg and his role in the Iran-Contra affair. We do know that serious questions have been raised about his conduct and his judgment. I do not want to find out sometime in the future, that the allegations about Mr. Gregg are true. I do not want the Senate to reward with a sensitive and important ambassadorship, a man who has admitted that he withheld important information about illegal activities from the Vice President and who may have lied to the Congress about his knowledge of and involvement with those activities. I do not want to reward a man who may be participating in a coverup of what Mr. Bush knew about the Iran-Contra affair and when he knew it.

The Senate is not a court of law where a person is presumed innocent until proven guilty. The confirmation process is designed, however, to take the measure of the man or woman nominated to fill a senior position in the administration, either here or abroad. I admit that I hold public servants to a standard higher than that of ordinary Americans. In this case, I believe the man is lacking.

Mr. President, let us not take the chance that the allegations against Mr. Gregg are true. I urge my colleagues to vote against confirming Donald Gregg as Ambassador to South Korea.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I am troubled by the nomination of Donald Gregg to be Ambassador to South Korea. I have serious doubts about Mr. Gregg's credibility and professional judgment, and I plan to oppose his nomination.

The issues surrounding Mr. Gregg's involvement in the Iran-Contra matter have been fully discussed, in extensive hearings in the Foreign Relations Committee and on the floor today by the chairman of the Subcommittee on East Asia, Senator CRANSTON. I will not trespass on the Senate's time by repeating this discussion.

Let me just state for the record, however, that I had a difficult time believing Mr. Gregg's denial of his knowledge of the illegal Contra resupply effort. His version of events in this matter stretches credulity. But even if you believe Mr. Gregg's denial of his knowledge of the Iran-Contra resupply network, his actions—or rather his failure to act—when he did learn of this matter show extremely poor judgment.

In August 1986, Felix Rodriguez, a close friend of Mr. Gregg, came to Gregg with tales of possible wrongdoing by a member of the National Security Council staff, Col. Oliver North. Yet Gregg failed to inform Vice President Bush, a statutory member of the NSC. This omission is particularly odd, given that the Vice President had been regularly briefed on Rodriguez' work in advising the Salvadoran Air Force. In addition, Gregg never took this information to the White House counsel, nor did he confront Colonel North himself. His failure to act on this information is, in my view, a serious dereliction of duty, and casts doubt about Mr. Gregg's professional judgment and his ability to serve as our envoy in Seoul.

In addition to the questions concerning the Iran-Contra matter, I am concerned about sending to South Korea a man who previously served there as CIA station chief. Mr. Gregg was chief of station in Seoul in the mid-1970's, one of the most repressive periods in South Korean history. Many Koreans, correctly or not, associate the CIA with that repression, and Mr. Gregg will serve as a visible reminder of that period.

This is the second consecutive CIA official to be picked for Seoul. While James Lilley, our previous Ambassador, received high marks for his work there, I believe sending another CIA agent—especially one who served there as station chief—is insensitive to the current political situation in South Korea. In my view, rising anti-Americanism in Korea could be fueled by the perception that the main prerequisite for a United States Ambassador is to be a spy, rather than a diplomat.

In the last 2 years, South Korea's political system has rapidly progressed, from a military dictatorship to a robust democracy. The pace of this change has been impressive. As a result of the increased political space, elements in Korean society are openly questioning the U.S. role on the peninsula. It will take a skilled Ambassador to guide United States-Korean relations through this period, and I am concerned that Mr. Gregg would start at a disadvantage with a significant segment of the Korean population.

Mr. President, I bear no personal grudge against Mr. Gregg. In fact, I commend him for his long service to his country. But this experience alone does not qualify him for this position. The rapid change in South Korea and in the United States-Korean relationship demand that we have a strong and experienced envoy on hand in Seoul. Questions about Mr. Gregg's honesty, along with his record in the Vice President's office, do not ease my doubts about the choice of Donald Gregg for this position. Therefore, I will oppose this nomination.

Mr. CRANSTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum and request that the time be equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, time will be equally divided, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I will vote against the nomination of Donald P. Gregg to be United States Ambassador to the Republic of Korea.

I did not easily reach this conclusion. I believe that Presidents generally should be able to have the Ambassadors of their choice representing the Nation abroad. As a matter of policy, every President should be free to select qualified Ambassadors who share his foreign policy goals.

I am not aware of any challenges to Mr. Gregg's qualifications based upon his background or experience.

But there are other important factors which must be considered as the Senate discharges its constitutional duty in evaluating those nominated to serve in high Government offices.

Among them are the nominee's credibility and judgment.

Mr. Gregg testified to the Congress several times regarding the events that have come to be known as the Iran-Contra affair. On these occasions he described in detail his lack of knowledge and actions—or, more precisely, his alleged lack of knowledge and inaction in informing his superior, then-Vice President Bush, of these important events.

Mr. Gregg's testimony was either untrue or true. If untrue, he obviously should not be confirmed, because it wholly compromises his credibility. If true, he still should not be confirmed because his version of events raises serious doubt as to his judgment.

It is, therefore, necessary and appropriate to examine Mr. Gregg's testimony, and the evidence surrounding it, in some detail.

First. Mr. Gregg testified that he had no responsibility for Central American issues and prior to the exposure of the Iran-Contra affair, he had never discussed the Contras with then-Vice President Bush. The Foreign Relations Committee, however, has identified several memoranda written to the Vice President by Mr. Gregg on the subject.

Identified were at least six memos. Five, dated April 12, 1985, April 22, 1985, May 27, 1986, December 12, 1986, and January 9, 1986, respectively are still classified. A sixth, dated September 18, 1984, states, in part:

> The Contras are doing well inside Nicaragua, conducting effective small unit actions and capturing enough ammunition to supply [redated] of their needs.
> Local support of the Contras is growing inside Nicaragua. The Sandinistas are using artillery against the Contras, but it is ineffective.
> If a Continuing Resolution were passed by Congress, it would contain $2 m[illion] per month for aid to the Contras. Dewey [Clarridge] does not expect this to happen. He believes that any CR that is passed will specifically prohibit funds to the Contras.
>
> In his view, the Contras are doing what they were supposed to do and there is not as much need for U.S. involvement.
> They have put pressure on the Sandinistas. The Sandinistas are talking with us. The Sandinistas are planning an election. None of these things would have happened if the Contras did not exist.
> Dewey said that you may use the above in response to questions about the Contras, although he would prefer that no specific figure be mentioned regarding private support to the Contra groups.

After having testified that he had never discussed the Contras with then-Vice President Bush, Mr. Gregg was confronted with those memos. He then explained that what he had meant to say was that he had never discussed resupply of the Contras with the Vice President. But, of course, that is not what he said in his initial testimony.

Second. Mr. Gregg testified that his introduction of Felix Rodriguez, a former CIA employee and personal friend, to Lt. Col. Oliver North in December 1984, was related to activities in El Salvador and was not related to the Contras or their resupply. Mr. Rodriguez, of course, was to become deeply involved in the efforts to resupply the Contras during the period in which the Boland amendment prohibitions were in force.

Several documents indicate that senior officials, including Gen. Paul Gorman, commander of the United States Southern Command [SouthCom] and Thomas Pickering, United States Ambassador to El Salvador, who met with Rodriguez as a result of Mr. Gregg's recommendation, were very clear that Mr. Rodriguez' primary interest was in assisting the Contras. In fact, General Gorman reported to Ambassador Pickering on February 14, 1985, that "Rodriguez' primary commitment to the region is in [deleted] where he wants to assist the FDN [Contras]. I told him that the FDN deserved his priority."

Third. Mr. Gregg testified that he was unaware until August 1986 of Rodriguez' activities in the Contra resupply efforts operated by Oliver North. However, a February 4, 1986, memorandum from Mr. Gregg's deputy, Sam Watson, approved by Mr. Gregg and routed to then-Vice President Bush, discussing the Contra's military needs, contains a passage:

> What is lacking is our ability to provide outright logistical support, advice, planning, or even direction of cross-border operations. As you know, we are proscribed by Congress from any of these more active measures.

In the margin referring to this passage, which is in part underlined, is Mr. Gregg's handwritten note to the Vice President which reads "Felix agrees with this—it is a major shortcoming."

Fourth. Mr. Gregg testified that he remembered no September 10, 1985, meeting with Col. James Steele and Oliver North to discuss efforts to aid the resupply of the Contras.

But, at his trial, Colonel North testified under oath that he discussed the details of the resupply and Mr. Rodriguez' involvement in it with Mr. Gregg and NSC Adviser Robert McFarlane in the fall of 1985.

Colonel North's contemporaneous notes indicate that military resupply of the Contras was discussed and that Mr. Gregg was present. Colonel Steele does not recall substantive discussion with Mr. Gregg present but does recall Mr. Gregg calling Colonel North and making introductions.

Fifth. Mr. Gregg is unable to explain two April 1986 memoranda, including an April 30, 1986, memorandum to then-Vice President Bush, which indicate that the purpose of Rodriguez' May 1, 1986, meeting with Vice President Bush would be to "provide a briefing on the status of the war in El Salvador and resupply of the Contras." Mr. Gregg's suggestion to the Committee that the phrase "resupply of the Contras" might have been a garbled version of "resupply of the copters" can only be termed pathetic.

Sixth. Mr. Gregg states that he did not inform Vice President Bush about his August 8, 1986, meeting with Felix Rodriguez at which he was told about Rodriguez' involvement in supplying the Contras and that Oliver North was involved, because:

> I felt that the Vice President's time was the most valuable commodity I had to deal with. I spent two or three hours every day reading documents, making decisions about what I would send to him. And my decision was that gunrunning by second-rate gunrunners in the jungles of Central America, selling old hand grenades that they paid $3 for, for $9, was not vice presidential, particularly since I had passed it to the officials who had direct responsibility for that area.

Mr. Gregg maintained that he said nothing to the Vice President even after he became aware that the Hasenfus plane had been shot down in Nicaragua and "one of the first things out of his [Hasenfus'] mouth was the name 'Max Gomez', Felix Rodriguez":

> That immediately led to me [Gregg] because we know that Felix was not shy about talking about his connection with me or his connection with the Vice President.
> * * * There was an immediate focus of press attention on what had Gregg been doing in introducing Rodriguez to El Salvador. The immediate assumption * * * was that I had sent him down there from the outset to support the Contras.
> So I immediately went to the Vice President about that, and I said I did not do that, all we have ever discussed is his interest in * * * countering the insurgency, and whatever has happened subsequent to our talks, your [the Vice President's] talks with him, is something that I did not know. And I did not mention the 8 August meeting to the Vice President at that time because I did not have it in the correct focus. I thought * * * we had been dealing with the corrupt activities of some American gun runners in Central America, who had been selling supplies to the Contra air force, and that had stopped as a result of my meeting.

Mr. President, this testimony is incredible. With the press focusing attention on the Office of the Vice President and its possible connection of Felix Rodriguez and the Hasenfus operation, Mr. Gregg did not inform the Vice President that he had met with Mr. Rodriguez on August 8, less than 2 months earlier, and learned of a connection between Rodriguez and arms going to the Contras. Even if one accepts Mr. Gregg's assertion that he did not fully realize the implications and the full extent of the North involvement or Rodriguez role in the resupply of the Contras, is it possible to accept that this information was not Vice Presidential under the circumstances?

And yet, when, in 1984, Felix Rodriguez had approached Mr. Gregg to state that he was interested in going to El Salvador to help in the counterinsurgency, effort and Mr. Gregg agreed to recommend him to Ambassador Pickering and Tony Motley, and Nestor Sanchez, he, in effect, cleared that with the Vice President. And, before Felix Rodriguez went down there, Mr. Gregg took the initiative to introduce him to the Vice President.

Seventh. Mr. Gregg was questioned in the hearings about the meaning of the phrase "a swap of weapons for dollars was arranged to get aid for the Contras, Clines and General Secord tied in" which appears in his handwritten notes of the August 8 meeting with Felix Rodriguez.

This phrase has concerned me for some time. I questioned Felix Rodriguez about it during the Iran-Contra hearings. Rodriguez stated that it was the one phrase in the entire document which he could not explain. He testified that he did not know about the connection between the Iran arms sales and the Contra resupply operation and that he had said nothing like what Mr. Gregg had recorded in his notes.

Mr. Gregg tried to explain this to the Foreign Relations Committee by testifying that his "shorthand is lousy."

> This was a short word which I used to describe what Felix was describing with a lot of volubility but not a lot of detail. There was money flying around; there were weapons flying around. I did not now which way the money was flowing.* * * I had no idea from what Felix told me, nor did he, whose dollars were going to the gun runners, and he had no idea of the flow of funds.* * * [T]he use of the word "swaps" was shorter than "purchase". It was a murky picture. And so that is really why I used the word "swaps". That word has achieved later notoriety, but I had no sense of that word."

The picture is murky indeed. It is hard to see how this explanation clarifies the phrase, "a swap of weapons for dollars was arranged to get aid for the Contras." This is obviously an explanation, manufactured later, to try to explain something away.

One can understand that notes taken in haste are not always written in the clearest English. In fact, if it were not for the remarkable similarity of the phrase to a description of what we now know as the Iran-Contra affair, and for the attention to this very August 8 meeting brought about by Mr. Gregg's testimony that he failed to inform the Vice President or the Justice Department about it, it might not seem significant.

These questions taken together and Mr. Gregg's explanations are very troubling. The constitutional responsibility imposed on Senators to advise and consent requires the application of individual judgment. The explanations offered by the nominee are so implausible, so inconsistent with the known facts, that they cannot be believed.

However, the questions of credibility do not stand alone. For if Mr. Gregg's testimony is fully and completely believed, then it raises extremely serious concerns relating to his judgment, in his capacity as National Security Council Adviser to then-Vice President Bush.

As I have already noted, Mr. Gregg testified that after learning about Rodriguez' involvement in the resupply operation in August 1986, he did not inform Vice President Bush. Even after learning of the downing of the plane and the capture of Eugene Hasenfus in Nicaragua on October 5, 1986, from Felix Rodriguez—who called Sam Watson—this was the first report of the shoot-down of the resupply plane to officials in Washington—he did not inform Vice President Bush of any connection between Felix Rodriguez and Oliver North and the resupply operation, or even of the fact of his [Gregg's] meeting on August 8, 1986, with Rodriguez and its troubling if dimly understood revelations about what Rodriguez was describing as a potential Watergate.

If true, this is a most serious failure of judgment which casts doubt on Mr. Gregg's fitness to serve as a U.S. Ambassador.

One of the key roles of ambassadors representing the United States around the world is to report critical events and their analyses of those events to the Secretary of State and the President.

Mr. Gregg's failure to recognize the significance of Rodriguez and North's activities in the resupply of the Contras during a period when such activities were prohibited by law is alarming. Even after the Hasenfus downing made the importance more clear, he failed to recognize his responsibility to the Vice President, and the Nation. In fact, Mr. Gregg testified that Mr. Bush first learned of Rodriguez's involvement by reading an interview which he [Gregg] gave to the New York Times which appeared in December 1986.

If Mr. Gregg did not tell the truth, he should not be confirmed. If he did tell the truth, then by his own account his judgment is so lacking that he should not be confirmed.

The Vice President of the United States is, by law, a member of the National Security Council. As his principal adviser in that capacity, Mr. Gregg had a clear responsibility to report knowledge of such potentially illegal activities by members of the NSC staff and others.

He was either derelict in that responsibility or as he testifies, "did not have it in the correct focus." Mr. Gregg states that he twice offered to resign. He testified, "I felt very much let down by Felix, and I also was very disgruntled with myself that I had not put North's role in a clearer context more quickly." He was right. The Vice President chose to overlook it and reject his resignation. Faced with our constitutional responsibility, we cannot overlook this misjudgment.

Mr. President, the role of our ambassadors in foreign capitals, and particularly with valued and critical allies like the Republic of Korea, is too important to gamble on a nominee who, by his own admission, has demonstrated such poor judgment.

I yield the floor.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the junior Senator from Alaska may be on the way. If not, we will be voting precisely at 6:15.

I listened with some interest to the comments of the distinguished majority leader. I do not wish to extend the debate further, but I wish to make an observation that Felix Rodriguez and Don Gregg were two of only a handful of witnesses who came before the Iran-Contra Committee who neither asked for immunity nor were represented by counsel.

I repeat, Felix Rodriguez and Don Gregg were two of only a handful of witnesses that came before the Iran-Contra Committee not represented by counsel and not asking for immunity.

I suppose, in the course of this debate, somebody sitting out here trying to make an assessment may say that reasonable people can differ. But there does not seem to be any question in the mind of the Senator from Kentucky that Don Gregg has not conducted himself in the way that a person would conduct himself either when it came to turning over the documents that he probably could have gotten away with without turning over, or showing up in arguably a highly dangerous situation like the Iran-Contra situation without a lawyer, not asking for immunity.

Mr. President, this is not the way somebody who is concerned about being involved in criminal activity, not the way they act.

So I think it is entirely plausible to look at this set of facts and reach the conclusion that Don Gregg was only in the vicinity. There were plenty of others that were just in the vicinity, and their lives have not been ruined, and I do not think his should be, either. His 38 years of distinguished service have earned him this Ambassador's post in Korea. I hope that the Senate will grant him that opportunity to go there and serve our country with distinction.

Mr. President, I see no one else available to speak. I suggest the absence of a quorum, and assume that that would be charged against my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the Senate, at long last, is considering the nomination of Don Gregg as Ambassador to South Korea.

It is rare that an ambassadorial nomination is subject to the intense scrutiny that this nomination has received. Mr. Gregg's career; his life—they have been turned inside out, by the Foreign Relations Committee, various critical interest groups, the media.

Basically, there is nothing wrong with that—as long as the examination remains fair and open-minded.

It is even rarer, though, that a nominee is subject to so many unfounded accusations and so much innuendo. And there is something wrong with that—when all the accusations and innuendo add up to zero.

Mr. Gregg has an outstanding record of public service. He has a vast amount of experience in Asian affairs, including specific experience in South Korea. He has the President's trust.

In short, he has the profile that every one of us demands from an ambassadorial nominee.

Let me make one final point: while we have waited a long time for floor action on Mr. Gregg's nomination, events in South Korea have not waited on us. This is a watershed period in South Korea's history; an important period in United States-South Korean relations.

We need an ambassador there now; and we need one who understands South Korea and the big stake we have in what happens there.

Mr. Gregg is that kind of nominee. We need him in Seoul. And I urge all Senators, from both parties, to join in confirming Mr. Gregg today.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGAMAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 8½ minutes.

Mr. McCONNELL. I yield the remainder of my time to the distinguished Senator from Alaska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska is recognized.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I thank the Chair and I thank my colleague from Kentucky. I do not think I will need all the time.

I do want to rise in support of the President's nomination of Don Gregg, to be Ambassador to the Republic of Korea.

I am confident there is no Member of the Senate who would question the importance of our country's relationship with the Republic of Korea.

Over 40 years ago we committed to ensure the survival of that nation, because Korea is essential to United States security, as well as security in the Pacific. Certainly ours was no empty pledge. We backed our commitment with troops, and through great sacrifice of American life, we helped the Republic of Korea successfully resist aggression from the North. A sizable American military presence remains to this day, as solid confirmation of our continuing security stake in the Republic of Korea.

I think it is evident to note, Mr. President, that our foreign policy at that time was substantively different than it is today. It was a matter of American foreign policy that our presence in Korea would provide an opportunity for the seeds of democracy not only to be planted but to be grown and nurtured. We did that by simply saying that, with the force of America and the commitment of manpower, anyone crossing the parallel would meet the economic might of the United States.

Of course, that type of foreign policy is no longer practiced. While it may be quite efficient, we use a process perhaps best described as osmosis where we simply use our influence in less direct ways.

But nevertheless Mr. President, if the United States can cite a success in foreign policy, it has been in the relationship in the establishment of the democracy that exists in the Republic of Korea. I recall a former ambassador commenting here in Washington at a public gathering of a number of my colleagues of the proud moment of America's success in foreign policy relative to the establishment of that democracy.

Of course, our economic relationship with the Republic of Korea has been important and it is more significant than ever. Last year, the Republic of Korea was our seventh largest trading partner. Bilateral trade questions, exchange rates and the respective economic policies of our countries are important issues both to the United States and Korea.

Of course, the Republic is undergoing a delicate transition to a more open democracy. This is a task that the Koreans have undertaken, but high-level United States support and encouragement for this transition is important as well. The Republic of Korea's relations with its neighbors are also of substantial interest to the United States. Tentative ROK contacts with the North Korean regime, Korean relations with the three neighboring superpowers—Japan, China, and the Soviet Union—the Republic of Korea's role as a leading newly industrialized economy—all require high-level United States monitoring and close bilateral consultations.

I mention these important points, Mr. President, because I think it is necessary that we draw attention to the potential consequences of leaving our Embassy in Seoul leaderless for the better part of a year. This is not to denigrate the fine work of the Chargé, Thomas Brooks, over the period as he would be the first to admit there is no substitute for the presence of a President's designated representative.

Mr. President, an ambassador goes abroad as an emissary from the President. Unless the nominee is unfit for clearly other reasons, the President's choice should prevail. Last week, the distinguished majority leader eloquently defended the record of the Senate in acting on the President's nominations this year, and I will not go into the overall statistics, but in the case of the President's nomination, the ambassador to Korea, it is this Senator's opinion that our institution's delay in acting is not defensible.

Mr. President, this delay was not based on lack of qualifications. There is no question that Don Gregg is well qualified. His experience in East Asia and his contacts in the region are first rate. He certainly knows Korea. He served there in difficult times. Much of the record in those days is not open but what is clear is that Don Gregg played a key role in restraining the Pak administration. For example, we have Kim Tae Chung's own testimony read into the committee record, I might add, that Don Gregg saved his life when Kim had been spirited away from his Tokyo hotel by the ROK CIA and was threatened with death. It was Don Gregg who went to the head of the ROK CIA and demanded that Kim be spared.

There is also no question about the impact of United States policy that Don Gregg will have as an ambassador in Seoul. His extensive work in the intelligence community, his long-standing, dedicated and professional service to the President will provide him with an extraordinary opportunity to communicate his views back to Washington and have them considered at the highest levels of government.

Mr. President, action on this nomination has been delayed solely to turn the question of Don Gregg's qualifications into a rehash of the Iran-Contra affair.

The allegations against Don Gregg have been examined in detail over several years by the staffs of the Senate Intelligence Committee, of which I am a member, the Iran-Contra Committee, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, of which I have membership on, as well as the media, of course.

Despite this huge effort, no credible evidence has been found to confirm these allegations. If such evidence existed, I am convinced it would have come to light at this time. The President could easily have avoided the scrutiny of a Senate confirmation process by selecting Don Gregg for a post that did not require Senate confirmation, but the fact he chose to proceed with this nomination shows that neither the President nor Don Gregg has anything to hide. As a member of the Intelligence Committee, I am concerned that a rejection of this nomination would send a message to the men and women of our intelligence community that if they wish to seek a career in a prominent public policy role, their loyal service in intelligence work will be held against them. That would be very unfortunate.

Mr. President, I am pleased the Foreign Relations Committee has finally recommended that Don Gregg be confirmed. I urge the full Senate endorse that decision and vote expeditiously and overwhelmingly to give its consent to this nominee.

I thank the Chair, and I thank my colleague and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired on the nomination. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Donald P. Gregg, of Maryland, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Korea?

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, have the yeas and nays been requested?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are requested. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM], is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KOHL). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 66, nays 33, as follows:

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGAMAN). The Senate will return to legislative session.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. MITCHELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. KOHL). The Chair recognizes the majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Order in the Senate. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of my colleagues——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All conversation will cease.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, for the information of my colleagues, after consultation with the distinguished Republican leader and those involved in the transportation appropriations bill, there will be no further rollcall votes this evening. We will return to that measure promptly tomorrow morning at about 9:30, and my hope is that we will be able to dispose of that during the day tomorrow.

Then we hope to move to the vote on the FSX override, and following that, as soon thereafter as possible, to the next appropriations bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is not in order. The Senate will be in order. Will the Senate be in order, please. Will conversation cease.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I thank my colleagues for their attention. I will repeat just briefly, there will be no further rollcall votes this evening. We will return to the transportation appropriations bill at 9:30 tomorrow, coming in at 9 o'clock. It is my hope we will be able to complete action on that bill tomorrow, and we will also deal with the FSX veto override tomorrow. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. HATFIELD. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. HATFIELD. Does the Senator have an indication as to when the conference report, energy water appropriation bill, may be taken up as a privilege?

Mr. MITCHELL. I had a brief opportunity to discuss it with the distinguished Republican leader a few moments ago. It is my hope that we could complete action on it this evening, if that is acceptable to all concerned—that requires the approval of all concerned and not all have been notified so far—as promptly as possible, this evening, if possible.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as far as I know—we can check on this—I know of no objection. It is a privileged matter, in any event, the energy and water conference report. We might check that with Senator MCCLURE. Is there any objection to the energy and water conference report?

Mr. MCCLURE. It is all right with me.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have just been advised that the chairman of the committee has asked that we not take action pending a discussion, which he had previously indicated, on the procedure. Perhaps we ought to wait and talk to him about that.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

MODIFICATION TO SENATE REPORT 101-75

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in order to expedite the final action on the conference report on the fiscal year 1990 energy and water development appropriations bill, the committee has allocated $58 million in outlays from savings to be made in the Defense appropriations bill. The final conference outcome increased outlays for atomic energy defense activities by that amount.

On behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, I submit the following modification to Senate Report 101-75 and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MODIFIED ALLOCATIONS TO SUBCOMMITTEES (MODIFICATION TO SENATE REPORT 101-75)

The Committee on Appropriations submits the following modification to its report, Allocation to Subcommittees of Budget Totals from the Concurrent Resolution for Fiscal Year 1990, Senate Report 101-75, in compliance with section 302(b)(1) and section 302(e) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended.

The discretionary and total outlay allocation of the Energy and Water Development Subcommittee is increased by $58 million.

The discretionary and total outlay allocation of the Defense subcommittee is reduced by $58 million.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. EXON. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. EXON pertaining to the introduction of S. 1607 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1990

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nebraska will withhold his request for a quorum, I wanted to put in the RECORD a brief statement on the transportation appropriations bill that has been so ably put together by the distinguished Senator from New Jersey.

This is a bill and a piece of legislation in which the economic pressures have been phenomenal and everybody wants a piece of transportation, understanding how extraordinarily important this is to the fabric of our economy, all the way from highways to airports and then the very important role of the Coast Guard.

Mr. President, as we consider the transportation appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990, I rise today to comment on a promising trend found in this legislation—an increased emphasis on the need to expand our aviation infrastructure to accommodate the rapid growth of our air industry. I compliment my good friend, Chairman LAUTENBERG, and the other members of the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee on their good work.

In 1978, Congress deregulated the airline industry. During that year, nearly 276 million passengers flew through our Nation's airports. Within 9 years, this number expanded to more than 450 million fliers per year nationwide, and will clear the 600 million mark by 1997. Yet, while the demand for an adequate and efficient aviation infrastructure has increased, I believe that the Federal Government has been slow to respond to this growing need.

In addition to the rapid growth of the flying public, the deregulation of the airline industry has created the well-known hub and spoke system of air transportation, with which we in the Congress—as frequent flyers—are very familiar. This practice of feeding passengers from around the country into central "switchboard" airports has increased the efficiency of the industry and helped to keep ticket prices affordable.

Yet, at the same time, the hub and spoke business strategy has accentuated the problems of our inadequate infrastructure. By concentrating a significant portion of the increased passenger traffic to relatively few large airports in the country, passenger delays and inconveniences have become common.

According to the Federal Aviation Administration [FAA], there are 21 airports where, at each one, passengers are experiencing more than 20,000 hours of delays annually. At five of these congested facilities, people will wait more than 50,000 hours to land or take off. By the turn of the century, the FAA projects that, if we do not take steps to expand our Nation's aviation capacity, passengers using the three busiest airports will have delays exceeding 100,000 hours annually—Atlanta, Chicago and, unfortunately, Denver.

This problem is only going to get worse. With the number of passengers arriving and departing these major hubs expected to rise to 85 percent by the year 2000, the effects of this business practice is very familiar to the people of Colorado. Constructed to handle 18 million passengers per year, Denver's Stapleton International Airport currently plays host to more than 34 million passengers. Recent FAA projections indicate that by the year 2000, Denver's traffic will top 66 million, making it the fastest growing airport in the country.

Mr. President, Senator LAUTENBERG and the members of the subcommittee have included language making nearly $250 million available in fiscal 1990 for projects which will enhance the ability of our Nation's airports to handle the growing number of people choosing to fly. This money is sorely needed by States and municipalities to accommodate the increased traffic experienced by many of the country's airports as a result of the deregulation of the airline industry.

As some of you may know, in my own State of Colorado, we are working hard to accomplish just such a task. Recently, the citizens of Denver voted overwhelmingly to proceed with the construction of a new international airport to serve the Rocky Mountain region. This facility will be the first major airport built in 15 years, since the opening of Dallas-Fort Worth in 1974, and will expand the Nation's air capacity by 11 percent. Reductions in delays will be experienced around the country with Denver's increased ability to handle air traffic at times of poor weather and heavy demand. With the fine work by the members of the Appropriations Committee, this airport will open on time in 1993.

Mr. President, again, I wish to thank Senator LAUTENBERG and Senator D'AMATO as the chairman and ranking member of the Subcommittee on Transportation Appropriations. In addition, I know we are all appreciative of the usual hard work and courtesy of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator BYRD, and the ranking member, Senator HATFIELD.

I yield the floor.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I just want to thank the Senator from Colorado for his words of support and for his commitment to help us move this bill along. Tomorrow morning we will be discussing it fully.

I am encouraged by the number of pledges of support that I have received on this transportation bill. It seems there are lots of friends who want us to stop smoking, stop, as they say, blowing smoke at other passengers. And with the encouragement of the Senator from Colorado, Senator HATCH of Utah, Senator SLADE GORTON of Washington, and many others, I expect we will be able to move this bill along.

I hope I will be able to have the support of my colleagues at the critical moment tomorrow when the decisions are being made.

I thank the Senator from Colorado for his support.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for morning business with Senators to speak therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

"ASSEMBLY JOINT RESOLUTION No. 25

"Whereas the Medicare program is an integral part of our nation's Social Security system; and

"Whereas the Medicare program has been the target of inequitable budget reductions for each year since fiscal year 1982, resulting in the loss of money with which to provide health care to Nevada's Medicare recipients; and

"Whereas Nevada's elderly population is projected to grow dramatically by the year 2000; and

"Whereas the rate of reimbursement for care provided in rural hospitals is significantly less than the rate used to reimburse urban hospitals; and

"Whereas, this difference in reimbursement is adding greatly to the financial pressures which are causing many rural hospitals to close their doors; and

"Whereas, further budget reductions are being contemplated by Congress that threaten the financial viability, quality and availability of Medicare providers in Nevada; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of Nevada, jointly, That the members of the Nevada Legislature urge Congress not to reduce payments to Medicare providers below the current level for fiscal year 1990, to enable the Medicare program to meet the necessary costs of providing elderly Nevadans with continued access to high quality health care; and be it further

"Resolved, That the members of the Nevada Legislature urge Congress to reconsider the use of differing rates for reimbursement of Medicare providers; and be further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be prepared and transmitted forthwith by the Chief Clerk of the Assembly to the Vice President of the United States as the presiding officer of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to each member of the Nevada Congressional Delegation; and be it further

"Whereas last June, the U.S. Congress expanded medicare to cover catastrophic health care, financing it with a huge tax increase which will be borne by Americans over 65, many of whom are on fixed incomes; and

"Whereas the 15% income-tax surcharge for those over 65 is scheduled to rise to 28% by 1993; and

"Whereas, This tax affects all persons over 65 with more than $1,000 a year in taxable income; and

"Whereas, Organizations demanding that Congress repeal the medicare expansion are active in New York, Pennsylvania, California, Florida, and Texas, as well as Illinois; and

"Whereas, One major flaw in the Catastrophic Medicare Act is that it does not cover custodial care; and

"Whereas, The Catastrophic Medicare Act was hastily enacted and needs to be reevaluated; therefore, be it

"Resolved, by the Senate of the eighty-sixty General Assembly of the State of Illinois, That we register our criticism of the recently enacted Catastrophic Medicare Act; that we protect the tax burden that it lays upon senior citizens; and that we urge the repeal of this tax increasel and be it further

"Resolved, That suitable copies of this preamble and resolution be presented to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and to each member of the Illinois Congressional Delegation."

"Whereas the Members of the Senate of the 86th General Assembly of the State of Illinois believe the competitiveness of Illinois' steel industry and steel-using manufacturers is critical to the State's economic health; therefore, be it

"Resolved, by the Senate of the eighty-sixth General Assembly of the State of Illinois, that, in adopting this Resolution, we urge the 101st Congress and the President of the United States to adopt a fair and balanced policy regarding the importation of foreign steel, which will maintain a vigorous and healthy steel and steel-using manufacturing industry; and be it further

"Resolved, That a suitable copy of this preamble and resolution be presented to the President of the United States, to the Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives, to the President pro tempore of the U.S. Senate and to each Member of the Illinois Congressional Delegation."

"Whereas we believe that the citizens of Maine are directly affected and influenced by the relationship between alcohol advertising and alcohol consumption, as documented by various studies; and

COMMUNITY MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES ACT

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Community Mental Health Center Act of 1989 and am greatly pleased to add Senators DOLE, MATSUNAGA, and INOUYE as original cosponsors of this bill.

It has been just over 25 years now since President Kennedy signed the Mental Retardation Facilities and Community Health Centers Construction Act of 1963. In great part it was an effort to close those massive fortresses which became institutional homes to so many victims of mental disorders. Caring for the mentally ill was, for well over 100 years, a responsibility of the Government. Indeed, patients were the wards of the State. To say that our efforts in the 1950's and early 1960's to change that situation got started in New York, however, is not an overstatement.

There is something of a history here. The story can be told in brief. In 1953, Dr. Nathan S. Kline, working at Rockland State Hospital, set out to isolate the active ingredient in serpent-wood—Rauwolfia serpentina, a root used from antiquity in Vedic medicine to calm people. When Dr. Kline was done, he had the chemical reserpine, one of the first tranquilizers. He published his findings in 1954.

That was the year W. Averell Harriman was elected Governor. It was a time when mental illness was seen as perhaps the most pressing problem New York State faced—bond issue followed bond issue to build institution after institution. On taking office, with much encouragement from his secretary, Jonathan B. Bingham, and Paul H. Hoch, Commissioner of Mental Hygiene, Harriman began to consider the implications of Dr. Kline's discovery.

As Jonathan Bingham's assistant, I was present at the meeting in the Governor's office in the spring of 1955 when it was decided to provide the tranquilizer when appropriate to all patients systemwide. It was a $1.5 million bet.

Almost immediately the population of State mental institutions began to decline. It peaked in Harriman's first year at 93,314. In 1988, it was done to 18,699.

A few weeks after the meeting in the Governor's office in Albany, a law was enacted in Washington setting up a joint Commission on Mental Illness and Health. The Commissions report was finished in 1960, the year John F. Kennedy was elected President. The Commission proposed that tranquilizers be used nationwide and that new community based mental health care arrangements be made for patients who responded. In time, we had a name for this new institution, the Community Mental Health Center. President Kennedy set up a task force to propose a program to establish community based systems of mental health care delivery. As an Assistant Secretary of Labor, with a New York background, I was a working member of that task force and did much of the drafting of our report to the President, who thereupon proposed legislation.

In the task force report which was sent to the President we outlined a five-point Federal program to facilitate improvement and progress in our treatment of the mentally ill. The object of those proposals was the elimination of the State mental hospital in the course of a generation. We recommended:

First, Federal grants to States to assist them to develop both short- and long-term plans for the establishment and operation of comprehensive community health programs;

Second, increased Federal funds for the construction of community mental health facilities with the goal of building 2,000 by 1980. The legislation which resulted from these proposals provided that we would build one community mental health center for each 100,000 persons. We had figured out, for example, that schizophrenia was basically a genetic affliction—now thought to be a physiological affliction—with a more or less constant incidence in a large population. There was no thought of getting rid of mental illness, only of caring for mental patients in more humane and therapeutic settings. By 1980, we had only built 768 centers. In New York City where the ratio would call for 73, we only have 14;

Third, Federal funding to raise the level of care of patients in State mental hospitals, community mental health centers, and psychiatric units of general hospitals;

Fourth, double Federal funding for research in the field of mental illness and health over 5 years; and,

Fifth, increase Federal support for education in the mental health professions in order to treble the supply of professional manpower by 1980.

These were the goals we set for ourselves—what President Kennedy described as a "wholly new emphasis and approach to care for the mentally ill." These were the goals which were set in a period of early medical and scientific knowledge of mental disorders. We have come a long way despite the fact that we haven't achieved all we set out to do in 1963. The goal, however, of community based services to the mentally ill was the model for appropriately and successfully treating the large incidence of illness in society.

Our report stated then, and I believe it to be the case today that—

[T]he comprehensive community mental health center, as it has evolved out of research and clinical experience both here and abroad, is broader in concept than either the traditional outpatient clinic or intramural services as usually conceived. It combines the best elements of both and serves as the nucleus and base of operations of a comprehensive community mental health program. A comprehensive mental health center is a multiservice community facility designed to provide early diagnosis and treatment of mental illness, both on an inpatient and outpatient basis, and serves as a locus for aftercare of discharged hospital patients.

Our definition has evolved these last 25 years. Biases remain, however. The report of the Joint Commission on Mental Illness and Health observed then that—

[M]ental illness is different from physical in the one fundamental aspect that it tends to disturb and repel others rather than evoke their sympathy and desire to help.

As of 1980, the population of State hospitals and residential care facilities nationwide was 255,000 patients. Many of these individuals will continue to be deinstitutionalized or will be in and out of the hospital. Some will become homeless without followup care. The National Institute of Mental Health [NIMH] states that "In a course of any 6 month time period, 19 percent of adult Americans suffer from at least one disorder classified as psychiatric." Schizophrenia affects at least 1 percent of the population, while major depressive illness affects 5 percent. The costs of these illnesses are staggering. Thirty-six billion dollars are spent annually in direct care costs—excluding alcohol and drug abuse treatment. Schizophrenia alone accounts for 40 percent of all long-term care hospital days, compared to 27 percent for cardiovascular diseases. The elderly suffer from the highest rate of suicide in the population—nearly a quarter, 22 percent, of all suicides occur in elderly Americans 65 years old and older.

We have learned something of these matters but the problems of deinstitutionalization persist and the will to accomplish the goals of the 1963 legislation are far from complete. As an example, I would draw attention to an editorial which recently appeared in the Washington Post entitled ". . . And the Mentally Ill" (June 24, 1989):

In 1974 a group of lawyers filed suit against the District government, arguing that hundreds of mental patients at St. Elizabeths Hospital deserved to be released and treated in the least restrictive setting possible. The lawyers won, but have had to take city officials back to court repeatedly to force them to create a community-based mental health system to replace the central institution. Now the attorneys and the District government have promised to release and find housing for 400 patients in two years. But is there any real reason to believe the District government has the resolve to make good on this plan?

Two years ago, lawyers from the Mental Health Law project sought to have a special master appointed by the courts to take the mental health system out of the hands of the D.C. government. In exchange for the dropping of that suit, the city agreed, among other things, to monitor community residential facilties regularly, end their overcrowding and provide better training for the staffs.

Though the city did not comply with every other aspect of the agreement, it did comply with these. That record, combined with a new pledge from Mayor Marion Barry to take a major role in the effort, has given the advocates hope that the city might meet its latest commitments as well. Part of the new agreement is that the city will hire an outside expert to help put in place a housing plan for released patients. The city has also agreed to hire more staff to do such things as speed up the buying of supplies and serve as outreach workers, locating mentally ill street people and placing them in treatment programs.

It all reads reasonably enough on paper. But whether the issue has been the creation of more group homes for juvenile delinquents or more shelters for the homeless, city officials have failed to fulfill many comparable agreements in the past. Residents must hope that this will be an exception.

The problem persists. Patients ready to be integrated back into the community simply haven't the places to go. We attempt to address the problems of followup care by expanding services and access and by increasing understanding of the nature of the problems associated with mental illness.

Despite the occurrence of mental illness in the population, the origins of which are now thought to be biological as well as psychological, society still hasn't gotten entirely beyond prejudices and stigmas. Mental illness and its associated disorders are prevalent in the population and their early diagnosis and treatment within a community based center can be effective. In addition, preventive community support programs, such as those which are provided by CMHC's including case-managed psychotherapeutic services, residential care, rehabilitative services, and substance abuse assistance, among others, to the young, to adults and to the elderly, are cost effective alternatives to primary, inpatient hospital based care.

For those individuals who find themselves in life crises in their later years, mental health intervention can be both effective and cost effective. Outpatient care at a community mental health center, at home or in a nursing facility can provide enhanced access to the elderly. In our society where families are now more widely disbursed than at any other time, intervention services can relieve depression and other emotional disorders which may be associated with the aging process including loneliness, frustration, boredom, reactions to medicines and failing health. When preventive mental health care intervention succeeds, individuals may well avoid a hospital stay if they are, indeed, not physically ill and as a result primary health care costs are reduced. Studies of reduced costs of medical utilization following mental health treatment indicate that, in fact, this is the case.

The widespread and persistent evidence of reduced rate of increase of medical expense following mental health treatment argues for the inseparability of mind and body in health care, and it also argues specifically for the likelihood that mental health treatment may improve patients' ability to stay healthy enough to avoid hospitalization admission for physicial illness * * * underutilization of mental health services by the elderly may result in needless suffering among the elderly and needless cost to society.

While there is little doubt of the need among the elderly for supportive community based therapeutic services, indeed, that older patients who utilize mental health treatment reduce medical expenses more than young ones do, studies indicate that older patients underuse these services primarily because of the stigmas attached to mental health treatment and, also, because of insufficient access to appropriate mental health care.

We can correct these problems by public education and outreach, which is already being done by some CMHC's, and by enhancing individuals' access to appropriate mental health treatment.

To achieve these goals, of providing cost-effective mental health care services and increased access, our bill, the Community Mental Health Services Act of 1989, does two things:

First, section 2 extends direct Medicare reimbursement to three of the five core mental health providers—as recognized by the Public Health Service Act—of mental health care services in Community Mental Health Centers: clinical social workers, psychiatric nurses, and marriage and family therapists. Medicare currently provides direct reimbursement to psychiatrists universally, and psychologists in CMHC's specifically. Each of these providers has received graduate training in psychotherapy services for the elderly and disabled.

Recognizing providers of care and increasing access to care is essential if the full range of services are to be provided to the elderly and the disabled who are in need of community based mental health support.

The needs which CMHC's meet are, by and large, the same throughout the country. The availability of care and services to meet these needs—particularly in rural America—is something quite different. Rural community-based clinics are barely making it. A psychiatrist is not always available in a CMHC, particularly in rural parts of the country. Where one does not exist or is not available, these three providers cannot be indirectly reimbursed by Medicare.

To deny direct reimbursement to any of the five core providers of mental health services is to deny that mental health care is a complex association of services and therapies for wellness and well being. It is to deny that research dollars, themselves too often limited for mental illness research, have achieved remarkable successes in our understanding and ability to treat mental illness. Ultimately, it limits access to the elderly and disabled who are often most in need of support.

Second, section 3 extends "partial hospitalization services" provided in CMHC's. These are rehabilitative and therapetuic intensive ambulatory treatment regimens which currently are reimbursed by Medicare when they are provided within a hosptial. CMHC's already provide these services as community support programs. They simply cannot be reimbursed for them by Medicare.

Dr. David Musto of Yale University, who is a source of so much expertise on the subject of mental health wrote of the original legislation:

It [the Community Mental Health Centers Act of 1963] would allow not only more equal access to mental health care but the provision of a broad spectrum of services—in-patient, out-patient, partial hospitalization, emergency, and education-consultation—to fill the enormous gap between the needs of those with only minor emotional tension and those whose illness required full hospitalzation.

Extending direct Medicare reimbusement for these services to the elderly and disabled in rural and underserved areas, provided by these professions in Community Mental Health Centers, is a large step toward the attainment of the goals President Kennedy set for us 25 years ago; namely, the well-being of the individual supported by the family and by the community.

CBO has estimated a cost of $10 million per year for this bill.

I would ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. HEINZ:

S. 1592. A bill to require the Secretary of Labor to establish a demonstration program to improve access to public employment and job training programs; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

JOB CENTER NETWORK ACT

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, recently the U.S. Department of Labor [DOL] released our Nation's employment situation for last month. Our civilian unemployment rate for August of this year was 5.2 percent. A sharp contrast from 1982 with a high of 9.8 percent, to be sure, but there remain millions of unemployed Americans who are able and anxious to work, and need and deserve our support with training and employment assistance.

The legislation I am introducing today, the Job Center Network Act of 1989, contains two components intended to provide these unemployed Americans with better coordinated access to employment opportunities and Federal employment services.

The first component establishes a demonstration program to assist States in creating job centers. These job centers would provide one-stop access to available and important support services for the unemployed during their job search. Such services include job training, child care, housing, welfare, rehabilitation, counseling, and a variety of other community assistive and support services.

Currently, in many States, our unemployed face a seemingly endless maze of Federal and State paperwork in their pursuit of an honest day's work. A discouraging situation under the best of circumstances. The Job Center Network Act would mark a path through this maze by providing a centralized reference point for all Federal, State, and community employment services available to the unemployed.

Job centers are a proven success in my home State of Pennsylvania. Two years ago, the Commonwealth experimented with this concept, and it has spread to more than 65 job centers.

These local job centers are comprehensive, one-stop employment and training resources to employers and individuals who are unemployed, underemployed, or who face barriers to employment.

Job centers, by coordinating a variety of services for the unemployed are cost effective, serving to streamline and simplify the programs and services available to the unemployed on their way to a new occupation and self-sufficiency.

Converting existing Pennsylvania Employment Services Offices to job centers is not expensive, consisting primarily of one-time costs for training staff and producing materials.

To cover costs associated with this demonstration program, this legislation authorizes the DOL Secretary to provide States with grants from the Employment Security Administration [ESA] account. Since 97 percent of ESA funds are derived from the Federal unemployment tax, funding the demonstration projects through ESA will be budget neutral.

The second component of this legislation would require any State or local entities receiving Federal dollars for Economic Development Programs to list with the State Employment Service Office any employment opportunities created in conjunction with activities undertaken with those funds. This simple requirement, with little if any cost, benefits those looking for skilled employees and again streamlines employment opportunities available to those seeking work.

Annually, the Federal Government spends more than $4 billion on Economic Development Programs to create jobs in distressed areas with high levels of unemployment. I think it is a natural that our Federal Economic Development Programs should work with and complement the ongoing efforts of State Employment Service Offices.

Our national unemployment rate is low. We must be mindful, however, of pockets of high unemployment scattered throughout America. My legislation will allow States to zero in on communities with high unemployment that merit extra assistance through job centers.

I urge my colleagues to join me in assisting unemployed Americans in finding the training and job opportunities they need to become self-sufficient. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1593. A bill to establish the National Commission on Natural Resources Disasters, to provide for increased planning and cooperation with local firefighting forces in the event of forest fires, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

NATIONAL COMMISSION ON NATURAL RESOURCES DISASTERS

● Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, today, I am introducing, for myself, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. WILSON, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. HATCH, Mr. BURNS, and Mr. HELMS, a bill establishing a National Commission on Natural Resources Disasters.

The purpose of this bill is to provide for increased planning and cooperation with local officials in addressing the devastating fire disasters that arise on the Government-owned lands.

The need for such coordination became painfully evident during the 1988 fire season. In Idaho, a State where two out of three acres is owned by the Federal Government, fires on Federal lands can be devastating and life threatening to those who live in the neighboring communities. That fact gives these local populations a vested interest in developing a sound and responsive fire control policy and in implementing that policy expediently and efficiently.

The bill we are introducing today would allow the Secretary of Agriculture to establish an advisory committee made up of these local interests to examine the impacts of forest and range fires on their communities and to report to the Secretary their recommendations on how to minimize those impacts that are undesirable.

The net result of this Commission would be to promote a better fire suppression policy all around: One that allows the local community to better assist in Federal fire control activities, while also helping the Federal fire policy become more responsive to the needs of the people who live in and around Government lands.●

S. 1594. A bill to revise the boundary of Gettysburg National Military Park in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

REVISION OF BOUNDARY OF GETTYSBURG NATIONAL MILITARY PARK

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, today I join my colleague from Pennsylvania, Senator HEINZ, in introducing a bill to authorize the implementation of the Gettysburg National Military Park Boundary Study which the Interior Department transmitted to Congress on August 21, 1989. Our colleagues in the House of Representatives, Congressmen GOODLING and KOSTMAYER, also have introduced companion legislation in this matter. Pursuant to Public Law 100-132, the National Park Service [NPS] submits recommendations in this study regarding the final development of the Gettysburg National Military Park. As part of a cooperative effort, the National Park Service worked with interested parties, including: Federal and State representatives, the Adams County Commissioners, the Gettysburg Borough Manager, the Adams County-Gettysburg Chamber of Commerce, the Adams County Historical Society, the Civil War Institute, Civil War Roundtable Institute Associates, Gettysburg College, and the National Trust for Historic Preservation. As a result, this document represents a near consensus on the part of local residents, park officials, and historians throughout the Nation regarding the next phase of development of the Gettysburg National Military Park.

According to the Park Service, the 1895 legislation establishing the Gettysburg National Military Park contained language and broad references to a map drawn by Maj. Gen. Daniel Sickles that have been the subject of uncertainty and various interpretations for many years. As a result, the Gettysburg National Military Park, although one of the most frequently visited military parks in the country, has no formally recognized boundaries.

The boundary study identifies the need for Congress to establish a permanent boundary through legislation and to support cooperative efforts for protection of the historic setting. The study identifies key battlefield areas that are currently not part of the park, monuments and important elements of the historic setting that require protection, and some areas that are no longer needed for park purposes.

Specifically, the National Park Service through the boundary study proposes to add approximately 1,900 acres that include key sites and features of the battle not now adequately protected or interpreted; delete approximately 25 acres which are no longer necessary to the Park Service's mission; and protect outlying monuments and markers primarily through cooperative agreements with landowners.

Widely recognized as a turning point in the Civil War, the Battle of Gettysburg is perhaps one of the most significant historical events in this Nation's history. Much has been written about both military and personal dramas which were played out during the course of the 3-day battle. As one of the few Civil War conflicts fought on Northern soil, Gettysburg offered a rare opportunity for the Confederacy and presented the Union with new and unanticipated challenges. After 3 days of fierce fighting, however, the Confederates were forced to retreat, and Gen. Robert E. Lee's Army of Northern Virginia was never again strong enough to launch a major invasion into the North.

Gettysburg is significant also as the site at which President Abraham Lincoln delivered a short but eloquent address to dedicate a national cemetery in honor of Union dead. The brief remarks, which he ironically believed the world would "little note, nor long remember" later became known as the Gettsyburg Address. President Lincoln foresaw that the actions of those who had died at that battlefield could never be forgotton. The establishment of accurate boundaries for the Gettysburg National Military Park represents a continuing effort to ensure that the deeds of those who fought at Gettysburg are carefully recorded and preserved for future generations.

Mr. President, it is essential that resources necessary to maintain and interpret the significance of the Battle of Gettysburg be made available to the Park Service. Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to join us in supporting this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1594

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. GETTYSBURG NATIONAL MILITARY PARK BOUNDARY REVISION.

(a) LANDS INCLUDED IN THE PARK.—In furtherance of the purposes of the Act entitled "An Act to establish a national military park at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania", approved February 11, 1895 (16 U.S.C. 430g et seq.), the Gettysburg National Military Park (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "park") shall hereafter comprise the lands and interests in lands within the boundary generally depicted as "Proposed Park Boundary" on the map entitled "Proposed Boundary Concept", numbered NPS 305/80034, and dated , 198 , which shall be on file and available for public inspection in the Office of the Director of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior.

(b) LANDS EXCLUDED FROM THE PARK.—Lands and interests in lands outside of the boundary so depicted as "Proposed Park Boundary" on the map referred to in subsection (a) are hereby excluded from the park and shall be disposed of under section 2(o).

SEC. 2. ACQUISTION AND DISPOSAL OF LANDS.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—The Secretary is authorized to acquire lands and interests in lands within the park by donation, purchased with donated or appropriated funds, exchange, or otherwise.

(b) AUTHORITY TO CONVEY FREEHOLD AND LEASEHOLD INTERESTS WITHIN PARK.—The Secretary may convey lands and interests in lands within the park authorized in accordance with section 5(a) of the Act approved July 15, 1968 (16 U.S.C. 4601-22), except that, notwithstanding subsection (d) of that section, the net proceeds from any such conveyance may be retained and used to acquire lands and interests within the park.

(c) CONVEYANCE OF LANDS EXCLUDED FROM PARK.—In acquiring lands and interests in lands within the park. the Secretary may convey by exchange those Federal lands and interests excluded from the park by section 1. If any such Federal lands and interests are not so conveyed after 5 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary may sell any or all of such lands and interests to the highest bidder and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, retain and use the net proceeds to acquire lands and interests within the park.

(d) RELINQUISHMENT OF LEGISLATIVE JURISDICTION TO PENNSYLVANIA.—With respect to any lands over which the United States exercises exclusive or concurrent legislative jurisdiction and which are excluded from the park by seciton 1, the Secretary may relinquish to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania such exclusive or concurrent legislative jurisdiction by filing with the Governor a notice of relinquishment to take effect upon acceptance thereof, unless otherwise provided by the laws of the Commonwealth.

SEC. 3. AGREEMENTS WITH RESPECT TO MONUMENTS AND TABLETS LOCATED OUTSIDE PARK BOUNDARY.

The Secretary is authorized to enter into agreements with the owners of property outside the boundary of the park on which have been erected historic monument and tablets commemorating the Battle of Gettysburg. The Secretary may make funds available for the maintenance, protection, and interpretation of such monuments and tablets pursuant to such agreements. In addition, the Secretary may acquire, by donation, purchase, or exchange, lands and interests comprising such monuments and tablets together with lands and interests necessary to provide adequate public access thereto.

SEC. 4. CONSERVATION OF HISTORIC SETTING.

The Secretary shall take appropriate action to encourage conservation of the battlefield setting at Gettysburg by landowners, local governments, organizations, and businesses. The Secretary shall give priority in making grants under section 101(d), and in providing technical assistance, information, and advice under section 101(h), of the National Historic Preservation Act (16 U.S.C. 470a(d), (h)) to programs and activities that will assure development and use of natural and cultural resources in a manner that is consistent with the conservation and maintenance of the historic character of the battlefield setting. The Secretary shall also provide, on a request basis, technical assistance to assist local governments in cooperative efforts which complement the values of the park and battlefield and to help landowners prepare individual property plans and which meet landowner and conservaiton objectives in the area known as the "Battlefield Setting" as depicted on the map referred to in section 1(a).

SEC. 5. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with Senator SPECTER and Congressman GOODLING as we introduce legislation to approve the recently completed boundary study at Gettysburg National Military Park.

As many of my colleagues know, Gettysburg remains this Nation's most devastating single battle. Fifty-three thousand Americans were casualties of that remarkable struggle. The significance of the battle cannot be overstated. Many historians regard the battle of Gettysburg as the turning point of the American Civil War—the battle that made it possible for the Union to endure and to enjoy, as President Lincoln put it, "a new birth of freedom."

The boundary study found approximately 1,800 acres of land now outside of Federal ownership which are a part of the actual battlefield. By approving that study, we are not buying that land, nor authorizing any specific land acquisition. We are simply acknowledging that those lands fall within the area where the battle took place.

In addition, by including the additional 1,800 acres within the boundary, Gettysburg National Military Park would be able to negotiate covenants with the land owners to ensure the protection of historic places. The Park Service could also accept donations of land within the new boundary, and thus acquire significant properties. For example, just below the Park Service's property line on Big Roundup lies an area known as "south cavalry field." On this field Union General Farnsworth and his cavalry brigade met disaster on July 2, 1863. General Longstreet's Confederate infantry met the Union's ill-timed charge and all but destroyed the brigade. Farnsworth died on the site. Significantly, there are those who might like to buy this land and give it to the park, but Gettysburg cannot now accept it since the land is beyond its present boundary.

Other lands contiguous to the park, and containing great historic significance, might be developed in the coming years and the Park Service will be powerless to do anything about it if we cannot approve the new boundary.

Again, this legislation does not grant approval to any particular land acquisition. It simply ratifies the Interior Department's own findings that these 1,800 acres belong within the battlefield boundary. These findings have been reviewed and approved by the administration, through the Office of Management and Budget.

In closing, Mr. President, I believe this legislation to be extremely timely and quite needed. I urge my colleagues to work with us to approve the legislation as soon as possible.

S. 1595. A bill to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain a central receiving facility at the Department of Agriculture for the storage and retrieval of data relating to Federal rural development programs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT DATA BASE ACT

● Mr. COATS. Mr. President, today I rise to introduce a bill to establish within the Department of Agriculture, a national database for the collection and dissemination of rural development information. This would do much more than serve as a clearinghouse for information. The recent Senate legislation (S. 1036) on rural development has already established a clearinghouse. Rather, a national database would serve as a single collection point for tracking and evaluation of rural development efforts.

This is needed primarily because of the myriad of programs that exist in the rural development area. A recent GAO report pointed out that 88 programs can be classified as rural development-type programs. We need some means of determining what programs are working, what programs are not, and why. Only if we compile information on the costs and benefits of rural development programming will we be able to add efficiency to the virtues of our national rural policy.

Next year, the 1990 farm bill will be considered. How will we be able to evaluate our rural development programs for the 1990 farm bill if there is so little information available about what works? This initiative, although it follows the recent rural development legislation, recognizes that we have to prepare for the serious evaluation of programs to help our rural communities. We want the rural counties of America to share in this Nation's unprecedented economic growth. But, in order for that to happen, we need a database to provide a solid foundation for policy decisions.●

S. 1596. A bill to minimize the impact of agricultural nitrogen on ground water and surface water quality by establishing a national task force on agricultural best management practices, to amend the Clean Water Act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

AGRICULTURAL NITROGEN MANAGEMENT ACT

● Mr. COATS. Mr. President, today I rise to introduce legislation to evaluate the impact of environmental and agricultural nitrogen on groundwater quality. In my travels around my own State of Indiana, it is clear that there is an increasing concern for quality drinking water. The intent of this legislation is to minimize the impact of nitrogen on our Nation's water supply.

Nitrogen in groundwater comes from a number of sources, including animal manures, decaying leaves and plants, sewage and industrial chemicals, and agricultural fertilizers. The legislation will establish a task force to develop recommendations for the management of nitrogen fertilizers for farming. The point of the task force's recommendations will be to mitigate any negative effects of agricultural nitrogen and environmental nitrogen on water quality. The task force will establish guidelines and "best management practices" for the use of agricultural fertilizers.

Many farmers depend on nitrogen fertilizers. Yet, if they are not applied properly, these chemicals can poison the water supply. The agriculture community and specifically, the USDA, can address the problems of ground water quality without endangering the farms and businesses that depend upon nitrogen fertilizers.●

By Mr. FORD:

S. 1600. A bill to enhance the safety of air travel through a more effective Federal Aviation Administration, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

FEDERAL AVIATION ADMINISTRATION INDEPENDENT ESTABLISHMENT ACT

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I am sure all Senators would agree, particularly after the August recess, on the importance of a safe, efficient and modern air transportation system. The Federal Aviation Administration [FAA], the agency charged with operating and maintaining the national air space, has a challenging job. The FAA must not only manage the operational side—such as controllers, inspectors, security personnel—but also must push to modernize and improve the technical side of aviation through development and replacement of equipment, improved systems and processes and new airports and runways.

Since 1966, the FAA has been housed in the Department of Transportation. This was done with the hope that a single cabinet voice would develop and implement transportation policy for all modes. While this may have been a good idea, I believe it is an idea that has failed—at least as far as the FAA is concerned.

During the time I have been chairman of the Aviation Subcommittee, I have developed a tremendous respect for the FAA, for the job it does, for the challenges it meets and for the people who work there. Yet I have seen the FAA politicized by the Department of Transportation; the FAA's budget and priorities have been submerged in the welter of other needs at the Department; the FAA's people have been second-guessed, and demoralized by the Department staff: a staff, I might add, not usually trained in technical matters nor equipped to override the experts as the FAA. The FAA has had in recent years a high turnover rate among administrators which only increase the difficulties the agency faces in fulfilling its mission.

The Commerce Committee and our counterparts in the House of Representatives, the Public Works Committee, reauthorized the FAA in 1982, and established funding levels which we believed would be sufficient to build new airports and runways, to implement the national airspace modernization plan, to conduct research, and to assure adequate numbers of controllers, inspectors and operational personnel. Too often, the authorized levels have not been met. While there are a variety of reasons for this, the fact remains that people are being taxed every time they fly and the funds are sitting in the Treasury while the FAA has unmet needs.

In 1981 the FAA embarked on the National Airspace System Modernization Plan—a large capital program designed to prepare the U.S. aviation world for the demands of the 1990s and on into the next century. The program is progressing, but has been delayed by the unwieldy, cumbersome Federal procurement process, as well as by funding uncertainties.

The FAA has trouble getting and keeping trained staff in some of the complex facilities. Sometimes the normal Government pay scale and benefits are not sufficient to encourage controllers and technicians to move to urban environments, or to take high-stress jobs.

Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which I hope will go far toward curing the problems I have described. My bill creates an independent executive agency, separate from the Department of Transportation with a 7-year fixed-term administrator selected by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The Administrator will select his deputy from the ranks of the career service. This will assure not only some continuity among administrators, but also some institutional knowledge of the FAA and the Washington environment.

I propose a budget treatment which would use the revenues for the authorized capital, research, airport grants and operational programs. A portation of the operating costs for the FAA will still have to be approriated from general revenues, but I hope that my proposal will result in more trust fund revenues going to operations than have in the past. The existing trust fund balance will remain in reserve until 1993, when it will be applied to airport capacity projects, and other critical needs of the FAA. Authorizations and appropriations after fiscal year 1990 would extend for periods of 2 fiscal years.

The legislation authorizes the Administrator, through rulemaking, to limit competition for procurement of items critical to the modernization and operation of the national airspace. The Administrator would also be permitted to exceed the basic pay rate by up to 20 percent in order to staff critical facilities. The FAA would be encouraged to explore other incentives to motivate the work force, and would report to Congress within 6 months on any remedies.

To ease the transition in the first year, my bill provides for an advisory team of five aviation experts, headed by the Secretary of Transportation plus two chosen by the Senate Commerce Committee, and two by the House Committee on Public Works.

Mr. President, I expect to continue to work closely with my friends in the aviation community who have helped me so much with the development of this legislation. I look forward to the advice and support of my colleagues in the Senate and hope for early passage of the independent FAA bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and the summary be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1600

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Aviation Administration Independent Establishment Act of 1989".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the civil aviation industry in the United States has experienced an unprecedented period of rapid development and expansion over the past decade;

(2) the Federal Aviation Administration, an administration within the Department of Transportation, has been charged by the Congress with the responsibility for overseeing the safe operation of this essential segment of the national economy;

(3) the Federal Aviation Administration has managed to fulfill its responsibilities within an organizational structure which substantially predates the period of rapid growth and development in the aviation industry;

(4) the relationship between the Federal Aviation Administration and the Department of Transportation is not the relationship that was envisioned when the Department was created with the idea of providing one voice for transportation policy;

(5) the Federal Aviation Administration could respond more readily to the demands of the rapidly expanding aviation sector if it were unencumbered by duplicative layers of departmental staff, if it had a streamlined organizational structure, and if it were given essential management tools necessary to fulfill its mission of ensuring improved and enhanced safety of civil air operations;

(6) the importance of the airport and airway system to our national defense and the need for a working relationship between civil and military aviation necessitates the continued highly successful relationship and cooperative efforts between the Federal Aviation Administration and the Department of Defense;

(7) to assure air safety through the continued modernization and expansion of the Nation's system of airports and airways, the Federal Aviation Administration must continue to emphasize research and development projects; and

(8) if the Federal Aviation Administration is provided with greater autonomy and consistent leadership, it can be expected to exercise vigorously its prerogatives with the direction and guidance of the President and under the ongoing oversight of the Congress.

By Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. SIMON, Mr. DODD, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. INOUYE, and Mr. SPECTER):

S. 1606. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to improve the health of individuals who are members of minority groups and who are from disadvantaged backgrounds, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

DISADVANTAGED MINORITY HEALTH IMPROVEMENT ACT

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Disadvantaged Minority Health Improvement Act of 1989, along with Senators SIMON, DODD, MATSUNAGA, INOUYE, and SPECTER. This legislation addresses the plummeting health status of our Nation's disadvantaged minority citizens. It will authorize the Office of Minority Health to coordinate Federal efforts to better understand and reduce the incidence of illness among minority Americans, as recommended in the 1986 Report of the Secretary's Task Force on Black and Minority Health. It will also provide support for health promotion and disease prevention activities and increase the supply of minority health professionals.

Despite the unprecedented explosion in scientific knowledge and the growing capacity of medical science to diagnose, treat, cure and prevent disease, most of our minority citizens have not benefited fully or equitably from these improvements or from those systems providing essential health care services. The health status of disadvantaged blacks, Mexican-Americans, mainland Puerto Ricans, American Indians, and Asian-Pacific Islanders has lagged significantly behind that of the Nation as a whole.

Infant mortality and disease rates are two accurate measures of the health status of any population; I find the following statistics very revealing.

The infant mortality rate among blacks in the United States was 75 percent higher compared to the rate among whites in 1986. Life expectancy at birth has improved for all ethnic and racial groups in this country, except for black males, where it has actually decreased over the past 2 years. Hypertension, a disease which leads to heart attacks and strokes, affects blacks three times as much as whites. Nearly one-half of all black females may be classified as overweight, a risk factor for heart disease and premature death, as compared to only one-quarter of all white females.

The high infant mortality rate for Hispanics is reflected through the 19 percent of Mexican-American and 23 percent of Puerto Rican women less than 20 years of age who give birth to children as compared to 12 percent of white women of the same age (1984). And we all know that teen pregnancies result in higher rates of infant mortality, birth complications, and greater numbers of low-birth weight infants. Diabetes is a disease that afflicts more than twice as many Mexican-American males and almost four times as many Mexican-American females than white males and females, respectively. Biliary, stomach, cervical and renal cancers all occur with greater frequency among Hispanics.

The infant mortality rate among natives of the Pacific Basin is 25 percent higher as compared to the U.S. mainland, and Polynesians and Micronesians suffer disproportionately higher rates of diabetes, cardiovascular disease, rheumatic heart disease and suicide.

American Indians and Native Alaskans are another minority subgroup who are victims of unacceptably low health status. Those between the ages of 45 and 64 suffer from diabetes and alcoholic liver disease two and one-half times more than all U.S. citizens. Age specific mortality rates are greater than the rates for all Americans, and deaths from alcohol-related diseases and tuberculosis are four-fold greater.

Since the DHHS Task Force Report in 1986, the impact of AIDS has exacted a heavy disproportionate toll upon the minority community, thus further increasing the disparity in health between minorities and nonminorities. The most recent statistics indicate that, minorities represent 43 percent of all AIDS cases, which is up from 38 percent in 1984. Minorities represent 73 percent of females with AIDS and 77 percent of children with this dread disease. A recent study from California shows an HIV infection rate among black women giving birth of 12 times that of white women, while the rate among Hispanic women was twice as high. The change in the demographics of AIDS over the last 5 years provides ample evidence of the ease with which a disease can rampage through and devastate a community lacking adequate structures and resources for disease prevention and health promotion. AIDS has quickly become the single most serious health threat to the minority community and must be addressed specifically when considering measures targeted toward improving the health status of minority Americans.

Despite overall gains in the health status of the American population during the past generation, these figures demonstrate a marked and persistent disparity in both morbidity and mortality between members of these minority groups and their nonminority fellow citizens. The Department of Health and Human Services [DHHS] Task Force of 1986 on Black and Minority Health provides a comprehensive report on the health problems of Blacks, Native Americans, Hispanics, and Asian-Pacific Islanders and outlines recommendations for incorporation into the body of the Department's programs and activities.

This task force report is one of several recent studies that conclude that one of the most significant factors which adversely affects minority health relates to inadequate access to quality health care. This is due to a lack of adequate health insurance, a lack of minority health providers, poor support of those institutions and services which serve predominantly minority communities, and a lack of relevant and culturally sensitive health information. Many policy experts argue that additional interventions, specifically, improved housing, education and employment, will be necessary to improve minority health status.

The report recommends that DHHS should initiate health education and disease prevention programs and materials that are responsive to minority population needs. These should emphasize preventive health measures that will most improve the health status of minority individuals.

The task force also recommends they continue to investigate, develop and implement innovative models for delivery and financing of health care services, with an eye toward improving access to services by minorities.

The Department should develop improved strategies and programs to increase the number and accessibility of health care professionals for minority communities by working with minority and nonminority health professions organizations, academic institutions, State governments and health departments.

Other recommendations include improving existing sources of health status measures of minorities, increasing awareness of minorities of Federal resources available to them and improving coordination of activities within the Department and the executive branch.

The Disadvantaged Minority Health Improvement Act of 1989 is designed to implement these recommendations.

This legislation would establish new authority and programs under title XVII of the Public Health Service Act. The Office of Minority Health would be authorized within the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Health, to coordinate all activities within DHHS that relate to health promotion, disease prevention, service delivery and research involving the health of disadvantaged minority Americans. The Office would support research, demonstration projects and data collection with respect to the prevention and control of diseases or other adverse health conditions of high prevalance among disadvantaged minorities. Amouts authorized for these activities would be $10 million for fiscal year 1991, $12 million for fiscal year 1992, and $15 million for fiscal year 1993.

The Secretary, through the Office of Minority Health, would also be authorized to provide grants and contracts to support new and innovative programs designed to reduce the incidence of specific illnesses and improve the health status of disadvantaged minority Americans. Amounts authorized for this program would be $10 million for fiscal year 1991, $20 million for fiscal year 1992, and $30 million for fiscal year 1993.

A program to support health promotion and disease prevention activities, focusing on the health problems of American Samoans who live in Hawaii and the continental United States would be authorized. Amounts authorized for this program would be $1 million for fiscal year 1991, $2 million for fiscal year 1992, and $3 million for each of the fiscal years 1993 and 1994.

Title II would establish new authority and programs under titles VII and VIII of the Public Health Service Act. Additional Federal contributions to the Health Professions Student Loan funds of eligible health professions schools would be authorized to provide loans to underrepresented minority students. Fifty percent of the funds appropriated would be provided to schools at which underrepresented minorities constitute not less than 50 percent of the total enrollment; $20 million would be authorized for each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1993 for these contributions.

New authority would be added to provide funds to schools of medicine, osteopathic medicine, dentistry, pharmacy, podiatry optometry, public health, and allied health, and graduate programs in clinical psychology, to provide scholarships to disadvantaged, underrepresented minority students. Amounts authorized for this program would be $25 million for fiscal 1991, $30 million for fiscal year 1992, and $35 million for fiscal year 1993.

A new loan repayment program would be established for graduates of health professions schools, with the aim of increasing the number of full-time faculty at predominantly minority health professions schools. The Secretary would be able to contract with a graduate of a health professions school who agreed to serve on the faculty of a predominantly minority health professions school, in exchange for repayment of educational loans of up to $20,000 per year and a total of $80,000; $3 million would be authorized for each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1993 for this loan repayment program.

Similar scholarship and loan repayment programs would be established for nursing students and graduates of professional schools of nursing. For the nursing scholarship program, $25 million would be authorized for fiscal year 1991, $30 million for fiscal year 1992 and $35 million for fiscal year 1993. For the nursing loan repayment program, $3 million would be authorized for each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1993 for this loan repayment program.

In title III of the bill, a Pacific Basin Health Services Council would be established to monitor the need for health services and health professions development, and determine priorities for the expenditure of public health funds in the Pacific Basin. The Trust Territories that constitute the Pacific Basin include the Federated States of Micronesia, the Republic of BeLau, the Republic of the Marshall Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, Guam and American Samoa. Representation would be drawn from the University of Hawaii and the Directors of the Health Departments from the Trust Territories. Funds would be used to support the Pacific Basin Medical Officers Training Program, and other health professions development activities; $20 million would be authorized for each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1993.

Sixty thousand preventable deaths per year among minorities should not and cannot be tolerated. We have the knowledge and technology—we need to demonstrate the will to make them available to all citizens of the United States, not just the few.

When we, as a nation, are seeking to become more competitive in the international economic marketplace, we cannot afford unnecessary and preventable losses to our most basic and important resources—our citizens. I sincerely believe that we can ill-afford to not invest significant amounts toward improving the health status of disadvantaged minorities in this country. I look forward to swift consideration of this legislation by the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, and passage by the Senate. I urge all of my colleagues to give this bill their enthusiastic support.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1606

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Disadvantaged Minority Health Improvement Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) the health status of racial and ethnic minorities in the United States is significantly lower than the health status of the general population of the United States;

(2) minorities suffer disproportionately high rates of cancer, stroke, heart diseases; diabetes, substance abuse, acquired immune deficiency syndrome, and other diseases and disorders;

(3) the incidence of infant mortality among minorities is almost double that for the general population;

(4) Blacks, Hispanics, and Native Americans constitute approximately 12 percent, 7.9 percent, and 0.01 percent, respectively, of the population of the United States;

(5) Blacks, Hispanics, and Native Americans in the United States constitute approximately 3 percent, 4 percent, and less than 0.01 percent, respectively, of physicians, 2.7 percent, 1.7 percent, and less than 0.01 percent, respectively, of dentists, and 4.5 percent, 1.6 percent, and less than 0.01 percent, respectively, of nurses;

(6) the number of individuals who are both members of minority groups and from disadvantaged backgrounds in health professions should be increased for the purpose of improving the access of other such individuals to health services;

(7) historically, the mission of minority health professions institutions has been to increase the number of minority health practitioners to serve the medically needy;

(8) such institutions (and other health professions institutions), and disadvantaged minority individuals, should receive Federal financial assistance to facilitate an increase in the number of such individuals in the health professions;

(9) the Report of the Secretary's Task Force on Black and Minority Health (prepared for the Secretary of Health and Human Services and issued in 1985) described the health status problems of minorities, and made recommendations concerning measures that should be implemented by the Secretary with respect to improving the health status of minorities through programs for providing health information and education; and

(10) the Office of Minority Health, created in 1985 by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, should be authorized pursuant to statute and should receive increased funding to support efforts to improve the health of minorities, including the implementation of the recommendations made by the Secretary's Task Force on Black and Minority Health.

By Mr. SPECTER:

S. 1607. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to establish an Office of Minority Health, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

AUTHORIZATION OF THE OFFICE OF MINORITY HEALTH

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to help address the growing crisis of poor health of blacks, Hispanics, and other minorities in this country.

This bill is based on provisions of S. 1872, legislation I introduced on November 17, 1987. That bill authorized AIDS education funds for minority community-based organizations and established an Office of Minority Health within the Department of Health and Human Services. The AIDS funding provisions were included in Public Law 100-607.

Mr. President, for the first time in this century, blacks in the United States have experienced a decline in life expectancy for 2 consecutive years, while the life expectancy for whites has increased slightly. According to a study by the National Center for Health Statistics, the average life expectancy of whites increased from 75.3 to 75.4 years between 1984 and 1986. Conversely, blacks experienced a decline in life expectancy, from 69.7 to 69.4 years during the same period.

Major factors in the decline for blacks are homicides—including drug-related deaths and police shootings—accidents, AIDS, tuberculosis, cancer, and infant mortality. This is the first time since 1962 that life expectancy has declined 2 years in a row for any race, and the only time in this century that life expectancy for blacks dropped while the figures rose for whites. Violence was cited as the leading negative effect on black life expectancy. According to the National Center's report, there are 32.4 homicides for each 100,000 blacks. In 1984, the number of black murder victims was 6,855. By 1985, the number had increased to 7,294. In 1986, black homicides increased by almost 15 percent, reaching a record level of 8,509.

Between 1984 and 1986, among black males the homicide rate was an alarming 55.9 per 100,000. The rate for whites during that period was 5.6 per 100,000 population.

According to the National Center for Health Statistics, in 1986, there were 21,193 homicides and 269 deaths from "legal interventions"—police shootings and legal executions. Blacks comprise 12 percent of the U.S. population; however, 35 percent of those deaths were of black males, while only 39 percent were of white males. According to Everett Lee, a demography professor at the University of Georgia, the probability that a white male will be a victim or perpetrator of a homicide during his lifetime is 1 in 80; for black males living in central cities, it is 1 in 10. In addition, black homicide victims are younger than whites. Of black murder victims, 51 percent are under 30; yet only approximately 30 percent of all white victims are under 30.

If current trends continue, the combination of homicide and "legal intervention," much of which is related to drugs and gang violence, will take an even greater toll on a population whose health status already lags far behind the norm.

Although national mortality data are not available for Hispanics, a five-State survey in the southwestern region of the United States shows that from 1976 and 1980, the homicide rate was 21.6 per 100,000, approximately triple the rate of the non-Hispanic white population in the region, where the rate was 7.7 per 100,000.

In a 1976 south Texas study, violence constituted the most significant cause of death among Mexican-Americans in the 15-29 age range. Among Mexican-American men within this age range, 52 percent of the deaths were accidental and 21 percent were homicides.

Although very little attention has been given to this issue, homicide was identified as a public health problem in 1985 when former Health and Human Services [HHS] Secretary Margaret Heckler released the report of the Secretary's Task Force on Black and Minority Health. After completing a year-long study, the task force reported that 60,000 excess minority deaths occur each year. These are deaths that would not have occurred if blacks and other minorities had the same death rates as nonminorities. Six causes of deaths were cited for more than 80 percent of the excess morality: cancer; cardiovascular disease and stroke; chemical dependency; diabetes; homicides and accidents; and infant mortality.

Within the black community, the task force identified 18,000 access deaths from heart disease and stroke, 11,000 from homicides and accidents, 8,100 from cancer, 6,100 from infant mortality, 2,150 from cirrhosis, and 1,850 from diabetes. AIDS had not been recognized as a minority health issue at the time the task force conducted its study.

As a result of the task force findings in 1985, Secretary Heckler created the Office of Minority Health within the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Health. An initial $3 million was committed by the Secretary to fund this Office, the charge of which was to coordinate the implementation of task force recommendations. Unfortunately, departmental commitment to addressing the minority health crisis in this country appears to have dissolved, and only through congressional action has the office received increased financial support. Despite the ravages of AIDS in minority communities and other well documented critical health issues facing blacks, Hispanics and other minorities, the Department of Health and Human Services has submitted a budget each year since 1985 which recommended only $3 million for the Office of Minority Health.

Mr. President, the crisis in minority health is far too important to allow its continued disregard by the Federal Government. That is why I am introducing legislation today to authorize an Office of Minority Health within the Department of Health and Human Services.

Under the terms of my legislation, the Office of Minority Health would coordinate all activities within the Department that relate to minority health care education, prevention, and service delivery; coordinate efforts to promote minority health care programs and policies in voluntary organizations and in the private sector; establish a minority health care resource center; and support projects and conduct research and demonstrations regarding minority health care. In addition, the Office would make grants to support efforts to increase AIDS education and prevention initiatives in minority communities. Finally, the legislation would require the Secretary to submit to the President for transmittal to Congress an annual report on the status of minority health care efforts. The legislation authorizes $30 million for the Office of Minority Health in fiscal year 1991.

Mr. President, the authorization of an adequately funded Office of Minority Health would provide a much-needed focus and a real commitment to attacking the health crisis in black, Hispanic and other minority populations. Combined with efforts to address underlying societal conditions, such as lack of access to health care, homelessness, poor nutrition, inadequate housing, chronic unemployment and other conditions of poverty, our Nation can begin to close the gap in health status of minorities.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to join in support of this vital minority health initiative.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1607

By Mr. GRASSLEY:

S. 1608. A bill for the relief of William W. Taylor of Williamsburg, IA; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RELIEF OF WILLIAM K. TAYLOR

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I am today introducing legislation for the relief of William W. Taylor of Williamsburg, IA. This bill is necessary to rectify an administrative agency error that has barred Mr. Taylor from qualifying for Social Security benefits. As ranking member of the subcommittee with jurisdiction over private bills, and a former chairman of the subcommittee, I very rarely introduce private bills. This is, however, a compelling exception. Let me explain.

In 1982, while suffering from blood disease, Mr. Taylor had a leg amputated. In applying for disability benefits, he discovered that he did not have enough quarter-year periods with sufficient FICA contributions to qualify. Therefore, despite the severe impairment, Mr. Taylor was unable to collect disability payments.

While reviewing Mr. Taylor's employment records, it was discovered that through inadvertence, he had not been paid for 1 day of travel with the Naval Reserve on January 13, 1978. The additional FICA contributions from this day—a mere $19.94—if it were paid would be enough to qualify him for disability payments.

I inquired of the Navy Finance Center when I first learned of this error in July 1984. They responded, stating "Mr. Taylor was not paid/credited for his day of travel on January 13, 1978." However, the Navy Finance Center is authorized only to make payments within 6 years of when the claim occurred. This error was not brought to their attention until more than 6 years had passed.

Mr. Taylor's case was then forwarded to the GAO for review. The GAO also determined that under the Barring Act, Mr. Taylor was not entitled to the back pay he had earned. The GAO stated that there are no exceptions to this rule, "even in cases where its application may seem inequitable."

This assessment was in agreement with that of the Navy Finance Center:

We cannot authorize payment of Mr. Taylor's claim because it is barred. However, we examined his claim, and agree that Mr. Taylor was entitled to payment for his day of travel on January 13, 1978, and he was never paid. Whether or not the Social Security Administration (SSA) will accept a determination of entitlement in lieu of an actual payment for qualifying Mr. Taylor for FICA coverage for the first quarter of 1978 is a matter under their authority.

This past February, the Social Security Administation opted to decline.

Mr. President, our subcommittee guidelines normally bar claims for Social Security benefits, except those bills that waive the statute of limitations. This is such a bill. Its purpose is to simply waive the statute of limitations that prevents payment for Mr. Taylors single unpaid day of travel. Correcting this oversight is important to Mr. Taylor, to give him the benefits to which he is fully entitled. I urge swift approval of this private bill.●

By Mr. EXON (for himself and Mr. KERREY):

S. 1609. A bill to provide for an additional district court judge for the judicial district of Nebraska; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR THE JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF NEBRASKA

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to increase the number of Federal district judges that are serving the State of Nebraska. This bill is identical to a measure that I introduced in the 100th session of Congress. I am pleased to add Senator KERREY as a cosponsor of this measure.

The State of Nebraska is considered to be one Federal judicial district. It is served by three highly qualified and experienced judges. But, there are only 24 hours in a day and only 7 days in a week, while the number of cases to be handled by those judges has been steadily increasing. As a result, the Nebraska judges are overworked and the judicial district is understaffed.

When I introduced an identical bill 2 years ago, I pointed out that the total case filings in the Nebraska district had increased from 1,117 in 1981 to 1,919 in 1985. The number of case filings has leveled off with 1,929 in 1986, and 1,887 in 1987. But, the need for a new judge that was obvious in 1987 has remained obvious. When compared to other Federal judicial districts, the Nebraska district has consistently been ranked very high in the number of cases filed per judge.

Another measure that reveals the need for an additional judge in Nebraska is the number of cases that are actually tried by the three judges that Nebraska now has. During the past reporting year, the district of Nebraska ranked second nationally in this category. They tried an average of 73 cases apiece. Just across the river in Iowa, the judges handled an average of 37 to 39 cases apiece. And, 1989 was not an aberration. Nebraska ranked seventh in this category in 1988 and first in 1987.

I am proud of the Federal bench in Nebraska, as I am sure that it is due to their own initiative that cases have been promptly considered and decided. Despite the evidence that their district has been overburdened with cases, they have worked hard to see that justice is not unnecessarily delayed. They have kept sight of the truism that justice delayed can be justice denied. Yet, it is clear that it is time for the Senate to assist in that effort.

I urge the Senate Judiciary Committee to move promptly on this measure, to fully review the workload that the Nebraska bench is handling in such an exemplary manner, and to recommend this legislation to the full Senate so that it can be quickly passed into law.

By Mr. LEAHY (for himself, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. GORE, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. PELL, Mr. LIEBERMAN, and Mr. HARKIN):

S. 1610. A bill to develop a program to determine potential impacts of climate change on agriculture and forestry, to provide for the development of policies designed to address issues of potential climate change, with respect both to developing a capacity for agriculture and forestry to adapt to climate change, and to developing innovative ways to ameliorate climate change, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

GLOBAL CLIMATE CHANGE PREVENTION ACT OF 1989

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, one thing that we have learned about environmental issues in the past decade is that local concerns often have a profound impact on a regional and global basis.

Global warming is one of those issues.

Global warming is as local and personal as the sugar bush—the maple tree—in my front yard in Vermont. Scientists testifying before the Agriculture Committee told me that if the concentration of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere doubles, maple trees may no longer grow in the United States. Some predict this may happen by the year 2030—that's just 41 years from now, well within the lives of my children.

Global warming also has profound worldwide implications. These same scientists warned that a 4-degree rise in average temperature could cut rice production in half. Because rice is the staff of life for 70 percent of the world's population, global warming could devastate the world's food supply and result in widespread hunger and famine.

Other crops could be affected too. Dramatic warming would probably decrease average yields of wheat, corn, and soybeans. Major changes in the Southeast United States could turn substantial woodlands into grasslands.

Because of the seriousness of this problem, I am introducing comprehensive legislation addressing global warming as it relates to agriculture and foresty. The bills, the Global Climate Change Prevention Act of 1989, and the International Climate Change Prevention Act of 1989 have three basic components:

First, agriculture must help prevent global warming. A major cause of global warming is increased carbon dioxide in our atmosphere from automobiles and powerplants. Trees and plants can absorb carbon dioxide, but the projected dramatic increase in emissions threatens to overwhelm the natural balance. My bill will provide for massive reforestation of at least 3 million acres of tress—enough to fill the entire State of Connecticut. The bill will also contain incentives to plant more trees in urban areas.

Second, agriculture must not be a victim of global warming. We still do not know enough about the impact of global warming on agriculture and forestry. My first bill will direct the Department of Agriculture to take an active role in reducing the effect of global warming on our food supply and forests. This bill will also seek ways to insure that agriculture not only survives in a warmer world, but continues to provide the quantity and quality of food that we and the rest of the world need.

Third, the United States is part of a global environment. Global warming is not limited to Vermont or the Northeast part of our county. It stretches beyond our Nation's borders. Carbon dioxide emissions from other countries can affect our climate just as our emissions can affect theirs. My second bill mandates that we focus our foreign assistance in the areas of tropical deforestation and energy efficiency to minimize, not aggravate, global warming.

These actions are just one part of my legislative package addressing global warming. S. 333, the Global Environmental Protection Act of 1989 which I introduced in January, is a comprehensive plan to reduce hazards that cause global warming and ozone destruction. It sets a tough phase out schedule of chlorofluorocarbons [CFC's].

Sometimes the most profound issues are both local and global. Global warming is such an issue. Its potential impact is devastating and broad ranging, from the maple trees in Vermonters' front yards to famine in the Third World. It's a problem we can no longer wait to address.

These bills do something about that problem.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, in the past year a considerable amount of information has come to the fore regarding the potential causes of and suggested solutions to the problem of global warming. Out of all the available information comes two clear messages. First, that we cannot wait until the problem is proven beyond any shadow of scientific doubt before preventative strategies are developed. And second, that developed countries can and should play a major role in helping developing countries avoid the long-term environmental costs that appear to be associated with traditional economic development.

I commend Senator LEAHY for the development of the bills he introduces today and am proud to be a primary cosponsor on legislation which will serve to open doors to research and hopefully, practical solutions to the problem of global warming. It also promotes the dissemination of critical information to developing countries so that cooperative, international solutions can be achieved.

The Global Climate Change Prevention Act of 1989 has three primary objectives. First, it calls for an investigation of the interrelationship between potential climate change and possible adverse effects on the continued productive capacity of American agriculture. Second, it reviews ways to use agriculture as a means to make positive environmental contributions, and third to investigate how agriculture might be contributing to the problem of global warming and to make corrective measures when necessary.

There is reasonable scientific evidence which suggests a gradual and measurable increase in average global temperature over the next century. Assuming that predictions based on current scientific thinking is correct, the projected changes in American agriculture could be significant in that the productive capacity of our Southeastern forests and of the wheat and corn belts could be diminished considerably. A primary objective of the bill is to begin research now that will build the necessary scientific base to ensure that American agriculture can adapt to future climatic changes.

The bill will also require studying the potential contribution of agriculture to the global warming trend since crops such as wheat, corn, and rice emit gases which are known to exacerbate the problem. The objective of such a study will be to develop different crop strains that emit reduced levels of these gases and develop agricultural practices which help alleviate the problem.

A very positive component of the bill is that it promotes the use of agriculture and forestry as means to ameliorate climate change. The bill requires the Secretary of Agriculture to take such measures as necessary to increase tree planting on CRP lands by 3 million acres and mandate specific incentives which the Secretary must provide for CRP tree planting. Trees are of critical importance to the climate change issue since they absorb carbon dioxide, a greenhouse gas, and emit oxygen. The bill also requires the establishment of an Urban Forestry Conservation Program.

The Tropical Forestry and Energy Efficiency Act of 1989 is a critical step forward toward a comprehensive solution since it deals with the global aspect of climate change. Global warming is an international problem that will require international cooperation and assistance to develop meaningful solutions. Because of tremendous projected increases in population growth, developing countries will place heavy demands on their agriculture and natural resources. This bill is directly aimed at providing technical assistance in the areas of forest management, agriculture, and energy conservation to developing countries. The bill is meant to open doors for what we perceive to be a receptive international interest in solving the problem of global warming.

As a developed country, we must recognize the need to construct meaningful and effective national policies that fit within the master framework of a global strategy aimed at responding to a global problem. The fundamental objectives of such a strategy should be the development of programs that ensure sustainable energy and a sustainable ecology.

We must also recognize that the United States can play an pivotal role in the worldwide solution but that such a role will be ineffective if we attempt to generalize Western standards to the world as a whole.

In proceeding forward on the issue of global warming we must begin work now on responsive strategies that take into account adaptive capacities. At the same time we must continue our efforts to develop an international consensus on the science. The development of responsive strategies should, however, be sensitive to societal economic effects at both national and regional levels.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I rise today as an original cosponsor of the two bills introduced today by my good friend from Vermont, Senator LEAHY. I commend my colleague for his efforts on this most important issue, and am proud to work with him in supporting both the Global Climate Change Prevention Act of 1989, and International Tropical Forestry and Energy Efficiency Act of 1989.

The bills introduced today by my colleague will play a valuable role in our efforts to address what I and many others feel is one of the most important issues facing us, global climate change.

Mr. President, for many years, environmental considerations have taken a distant second place to the requirements of economic development, if they were taken into account at all. The consequence of that neglect has been deterioration at the local, regional, and now even global level, such as to threaten not only the quality of life, but life itself.

The consequences of global warming are sobering. The fact that they will occur at such an unimaginably rapid rate could be catastrophic. The litany of effects is by now familiar—drought in the middle of continents, vast changes in the world's climate patterns, major dislocations of water supplies and agricultural activities, increased frequency and severity of storms, and rising sea levels. The simple truth that global habitation patterns and economic infrastructures are designed around present climate patterns and coastal geographies, necessarily implies that a change in those conditions will cause major social disruptions.

We obviously need to deal comprehensively with global warming, stratospheric ozone depletion, species loss, deforestation, ocean pollution, acid rain, air and water pollution, and all of the problems degrading the world's environment. In every major sector of economic activity, we must find and disseminate increasingly effective new technologies: some that are already well in hand; some that need further work, though well understood in principle; and some that are revolutionary ideas whose very existance is now a matter of speculation.

That implies a level of mobilization of talent and resources which normally exists only for purposes of national defense. But many of us now believe that the emerging environmental threat, especially global warming and its consequences, must be seen and responded to as a genuine threat to security. With some reservations, I sympathize with that perception. Therefore, in a speech I gave last May before a meeting at the National Academy of Sciences, I appropriated a bit of military jargon to emphasize the intensity and scope of the effort we require, and called for the establishment of a strategic environment initiative, or SEI.

Please understand that this makes me no admirer of President Reagan's strategic defense initiative. On the contrary. But even as a critic of that program's objectives, I see that it drew together facilities and resources which had been scattered; it organized research concepts directed at challenging engineering requirements; and it has succeeded to this day in capturing a generous share of the Government's budget for research and development. We need to approach the environmental challenge to technology with the same intensity.

A strategic environment initiative must modernize the technologies and practices in every economic sector. We need an agricultural SEI, a manufacturing SEI, and a transportation SEI. And, perhaps most urgently, we need a strategic environment initiative to confront an area of human activity that cuts across all of these sectors, the area of activity most often implicated as the despoiler of the environment: an energy SEI.

An energy SEI must have a major focus on producing energy that is economical and environmentally safe. Chief on the near-term list—within 5 years—are energy efficiency and conservation. On the mid-term list—5 to 20 years—solar power, possibly new generation nuclear power, biomass fuels, as well as enhanced efficiency. And in the long term, 20 years and longer, nuclear fusion which is decades away, as well as enhanced versions of solar, biomass, and energy efficiency.

An agricultural SEI would focus on increasing productivity from small farms on marginal land, with low-input agricultural methods, and on resolving the problems created by policies that lead farmers to undervalue the soil, water, and genetic diversity on which food production depends.

An agricultural SEI, whose components are not only technological, but financial and political, may be the key to satisfying the land hunger of the disadvantaged and the desperate who are slashing daily into the rainforest of Amazonia—leaving behind the depleted soil of their earlier homesteads. They may also be the key in the battle to arrest the desertification of sub-Saharan Africa, where human need and climate stress now operate in a deadly partnership. Of course, technology alone will not completely solve the problems that arise from inadequate distribution of food supplies, which are more often due to a failure of politics, not crops.

Some of the technologies of an agricultural SEI are ancient, while others are on the cutting edge of science. Some, such as drip irrigation and multiple cropping practices, are being used in many regions of the world today. Others, such as bioengineering nitrogenfixing capabilities into major crops, will require much further research and development. The real challenge will be in developing the policies and institutions that will encourage farmers throughout the world to adopt these new technologies and practices.

A manufacturing SEI must seek not only new technologies, but also new materials and new industrial processes, which integrate better with the environment. Specifically, increased use of recycled materials, development of new materials more conducive to recycling, and design of new manufacturing processes that feed the waste stream of one industrial activity into the feed stream of another, are examples. A manufacturing SEI must have as its ideal goal an economy requiring no new inputs of materials, being reliant only on those recycled from past products and processes. The closer that the manufacturing sector comes to such an ideal, the less impact our standard of living will have on the environment.

Needed in the United States probably more than anywhere is a transportation SEI focusing in the near term on improving the mileage standards of our vehicles, and encouraging and enabling Americans to drive less. In the mid-term, come questions of alternative fuels, such as electricity and biomass-based liquid fuels. And in the mid- and long-terms come the inescapable need for re-examining the entire structure our transportation sector, and its inherent demand on the personal vehicle for efficient transportation.

How are we to assure the transfer of these technologies to the developing world? One can assume that information about new environmentally compatible technologies will spread rapidly in the industrialized countries, where the pace of implementation will be driven by market economics as modified by Government policy. In the developing world, however, this is not the case. The first hurdle for those countries will be the lack of information and inability to plan realistically for the incorporation of new technologies, even when their existence is known.

Therefore, the United States, along with other developers of new technology, and international lending institutions, should establish centers of training at locations around the world, to create a core of environmentally educated planners and technicians, in order to "make the ground fertile" for sowing environmentally attractive technologies and practices. In effect, an effort not unlike that which produced agricultural research centers throughout the world during the Green Revolution.

We should also begin to collaborate intensively with Third World nations in their development planning. For example, it would be both an environmental and an economic disaster if the Third World were to follow down the same energy path previously traveled by the industrialized nations. Rather, the Third World must be helped to plan and implement modern, efficient, diverse energy programs that reflect their unique resource capabilities and constraints.

Mr. President, we can no longer escape the consequences of Third World development on future environmental damage, especially if it involves an acceleration of global warming. For the first time, we are realizing that our destiny is really interlocked with the destiny of the developing world.

SENATE RESOLUTION 175—DESIGNATING "COUNTRY MUSIC MONTH"

Mr. GORE (for himself, Mr. SASSER, Mr. BUMPERS, and Mr. HEFLIN) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. RES. 175

Whereas country music derives its roots from the folk songs of our Nation's workers, captures the spirit of our religious hymns, reflects the sorrow and joy of our traditional ballads, and echoes the drive and soulfulness of rhythm and blues;

Whereas country music has played an integral part in our Nation's history, accompanying the growth of the Nation and reflecting the ethnic and cultural diversity of our people;

Whereas country music embodies a spirit of America and the deep and genuine feelings individuals experience throughout their lives;

Whereas the distinctively American refrains of country music have been performed for audiences throughout the world, striking a chord deep within the hearts and souls of its fans; and

Whereas October, 1989, marks the 25th annual observance of Country Music Month: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the month of October, 1989, is designated as "Country Music Month", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

● Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I am pleased to submit, along with my distinguished colleagues, Senators JIM SASSER, DALE BUMPERS, and HOWELL HEFLIN, a resolution to designate October 1989 as "Country Music Month." This resolution underscores the contributions of country music—an authentic American art form—to American culture.

With its roots in the American folk songs and spirituals sung on front porches and around campfires, the first country music reflected the strength and vitality of our young, ambitious Nation. Country music as most of us know and appreciate it was born in 1923 when Fiddlin' John Carson made the first successful country music recording. Today country music superstars perform for countless live audiences and are heard on over 2,000 radio stations nationwide.

And, while Nashville, TN, is heralded as "Music City, U.S.A., Country Music Capital of the World," country music is enjoyed by people throughout the United States. In fact, people in the audience of the Grand Ole Opry travel an average of 450 miles one way to enjoy the sounds and stories of greats such as Roy Acuff, Minnie Pearl, Ricky Skaggs, and Randy Travis. They travel these distances because no matter where they're from—farm or small town or large city—country music is in tune with their everyday experiences. Country music expresses the human emotions we all share: Love of family; faith in God; pride in country; reverence for nature.

I grew up in Smith County, TN, listening to the Grand Ole Opry and following the legendary careers of so many country music stars. As a child, I came to understand the enormous impact country music had on so many people, and how it touched the lives of music lovers throughout the country.

The Country Music Association first officially celebrated Country Music Month in November 1964. The first Presidential proclamation recognizing October as Country Music Month was issued in 1970. Presidential proclamations have been received every year since. I urge my colleagues to support this resolution to commemorate this special 25th Country Music Month.●

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I rise today to join with my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] in introducing a joint resolution designating October as "Country Music Month."

Mr. President, country music is uniquely American music. It speaks of the culture that we all share. Its songs tell of the American experience. They relate real experiences in the everyday lives of our people—happiness, sorrow, jobs, family.

In 1923, Fiddlin' John Carson made the first successful country music recording. Since then country music has expanded from its rural and small-town roots to its present popularity as a mainstream art form. According to the Country Music Association's latest survey, the largest segment of the country music audience are well educated, affluent professional families of the cities and suburbs.

My hometown of Nashville, TN, is the center of the country music industry. I am pleased to see that Americans across the country are learning what we in Tennessee have known all along—that country music is American music.

The number of country radio stations in the United States has grown from 81 in 1961 to more than 2,000 today. The number of members of the Country Music Association has grown from 233 in 1958 to more than 7,000.

The Country Music Association, founded in 1958, has been instrumental in increasing the popularity of country music both in the United States and indeed around the world. Together with the Grand Ole Opry, they cosponsor Fan Fair. This annual country music festival is held each June in Nashville. It provides an opportunity for country music fans to meet their favorite stars and to attend several concerts over the course of the week.

Mr. President, I am proud that my State has helped make country music America's music. I call on my colleagues to join us in cosponsoring Country Music Month and recognizing America's music.●

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

BIG BROTHERS/BIG SISTERS

● Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I believe it is timely that, as the Senate is developing legislation to encourage volunteer service in America, we recognize the outstanding contribution made by volunteers in the Big Brothers/Big Sisters of America Program.

We in the Senate regularly debate the challenges of adolescence in today's world—drugs, self-esteem, school dropouts, working parents, child care, and abuse. These overwhelming challenges are often magnified for children from single parent homes. Big Brothers/Big Sisters of America has been helping young people tackle these challenges since the turn of the century.

Adult volunteers from 481 affiliated agencies throughout the United States are spending countless hours each year working one to one with children from single parent homes. Volunteers in each local agency provide the friendship and support necessary to these youngsters so they become responsible, productive adults. The "bigs" (volunteers) serve as the role models that may be missing in the lives of the "littles" (children), and give the attention and guidance that a single, working parent does not have the time or resources to provide.

Today I want to highlight the remarkable work being done by the "bigs" of one of these local affiliates—Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Greater Miami. These are currently 300 adults in the Greater Miami agency donating 50,000 hours each year to be the friend and mentor desperately needed by so many children in Dade County. They make a minimum commitment of 1 year to their Little Brother or Sister and spend at least 3-5 hours with them each week. Planned activities include fishing tournaments, picnics, support groups, and their annual fundraiser—a communitywide, daylong bowlathon.

Mr. President, a very special event is taking place on September 23 at the Omni Hotel in Miami. In "A Salute to Our Superstars," these volunteers will be honored for their service to the young people of the Greater Miami area. They are indeed stars in the truest sense of the word. They are brilliant and guiding lights not only to their "littles," but to all of us in the examples they provide.

I urge my colleagues in the Senate to join me in saluting these bright stars for their unselfish dedication to our youth. I wish them the best on this important day and in their continuing success with their Little Brothers and Little Sisters.●

THE ISSUE OF FOOD SAFETY

● Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, yesterday's announcement by the Ralph Nader-associated consumer pesticide project that it has received the pledge of five small grocery store chains to stop selling produce treated with pesticides amounts to nothing more than the use of scare tactics to blackmail certain retailers into limiting the choices of consumers. In an attempt to indict all agricultural chemicals as universally harmful, this group ignores the positive attributes of produce grown by modern, safe agricultural practices and ultimately endangers the overall health of American families.

This most recent episode in the "food scare campaign of 1989" is yet another attempt among certain environmental extremists to derail the scientific process for measuring risk against benefit in the use of agricultural chemicals—a system which boasts the safest, most abundant and least expensive food supply in the world.

The hysteria of this rhetorical, antiagricultural campaign serves no one and in fact, harms both farmers and consumers. Farmers are harmed by the threat this latest tactic poses to their livelihood. Consumers are harmed when they reduce their consumption of fruits and vegetables—which are both nutritious and a natural combatant to disease and cancer; when their retail shopping choices are severely curtailed and prices rise as a result; and when their ability to discern legitimate health-safety threats is reduced.

Some grocery stores and chains in Washington State have taken a more reasoned approach to the current food safety controversy by offering consumers a choice between produce grown through conventional means and organically grown produce. In fact, the State's agricultural community has been a leader in promoting alternative agricultural practices with the Washington State Department of Agriculture certifying organic producers since 1988, and Washington State University and USDA Agricultural Research Service scientists jointly exploring methods of low chemical input agricultural practices.

As debate on the 1990 farm bill gets underway, I will be working to preserve and strengthen our current system for scientifically evaluating the risk and benefit of agricultural chemicals as well as looking at ways to encourage farmers to employ new, environmentally sensitive, and tested means of agriculture production.●

JEWISH COMMUNITY CAMPUS GROUNDBREAKING IN SOUTHERN NEW JERSEY

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, 29 men and women gathered together to form the Federation of Jewish Charities, whose goals included raising funds for building a Talmud Torah for educating Jewish youth about Jewish cultural values.

The first Federation served Camden's Jewish population of about 2,000 with a communal rabbi who served three synagogues and a single Talmud Torah, with just five classrooms. From this humble beginning, today's Federation serves three counties with a population of over 30,000 served by 14 synagogues and over 10 religious schools.

The Southern Jewish Community has grown over the years and the federation with it. But their goals remain the same; to perpetuate Jewish life and values and to instill a sense of pride in their community.

Today, I am proud to say that after years of fundraising efforts by the Jewish Federation of South Jersey and the Jewish populations of Burlington, Camden, and Gloucester Counties the groundbreaking ceremonies of a new community campus are underway. The Jewish Community Campus will offer educational, cultural, and recreational activities for all ages. Moreover, it will provide counseling services to strengthen the quality of Jewish life, aid in absorbing and assimilating Soviet Jewish immigrants and to insure that the memories of the Holocaust will be used to teach youth respect for human rights.

This new 16-acre campus represents years of dedication and service by the Jewish Federation of Southern New Jersey. May it remain a symbol of strength and hope for future generations.●

HOW OUR TAXPAYERS IMPROVE ON NATURE

● Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I am constantly amazed at the logic that goes into much of our Federal land management. Only the Government of the Soviet Union controls more land than the Government of the United States, and yet, I would imagine even the Soviets would wonder at some of the things that we do with our Government lands.

For example, we burned down a major chunk of America's premiere national park, Yellowstone, last year—and for what reason—because it was "natural."

In the Northwest, environmentalists are blocking timber harvesting by successfully arguing in court that it is not "natural."

When you leave the determination of what is and what is not natural in the hands of government, you can end up with some pretty odd results. I was reminded of this by a recent article by Dave Barry that appeared in the July 30 edition of the Washington Post magazine. I ask that the article be printed here in the RECORD.

The article follows:

PAINT IT GREEN

(By Dave Barry)

It will probably come as no surprise to you that I got the idea of painting my lawn from an agency of the federal government.

When I say "painting my lawn," I don't mean my whole lawn. I just mean this one circular spot that suddenly, mysteriously turned brown, as though it had been visited by a small UFO or a large dog. I ignored the spot at first, but it started to grow, and I realized that it was similar to international communism: If you let it get a toehold in, say, Nicaragua, it will start to spread to the other strategic nations down there such as El Labrador and Costa "Ricky" Ricardo, and the next thing you know your entire lawn is brown.

So I was wondering what to do, when fortunately I received a letter from an alert reader named Dick Howard, who enclosed a news article from the Roanoke Times & World-News about some National Forest Service rangers who painted a group of federal rocks to make them look more natural. I am not making this up. It happened in the Jefferson National Forest, where the Forest Service had built a mountainside road that was designed, according to the article, "to blend in with the environment."

Unfortunately, there was an unscheduled flood, which exposed some large, tacky, white quartz rocks that did NOT fit in with the natural road design. You can imagine how this offended the fashion sensibilities of the Forest Service personnel, who decided to do exactly what you would do if you were in charge of a national forest and had accidentally consumed a massive overdose of prescription medication: paint the rocks. They did a few tests to select just the color they wanted, then they spent two days spraying paint on the rocks, and before you could say "massive federal budget deficit," the hillside looked just the way God would have created it if He had received the benefits of Forest Service training.

As a professional journalist, I have always been fascinated by people who appear to have even more spare time than I do, so I called up one of the men involved in the rock-painting, District Ranger Bob Boardwine, who turned out to be a friendly individual. He told me that the rangers had taken a fair amount of ribbing over the rock-painting, but as far as he was concerned the project had come out real nice. I told him I was thinking about painting the brown spot on my lawn, and he gave me some fashion tips. "Make sure you use a dark green," he said. "When we painted the rocks, we went into it thinking in terms of a moss green and a light brown, but they weren't dark enough."

Thus advised, I asked my 8-year-old son if he wanted to help me paint the lawn, but he and his friend Erik were deeply involved in an urgent Nintendo game that is not expected to be completed during my lifetime. Fortunately, Erik's 6-year-old brother, Tyson, was able to make some room in his schedule, so we got my son's watercolor set and went out to paint the brown spot. After a while we got tired of dark green, so at Tyson's suggestion we switched over to purple, then red, then orange, and when we were done, we had converted what had been a dull and unattractive area of the lawn into an area that looked as though somebody had just thrown up several pounds of semi-digested jelly beans. Tyson and I were standing there admiring our work when—this really happened—up drove a pizza-delivery man, apparently sent by the God of Comedy Setup Lines.

"Looks like rain!" he said.

"Yes," I said, "and wouldn't you know it, I just painted my darn lawn!"

I added a friendly "Ha ha!" to reassure him I was a normal person unlikely to suddenly chop him into fragments with a machete, but he was already accelerating down the street.

Nevertheless, the lawn-painting was a critical success, and it got me thinking about other ways I might be able to improve nature around our house, especially the yard crabs. I do not care for them. Being from the North, I prefer yard critters that are furry and cute, whereas crabs look like body parasites magnified 1,000 times. During mating season, I'll go out in my yard, and there, blocking my path, will be a crab, adopting a karate stance to prevent me from mating with his woman.

"I don't want to mate with your woman," I tell him. "Your woman is a CRAB, for God's sake."

So anyway, my idea is that the crabs should wear costumes. I'm thinking specifically of chipmunk costumes. I could look out the window and watch them scuttling around the lawn in their furry finery, and it would be just like being back up North on a brisk fall day following a nuclear accident that had caused all the chipmunks to develop extra legs and walk sideways. My only question is where I'd get chipmunk costumes for crabs, but I'm sure the federal government can help me out. Assuming it's not too busy touching up federal rocks.●

APARTHEID

● Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I was disturbed to see on television the other night an event in South Africa in which a black man who had purchased a bus ticket was refused admission to the bus. The door literally slammed in his face, simply because of the color of his skin.

It brought vividly to mind a similar event in our own recent history, when Rosa Parks defiantly, and bravely, refused to give up her seat on a bus for a white man. Her protest sparked a series of nonviolent demonstrations that eventually led to desegregation of public accommodations across the South.

Segregation remains the law in South Africa today, and just as the door of the bus slams in the face of black people there, so, too, does the curtain of the voting booth. Today we hear reports of the results of the so-called election in that country, but the election is just as invalid as elections in Communist countries and dictatorships where true democracy is absent.

The elections demonstrate once again that the South African Government is not serious enough about dismantling the abhorrent system of apartheid. Meaningful progress cannot be made unless black South Africans, who constitute a majority of the country's population, also participate in elections.

But that would represent just the beginning of the end of apartheid. Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners must be released. Press censorship—which limits what we can see from that country on our own television screens each night—and the state of emergency must end.

To promote genuine national reconciliation, South Africa must also abolish the four pillars of apartheid: the Population Registration Act, the Group Areas Act, the Separate Amenities Act, and the Land Act. These laws force black South Africans to live separate from white society; to avoid many public facilities, including bathrooms, beaches and buses; and they prevent blacks from owning land and businesses in most of the country.

And beyond removal of these barriers to equality, there must be a greater sharing of the resources within South Africa, so that black South Africans can receive their fair portion of assistance for education, housing and health care.

I hope that change can occur quickly and peacefully. But because of the stubborness of the South African Government, time is running out. Apartheid cannot continue for years and years. It never should have existed, and each day it continues represents an affront to the civilized world. Apartheid must end, now.●

HONORING ACTIVE MEMBERSHIP OF 50 YEARS

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to make recognition of three outstanding members of the Volunteer Hose Co. No. 1 Inc. who have been active members for 50 years.

Mr. Peter Salemo, Mr. Robert Fay, and Mr. Roy Carr have been dedicated, reliable, and trustworthy members since 1939. Along with being ready volunteers, each has held a position vital to the running of the company. Mr. Salemo has served the Volunteer Hose Co. as financial secretary, Mr. Fay as ex-chief, and Mr. Carr as ex-captain.

Volunteer firefighters are essential to every community. With limited funding available for professional firefighters, the all-volunteer staff becomes increasingly more valuable. It's always a pleasure to salute fellow firefighters for their community service.

I congratulate these fine volunteers on 50 years of service and wish them continued good luck for the future.●

THE DEFENSE DEPARTMENT AND TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, in the near future, the Senate will consider Senate Joint Resolution 113, relating to the United States-Japan FSX fighter agreement, specifically, President Bush's veto message.

The administration asserts that congressional power under the commerce clause must be subordinated to executive authority. In my view, that assertion is not only constitutionally suspect but would limit this body's ability to address the challenges posed by an increasingly global marketplace, particularly in the area of technology transfer.

To accept the principles asserted in the veto message is to acquiesce in the unilateral surrender of the rights and responsibilities we are delegated under the Consititution.

The FSX deal is not some anomaly. It is part of a perverse practice, originating in the bowels of the bureaucracy, which has been a longstanding pattern of behavior with regard to militarily significant sales. That practice has failed to take into account the long-term impact of military technology transfers on America's industrial competitiveness. The branch of Government which developed that pattern and practice would have us lay down the arms the Constitution provides us.

Our right to set policy matters. And, I will cite a specific instance of how a clear signal from the Senate on military sales has made a significant difference.

The Korean Government is interested in procuring advanced fighter aircraft from American manufacturers. Like Japan, the Koreans are interested in doing so in a way that minimizes economic detriment to their current account surplus through the negotiation of favorable offsets.

An offset, Mr. President, refers to a form of compensation granted to a foreign buyer in exchange for the purchase of U.S. goods. In the case of the Korean fighter program, the Government of the Republic of Korea, which had a trade surplus of about $10 billion in 1988, insisted on an offset totalling nearly $2 billion from the United States aerospace company eventually awarded the contract. Since the entire program was around $2 billion the net result for the U.S. firm, and the U.S. economy, was, or would be, zero dollars.

I do not begrudge the Korean Government the effort. It is in their interest. It is the smart thing to do. I do object to our Defense Department going right along with the plan.

On July 19, the Senate adopted the Heinz-Dixon amendment to the defense authorization bill. The amendment urged the President to instruct the Secretary of Defense not to sign any government-to-government memorandum of understanding regarding the Korean fighter program pending specific actions.

The amendment called for the thorough review of the Korean fighter program by the Comptroller General pursuant to sections 824 and 825 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1989—Public Law 100-456. The Senate was particularly interested in reviewing the offset provision of the United States-Korea fighter program.

On August 26, Jane's Defence Weekly carried a story containing the administration's warning to the United States aerospace industry that the administration will oppose the sale of United States fighter carrier and technology to South Korea if the winning contractor offers too generous an offset program to Seoul in order to win the sale. Jane's claims, and I quote:

This is the first time in recent memory that the U.S. government has undertaken such an action.

Does anyone in this body doubt that the bureaucrats would have changed their tune if Congress had not acted? Yet, the administration rationale for the FSX veto would establish the principle that Congress cannot act in agreements of this sort. That is an argument that this Senator cannot accept.

Mr. President, if the Senate sustains the President's veto of the FSX agreement, we will have surrendered the rights of this body under the commerce clause, and we will have abdicated our responsibility to the American people to forge policies designed to sustain a strong and vibrant economy.

I ask that the Jane's article be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The article follows:

[From Jane's Defence Weekly, Aug. 26, 1989]

U.S. COMPANIES WARNED OVER KFP

United States President Bush's Administration is warning McDonnell Douglas and General Dynamics that it will oppose the sale of US fighter aircraft and technology to South Korea if the winning contractor offers too generous an offset programme to Seoul in order to win the sale.

That warning came in a recent letter from Glenn Rudd, acting director of the Defense Security Assistance Agency, to John McDonnell, Chairman of McDonnell Douglas and Stanley Pace, Chairman of General Dynamics.

The MD F/A-18 Hornet and the GD F-16 Fighting Falcon are the two contenders for South Korea's $3 billion Korean Fighter Program (KFP) to acquire 120 fighter aircraft (JDW 29 July).

Offsets generally refer to forms of compensation granted to a foreign buyer in exchange for the purchase of US goods.

"We are not prepared to support a sale which includes an offset offer which exceeds the amount determined after final discussions between our two governments," Rudd said.

In his letter Rudd noted that during the recent Security Consultative Meeting with South Korea, the USA was advised that "Korean regulations require an offset programme of 30 per cent.

"In our view, this includes all indirect and direct offsets, including licensed production."

Defence export specialists say that the Pentagon is effectively placing a cap on the offsets when the South Koreans were proposing 30 per cent as a minimum level of offsets.

This is the first time in recent memory that the US Government has undertaken such an action.

"Industry is very concerned about the intervention of the government in this transaction," says James Russell, an export analyst with the American League for Exports and Security Assistance, a Washington DC-based lobbying group.

Indeed, until now the US position has been to leave the matter of offsets to be negotiated between the contractor and the foreign buyer.

However, with South Korea set to make a decision on a KFP airframe at any time, both MD and GD are offering offset programmes that nearly match the value of the KFP programme itself (JDW 22 July).

The Bush Administration and many in Congress feel that excessive offsets are costing US workers jobs because offsets often include offers by US firms to undertake manufacturing in the foreign country.●

EMMANUEL LURIE

● Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the present changes taking place in the Soviet Union bring renewed hope for peace and feedom throughout the world. But as long as the Soviet Union continues to deny Soviet Jews and other religious groups the basic freedom to emigrate and persecutes them for their religious beliefs, improved relations between our countries will remain an illusion rather than a reality. If the Soviet Union is committed to working for world peace, let them begin at home by promulgating emigration laws and allowing those individuals who so desire the right to emigrate. The plight of the Lurie family demonstrates the desperate situation facing all Soviet refuseniks.

Emmanuel Lurie, his wife Judith, her mother Rika, and the rest of their family, first applied to emigrate from the Soviet Union in February 1979. Their desire was to join family already located in Israel. In January 1980, they were granted permission to leave and given exit visas. In preparation to leave the Soviet Union, the Lurie's purchased airline tickets and packed their belongings. Emmanuel, an organic chemist, gave up his job, and the children were removed from school. Five days before their departure, however, Emmanuel was informed by the Office of Visas and Registration that his family's exit visas, except for Rika's, had been canceled for reasons of state security connected with Emmanuel's job at a chemical plant where he worked from 1961-64.

Judith's mother, Rika, was told that her family would be reallocated visas shortly and was warned that if she rejected this opportunity to leave she would not be given another chance. Rika, who had lost her husband in a labor camp during the Stalin era, and who had suffered constant harrassment from the KGB throughout her life, decided to accept the visa.

In December 1988, Emmanuel Lurie sent a request to the Ministry of Chemical Industry as to the length of his state secrecy period. The Ministry replied that his secrecy classification would remain an obstacle to his emigration requests indefinitely.

Since their first refusal in 1980, the Lurie family have been ardent fighters for human rights for Soviet Jews. Judith helped found "Jewish Women Against Refusal," and Emmanuel is active in Jewish scientific seminars.

This continued refusal to allow individuals to emigrate from the Soviet Union contravenes all international agreements on human rights. The Soviet Union must strive to abide by its international responsibilities in this area and begin to match their words with their deeds. Promises to codify emigration regulations remain unfulfilled, and the Soviet Union continues to deny its individuals the basic freedom to emigrate as they choose. How is the United States to make treaties with the Soviet Union, to trust and work toward greater world peace and freedom with the Soviet Union, when the Soviet Union denies its own citizens these fundamental human rights? How successful can glasnost be without furthering the human rights of its own citizens?

The continued denial of the right of free emigration for many Soviet Jewish citizens illustrates the serious problems that exist in the Soviet Union. We call upon the Soviet leadership to show us their commitment to glasnost and perestroika by improving their record on human rights and granting families such as those of Emmanuel Lurie their fundamental right to choose how and where they will live.●

HON. RICHARD J. HUGHES CELEBRATES HIS 80TH BIRTHDAY

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, on Sunday, the 17th of September, family and friends will gather together to celebrate the 80th birthday of a great New Jerseyan, the Honorable Richard J. Hughes. His distinguished career began 50 years ago, as an assistant U.S. attorney in New Jersey, and continued through two terms as Governor and then a period as chief justice of our State. He has served his State with wisdom, determination and commitment.

During his tenure as Governor, he guided New Jersey through some difficult times. The 1960's were unpredictable years of tremendous change. He served as a member of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorder.

It was also a time of rapid growth for our State. Governor Hughes promoted that growth and managed it. He was also responsible for recognizing and addressing the pollution of our environment. He made important gains in preserving open space through the Green Acres Program. Also notable were the gains he made in higher education with the expansion of the State university and the start of a county college system.

While he served as chief justice, the New Jersey Supreme Court issued landmark rulings to assure justice and fairness to the citizens of our State. The Hughes court gave new life to the guarantee of a thorough and efficient education to our State's children, and promoted a more equitable system of financing public school education. His leadership and his wisdom was nowhere more evident than in the court's decision in the difficult case of Karen Anne Quinlan.

Dick Hughes' legacy also rests in the reforms of New Jersey's criminal justice system. He initiated a new program for evaluating judges. Today, thanks to his administrative reforms, New Jersey's criminal justice system is one of the most progressive in the Nation. Since his retirement from the court, Dick Hughes has remained an important voice in New Jersey public and legal affairs.

On a personal note, Dick Hughes has been a source of pride and inspiration for me. His example of public service helped me develop an interest in the public sector, and his high ideals and integrity established a standard by which I try to shape my own performance. I am grateful to him for setting an example that each of us in government holds as an ideal by which to be measured.

Dick Hughes' record of accomplishments remain unsurpassed. I join with his other friends and family to wish him well on his 80th birthday and look forward to his continuing contributions to our State.●

TRIBUTE TO DONALD FARRINGTON

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, 25 years ago, Donald Farrington moved south from New Hampshire and took a job as the director of the Southeastern Connecticut Mental Health Association, thus beginning a quarter century of service to the poor and the physically and mentally handicapped in the Norwich, CT, area.

As director of United Workers of Norwich, a position Don has held since the fall of 1965, Don's hard work has been vital to the social service network of southeastern Connecticut. Under his stewardship, the staff of United Workers has increased 5-fold, its budget 25-fold, and the number of programs it offers has grown from 3 to 15.

Don led United Workers into new areas in his efforts to serve the growing need for social services. Among its many activities the organization now sponsors the local Retired Senior Volunteer Program and runs two adult day care centers, a hospice program and a resource and referral network. It oversees a dental clinic for low-income families, a residential care program for the elderly—a vast network of services for Norwich-area residents.

Don is active in a variety of volunteer positions in other public service agencies in Connecticut, as well. He is a charter member of the advisory council to the Connecticut Department of Children and Youth Services, and of the board of the region's Widowed Persons Service. He was a founder and the first president of the Council of Agency Executives and of the Council of Human Resources of Southeastern Connecticut.

A listing of the positions Don Farrington has filled, or of the titles he has held, or of the organizations he helped found, can only just start to give a sense of the crucial role he has played in helping southeastern Connecticut. He has responded to community needs when few others have yet recognized them. Donald Farrington's leadership has benefited everyone in southeastern Connecticut, and for that reason I am pleased to mark his 25th year of service.●

SALUTE TO OUR YOUNG READERS

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, next week, on September 19, six young Americans will be honored as winners of the Mott's Apple Award for reading. This new award, established by the International Reading Association and Mott's USA, recognizes America's young readers and those who have inspired them.

Over 70,000 essays and drawings were submitted to judges at the International Reading Association. Twenty-one students were selected as winners, and three of these winners come from Illinois.

These essays are from the heart, sharing the importance of reading for these young readers; they are also fun to read. As reading is clearly one of life's most crucial skills, I commend Maya Moseberry of Chicago, David Updegraff of Homewood, Donald Ziel of Coal Valley and the non-Illinois winners for their hard work and dedication to such a worthy objective in the Year of the Young Reader. I would also like to honor the teachers of all of these students, teachers who have helped instill the value and joy of reading.

Mr. President, I ask that the three essays be printed in full in the RECORD.

The essays follow:

1989 MOTT'S APPLE AWARD WINNER; MAYA MOSEBERRY, CHICAGO, IL, THIRD GRADE—JOSHUA KERSHAW SCHOOL, MS. BERNICE CONNOR, LIBRARIAN

I Love books because they can help change the way I feel. Sometimes I am sad and if I read a funny story, it helps me to feel a litttle better. Sometimes I forget that I was ever sad.

Books also tell me about other lands and countries. When I read about different places I get so excited about how other people live that I try to imagine living there myself.

Books of poems are really special to me because I like the way words rhyme and tell a story. Poems can also tell how some one feels and are often things I know about and and feel myself.

There are even books that teach how to do things. I would love to have a cookbook when I grow up because although I help my mother cook, I'm not sure if I'll know how to do it when I become a grown up!

The main reason I really love books is, I remember when I couldn't read, books were just a bunch of words and now that I can read books are the best discovery that I have found. I am very happy to know how to read.

Have you ever been bored to death. Well, I almost was because of my sister. My sister is a junior olympic swimmer. In order to be a junior olympic swimmer she practices 6 days a week for 2 hours and swims in swim meets each week-end. There is nothing worse than a hot, steamy, chlorine-smelling pool when you aren't a swimmer. Swim practices are long. Swim meets take forever! I used to complain a lot about her swimming by saying: "Mom, how many more hours? My second grade teacher gave me some good books to read at the meets.

Last year my sister went to Indianapolis for a swim meet. I went to Klickat Street in "Henry and the Club House." We went to St. Louis for a meet. I went to Narnia in "The Lion the Witch and the Wardrobe." Then we went to Milwaukee, but I was solving a mystery with the "Hardy Boys." I have a new way of judging swim meets. Some meets are two book meets, some, three and real long ones are four. My sister only gets to be a swimmer, but I've been everything. I've read forty books since September and usually read a hundred by the end of the swim season. Books saved my life and I never have to worry about writing a book report.

Why I like to read is the question you ask.
To answer that hard question won't be a simple task.
I read alot of books because they give me pleasure,
A very good book is a real treasure.
You can help Encyclopedia Brown save the day,
Or go outside with Beezus or Ramona and play.

You can go into space with Tom Swift,
Or get yourself caught in a huge snowdrift.
Go and see Hans Brinker's skates,
Or take a look and see how a butterfly mates.
Learn a little information about China,
Or find out what kind of worm is a trichina.
Discover how a rose can bloom,
Or find out how to make a real big boom.
Walk around a shipyard in the morning fog,
Or run across a field with a shaggy dog.
You can find every story or fact in a book,
All you need to do is take a look.

MINNESOTA DECLARES YATES WEEK

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, America's resurgence into the international marketplace is due to a number of factors and one of them, which I choose to address today, deals with our union work force.

Harold Yates, a distinguished labor leader from Minnesota, has been recognized for his excellent leadership by being appointed to the Teamsters general executive board, and on November 1 he will also become president of Minnesota Teamsters.

As guarantors of quality, labor unions have held firm to their promise that "Made in America" is a label on a product worth purchasing. Nationally, union leadership is involved in all the issues which affect working and retired Americans today—from child care to elder care and health insurance to plant closings.

Minnesota's union rank and file is proud to have one of its own as the recent appointee to hold the position of trustee to the International Brotherhood of Teamsters general executive board. Yates, executive vice president of Joint Council 32 and President of St. Paul Local 120 was appointed to this position by IBT General President William McMcarthy on May 25, 1989.

Yates' recognition comes literally on the 30th anniversary of his signing on as a Teamster. Back in 1959, he joined local 120 as an employee of Admiral Motor Freight—and has been working hard for the St. Paul union ever since.

Earlier this summer, Minnesota's Gov. Rudy Perpich designated that the third week in September be noted this year as "Harold Yates Week." I concur with the Governor that Harold is deserving of this State-wide honor, having served hundreds of thousands of Teamster colleagues over the years.

It is my pleasure to honor such a distinguished Minnesotan by noting his accomplishments and recent appointment and election in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD today. I regard Harold Yates as an adviser and friend and wish him all the best with his new assignment.●

CONGRATULATING THE TRUMBULL NATIONAL ALL-STARS ON THEIR VICTORY IN THE LITTLE LEAGUE WORLD SERIES

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, on August 26, as the summer wound down and the major league pennant races heated up, 15 young men from Trumbull, CT, realized the dreams of millions of 11 and 12 year olds the world over. By defeating a tough squad from Kaosiung, Taiwan, the youngsters from Trumbull captured the 1989 Little League World Series Championship.

Trumbull's success was the result of an all-around team effort. Simply to earn a trip to Williamsport, PA, home of the world series, Trumbull played a total of 13 games in district, State, and regional tournaments. No one player was solely responsible for the fact that Trumbull outscored its opponents 155 to 29 in these games, or that Trumbull slugged 9 home runs in the 4 regional games alone. Trumbull won because all its players contributed when called on to do so.

Likewise, in the championship game, the Trumbull club turned in a fine all-around performance. There was good pitching, as the Kaosiung squad managed only five hits. There was clutch hitting, as a two-out single in the third inning put Trumbull on top to stay. There were also more of the long ball, as a solo shot in the bottom of the fifth sealed the victory for Trumbull. And finally, there was solid fielding—including, in the fifth, a perfect strike from the left fielder that nailed a Kaosiung runner at the plate and dampened a major scoring threat.

Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to salute the 15 young men on the Trumbull team: Matt Basztura, Dan Brown, Paul Coniglio, Chris Drury, Chris Fasano, Dave Galla, Todd Halky, Jason Hairston, Chris Kelly, Cody Lee, Harlan Marks, Ken Martin, Dan McGrath, Andy Paul, and Matt Sewell. I would also like to pay special tribute to manager Tom Galla and to coaches Ed Wheeler and Bob Zullo, whose wise guidance was responsible in no small measure for Trumbull's success in tournament play.

Mr. President, the Trumbull team's victory in the world series, is a welcome nugget of good news. Increasingly, as adults, we try to keep our youngsters away from destructive influences. It is good to remember that there are still some things that American youth can say yes to. Little League baseball is one of them. It encourages kids to dream grand dreams. And as the 15 young men from Trumbull have learned, some of those dreams do come true.●

TELEVISION VIOLENCE

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I have spoken many times about the impact watching excessive amounts of violence on television has on viewers, particularly children. My bill to grant the television industry an antitrust exemption so it can attack the problem in awaiting consideration by a House-Senate conference committee. Recently, a newspaper in my State, the Kewanee Star-Courier, editorialized about the need for the legislation and the need for viewers to let the TV industry know they are upset by the gratuitous and excessive violence they see on television. I ask to have it reprinted in the RECORD.

The editorial follows:

[From the Kewanee (IL) Star-Courier, Aug. 10, 1989]

TELEVISION VIOLENCE WILL KEEP GROWING UNTIL YOU STOP IT

Accusing legislators of letting basic issues slip past them while puttering with lesser things is an American tradition.

And often justified.

But focusing your legislative energies on a major issue can be deeply discouraging. If you doubt that, ask Paul Simon. He's not ready to give up, but when he tells you what's happening in his long campaign to get TV violence reduced, you'll have to wonder why.

The Illinois senator has again launched a bill to make it possible for television networks to confer about a reduction of violence in the entertainment they offer. They had complained for years, when criticized, that market forces drove them to compete with one another by increasing the amounts and ranges of violence in their programming, and that federal antitrust laws prevented them from even discussing the matter with each other. Simon's measure would suspend antitrust laws to allow exactly such discussions.

The first time he offered it, the Senate approved it, but the House, pressured by the television industry, rejected its own version. This time, both chambers have approved bills, and it is now up to a conference committee to iron out any differences.

Nothing left but a trip to the White House for President Bush's signature?

Hardly.

For the networks, having lost their legislative battle, have just declared that Simon's efforts are in vain. All his bill would require, they emphasize, is that they discuss televised violence, not that they do anything about it. And discussion, they say is all the compliance they intend to offer.

That network policymakers ought to feel great moral and social responsibility in wielding television's pervasive influence is evidently not at all plain to them. What they respect is the viewer's hand on the channel selector—that and, to a lesser degree, but still truly, the viewer's attitudes in letters to them.

And that brings us to what we think is the main reason a major-issue oriented legislator has every right to feel discouraged, even if he keeps on hoping and slugging; constituents do not in fact support legislators' efforts.

If any substantial part of the percentage of viewers who complain about too much television violence actually changed channels or turned off their sets to keep some of it out of their homes, that would show up in the ratings, and desirable changes would follow.

If any substantial part of the percentage of viewers who complain about too much television violence took a few minutes now and then to scratch off notes to the networks telling them how they felt, those feelings would eventually affect network programming

As things are, however, most critics of television sit there watching it anyway, muttering that somone ought to do something.

Someone right now means Paul Simon and his congressional and executive colleagues. But Congress and the president alone are not enough to get the job done.

The public is the other indispensable part of representative government. If the public does not actively support the officials it elects, their efforts are wasted.

Do you think network programming needs a wholesome change of direction?

Do you think Simon's bill would provide the networks with an opportunity for that change?

Then switch channels and tell them you did so, why and what they can do about it.

Be and say what you believe.

Then your representatives will represent you, not just themselves.

And democracy will work.●

THE 100TH DAY ANNIVERSARY OF TIANANMEN SQUARE MASSACRE

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I rise today to mark a sad occasion. September 12 marks the 100th day since June 4, the day the Chinese Army brutually and appallingly attacked the peaceful, student-led demonstrations in Tiananmen Square in Beijing.

In Chinese tradition, the period of mourning after death lasts for 100 days. Today, therefore, marks the end of the mourning period. It is an appropriate time for us to commemorate and reflect on the bravery of those who made the supreme sacrifice for the noble goal of bringing democracy to their country.

The actions of the People's Army on that tragic June 4 caused deaths and injuries measured in the thousands among the very citizens of China it has sworn to protect. Those brave men and women who lost their lives in the struggle for democracy in China should be remembered as heroes. Their sacrifices must not have been made in vain. I am sure that the examples they set and the values they yearned for will someday succeed in re-making China.

Like all of us in the Congress, I deplore the brutality displayed by the Chinese Government in its unwarranted crushing of the pro-democracy movement. The large-scale arrests, jail sentences, and executions since June 4 have been properly condemned by millions of people around the world. Our own country has imposed sanctions against the Chinese Government for its actions. If the repression in China continues, I urge the President to explore stronger sanctions.

One of the President's actions in the wake of the massacre was to extend the visas of Chinese students and scholars studying in the United States. I am proud to have cosponsored a bill that would take this a step further—by granting all Chinese students and exchange visitors in the United States the right to apply for permanent residence.

Those who were killed on June 4 in Tiananmen Square are true martyrs to the cause of freedom and democracy. Their efforts showed the whole world that the will to freedom of the human spirit cannot be repressed forever.

I think it is very significant that the massive democracy movement in China was organized and led by students. For it is the people of their generation who will inherit the mantle of leadership in the years to come.

I am certain that some day the Goddess of Democracy will again stand in Tiananmen Square. And I am equally certain that the brave people who gave their lives to attain what it stands for will not be forgotten.●

ACKNOWLEDGING PUBLIC POWER WEEK IN McCLEARY, WA

● Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I rise today to salute Mayor Richard Vatne of McCleary, WA, in his efforts to bring public power to the forefront of our minds through his declaration of October 8 through the 14th as Public Power Week in McCleary.

In the late 1920's, one of the most unique grassroot campaigns of the decade took place. Rural constituents in the Pacific Northwest States of Washington and Oregon joined efforts to fight against the monopoly of private power owners and their neglect in providing good electric service. Electric rates were extremely high for people in the city, but the rural consumers were without electricity because the private companies refused to build lines to rural area. In response initiative 1 was passed in 1930 permitting the people of individual counties to create a public utility district and elect local commissioners.

Public power has been a blessing for the citizens of my State. Because the utilities are owned by the consumer and run on a not-for-profit basis, rates are not only kept down, but any increase in the value of the utility accrues to the consumer. Consumers are aware of current activities involving rate changes, and the service and operation of the utility. Through election of county utility commissioners consumers remain active and involved in the process of electricity sales.

Our public utilities have faced many challenges and we have seen many changes. Some of the most exciting include, the first steps of organizing the public utility districts, the implementation of the Regional Power Act and the suffering conflict and confusion over the "Whoops" [Washington Public Power System] lawsuits.

Since the days of Franklin D. Roosevelt, Congress has been a key player in the history and formation of today's operating system. Through the development of large dams on the Columbia River and the building of Bonneville Power Administration's huge Federal transmission power grid we have supported a system which is a proven success.

I would like to reiterate my support for our public power district's efforts and commend Mayor Vatne for his enthusiasm and ability to bring this important system to our attention.●

DON'T TREAD ON OLD GLORY

● Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, during the recent August recess, I had the opportunity to visit my home State of Utah and listen to the response of Utahns to many national issues, including the flag-burning issue. The vast majority of Utahns are extremely upset at the Supreme Court's recent decision, and the following song is typical of their response. "Don't Tread on Old Glory" was sung to me at a recent Nephi, UT, town meeting. The words were written by Russ Marsh and Jacque Mounteer, and the music was written by Russ Marsh and Larry Seely.

DON'T TREAD ON OLD GLORY

VERSE 1

From the high mountain peaks,
To the low desert plains,
And the lakes of Minnesota.
From the towns and the cities
To the high-rise buildings
From New York to California.
United we stand, as they Strike up the band
Sing anthems to Old Glory.
Yet some will say, we want
To have our way
So they burned Old Glory.

CHORUS

Now don't burn Old Glory
'Cause if you do boys,
You're treadin' on our liberty.
Don't step on Old Glory
'Cause when you do boys
You'r walkin' all over me.
Don't tread on Old Glory.

VERSE 2

Lookin' back through the years
There was blood, sweat and tears.
Fightin' for Old Glory.
So many have died
Keepin' freedom alive
Don't lose Old Glory.
Let's pledge our allegiance
To the flag
Be one nation under God.
So we can stand and fight
'Cause the time is right
For us to save Old Glory.

CHORUS

THE ROLLINS CASE AND THE CREATION OF A CARIBBEAN REGIONAL STOCK EXCHANGE

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I rise today to note with pleasure the successful resolution of an 8-year-long dispute between an American investor and the Government of Jamaica. I am pleased that we in Congress were able to see this case through to a satisfactory conclusion. I also congratulate the American investor who negotiated an equitable compromise with Prime Minister Michael Manley of Jamaica. One of Mr. Manley's first priorities, after his February inauguration, was to resolve this complex case and demonstrate his commitment to just treatment for foreign investors. I am happy to announce that he has accomplished this goal at the same time that he has assured new housing for the poor and new development in Jamaica.

The Government of Jamaica and John Rollins, a major American investor in Jamaica, had a serious dispute over coastal land ownership. Jamaica refused to recognize Mr. Rollins' title to the land due to a series of controversial legal transactions. Rollins tried unsuccessfully for several years to resolve the dispute. During this time, many of us in Congress expressed our concern for the rights of American investors in Jamaica by restricting aid to Jamaica pending a resolution of the Rollins case. Although the former Prime Minister, Edward Seaga, had a very close relationship with the Reagan administration, he was unable to recognize the legitimate claims of Mr. Rollins and refused to work with him to find an acceptable solution.

Fortunately, with the direct involvement of Prime Minister Michael Manley and Deputy Prime Minister, P.J. Patterson, the Jamaican Government and Mr. Rollins have reached a compromise which serves the interests of Mr. Rollins and will lead to major new investment in Jamaica. This is particularly significant for the Manley government, which had a series of strains with the Jamaican private sector the last time Manley was Prime Minister. However, Mr. Manley came to office, for the second time, committed to resolve the case in a way that treated Mr. Rollins fairly and which assured a good outcome for Jamaica and its people. In particular, Mr. Rollins has agreed to develop a low-income housing project for the laborers who work on the north coast as a first priority. The Jamaicans have agreed to administer the project through the Urban Development Corporation under the capable direction of Vin Lawrence in Montego Bay.

I should note that Prime Minister Manley's work on this case is only one example of the many efforts he is undertaking to continue the reform of Jamaica's economy. Other efforts, such as his call for the creation of a regional stock exchange for the Caribbean, demonstrate his determination to follow policies which are consistent with U.S. international economic policies and which I believe the United States should support. I am inserting into the RECORD today, and have attached to this statement, an amendment which expresses U.S. support for that effort.

I admire Prime Minister Manley for his sincerity and dedication to good business and privatization. I believe that the Rollins case indicates a new pattern of positive developments for the Jamaican economy, which desperately needs more American investment to prosper. I urge all American investors to take a look at the new Jamaica of Michael Manley, for I think they will find an excellent place to invest.

The amendment follows:

AMENDMENT TO S. 1347 OFFERED BY SENATOR BOSCHWITZ

At the end of title III, "Development Assistance," insert the following new section:

"SEC. 313. CARIBBEAN REGIONAL STOCK EXCHANGE.

"(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

"(1) the Thirteenth Meeting of CARICOM Finance Ministers recently commended Jamaica for the proposal for the establishment of a regional capital market;

"(2) although there are currently three functioning stock exchanges within the Caribbean Region and plans to establish others, and although individual exchanges, most notably Jamaica's in the wake of Michael Manley's election, have done well, these exchanges appear to be too small to have an important impact;

"(3) CARICOM has decided to establish a Steering Committee comprising representatives of Central Banks, stock exchanges and the Caribbean Development Bank, to undertake detailed studies on the legal and policy issues involved needed to be undertaken before the proposed regional stock exchange; and

"(4) the relatively small economies of the individual CARICOM countries are such that a regional stock exchange would be far more appropriate.

"(b) STATEMENT OF POLICY.—It is the policy of the United States to support the establishment of a regional stock exchange for the Caribbean, and the Agency for International Development is authorized to utilize such sums as are deemed necessary to assist in reaching this goal."●

EIGHTY-NINTH BIRTHDAY TRIBUTE TO CLAUDE PEPPER OF FLORIDA

● Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, today, September 8, is Senator Claude Pepper's birthday. He would have been 89.

The day before Senator Pepper's birthday, the Senate overwhelmingly approved the Americans With Disabilities Act (S. 933), a civil rights milestone. Passage of the Disabilities Act is a fitting tribute to our beloved colleague and civil rights champion—this is the type of legislation Claude Pepper would have supported with all his considerable energy.

On this special day, we pause to reflect on the lifetime of service of Senator Pepper, and we rededicate ourselves to the principles he cherished.

Since his death on May 30, there has been an outpouring of respect from Americans who had been touched by the actions of this champion from Florida. As a symbol of these heartfelt expressions of gratitude that have been offered from coast to coast, I ask that a letter to the editor from Mr. Max Berking of Warm Mineral Springs, FL, be inserted in the RECORD:

The letter follows:

[From the Washington Post, July 21, 1989]

CLAUDE PEPPER'S VOTE FOR EQUALITY

Your stories about Claude Pepper's courage bring to mind an incident that sheds light on his character and on a chapter in our wartime and civil rights history that has been long forgotten—even by Claude Pepper in his autobiography.

The late congressman was a senator 45 years ago when I was a staffer at the Fair Employment Practice Committee, an agency set up in World War II by President Franklin Roosevelt to remove job discrimination in war industry—a form of bigotry we could not afford with labor shortages in our war plants.

The war was in a critical phase in June 1944. Our invasion of France had just started. Each day brought headlines of new battles and great events. Billions were being willingly spent to support the war effort. Yet the Senate was wrangling over a tiny fraction of that sum.

At issue was the Independent Offices (read war agencies) appropriation bill carrying $500,000 to fund the FEPC for another year. The southern bloc gathered behind an amendment by Sen. Richard B. Russell of Georgia to knock FEPC out of the bill. Debate raged for days, much of it tinged with racism only thinly disguised. A word routinely pronounced "Nigra" on the Senate floor became "Negro" in the next day's Congressional Record. Sen. Theodore Bilbo of Mississippi used the phrase "burr-headed nigra."

On June 20, 1944, the issue came to a roll-call vote. One by one the southern senators voted against FEPC—except the South's leading liberal, Claude Pepper. There was a hush in the chamber as his name was called. Then a gasp from the galleries as Sen. Pepper stood up and voted what he believed—in the teeth of the storm.

And a storm it was. Joe McMurray, one of Pepper's aides, called our office a few days later. Could we help him with some data he needed to answer the hate mail the senator was receiving? I saw some of that mail. One I recall was from a man and wife working in a Florida defense plant. If a penny of the funds deducted from their paychecks for war bonds was being spent on the FEPC, this was a stab in the back of their several sons fighting overseas.

The FEPC received its appropriation with northern votes and went on to handle thousands of wartime cases, enabling job vacancies to be filled by qualified minority workers. Some cases were as small as the removal of the word "Protestant" from a help-wanted ad for a single job. One put 6,000 black women into a hitherto lily-white St. Louis munitions plant—in a matter of months. Others helped settle racially motivated strikes in war plants. Rarely have so few dollars done so much. Later the FEPC concept, with Claude Pepper's help, was established by statute.

I ran into Rep. Pepper a few years ago and reminded him of his vote that summer day years ago. He appreciated my vivid recollection of the event. But he went right on to another topic—an item on today's, not yesterday's, agenda.

MAX BERKING.

WARM MINERAL SPRINGS, FL.

Mr. President, this story recalled by Mr. Berking highlights the courage of a political giant named Claude Pepper. Greatness comes from consistency of conviction, even in the face of controversy.

Claude Pepper was a consistent champion for civil rights, for a strong America to defeat Nazi oppression, and for the dignity of our older citizens.

So today, we celebrate the vibrant and rich life of a man who helped millions—who made this Nation a better place. Claude Pepper, who contributed so much in this Chamber and the House of Representatives, is not with us at the Capitol today, but his convictions live on.●

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with amendments as follows:

S. 931

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Genesee River Protection Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. PROTECTION OF THE GENESEE RIVER.

In order to [further the purposes of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1271 et seq.) (referred to as the "Act") and to] protect for present and future generations the outstanding scenic, natural, recreational, scientific, cultural, and ecological values of the Genesee River within Letchworth Gorge State Park in the State of New York, and to assist in the protection and enhancement of the Gorge's archeological sites of sacred significance to the Seneca Nation, historic areas, endangered [plan] plant communities, and diverse recreation uses, the protections afforded for rivers listed in section 5(a) of the [Act (16 U.S.C. 1276)] Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1276(a)) for study for potential addition to the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System shall apply to the segment of the Genesee River within Letchworth Gorge State Park, except that the protection so afforded shall not interfere with the Secretary of the Army's operation and management of Mt. Morris Dam as authorized for purposes of flood control.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask that the committee amendments be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 729

(Purpose: The purpose of this amendment is to clarify that the segment of the Genesee River to be protected pursuant to this bill begins at the southern border or Letchworth Gorge State Park continuing downstream to the Mount Morris Dam near the northern border of the park)

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator MOYNIHAN, I send to the desk a technical amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG], for Mr. MOYNIHAN, proposes an amendment numbered 729.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2, lines 15 and 16, strike "within Letchworth Gorge State Park," and insert in lieu thereof, "beginning at the southern boundary of Letchworth Gorge State Park and extending downstream to the Mt. Morris Dam,".

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, it is with great pleasure that I rise today in support of S. 931, the Genesee River Protection Act of 1989.

The 17-mile stretch of the Genesee River for which I and my colleague Senator D'AMATO seek protection is truly one of the country's finest natural settings. Containing three successive water falls with a combined drop of over 300 feet, this portion of the Genesee River is impressive. The gorge itself races toward the sky with walls of earth and stone stretching 600 feet in places. Although this section of the Genesee is already included in the New York State Wild and Scenic Rivers Act, and is surrounded by Letchworth State Park, it merits inclusion in the Federal Wild and Scenic System to forever protect it from development.

Traversing New York State northward from the Pennsylvania border, the Genesee River serves as a source of hydroelectric power, irrigation, drinking water, and recreation for thousands of New Yorkers. The Genesee River Protection Act will enhance, for generations to come, a small yet splendid portion of the river.

My good friend and colleague, Senator DALE BUMPERS, chairman of the Subcommittee on Public Lands, National Parks and Forests, chaired a hearing on July 19, 1989, to establish the merits of this legislation. Witnesses at the hearing included New York State Assemblyman William Hoyt, who perhaps best described efforts to protect this portion of the Genesee.

Any potential for affecting the river and the gorge is an anathema. New York State has done as much as it can. Letchworth is a national treasure and should be protected from disfiguration. Only Congress and the President can do that now.

I am happy to report that this measure was unanimously passed out of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee at the recommendation of Senator BUMPERS and the report was filed on August 2, 1989.

Mr. President, the passage of this legislation is of great importance to New York, and I may add, to the thousands of tourists throughout the country who visit Letchworth Gorge each year. A finer example of natural beauty is difficult to find.

Mr. President, I have a technical amendment in order to further define the northern boundary of the Genesee River section protected under this bill. My amendment in no way changes the spirit or intent of this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 729) was agreed to.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 931

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Genesee River Protection Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. PROTECTION OF THE GENESEE RIVER.

In order to protect for present and future generations the outstanding scenic, natural, recreational, scientific, cultural, and ecological values of the Genesee River within Letchworth Gorge State Park in the State of New York, and to assist in the protection and enhancement of the Gorge's archeological sites of sacred significance to the Seneca Nation, historic areas, endangered plant communities, and diverse recreation uses, the protections afforded for rivers listed in section 5(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1276(a)) for study for potential addition to the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System shall apply to the segment of the Genesee River beginning at the southern boundary of Letchworth Gorge State Park and extending downstream to the Mt. Morris Dam, except that the protection so afforded shall not interfere with the Secretary of the Army's operation and management of Mt. Morris Dam as authorized for purposes of flood control.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of calendar numbers 209, 210, 212, 214, and 215 en bloc; that the committee amendments where appropriate be agreed to en bloc, that the bills be deemed to be read a third time and passed, and motions to reconsider the passage of the bills be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to executive session to consider the following nomination:

Dennis Edward Kloske, of Virginia, Under Secretary of Commerce for Export Administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I further ask unanimous consent that the nominee be confirmed, that any statements appear in the RECORD as if read, that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, that the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action and that the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STATEMENT ON THE NOMINATION OF DENNIS KLOSKE

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the nomination of Dennis Kloske for the position of Under Secretary of Commerce for Export Administration. I share the concern of a number of my colleagues about recent developments in the evolution of our policy on East-West technology transfer. Most notable was the recent decision by the Commerce Department to decontrol the sale of certain advanced personal computers to the East bloc. In light of these developments and given Mr. Kloske's prospective role as the highest ranking U.S. official responsible for East-West technology flow, we sought a dialog with Mr. Kloske relating to technology transfer.

Mr. President, I am pleased both with the timeliness and thoughtfulness of Mr. Kloske's response to our concerns. In the context of his impressive work at the Department of Defense on Competitive Strategies, Mr. Kloske has assured us that his views regarding our need to maintain a competitive edge over the Soviet Union remain unchanged. President Bush has chosen an individual who is sensitive to the threat posed by Soviet access to high technology—both in the direct military sense and in terms of the cost it potentially imposes on the DOD budget and thereby on the American taxpayer.

As part of our discussion with Mr. Kloske, he sent a letter to me which outlines many of his views. I would like very much to share this letter with my colleagues and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
Washington, DC, September 6, 1989.

Hon. MALCOLM WALLOP,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR WALLOP: On August 30, I had the pleasure of meeting with Mr. J.D. Crouch of your staff, and the staff of other members of the Steering Committee. I found the session extremely helpful in understanding your concerns, and the concerns of the other Steering Committee members. Accordingly, I would like to take this opportunity to assure you of my commitment to a strong and effective U.S. technology security policy, and my personal belief that constructive interagency collaboration is essential to such a policy.

The position in which President Bush has asked me to serve is one of particular sensitivity and importance. In the rapidly changing international arena, there is a growing trend by our major allies to encourage an expansion of trade with the Soviet Union in the hopes of furthering the economic reforms there. I believe that any trade with the Soviet Union involving high technology must be stringently regulated to ensure that strategic Western technology is protected. If confirmed, I intend to play a major role in the Administration to press for effective interagency collaboration on technology transfer issues, and for a strengthened COCOM to ensure the best possible multilateral controls on East-West technology transfer.

The Bush Administration faces a dual challenge: the formidable military threat posed by the Soviet Union, and the formidable economic challenge posed by the rapid proliferation of high technology around the world. Both challenges must be addressed simultaneously. The loss of technology to the Soviet Bloc is the foremost export administration challenge. I share your view that great care must be exercised to continually weigh commercial considerations against our overriding national security goals. National security must be the major factor because commercial benefits can be trivial compared to the cost to the West's security that could result if our technology advantages are jeopardized.

If confirmed by the United States Senate, I intend to pursue initiatives that I consider crucial to effective Government and furtherance of U.S. national security:

First, I will work closely with my counterparts in the Department of Defense and other cognizant agencies to ensure that an effective and fully consultative interagency process is established. This will guarantee other agencies the opportunity to provide their views and expertise on export control issues in a prompt and regular manner. I have already paid courtesy visits to my counterparts at the Departments of Defense and State, and we have all agreed to meet on a continuing basis to ensure the smooth functioning of the interagency process.

Second, it is my desire to create a forum representing the best possible technical expertise contained in the U.S. Government which would provide Commerce with timely information crucial to its export control responsibilities. Representatives to this forum would include top technical experts from the Department of Defense, the national laboratories and the intelligence community. This forum of experts would serve as an advisory body to guide U.S. export control and decontrol efforts. Such guidance, I believe, would solve the narrow case-by-case export control process which does not reflect a cohesive approach to national security. We must not approach the export control streamlining process on an ad hoc basis but, rather, with a clear understanding of the broader national security interests that must be protected.

The issue of foreign availability in 5(k) countries is also of great concern to me. The granting of 5(k) status is contingent upon those countries' agreement to protect the transfer of strategic technologies to the Bloc. If our investigations identify a 5(k) country that is, in fact, not controlling the export of strategic items and technology, strong action must be taken. By not controlling these exports, these countries become, de facto, a source of foreign availability. It is my belief that the strongest diplomatic measures must be taken in these instances, including the revocation of 5(k) status if necessary, to ensure that 5(k) countries abide by COCOM rules.

Finally, I intend to continue the excellent progress that has been made by Commerce in computerization and data management. Commerce's export licensing data base is the largest in the Federal Government and is relied upon by the Departments of Defense, State, and Energy for their export control roles. Our system includes a sophisticated, built-in program that screens all license applications against information we compile from the enforcement and intelligence communities. Our data base is also an invaluable source of information for the CIA which obtains, on a daily basis, the names of all foreign entities appearing on license applications. They screen these names against their highly classified information, and alert us of any possible diversions. Our data base also provide the licensing history of all commodities and foreign consignees, which provides Commerce licensing officers the ability to spot questionable transactions and allows our enforcement office to take forceful action when necessary. In any case, we will continue to upgrade our computer systems and data base to ensure that our export control procedures are based on the most accurate information available.

In short, I look forward, if confirmed, to making the present export control system work more effectively than it ever has. I believe that communication is a vital component of an effective system and assure you that I am always available to meet with you and members of your staff to address your concerns. I look forward to meeting you, and to establishing an ongoing dialogue with the Steering Committee.

Sincerely,

DENNIS E. KLOSKE,
Under Secretary-Designate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HEFLEY] will come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. HEFLEY led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 3014. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H.R. 3014) "An act making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. REID, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. BYRD, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. HATFIELD, and Mr. STEVENS to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 933. An act to establish a clear and comprehensive prohibition of discrimination on the basis of disability.

AN UNCERTAIN TRUMPET—ADMINISTRATION POLICY ON EASTERN EUROPE

(Mr. LANTOS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, for 40 years we have dreamed about the lifting of the Iron Curtain. Now it has become a reality. Today Eastern Europe's first government in four decades headed by a non-Communist Prime Minister was installed in Poland, and yesterday Hungary's leadership courageously defied its Warsaw Pact allies and opened the gates of freedom to tens of thousands of refugees from East Germany.

Yet at this critical hinge of history, Mr. Speaker, the administration sounds an uncertain trumpet. As the whole non-Communist world rejoices in the triumph of freedom and democracy over the forces of repression and totalitarianism, the administration shows an excess of caution, vacillation, temporizing and timidity, instead of joyfully seizing this historic opportunity. This is not our task alone. Resources must come from Japan and Taiwan and Western Europe and elsewhere, but dynamic and creative leadership can only come from a clear-headed and courageous American initiative.

The people of Eastern Europe are watching, trying to read our lips, but they can barely understand our mumbling. We surely can do better. We clearly must do better, unless we want to see this fleeting moment of opportunity pass us by.

NATIONAL HOSTAGE AWARENESS DAY

(Mr. HENRY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced a resolution to designate Friday, October 27, 1989, as "National Hostage Awareness Day." Eighty-four colleagues in the House have joined as original cosponsors of this resolution, a resolution intended to demonstrate to our American hostages in Lebanon that we have not forgotten their plight.

The purpose and intent of the resolution is not to dictate or outline the terms of the political resolution of the hostages' plight, but to call upon the American people to demonstrate through observances on October 27 their solidarity with the hostages, and for all Americans to join in prayer and participate in other appropriate actions in support of our fellow citizens held hostage.

There have been 10 innocent American citizens held hostage in conjunction with the tragic civil war in Lebanon. William Buckley, seized March 18, 1984, is now presumed dead. William R. Higgins, taken February 17, 1988, was killed by his captors. Eight American citizens remain in captivity. They are:

Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for the Associated Press, seized March 16, 1985; Thomas P. Sutherland, dean of agriculture, American University of Beirut, taken June 9, 1985; Frank Herbert Reed, headmaster of the Lebanese International School, seized September 9, 1986; Joseph James Cicippio, deputy comptroller of the American University of Beirut, seized September 12, 1986; Edward Austin Tracy, illustrator, seized October 21, 1986; Jessee Jonathan Turner, computer and mathematics professor, Beirut University College, seized January 24, 1987; Alann Bradford Steen, professor of journalism at Beirut University College, seized January 24, 1987; and Robert Bruce Polhill, business professor at Beirut University College, seized January 24, 1987.

Terry Anderson has been held for the longest period of time of all the foreign hostages being held in Lebanon. October 27, 1989, will be his 42d birthday, his fifth in captivity and we have chosen this day to symbolically honor and remember the plight of the eight remaining American hostages.

The resolution calls for bells to be rung across the Nation at noon on October 27, 1989, for 1 minute to honor the hostages in Lebanon, and for Americans to make other appropriate remembrance of their plight as an offering of support. I urge and welcome other cosponsors of this resolution, and would encourage our local communities to begin to plan appropriate observances for October 27, 1989, as "National Hostage Awareness Day."

OUR FLAG

(Mr. ANNUNZIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Committee on House Administration, I am happy to announce that the booklet entitled "Our Flag" has been printed by the Government Printing Office.

I sponsored the legislation, House Concurrent Resolution 361, giving the authority to the U.S. Printing Office to print this booklet.

I am delighted that the printing of this publication has been completed and that 500 copies will be delivered to the office of each Congressman.

This is a joint effort on the part of the House and Senate, and the introduction is signed by both Senator WENDELL H. FORD and myself. The last printing of this booklet "Our Flag" took place in 1979, about 10 years ago.

It is fitting that at this particular time the booklet is ready for distribution as we pass H.R. 2978, the Flag Protection Act.

REPEAL OF THE CATASTROPHIC TAX BILL

(Mr. ROTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, much has been said lamenting the catastrophic bill passed last year, a bill that turned into a catastrophe.

Mr. Speaker, I have a clear-cut approach, a flat-out repeal. Those who want an honest, candid, forthright approach, I invite you to cosponsor this legislation.

A small band of us voted against this catastrophic bill last year. Now it is time for the majority in the House to follow suit.

We simply, and our seniors simply, cannot have this albatross around their necks. Much as it might disappoint the social engineers and the Washington lobbyists who parade themselves in the halls of Congress as self-appointed voices of the seniors, this grand design has failed.

Like other attempts to impose big brother controls, it has failed for the most basic reasons in a democracy: The people did not support it.

For that reason it is time for the majority to see the light and do what the American people want, repeal the law.

My bill is a straightforward repeal. I will circulate it for cosponsors, and I urge my colleagues to join in moving this bill forward.

I will also at the proper time move and file for a discharge petition on the bill to overcome any procedural roadblocks that might be thrown in front of this effort.

The American people have a right to know how we stand on this issue. I think an up or down vote on repeal of catastrophic is most important.

SOCIAL SECURITY TAX INCREASE

(Mr. GLICKMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, it may be news to most Americans, but on January 1, 1990, 138 million hard-working people, our constitutents, will see a tax increase when Social Security payroll taxes go up again, further increasing the tax burden on the average American family.

□ 1210

Now, ironically, we are considering a $30,000 tax reduction to the richest 1 percent of Americans, in the form of a capital gains tax relief. President Bush said this will trickle down to the other 99 percent of Americans. However, only 8 percent of that tax cut will benefit people making less than $50,000 a year. However, an astounding 10 times, or 80 percent of that will benefit people making more than $100,000 a year.

The fairness of the tax burden should define who best represents middle-class America. Perhaps we do need to examine how we tax capital, but it makes no sense to do so without considering the tax burden on American workers and small business. Last week, a jury of so-called "little people" told Leona Helmsley she was not so special. She, too, has to pay taxes. Do you not imagine most wage-earning Americans would like to tell all the Helmsleys of the world to pay their fair share?

The voice of middle-class America is hard to hear amidst the din of compromise, but if we listen, I am confident we will do the right thing.

AMERICANS WITH DISABILITIES ACT

(Mr. CONTE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, last week the Senate took an historic step in the history of American democracy—it passed the Americans With Disabilities Act. That action was historic because for the first time in our history, the rights, privileges, and protections contained in our Constitution will be afforded to America's 43 million disabled citizens. It is about time.

In the 100th Congress, I was pleased to join with the gentleman from California, Mr. Coelho, as the principal Republican sponsor of the Americans With Disabilities Act. This year, I am again a principal cosponsor of this long overdue legislation with the gentleman from California and others, including Mr. HOYER of Maryland, Mr. FISH of New York, and Mr. HAWKINS of California.

The Senate's action last week sets the stage for the House to act swiftly to provide to Americans with disabilities the basic civil rights that undergird our society. Although not a member of the committees of jurisdiction, I urge my colleagues to take up this legislation now.

The Senate-passed bill is a good bill, the product of countless hours of negotiation. We ought to use it as our vehicle for the slight changes that may still need to be made, or go ahead and pass it as is. The President and the congressional leadership are committed to enactment of this legislation. Let us get on with it.

JAPANESE COMMERCE IN AMERICA

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, Japan is poised for another and a new attack on America. Japan will open their first fast food outlet outside their country—in Honolulu.

While some may laugh, California, New York, Ohio and the rest of America now must get braced for the fast food shot. Japan controls 25 percent of California's bank assets alone, and announces they are building a hotel, a condominium, a golf course, and a shopping center in Orlando, FL, right next door to Disney World. What is next, folks? Well, the day will come when Mickey Mouse will serve french fries at Epcot Center. Or worse yet, will our kids be greeted at Disney World someday by Sumo Mickey?

The Constitution says that Congress shall regulate commerce. I can find nowhere in the Constitution where it says Congress shall give away the farm. We better do something about trade. Fast food may be faster than we think.

FLAG PROTECTION ACT DOES NOT PROTECT THE FLAG

(Mr. PACKARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to support efforts to prohibit desecration of the flag, the symbol of our Nation. The bill before the House today, however, does nothing to protect the flag from desecration. H.R. 2978 is a bill that fails to deal with the issue of flag desecration in an honest and straightforward manner.

This bill seeks to statutorily prohibit desecration of the flag. Legal scholars are not certain that this bill will have any real legal strength to prohibit flag desecration. Beyond that, I believe it is improper to try to overturn a Supreme Court decision by statute. This would set a very dangerous precedent. The Constitution was construed in such a manner to ensure that if a Supreme Court decision is to be overturned it should be done by a constitutional amendment. Does anyone recall the system of checks and balances upon which our Government was founded? For Congress to attempt to bypass the Constitution through use of a statute to overturn a Supreme Court decision is absurd. It is so much a breach of separation of powers that I am shocked that this body is even considering this approach as a viable alternative to a constitutional amendment.

Enactment of a constitutional amendment is the means that was intended to be used by the founders of this Nation, the drafters of the Constitution, to overturn the Supreme Court. I ask that Congress work within the constraints placed upon it by the Constitution. I find it difficult to believe that I must stand before this body and make this most basic request. I urge my colleagues to oppose this bill and to support a constitutional amendment to prohibit desecration of the flag. Do not cop out on this vote. This bill does not protect the flag.

THE NATIONAL MARGARET WALKER ALEXANDER RESEARCH CENTER OF AFRICAN AMERICAN LITERATURE

(Mr. PARKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend is remarks.)

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing, along with 67 of my colleagues, the National Margaret Walker Alexander Research Center of African American Literature bill. The Center, to be located at Jackson State University in Jackson, MS, will be named for Margaret Walker Alexander, professor emeritus in the Department of English at Jackson State University. Professor Alexander is known for her contributions to African-American literature, both as a novelist and a poet. Her nonfiction works have also received critical acclaim. Most people are familiar with her more famous works such as "Jubilee, for My People," and "The Daemonic Genius of Richard Wright."

This legislation will focus on the preservation of African-American materials and archival resources. There is a scarcity of primary resource materials to inform us today and those of future generations how African-Americans perceived their experiences. These materials are needed by scholars at all levels as they seek to interpret past generation's experiences.

Let me point out that this research center will focus primarily on 20th century African-American life. It is important to note from a national perspective that it will provide a service to the American public on one very significant period in our Nation's history. It is my hope that my colleagues in Congress will join with me in this worthwhile effort.

PROTECT FLAG WITH A CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

(Mr. DUNCAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, the day after the Supreme court decision in Texas versus Johnson, I spoke on the floor of the House and said that I felt the Founding Fathers would be shocked if they knew the Court had stretched the first amendment so as to allow such things as the burning of the American flag.

A few weeks later, I mailed a questionnaire to some 90,000 people in east Tennessee who are on my mailing list, having corresponded with us in some way.

The response was tremendous: 11,174 reported that they supported a constitutional amendment to prohibit desecration and burning of the American flag; 394 said they would oppose such an amendment.

Today we will approve a statute called the Flag Protection Act. I will support this legislation.

However, as a very fair publication, the newsletter of the Democratic Study Group says:

> Despite a handful of liberal law professors who testified in favor of this statute, most constitutional scholars agree that this bill would be declared unconstitutional—and thus passing this law will simply delay the day when protection is actually restored to the flag. It is abundantly clear that if this bill is enacted, it will inevitably be challenged and struck down—and then Congress will get around to submitting a Constitutional Amendment to the States.

Agreeing with that, former Judge Bork in a hearing on this bill said the only effective way to protect the flag is through a constitutional amendment.

I will support the Flag Protection Act, but I would still hope that some day the Congress would do more to overturn this unfortunate decision by the U.S. Supreme Court.

FAMILY PLANNING AND INFERTILITY PROBLEMS

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, the gentlewoman from Maine Ms. OLYMPIA SNOWE, and I have introduced a bill dealing with family planning and research in this country on both family planning and infertility problems.

I would like to call to the attention of Members the very distinguished article in this Sunday's Washington Post dealing with the status of birth control in America. It points out that when we look at it scientifically, in the last decade only two countries marched backward in birth control and family planning, and they were Iran and the United States of America. That is not a statistic on which I am proud, and I certainly hope we can all work together on this bill in getting the United States once again front and center in leading the world in family planning and in research on family planning and infertility, because there is absolutely no question that we have been far behind in these areas.

I think if we do that, we can then have something of which we can be very proud 5 years from now rather than continuing the politically divisive fight over and over again on abortion and other subjects. Let us hope that we can move to the middle ground, to the comfort zone, the area where 90 percent of the American people think we should be, and that is finding safe, available plans for every American who wishes it.

SUPPORT NOTED FOR A CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT TO PROTECT THE FLAG

(Mr. PAXON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PAXON. Mr. Speaker, the verdict is in. The people of western New York and the Finger Lakes region are in complete and overwhelming agreement, and here in my hand and behind me today is the evidence. I asked the people of my community their opinion about a constitutional amendment which would prohibit the burning and desecration of our flag.

Well, Mr. Speaker, my offices were deluged with the responses; approximately 20,000 citizens took their time to write. Over 97 percent of those responding are in support of a constitutional amendment to protect our flag.

Mr. Speaker, my district is no different than any other district in this country. Americans everywhere have called for a constitutional amendment, but as of today this Congress has failed to heed the judgment of the American people.

We vote today not on a constitutional amendment; we vote on an inadequate and probably unconstitutional statute.

Because of our communities' love of this flag, I will support today's action. However, we cannot and should not ignore the will of the people and abandon our effort to pass a constitutional amendment.

Mr. Speaker, let me remind my friends that the Constitution begins, "We the people * * *," not "We the Congress * * *." We were elected to this House to perform the will of the people. Let us not forget this responsibility today.

OPPOSITION TO THE FLAG PROTECTION ACT

(Mr. SKAGGS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SKAGGS. Mr. Speaker, later today, we will vote on H.R. 2978, the Flag Protection Act of 1989. Because this is such a sensitive issue to so many people, I want to take this opportunity before the vote to explain my reasoning in deciding to vote against the bill.

I love my country, and I love the many important symbols of my country—the flag foremost among them. I volunteered to join the Marines and, as a marine, I volunteered to serve in Vietnam, because I feel an enormous duty to my country and to its values.

In searching my heart about this issue, it's become clear to me that the substance of what I ought to care about is my country and its values—that they are more important than the symbols we've created to stand for them. And, when faced with a choice between substance and symbol, I believe it's best to choose substance.

The reason we have a first amendment to the Constitution is to protect the expression of minority views—even views as highly offensive to me and the vast majority of Americans as those expressed by burning the flag. Yet, despite the effort to characterize H.R. 2978 as a bill merely "to protect the physical integrity of the flag," it is abundantly clear that the real motive is to suppress the expression of offensive views. And so, the first amendment seems to me to pose an insurmountable hurdle.

Beyond that, one underlying message of H.R. 2978 is that we care so much about this symbol of the country that we're willing to use it to justify an erosion of fundamental constitutional values and principles. That should give all of us some pause. It has certainly caused me to stop and recall how this Nation got started.

One central idea in our national beginnings was that we formed a country to protect the values of individual liberty, that individuals ceded such power and authority to a government as was necessary to establish an ordered society, but that sufficient rights were retained in the citizenry to make real the promise of freedom. The Government was to serve the people, not the other way around. The effort to enforce respect for the flag by threat of criminal penalty turns this relationship upside down.

In addition to the central issue, there is another important question having to do with H.R. 2978's provision for expedited Supreme Court review. As a study I requested from the Congressional Research Service points out, this provision creates a real risk that the Supreme Court could end up deciding the serious constitutional issues involved here without the record of a case that's been fully developed in a trial court. The approach proposed in H.R. 2978 is literally without precedent in the extent to which it would shortcircuit the usual, careful process by which the judicial system examines important issues. That aspect of the bill also drives my decision to oppose it.

There's been no evidence of any rush by people to burn the flag. I'm afraid the prominence we're giving the issue will only encourage some miscreant who'll try to grab the spotlight and be the first person after enactment to torch Old Glory. Let's not do anything that encourages such a trivialization of the values symbolized by our wonderful flag.

WAITING PERIODS DO WORK

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, one of the most despicable criminals of the last decade actually said something that made sense recently. John Hinckley, President Reagan's would-be assassin, said he "secured weapons far too easily" and that if a waiting period for buying handguns had been in effect, "I believe I would not have gone forward with the effort to shoot the President."

Hinckley went on to say that the lack of a waiting period "raises serious questions about gun laws" in the United States.

Mr. Hinckley lied when he filled out the Federal form required to buy the handgun that he used to shoot the President. The law in Texas, however, did not require background checks and Hinckley was able to buy guns unimpeded. Had a waiting period with background checks been in effect, the police would have discovered that Hinckley lied on the form and denied him access to weapons.

Waiting periods do work. A nationwide waiting period with mandatory background checks would save thousands of lives every year, and we should have the courage to enact one.

[From the Chicago Tribune, Aug. 8, 1989]

HINCKLEY: GUN-BUY DELAY MIGHT HAVE STOPPED ME

WASHINGTON (AP)—Presidential assailant John W. Hinckley has said a gun-purchase waiting period could have kept him from shooting Ronald Reagan.

Hinckley also has asked permission to be interviewed by the news media.

At the time he shot Reagan, "I was responding to a paradoxical rage induced by the constant use of Valium," Hinckley, now a patient at a mental hospital, said in court papers seeking an order allowing news media interviews.

Authorities at St. Elizabeths Hospital where Hinckley is in custody say they will never allow Hinckley to be interviewed, contended Hinckley's lawyer, Russell F. Canan.

Hinckley said that if a waiting period for buying weapons had been required, "I believe I would not have gone forward with the effort to shoot the President."

The fact that there is no waiting period "raises serious questions about the gun laws," Hinckley said in the filing Friday in U.S. District Court. A waiting period for gun purchases is a frequent demand by gun-control groups.

Hinckley described himself as a "victim" of prescribed drugs who secured weapons "far too easily" and penetrated presidential security "without any difficulty."

A POW CAMP FOR DRUG OFFENDERS

(Mr. TALLON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TALLON. Mr. Speaker, the simple, obvious solution is not often the best solution, but it is certainly the solution that should be looked at first.

The American people are ready to fight the war on drugs. Allow me to share with the Members a strategy offered by one of my constituents, Mr. Henry Sellers. Concerning the shortage of prison space to house drug pushers, he writes:

Why won't our government, at the Federal level, declare war on drug users, dealers, and importers by building cheap barbed wire and wooden POW camps for these people?

He continues:

These POW camps would be built by the prisoners. They would house 22 to 24 prisoners per room. No central heat or air conditioning. One daily food ration which the prisoners themselves must prepare. Small bunk beds, laundry duty. And one bath per month. This is a description of my POW camp in World War II.

FUNDING THE PRESIDENT'S NATIONAL DRUG CONTROL STRATEGY

(Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, recently, I addressed the House and expressed my strong support for the President's national drug control strategy. I believe his policy is sound, and deserving of widespread support. However, several Members of Congress have already slapped the hand of bipartisanship by criticizing the President's plan as being inadequate, or poorly financed. Higher taxes—they have said—are the only way to fight the war on drugs.

The American people should know that this is not the truth. The Federal Government appropriates money for hundreds of programs each year. Drugs have been listed as the No. 1 priority. That means that other programs must take a back seat. We cannot continue the myth that all Federal programs are created equal.

For example, a 10-percent cut in the subsidy for Amtrak, a program which benefits mostly middle and upper class east coast commuters, could fully fund the President's request for money to research drug treatment and prevention. This is just one example—there are many, many more.

Tomorrow, I will hold a special order to discuss several other areas where we can make cuts to generate the necessary revenue to fight—and win—the war on drugs, without raising taxes. In the meantime, I would ask those naysayers around Washington to halt their cries for new or higher taxes. This is a war on drugs—not the taxpayers pocketbook.

SHOULD THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR DEMOCRACY TAKE SIDES IN NICARAGUA?

(Mr. KOSTMAYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, the Bush administration is proposing that the National Endowment for Democracy intervene in the Nicaraguan election by contributing up to $3 million to opposition candidate Violeta Chamorro's campaign against Daniel Ortega.

As the author of legislation appropriating $3 million to NED for nonpartisan use in Nicaragua, this proposal raises a number of troubling questions. The National Endowment for Democracy was created to further the process of democracy. However, NED is barred by law from interfering in elections abroad to finance the campaigns of specific candidates for public office. They did not do it in Poland, and they did not do it in Chile. Should they do it in Nicaragua?

Many hope that the Nicaraguan opposition wins a free and fair election. We must do all that we can to make sure that it is indeed a free and fair election. But to start paying the campaign for the opposition candidate involves us in a kind of activity that is illegal under current law and might well be inappropriate even if Congress changes current law to allow it.

A DECLARATION OF ECONOMIC WAR?

(Mrs. BENTLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, there is a new best seller in Japan, entitled "The Japan That Can Say No." The thrust of the book is that America has not come to grips with the reality of its own political and economic decline.

Among the collection of essays is one by Shintaro Ishihara, a possible future candidate for Japanese Prime Minister. His statements are shocking. He points out that no matter how much we expand our military we can do nothing if Japan one day were to say, "We will no longer sell you chips." He means computer chips.

He also says "Should Japan decide to sell its chips to the Soviet Union instead that would instantly alter the balance of power."

I have week after week, year after year come to this floor with that message. I have warned that we are losing our sovereignty—control of our national destiny to not only Japan, but to other nations in our growing dependence on foreign sourcing of strategic items. Mr. Ishihara, however, is not warning. He is boasting.

Another statement in the book by Yutaka Furuya, a noted Japanese academic, is used to close the article from the Chicago Tribune: ". . . Today, it is America that is being brought to its knees by Japanese economic might."

Are they declaring an economic war?

FLAG PROTECTION ACT

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court made the wrong decision on flag burning, and there is no Member in this body that favors flag burning. The question is: "How do we change the Supreme Court decision? By legislation and statute, or by constitutional amendment?" Mr. Speaker, the correct answer that preserves our values, that also embodies us as trustees of the people, is to act through legislation to prevent the unwarranted destruction of our flag.

Mr. Speaker, there is a middle ground, and that is a Flag Protection Act, and that statute simply reads "Whoever knowingly mutilates, defaces, burns, or tramples upon any flag shall be fined or imprisoned."

The bill also contains a provision for expedited Supreme Court review of any challenge to its constitutionality. Mr. Speaker, let us not tamper with the Constitution. We are going to deal with many other constitutional issues if we open that Pandora's box.

It is worthy that we change the Supreme Court decision, but let us do it responsible by legislation and do it immediately.

FLAG PROTECTION

(Mr. GOSS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, nearly 3 months ago an overwhelming majority of the Members of this House rose to protest the Supreme Court decision affecting constitutional protection for the American flag.

We voiced the shock and dismay of citizens across this Nation—we said loudly and clearly that the Court's decision was not only ill-conceived but also sends a terrible message to the people of this great country—and to Nations around the world.

But we knew that voicing our distress would not be enough. We knew that we must act to ensure the complete protection of our flag from desecration.

Mr. Speaker, shortly we will be voting on H.R. 2978, a proposed statuatory Flag Protection Act. I urge my colleagues not to allow this measure—which cannot afford total protection to the flag—to be our last word on this important subject.

If this body supports H.R. 2978, let it be a signal of our intentions to consider the only measure that will guarantee complete protection for our flag—constitutional protection.

I urge my colleagues to join the President and many of us in this House as we continue our call for consideration of a constitutional amendment prohibiting once and for all the desecration of the American flag.

DRUG EDUCATION PROGRAM

(Mr. DONALD E. LUKENS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DONALD E. LUKENS. Mr. Speaker, I rise with an urgent message that needs to be driven into the mind of all America, but specifically American young people, in the most forceful terms possible, and that is: Drug usage kills, and drug dealing kills, too. This must be driven home now in the most graphic, violent terms imaginable.

What happens to those who sell and use drugs? Fewer than 1 percent of dealers will make any money, and 99 percent will die, or be mutilated or spend their life in prison. Pushers end up the same way, mutilated, dead or in prison.

Mr. Speaker, our education programs must include realistic dialog and experience. There is no nice guy approach. Drug dealers are not nice guys. They are brutal, and they discard people like used waste when they are through with them.

People need to be aware. Some will be offended, but drugs are offensive. The violent murder in our streets is offensive, and in this television age a hard-hitting graphic visual message is the most effective way to teach.

Using or pushing drugs is not profitable. It is violent, it is destructive, and I say, "You will probably end up in jail, dead or mutilated."

WHAT CAN BE DONE ABOUT THE TRADE DEFICIT IN SERVICES

(Mr. GEPHARDT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, there was news released from the Commerce Department today that I think is worthy of noting. That is that the trade deficit for the months April through June reached $31 billion, a little lower than sometimes in the past, but still an unacceptably high level.

My colleagues, the important thing to note is that for the first time in 30 years the United States in the last 3 months ran a deficit in trade in services as well as manufacturing. We have been hearing for years and years that the future was in services and high technology. That would save us. That would give us a trade surplus. Mr. Speaker, it is now obvious that we are losing in services, as well as in manufacturing.

The administration is now trying to implement the new trade bill, and talks are now going on with the Japanese on structural impediments. There are talks going on with other countries around the world as well.

I think the message of the day is very, very clear. The trade policy of the United States of the last 10 years has failed, and it has got to be changed.

My colleagues, it can start to be changed in the structural impediment talks with the Japanese. It can start to be changed in our talks with the Europeans toward 1992 and with every other country we trade with in the world. It is time for our President and this administration to stop talking and start acting.

Mr. Speaker, let us give the American businesses and people a chance to sell our products and our services in other countries as easily as they can sell here.

ENDING THE DRUG MAZE IN CONGRESS

(Mr. SMITH of Vermont asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, a few weeks before he died, our friend and colleague Larkin Smith began his campaign for a leaner, more effective Congress to tackle the drug crisis. Larkin Smith wanted to tell us, by giving 1-minute speeches like this one every day for 28 days, about the maze of jurisdiction over drug issues in this Congress. In his honor, I and other freshman colleagues will resume and complete that mission.

This is the 15th day of these speeches, signifying the 15th standing committee in Congress that can tinker with our national drug policy. Last year we gave the President one voice on drug issues: His drug czar Bill Bennett. But today, the Congress still has at least 28 voices. Long after the daily killings have made this country cry out for a real answer, we still have nearly as many policymaking centers in this Congress as we have committees.

Though Larkin will not have lived to see it, let's begin this new war on drugs by pledging to give our branch of government a better way to wage it. In a few weeks my colleagues and I will have finished his series of messages. But let's not let his point be lost. Each day we spend crafting an effective policy on drugs is another day lost in the realization of a drug-free America. We have nothing to lose—and everything to gain—by forming a standing committee with sole power to lead the American people's greatest fight.

I urge each of you to join us in finishing what Larkin Smith started. The greatest tribute we can offer is to followthrough on his proposal as quickly as we can.

VOTE FOR FLAG PROTECTION

(Mr. MAZZOLI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, today we will take up the Flag Protection Act under a rule which will eliminate most of the debate, so I will take this opportunity to announce my support for the bill and my hope that it does pass the House.

Each summer back home I have what I call my town hall meetings. This question of whether or not the flag should be protected from abuse as a symbol of free speech came up at every one of the meetings. While it was not unanimous, for the most part the people felt that the flag should not be desecrated, even as a means of expressing unhappiness with some political goal of our country, and at the same time while not unanimous, most people felt that Congress should address that problem, either in the form of a statute or a constitutional amendment.

I serve on the Committee on the Judiciary. I was there for the hearings. It is my judgment that a constitutional amendment is the only clear-cut way to protect the flag. On the other hand, what we have today is at least a step in the direction to provide some protection and some security for our flag in order that it not be used capriciously by people, even though they may have some deep-seated and some legitimate grievance to be addressed.

So I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that the House will support this. It is my understanding that we will have a chance to vote on a constitutional amendment in due course. This I think would be a step forward and I believe it ought to pass the House, and I hope it does.

TOMORROW'S VOTE ON TAX DOLLARS TO FUND OBSCENE AND INDECENT ART

(Mr. ROHRABACHER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Speaker, at a time when we are struggling to find the funds needed for health care for the elderly, prenatal care and a war against drugs, spending money on the arts is questionable. Spending the taxpayer dollars on art that is obscene and indecent, antireligious or racist is inexcusable.

Tomorrow there will be a parliamentary vote on whether the Congress should set standards to prohibit the use of tax dollars to fund projects that are: First, obscene or indecent; second, material which denigrates religion; and third, material which debases citizens on the basis of race, creed, sex, handicap, age, or national origin.

My amendment is simple to understand and clear in purpose. It is not a matter of censorship but sponsorship. My amendment will set standards for tax-sponsored art.

Because some Members do not want an up or down vote, the previous question will be moved to block me from offering my amendment. Thus the vote on the previous question will be the vote for or against standards that will prevent the Federal subsidization of obscene and indecent art.

Vote no on the previous question. Don't let hard earned taxpayer dollars fund obscene and indecent art.

FULL DEBATE SOUGHT ON ALLEGED OBSCENE ART ISSUE

(Mr. HANCOCK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow morning, this House will consider a motion to instruct the House conferees on the interior appropriations bill. I would ask my colleagues to vote no when the previous question arises so that Mr. ROHRABACHER might offer a motion to instruct the conferees to accept the Senate language with regard to obscene, indecent, or discriminatory publicly-funded works of art. I hope that we will get the chance to fully debate this matter tomorrow. While some may portray this as a trivial issue being politicized, I think it goes to the heart of our duties as elected representatives of the people. In that capacity, we must employ a great deal of scrutiny when expending taxpayer funds. I do not think anyone who has seen the so-called works of art in question could conclude that this was a responsible expenditure of the taxpayers funds. This is what this issue is really about—responsibility. Some will raise other matters to cloud the debate, but I hope my colleagues will not be led astray. Again, vote no on the previous question tomorrow morning so that we might fully debate this matter.

A CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT ON FLAG BURNING

(Mr. SCHUETTE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHUETTE. Mr. Speaker, last June the Supreme Court of the United States voted that in America you can burn the American flag and walk away. I think the Court was dead wrong. We have a responsibility to correct that.

Today the House of Representatives will debate a statute to try to correct that wrong and injustice.

Well, we are wrong here today in our attempt to try to stop flag burning in America, with only 40 minutes of debate, no amendments to the bill in question and no opportunity to debate an amendment to the Constitution. With all due respect to the parties involved, the statute we are going to debate today is camouflage, a cover up, and it just will not fly. Why? The same methodology and rationale that the Supreme Court utilized in invalidating the Texas statute will be used in invalidating a Federal statute. If we want to stop and prohibit the desecration of the American flag, we have to have an amendment to the Constitution.

INTRODUCTION OF DRUG WAR FUNDING ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 1989

(Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, many of us have questioned, and rightly so, whether or not we will be spending enough money on the war on drugs. I would agree that we do not have to raise taxes in order to be serious about fighting the drug war; however, I am concerned that worthwhile existing programs should not be cut to provide the funds. So where will the money come from? I have an answer to that question, Mr. Speaker. Today I am introducing the "Drug War Funding Enhancement Act of 1989."

In short, my bill would take all funds appropriated to procure B–2 Stealth bombers in fiscal year 1990 and transfer that money to the war on drugs. Transferring almost $2 billion will not derail our national defense, but it will go a long way to solving the drug problem.

My bill directs the President to divide those funds equally between programs related to drug treatment, prevention, education, and also programs related to law enforcement and drug interdiction.

The President could restore all but one of the proposed budget cuts he offered and still have nearly $1.2 billion in new money to spend.

Mr. Speaker, the time has come for us to put our money where our mouth is.

IMPERIAL CONGRESS AGAIN READY TO AVOID ITS RESPONSIBILITY

(Mr. DANNEMEYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, the imperial Congress is about ready to illustrate tomorrow how we can avoid accountability on an issue that is of significance to the American people; namely, as the gentleman from California [Mr ROHRABACHER] has very ably pointed out, it is not an issue of censorship. It is an issue of sponsorship. Tomorrow when we appoint conferees dealing with using taxpayers' money to provide for pornographic literature, he will seek to instruct the conferees that none of the Federal taxpayers' money may be used for that purpose.

The game that the Democrat majority will probably use or pursue is to preempt this freshman's right to instruct the conferees by having the Speaker recognize any person who is senior to the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER] in order to remove the ability of the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER] to use the office of motion to instruct.

I think the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER] should be entitled to offer that motion to instruct, and I would ask my colleagues tomorrow to defeat the previous question so that he will have that opportunity.

NATIONAL HISTORICALLY BLACK COLLEGES WEEK

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 109) to designate the period commencing September 11, 1989, and ending on September 15, 1989, as "National Historically Black Colleges Week," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

□ 1250

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KOSTMAYER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPENCE], who is the chief sponsor of this joint resolution.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of Senate Joint Resolution 109, a resolution to designate this week, September 11 through September 15, as "National Historically Black Colleges Week." I have introduced the House companion bill, House Joint Resolution 399.

Mr. Speaker, I have been privileged over the past 2 years to sponsor this resolution commemorating National Historically Black Colleges Week. It is my honor to do it again.

Mr. Speaker, there are 107 historically black colleges and universities in the United States. They provide the quality education which is so essential to full participation in our complex, highly technological society.

Black colleges and universities have a rich heritage and have played a prominent part and role in American history. These institutions have allowed many underprivileged students to attain their full potential through higher education.

Mr. Speaker, it is entirely appropriate that we recognize these colleges and universities in this way.

Mr. Speaker, I would especially like to at this time offer my appreciation for those who have helped to bring this legislation to the floor: the over 218 cosponsors, the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD], the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN], the ranking member, the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE], the ranking member, the majority whip, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY], the minority leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL], and the staffs of these Members and the committee staffs.

Mr. Speaker, again, I thank all of these people for helping me to bring this legislation before us today.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, continuing my reservation of objection, I yield to my colleague and chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER].

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE], for this opportunity just to take a moment to thank the sponsor for his extraordinary effort over this last week in order to assemble the sponsorship necessary for this presentation today to recognize the pivotal station in the nurturing of scholarly growth among black Americans that the traditionally black colleges have performed in America. In so doing they have not only filled an important educational void that existed in this Nation for decades, but they serve today as a repository of a rich cultural heritage that is one of pride and lasting value to all Americans.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 109

Whereas there are 107 Historically Black Colleges and Universities in the United States;

Whereas such colleges and universities provide the quality education so essential to full participation in a complex, highly technological society;

Whereas black colleges and universities have a rich heritage and have played a prominent role in American history;

Whereas such institutions have allowed many underprivileged students to attain their full potential through higher education; and

Whereas the achievements and goals of the Historically Black Colleges are deserving of national recognition: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the period commencing September 11, 1989, and ending on September 15, 1989, is designated as "National Historically Black Colleges Week" and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States and interested groups to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies, activities, and programs, thereby demonstrating support for Historically Black Colleges and Universities in the United States.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on Senate Joint Resolution 109, the Senate joint resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5 of rule I, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 4 of rule XV.

Such rollcall votes, if postponed, will be taken at the end of legislative business today.

FLAG PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2978) to amend section 700 of title 18, United States Code, to protect the physical integrity of the flag, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 2978

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Flag Protection Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. CRIMINAL PENALTIES WITH RESPECT TO THE PHYSICAL INTEGRITY OF THE UNITED STATES FLAG.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) of section 700 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(a)(1) Whoever knowingly mutilates, defaces, burns, or tramples upon any flag of the United States shall be fined under this title or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"(2) This subsection does not prohibit any conduct consisting of the disposal of a flag when it has become worn or soiled.".

(b) DEFINITION.—Section 700(b) of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(b) As used in this section, the term 'flag of the United States' means any flag of the United States, or any part thereof, made of any substance, or any size, in a form that is commonly displayed.".

SEC. 3. EXPEDITED REVIEW OF CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES.

Section 700 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end of the following:

"(d)(1) If the question of the constitutionality of this section, under the first article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States, is properly presented in any case before a United States district court, that court shall, if the Supreme Court of the United States has not previously ruled on that question, immediately certify that question to the Supreme Court.

"(2) The Supreme Court shall, if it has not previously ruled on that question, accept jurisdiction over the certified question and advance on the docket and expedite to the greatest extent possible the disposition of that question. The Supreme Court may, with respect to such question, give binding instructions or require the entire record to be sent up for decision of the entire matter in controversy.

"(3) The Clerk of the Supreme Court shall promply notify the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate of the receipt of such certification, and each House of Congress shall have the right to intervene in the case for the purpose of defending the constitutionality of this section.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS].

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court's decision on June 21, 1989, in the case of Texas versus Johnson, invalidating a Texas flag desecration statute, has aroused the deepest possible concern here in this Chamber, in the Congress, and across the Nation. The flag of the United States holds a unique place in the lives of all Americans. It has flown proudly over us for our two centuries of nationhood. Millions of our soldiers have marched into battle under its colors, and many of their number have sacrificed their lives defending the freedoms it stands for. The flag represents not any single set of ideas and beliefs, but rather the unity that has emerged from our diversity as a nation.

Texas versus Johnson also called into question the validity of flag protection laws on the books of 47 other States as well as a provision of the United States Code, and it led to immediate action here in the House. On June 27, we passed House Resolution 186, expressing this body's profound concern over the High Court's decision. In addition, early in July the Judiciary Committee's Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights began a series of five hearings to examine the decision closely, analyze carefully and deliberately what the Supreme Court actually held in Texas versus Johnson, and determine the appropriate steps for the Congress to take in order to protect the physical integrity of the flag.

H.R. 2978, the legislation which is before us today, is the product of those hearings. The committee determined that the Court's basis for striking down the Texas statute was that it was aimed at suppressing expressive conduct—conduct protected by the first amendment. Rather than safeguarding the physical integrity of the flag in all circumstances, the Texas statute made it a crime to abuse the flag in a manner that would "seriously offend one or more persons * * *" Thus, it focused on the message that the actor was attempting to convey.

The current Federal flag protection statute (18 U.S.C. section 700), also attempts to punish the act of flag desecration in a specific expressive manner: In this case, making it a crime to "cast contempt upon" the flag by doing certain things to it.

The Texas versus Johnson decision is the latest in a series of Supreme Court decisions holding that a flag desecration or misuse statute was an unconstitutional infringement on expression. In all of these cases, the Court indicated that it would look differently on a content-neutral flag protection statute: One that protected the physical integrity of the flag in all circumstances, one that focused solely on conduct and did not turn on the message being conveyed by the defendant.

H.R. 2978 is designed to conform to those decisions and bring Federal law within those holdings by removing any language that is content-specific or that focuses on communication. The bill includes a specific exception for disposal of flags that have become worn or soiled through normal usage and the passage of time, and it contains a provision ensuring that we will have prompt Supreme Court review of the constitutionality of the revised Federal flag protection law.

Mr. Speaker, I am certain that some Members today will urge that we immediately enact a constitutional amendment to protect the flag, rather than proceeding on the statutory route embodied in H.R. 2978. While I would not question the good faith of those who would suggest such a course of action, I believe that we would be irresponsible to move to amend the Constitution without first determining that that was the only option available to us. I think that few in this Chamber would dispute the proposition that the Constitution of the United States should be amended only if it is shown to be absolutely, undeniably necessary.

This is particularly the case with the Bill of Rights, those first 10 amendments to our national charter which for two centuries have stood unchanged, through war and peace, in bad times and good, as the protector of every citizen's individual freedoms.

H.R. 2978 embodies the judgment of a number of constitutional authorities that a statutory response to Texas versus Johnson can be drafted in a manner that passes constitutional muster. I would say to my colleagues: Give this statutory solution a chance to work. We owe nothing less to ourselves, our constituents, and our Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, the flag stands for all that binds this diverse Nation together. It must not be used as a wedge to divide us—and those would use it as a wedge by desecrating it or by exploiting it, deserve nothing but our utter contempt. Let us enact H.R. 2978 and move it quickly so that the Federal Government once again will be able to protect the flag in a manner that is consistent with our basic constitutional freedoms.

□ 1300

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 2978.

The Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights, of which I am the ranking minority member, had five separate hearings on flag desecration. I listened with an open mind to testimony from constitutional experts and veterans groups stating their opinion on how best and most effectively to overturn Texas versus Johnson. The majority of those testifying before the subcommittee believed that an amendment to the Constitution would be the only way to undo this decision.

Ignoring that testimony, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee stated on the basis of that record, it was his firm belief "that a statute protecting the flag from physical harm can be drafted in a way that is consistent with the Court's holding in that case." As a result, we have before us a bill that by statute attempts to overturn Texas versus Johnson. We asked for an amendment to the Constitution, but were denied an opportunity to even vote on that alternative.

Many of us voted for the statute in committee, saw no other alternative to protect the flag, and hoped to have an opportunity on the House floor to offer amendments to lessen some of the more egregious consequences of this bill. With the bill now being considered under suspension of the rules, offering no opportunity for amendments, I am forced to vote no on this bill in an effort to uphold my oath of office.

When the Supreme Court interprets the meaning of the Constitution, as it did in the Texas versus Johnson, that remains the law of the land unless the Supreme Court changes its mind or unless the decision is overturned by amendment as set forth in article 5 of the Constitution. The amendment process is not foreign to us. Supreme Court decisions have been overturned by constitutional amendment. For example, the 11th amendment providing for State's sovereign immunity overturned Chisholm versus Georgia; the 14th amendment overturned the Dred Scott decision; the 16th amendment providing for income tax overturned United States versus Pollock; and 26th amendment, allowing 18-year-olds the right to vote, overturned the Oregon versus Mitchell.

But to use a statute to amend the Constitution places the Bill of Rights in far more jeopardy than to amend the Constitution by the cumbersome and lengthy process established in article 5.

Moreover, let me point out a few of the numerous problems with H.R. 2978 to show the absurdity of attempting to overturn Texas versus Johnson by statute.

The present flag desecration law (18 U.S.C. § 700), which has now been effectively rendered unconstitutional, is being changed by removing the words, "cast contempt upon", "publicly", and "defiling". By removing these few words from the statute, the current law has been gutted of its whole purpose. All express reference to "desecrate" has been removed. To be truly neutral, H.R. 2978 has to prohibit even patriotic acts. Additionally, it adds "a dirty flag defense" which states that any conduct consisting of the disposal of a flag when it has become worn or soiled is not a violation of the statute. This exception allows a flag protestor to first dirty the flag in any manner he sees fit and then burn it or mutilate it in protest against the United States. This dirty flag defense is an absolute defense for any political protestor who feels the need to torch Old Glory. Thus, we have the absurd result of protecting the very acts we wish to prohibit in an attempt to protect from prosecution those who ceremoniously burn wornout flags.

But worst of all, before knowing for sure whether the statute will work, the bill suggests that someone first must once again desecrate our flag so that we can once ask the Supreme Court whether it is acceptable to burn the flag in protest—even though the Supreme Court has already answered the question! To encourage the same activity we seek to outlaw is indeed an absurd result.

It is far better to undertake a procedure we are confident will cure the problem, a constitutional amendment. Why are we so reluctant to amend the Constitution to demand that flag desecration be prohibit? Is it too much to ask that those who consider themselves Americans be required to have respect for the flag? In this day and age, when it seems that perversion is accepted and morality a taboo, perhap this small mandate for freedom is not asking too much.

I urge my colleague to vote no on H.R. 2978 and urge the House of Representatives to allow a vote on a constitutional amendment as soon as possible in order to once and for all overturn the Texas versus Johnson decision.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes and 15 seconds to the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, the bill, H.R. 2978, makes it a crime to burn, mutilate, deface, or trample upon any American flag. The offense is punishable by a fine of up to $100,000, up to a year in prison, or both. The bill responds to the Supreme Court's June 21 decision in Texas versus Johnson by amending the current Federal flag protection statute, 18 U.S.C. 700. The bill punishes any physical destruction of the flag, without regard to the political message of the offender.

The bill restores protection for American flags without the need for a constitutional amendment.

The bill does not, as some are claiming, overturn the Supreme Court decision in Texas versus Johnson. Rather, the bill amends the current Federal flag statute to rectify the constitutional defect identified by the Supreme Court in the Texas case. This is a proper way of responding to a Supreme Court decision holding a statute unconstitutional: You rewrite the statute to meet the Supreme Court's objections.

The Supreme Court has not said we cannot protect the flag. The Supreme Court has merely said we cannot protect the flag by a statute that focuses on expressive intent. So we have stripped out the unconstitutional elements of the current Federal law and made it independent of the message a flag burner would convey.

The bill was developed by the chairman, Mr. BROOKS, and myself, in response to issues raised in testimony at 5 days of hearings held by the Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights. We had before us a number of statutory proposals similar to the one before the House today, but we developed this bill to address all the issues raised in the hearings.

Some witnesses, and some members of the subcommittee, complained that we should not punish veterans or others who burn a soiled or torn flag to dispose of it, so we included a provision creating an exception for soiled or torn flags. Veterans' groups, for example, can continue their ceremonies for disposal of old and worn-out flags.

Some witnesses complained that the law would be challenged on constitutional grounds, leading to delay, so we included a provision for expedited Supreme Court review.

Some witnesses, including the administration's witness, complained that the definition of "flag" in the current law was too broad and would result in criminal penalties for someone who burned a napkin or magazine that had on it a picture of a flag. So we amended the definition of flag to limit it to actual flags, of any size, intended for display.

In other words, the bill responds to each and every major objection raised at the hearings. The bill is the product of the hearings.

This bill is not intended as a suppression of expression. It is not the bill's purpose to preserve the flag as a symbol of national unity. No law is needed for that.

The flag is worthy of protection not because it represents any one idea, and the bill does not seek to protect the flag as the embodiment of any one idea. As the testimony of the witnesses indicated, the flag means different things to different people. The bill does not foster any one view of what the flag represents. The bill recognizes the deeply held feelings of a vast majority of citizens for the physical integrity of all American flags, and reflects the Government's power to honor those sentiments through the protection of venerated objects, such as gravesites or historic buildings.

Let me address one detail that has caused far too much unnecessary confusion. It has been said that the bill, by allowing veterans and others to dispose of worn or soiled flags, creates a loophole, a so-called soiled flag defense that would allow someone intentionally to soil a flag first, and then burn it with impunity. Mr. Speaker, this is absurd. There is nothing in the bill to suggest this interpretation. The bill expressly prohibits defacing the flag. Defacing includes soiling. Anybody who intentionally soils a flag defaces it, so anybody who tries to defend himself by saying he soiled the flag before he burned it, that person has convicted himself. The so-called intentionally soiled flag defense does not exist under this bill.

Mr. Speaker, my personal belief is we should have neither a statute nor a constitutional amendment. But if we must do anything, I believe the statute is the preferable approach. I believe this statute is constitutional.

Mr. Speaker, each of us took an oath of office to protect the Constitution.

If we want to be faithful to that oath, we all should vote for this bill.

If this bill doesn't pass, almost surely we will soon be voting on a constitutional amendment, and it will pass.

If the Senate approves it, and the State legislatures ratify it, for the first time in American's history the key provision of the Bill of Rights will have been repudiated.

We will be less free.

And the question will be, what loss will be next—freedom of religion? Freedom of press? Freedom of association?

Will Congress' response to every unpopular Supreme Court decision be an amendment to the Constitution?

Mr. Speaker, your Judiciary Committee, under the leadership of Chairman JACK BROOKS, understands the slippery slope we are on.

We offer a carefully drawn, constitutionally sound statute, a law that will protect the flag with no threat to our precious right of free speech.

Mr. Speaker, the responsible vote is aye. This modest statute will do the job.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLPE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to engage the gentleman from California in a brief colloquy.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman to address one detail that caused some confusion. It has been said that the bill, by allowing veterans and others to dispose of worn and soiled flags creates a loophole, so-called the soiled-flag defense, to allow someone to first intentionally soil the flag and then burn it with impunity. I would like to ask the gentleman from California if that is correct.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, that is not correct, I advise the gentleman from Michigan. There is nothing in the bill to suggest such an interpretation. The bill expressly prohibits defacing the flag, and defacing includes soiling. Anybody who intentionally soils the flag defaces it; so anybody who tries to defend himself by saying he had soiled the flag before he burned it, that person could be convicted by his own admission.

□ 1310

The so-called intentionally soiled flag defense does not exist under this bill.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for that clarification.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, on June 21, 1989, the Supreme Court issued a decision that shocked, saddened, angered, and confused millions of citizens all across our Nation. That controversial decision, of course, was Texas v. Johnson, 57 U.S.L.W. 4770. In that case, the Supreme Court held that the burning of an American flag was an exercise of symbolic free speech protected by the first amendment and not subject to criminal sanction under a Texas criminal law.

Unfortunately, the rationale of the Court in that narrow 5–4 decision went far beyond the language of the specific Texas statute in question. In fact, the holding was broad that it essentially means that any Federal or State law aimed at protecting or preserving our flag as a symbol of our nationhood or national unity will always be outweighted by the individual's right of free expression. In other words, the Government's interest in preserving the symbolic and patriotic value of the flag is necessarily related to limiting free expression and that governmental interest cannot withstand exacting or strict scrutiny under the first amendment.

The legislation we consider today—the Flag Protection Act of 1989 (H.R. 2978)—is a rewrite of an existing Federal criminal law that imposes penalties for the desecration of the American flag. (18 U.S.C. 700.) The bill reflects an attempt to confine punishable violations to the physical destruction or defacement of the flag. It does so by removing from the existing law subjective language that appears aimed at limiting expressive conduct.

The premise of H.R. 2978 is that a new law, solely protecting the physical integrity of the flag—a content-neutral law—would still be constitutional under Texas versus Johnson. Unfortunately, that is not a viewpoint that is shared by many constitutional experts that have analyzed this issue. How can such laws be viewed as content-neutral when their implicit purpose is patriotic in nature—to preserve the flag as a national symbol.

We all want effective legal protections in force that will protect the flag of the United States against desecration and disrespect. However, many of us have serious and legitimate reservations as to whether that goal can be achieved through the enactment of H.R. 2978 or a similar statute.

Mr. Speaker, I spoke earlier of the feelings of the American people, and this has truly been brought home to me by conversations with many of my constituents in the 21st Congressional District of New York. One of these constituents, 13-year-old Kenneth DeVito of Peekskill, NY, is an excellent example of how this controversy has energized many Americans. Ken spent his summer vacation collecting over 4,000 signatures on a petition against flag desecration. That petition has been forwarded to the White House and he recently received a letter of gratitude from President Bush. In addition, Ken conducted a poster contest and examples are on view today in this Speaker's lobby. Clearly, we are talking about an issue that has touched the hearts and minds of Americans of all ages.

Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I want to share two other thoughts with my colleagues. First, the consideration of an issue of this magnitude, under suspension of the rules, is inappropriate. This is a subject on which the Members of this House should have a far greater opportunity for debate and to offer amendments. Second, and even more important, the Members of the House should be afforded the same opportunity that will be granted to the Members of the other body in October. That is, to vote on a constitutional amendment which would overturn the Supreme Court's decision. The only certain way to overturn Texas versus Johnson and to ensure the integrity of our flag as a national symbol is through the adoption of an amendment to our Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, I will vote today for this statute. I urge you to announce now that this House will by a certain date have the opportunity to vote on a proposed constitutional amendment.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PETRI].

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, though some disagree, it seems there is a consensus in the country and in the Congress to do something, in the wake of the Supreme Court decision in Texas versus Johnson, to protect the flag. The question is, "What?" The choices are amending the Constitution or amending current statutes, Federal or State.

A number of distinguished scholars of constitutional law have testified on this issue. Some have argued that we can protect the flag by statute. Others have claimed that a constitutional amendment would be necessary, whether or not they would find it desirable.

I see no reason why we can't prohibit certain concrete, well-defined actions if we do it in all cases and without any reference to the motivations behind those actions.

We do that all the time. For example, we prohibit tampering with mailboxes even where they are owned by individual citizens. Therefore I believe we can protect the flag by amending the Federal law to remove any reference to motivation. On June 28, I introduced H.R. 2778 to do that. It was identical to the Biden amendment that passed the Senate on June 23, and the bill before us is an amended version of it.

There are ample indications in Justice Brennan's majority opinion that the Biden-Petri approach will be found constitutional. But we cannot know that until we test it.

Basically, Mr. Speaker, we face two roads to the common goal. One, a constitutional amendment, is long and difficult and risks tampering with the first amendment, for which I see no consensus anywhere. The other, the statutory approach before us, is quick and easy, contains no threat to the first amendment, and has virtually no downside. Why not try the easy road first and see if it gets us where we want to go? That, it seems to me, is the sensible thing to do. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to vote for the bill before us.

Mr. Speaker, I know this is an emotional and difficult issue for all Members. One woman called my office and moved my staff to tears telling how her husband had fought and died for our country and its flag, and that flag had draped his coffin, and she could not imagine how we could allow anyone to desecrate the symbol for which so many had given their lives.

Another woman came up to me at office hours and said she had supported me for years, but her husband had fought and died to protect the freedom of all Americans to burn our flag if they so wished, and she could not imagine why I would undermine the freedom of speech for which the flag stands. I would say today to both these women that we must try to protect both the physical integrity of our flag and the freedoms for which it stands. Our best chance to do that is by passing this bill.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. DOUGLAS].

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, what we are about to do is both a sham and a shame. It is a sham because the statute, 2978, that is what we are going to be voting on, permits a dirty flag defense. Despite what the subcommittee chair said, this is not a defiled flag. This is a soiled flag. It is a flag I picked up after the Fourth of July parade in Amherst, NH, and this is genuine. We were debating what to do about flags like this.

Under this bill, and I read the exact words,

"Any conduct you can dispose of a soiled flag," so I can take a lighter and dispose of a soiled flag. It was said you cannot defile the flag. That is wrong. I offered an amendment to permit Members to put in this State, a prohibition against defiling the flag. That was voted down. What we really should be doing is voting on a constitutional amendment. The reason we are not is because the folks who run this place do not want a vote on the constitutional amendment. They are the ones who will have to explain to the voters why, when a Gallup Poll taken by the American Legion in August, showed that 70 percent of the American people know that we can amend the Constitution to protect the flag, without—and I repeat—without infringing on first amendment liberties, support a constitutional amendment.

The veterans' groups supposedly do not support a constitutional amendment unanimously. They do, all but one group. The American Legion, with 3 million members, has written to every Member of this body saying, "Vote no on 2978." The American Legion has also presented to the President 1 million petitions. They are coming in at a rate of 60,000 a day, and it is said nobody cares anymore.

Sixty thousand people a day are signing petitions to the American Legion, asking for a vote "yes" on a constitutional amendment.

However, the game is serious. The gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS] was quoted this morning, the USA Today, as saying:

> This statute gives Members cover. They can tell the American Legion, "Look, we are protecting the flag."

It is a sham. The gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS] knows it, I know it, every Member in this room knows it. This is the Flag Burners' Protection Act of 1989. We cannot offer amendments. We cannot put in the word "defile." We cannot strike out the second sentence that creates that dissent. That is why we ought to vote "no" on suspending the rules, and let Members come back and do this thing right.

The majority of Americans would like to see the American flag protected by a constitutional amendment. A recent poll conducted by the Gallup Organization revealed that two-thirds, 66 percent of the Nation said that, if asked, they would sign a petition asking for a constitutional amendment to make flag burning illegal.

The poll, commissioned by the American Legion, was conducted by the Gallup Organization of Princeton, NJ. This was not a poll conducted of American Legion members, but a national random sample of individuals age 18 and older living in the continental United States. The survey was conducted by telephone over a 30-day period.

Completed during July 1989, the sample was controlled for age, sex, and region to match 1980 U.S. census data. A three call-back system was used to guarantee the representativeness of the sample.

The poll showed that, for the most part, Americans were not pleased with the recent U.S. Supreme Court decision that ruled that flag burning, even though offensive, was protected under the free speech guarantee of the first amendment. Six-tenths of the respondents interviewed said that they disagreed with the Supreme Court ruling.

When asked how they felt when they first learned of the Supreme Court ruling concerning burning the American flag, the majority said that they were angry/upset, 48 percent, or disappointed, 24 percent. Only 9 percent said that they thought it was a good ruling.

In further support of the flag, almost two-thirds, 64 percent, of the respondents said that they think a constitutional amendment should be enacted following Federal and State governments to make flag burning illegal. Less than three-tenths, 27 percent of the respondents thought that such a constitutional amendment would place their freedom of speech rights in jeopardy.

SUMMARY.—AMERICAN LEGION FLAG AMENDMENT PETITION DRIVE

The American Legion was the first organization to announce a campaign for a constitutional amendment to prohibit physical desecration of the United States Flag, shortly after it began a positive protest of the Supreme Court decision on June 21, 1989.

The Legion's 16,000 Posts were notified, sample petition forms prepared and distributed, and community plans organized to collect signatures. Petitions began to come into American Legion Headquarters in early August and have steadily increased in the last few weeks—from daily increments of 20,000 signatures a day to 45,000—then 60,000 signatures daily.

While the totals shown below represent the number of signatures actually counted as of September 6, 1989, a conservative estimate of the actual number of signatures on hand in Indianapolis is well over one million.

The tabulating staff has been increased and is currently running three days behind in counting and tabulating petitions and signatures by state and Congressional district where possible. The promotion management company handling the tabulation of the petitions says the extraordinary response far exceeds its own industry accepted fulfillment planning curves.

The American Legion petition drive will continue for as long as it takes to achieve protection of the flag by means of a constitutional amendment.

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
Washington, DC, August 29, 1989.

Dear Representative: The American Legion is convinced that the only sure way to protect the U.S. flag from desecration is ratification of a constitutional amendment. We believe that the June 21 Supreme Court decision could be used as the basis, in any future court ruling, to declare the pending bill (H.R. 2978) unconstitutional. We, therefore, urge you to vote against the bill.

In a Gallup Poll completed three weeks ago about two-thirds of those interviewed stated their support for an amendment. Therefore, your vote against H.R. 2978 would be in line with public opinion on this issue.

Some opponents of our position have argued that there should be no "tampering" with the Constitution, while others have expressed concern that the amendment process is a laborious one. There's no doubt that the amendment process was envisioned by those who drafted the Constitution—a document that has been officially modified 26 times. In fact, there are several proposed amendments even now pending in Congress. Although amendment ratification is a somewhat complex procedure, it was appropriately designed that way. It would certainly be unfortunate if any congressional member opposed a flag amendment for that reason. It would be even more unfortunate if American citizens and their elected state representatives were effectively denied the opportunity to participate in this undertaking because of any House failure to vote on an amendment.

Amendment opponents have also argued that ratification would lead to restriction of First Amendment freedoms. We disagree, and the American public shares our view. Other results of the survey noted above show that 70 percent of the polled group believe that a flag protection amendment would not place their freedom of speech in jeopardy.

In view of these facts and on behalf of our three million members whose opinions on this issue are shared by a large majority of Americans, I urge you to vote against H.R. 2978 and to demand a House vote on a proposed constitutional amendment to protect the U.S. flag from desecration.

Sincerely,

H.F. "SPARKY" GIERKE,
National Commander.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY].

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of this bill. I am one of the cosponsors of the constitutional amendment to prevent the physical desecration of the flag, but I will support this bill because Speaker FOLEY has assured me that we will get a vote on the constitutional amendment in the House later this year.

This measure does represent an attempt to correct the terrible Supreme Court ruling this summer, and I hope this bill will be successful. I recognize that Members disagree on the best way to protect the flag and I commend the Judiciary Committee for bringing this bill to the floor so quickly.

I still have doubts that we can do the job by statute, but this is a step in the right direction and I will vote for it.

I should also point out that the veterans organizations are split on how to best correct the problem. The American Legion, VFW and AMVETS favor the constitutional amendment, while other groups support the statute.

The bottom line for veterans is that we take steps to guarantee protection of the American flag from desecration. I support the bill today and I want to again thank the Speaker for his commitment to allow a vote on the constitutional amendment.

□ 1320

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I will reluctantly vote "yes" on this bill even though we would probably be better off with no bill at all compared to this flawed legislation that does nothing but further cloud the issue.

I will vote for it because Speaker FOLEY has promised the Members of this House that if this bill passes he will guarantee that a constitutional amendment prohibiting desecration of our flag will be brought to a vote on the floor of the House before we adjourn this year.

Mr. Speaker, I know that in my district, over the Labor Day recess, my constituents were more interested in the flag amendment than any other issue. Some of you came back saying you heard more interest in the war on drugs. But you are making a big mistake if you think the flag issue is dead, or that you can bury it with this smokescreen of a bill.

I know that you all got a letter from Sparky Gierke, National Commander of the American Legion. I had the honor of holding a press conference a week ago with Commander Gierke, along with the Legion National Auxiliary, Senator DOLE, Senator WARNER, and the gentleman from New Hampshire, CHUCK DOUGLAS. We told reporters what you all know by now, that according to a gallup poll, two-thirds of those questioned support a constitutional amendment.

And 70 percent believe such an amendment would not endanger their freedom of speech. But many of you are lawyers. You already know that, but you also know there are already many things you cannot do under the first amendment. You cannot yell fire in a crowded theater, you cannot libel, and you cannot slander.

No right, even those protected by the Constitution, is absolute.

Some Members are posing as dedicated defenders of the Constitution. Those are the Members who are saying such an amendment would trivialize the Bill of Rights. For the life of me I could not remember such concern when the equal rights amendment was being promoted. Those same people also forget that the amendment process is a complex one, requiring two-thirds of the Congress and three-fourths of the States. That's why there are only 26 amendments, and that's why frivolous proposals rarely, if ever, get ratified.

I'll tell you who will love this bill—Gregory Johnson and all the other Marxist youth brigade malcontents. And I'll tell you what they'll love about it. They'll love section 2, lines 12 to 14: "This subsection does not prohibit any conduct consisting of the disposal of a flag when it has become worn or soiled." It actually legalizes desecration of our flag.

You do not have to be a genius to know what's going to happen. Gregory Johnson will hold a press conference on the Supreme Court steps, smear some dirt and grease across an American flag, and then burn it.

And furthermore, if the U.S. Supreme Court struck down the Texas law last June, what make's anyone think they won't strike this one down, too,

That's why Commander Gierke said his American Legion is convinced that the only sure way to protect the American flag is ratification of a constitutional amendment.

Mr. Speaker, as I said before, you have promised to give this House an opportunity to vote on a constitutional amendment to prohibit desecration of our flag if this bill passes. Mr. Speaker, I would do anything to get that chance.

That is why I say let us go ahead and vote for this bill, but let us also press on for the constitutional amendment that two-thirds of the American people want to ratify.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman form Michigan [Mr. SCHUETTE].

Mr. SCHUETTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 2978.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that today we would have an opportunity to vote for a constitutional amendment to correct the decision of the U.S. Supreme Court. Unfortunately, the Democratic leadership of the House has made it clear that we will not have that opportunity today.

Recluctantly, I will vote against this bill on suspension, and I ask my colleagues to do the same. If we can mount at least a third of us against the bill, then we will have the opportunity of sending a message to the Democratic leadership saying, "Please bring the constitutional amendment to the floor of the House as a bill."

I think that the intellectual difficulty of correcting this decision by statute can be illustrated by a questioning technique or a process I followed with one of the witnesses advocating the corrective measure, being a statute, Professor Tribe of Harvard University.

I asked the Professor this:

Sir, in 1962 the U.S. Supreme Court threw out voluntary prayer in public schools in America by interpreting the first amendment of the Constitution as saying that school prayer is a violation of that amendment in that it imposes a religion.

I said,

Can we correct that decision by a statute?

No, we need a constitutional amendment to do that.

How about the decision in the early 1980's whereby another decision of the U.S. Supreme Court interpreting the first amendment said that we can no longer post the Ten Commandments, the basis of Western Civilization, on the walls in the public schools of America, because in doing so it resulted in the imposition of a religion in violation of the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States? Can we correct that decision by statute?

Oh, no, you need a constitutional amendment to correct that.

How about the decision of 1988 which said, again in the U.S. Supreme Court, that we may not have a law in the States of America requiring equal treatment of the theory of creation along with evolution, because in doing so it is a violation of the first amendment? Can we correct that by a statute?

No, you need a constitutional amendment.

Professor Tribe, your reasoning is defective. We need a constitutional amendment to correct the decision relating to protecting the flag. Anything less is nothing more than a delay in correcting the problem.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] a member of the committee.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2978. H.R. 2978 is quite similar in substance to a bill which I wrote, H.R. 2855. Indeed, many portions of H.R. 2855 have been incorporated in H.R. 2978.

I would like to explain why I wrote that measure and why I support H.R. 2978.

Let me say at the outset that I disagree with the majority opinion in Texas versus Johnson.

The basis of the Court's decision was that the first amendment protects speech or expression, even if, or, indeed, especially if, that speech or expression is specifically intended to offend others.

I do not disagree with that principle, so long as it is properly applied, and so long as the distinction between expressive and nonexpressive conduct is properly drawn.

My disagreement with the majority opinion in the Johnson case is a lawyerly one: in my view, the Constitution, and the Court's own precedents, did not compel a conclusion that Gregory Lee Johnson's conviction for burning the U.S. flag was based on a determination to punish him for speech or expression, rather than for conduct.

I agree with Justice Stevens' dissenting opinion, in which he argued that whatever message Johnson intended to convey was irrelevant to the case.

In Stevens' view, Johnson was prosecuted for conduct—burning the flag—and results—seriously offending others by that conduct—and not for expression. His conviction should not have been thrown out.

However, while I disagree with the Court's decision, I understand it, and I believe we can restore protection to the flag by simple statutory changes. We do this by reading, and heeding, the Court decisions, not by denouncing them.

A constitutional amendment is not needed, nor is it wise. In 200 years, we have not found it necessary to amend the Bill of Rights a single time. Moreover, amending the Constitution should be the option of last resort, not a first response.

If we amended the Constitution every time we have a major political, social, or economic issue before us, the Constitution would quickly grow to several hundred pages. More importantly, it would no longer be the Constitution of broad fundamental principles that we have today.

Statutory change is, however, absolutely essential. Present Federal law punishes conduct that is designed to "cast contempt" on the flag. This virtually requires that the Government prove expression as an element of the offense—a feature that almost certainly is fatal to the constitutionality of the law.

I firmly believe we can cure this defect, and restore protection to the flag by a very few simple changes to the flag protection law which are contained in H.R. 2978.

One, the bill deletes the language requiring that the flag desecrator show contempt for the flag. Conduct which is destructive of the flag is made punishable, but without regard to any message that the desecrator wished to convey by his actions.

Second, H.R. 2978 deletes the adverb "publicly" and the verb "defiles," both of which might be interpreted to suggest an intention to punish expression.

Finally, H.R. 2855 makes an exception to these offenses for conduct which consists of the disposal of a flag which is no longer usable.

In an earlier flag desecration case, Justice White wrote:

> * * * the United States has created its own flag, as it may. The flag is national property, and the Nation may regulate those who would make, imitate, sell, possess, or use it.

As Justice White suggested, we have the right as a nation to establish a national flag, and we have done so. Surely the right to establish that flag carries with it the right to protect it from physicial attack. And surely our right to so protect it is not so limited and circumscribed that we as a nation must stand by impotently and tolerate the burning or other mutilation of our flag.

H.R. 2978 is a good bill, one that will protect our flag as our national symbol. I urge your support for the bill.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask, how much time remains on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KOSTMAYER). The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER] has 5 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] has 7½ minutes remaining.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time to me, and I rise in support of H.R. 2978.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to express my support of congressional action which would utimately lead to the protection of the flag of the United States of America. No Supreme Court decision since the infamous Dred Scott decision of 1857 has caused the spontaneous outpouring of indignation that the Supreme Court's Texas v. Johnson (57 USLW 4770) decision has evoked.

We all understand that freedom of speech and political expression is one of our Nation's most cherished rights. However, just as the late Supreme Court Justice, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr., once stated: "Freedom of speech does not give anyone the right to cry fire in a crowded theater," likewise, freedom of political expression should not give anyone the right to incite our Nation by slapping the face of millions of our veterans, both living and dead, who sacrificed their lives on battlefields at home and abroad so that our Nation may be made and kept free.

Our veterans are not alone in their indignation over the Johnson decision. The American people, in patriotic cries of protest, have called for congressional action. Most Americans cherish our flag, too many have fought and died for it. We cannot and should not turn a deaf ear to their cries of protest and the base of principles on which their protest stands.

Chief Justice William Rehnquist, who has joined by Justice Sandra Day O'Connor in his dissenting opinion in Johnson, stated:

> Throughout more than 200 years of our history, our flag has come to be the visible symbol embodying our Nation. Millions and millions of Americans regard it with an almost mystical reverence regardless of what sort of social, political or philosophical beliefs they may have. I cannot agree that the first amendment invalidates the Federal law and the laws of 48 of the 50 States, which make criminal the public burning of the flag.

Mr. Speaker, my offices in Washington and in the 22d Congressional District of New York have now received hundreds of letters and calls urging Congress to take steps toward a constitutional amendment protecting the American flag from wanton destruction and ingracious desecration. While I choose to support a full fledged amendment, I rise now to express my support of any measure which would provide a sure legal protection for "Old Glory." The provisions of H.R. 2978 are an intent to confine punishable violations to the physical destruction or desecration of the flag. However, I do recognize that there are serious, legitimate reservations about whether that goal can be achieved by way or enactment of H.R. 2978.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues in the conciliatory tradition of the House of Representatives, to agree on the most effective means of halting the desecration without ever compromising the American flag's rightful protection.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER].

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member rises in support for H.R. 2978 although he believes the prospects are high that the legislation will eventually be found to be unconstitutional. Also, several Members have raised important arguments that the legislation is flawed, especially as to the adequacy of the definition of what constitutes a "desecration of the flag." This Member will, nevertheless, vote for it as a temporary, if constitutionally flawed, effort to deter the burning or desecration of the flag until a constitutional amendment to protect the flag is adopted.

The distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. CAMPBELL], among other legal scholars, has previously explained in an excellent, scholarly fashion, as he undoubtedly will in this debate, why he believes a constitutional amendment is a highly desirable step, even as it places one necessary and acceptable exception to the first amendment; this Member associates himself with his position on the desirability of such a carefully drafted constitutional amendment. It is for that reason that I have cosponsored and do support legislation to put before the State legislatures a proposed constitutional amendment. This Member is willing to vote for the statutory approach embodied in H.R. 2978 only because the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] has indicated in this debate that our distinguished Speaker, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FOLEY], has assured him that the House will be given an opportunity later this year to vote on a constitutional amendment to protect the flag.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER], a distinguished member of the committee.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2978, the Flag Protection Act of 1989, which has been favorably reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

What we are considering here today is useful legislation. The Supreme Court has spoken in Texas versus Johnson. The Judiciary Committee looked at the present Federal statute and we could have either repealed it or corrected it to comply with the Supreme Court decision. We chose to make the present law conform to the Supreme Court ruling.

There are some people who support an amendment to the Constitution or are misled into believing that a constitutional amendment is the only answer to the Supreme Court decision and that it is an option which will prevail in the Congress. A constitutional amendment, however, is not going to win congressional approval. Thus, H.R. 2978 is the only viable means we have today to protect the physical integrity of the American flag.

There are some veterans organizations and others who still will favor an amendment to the Constitution as the only way of responding to the decision issued by a conservative, Republican Supreme Court. However, most of the Nation's press and media are strongly opposed to a proposed constitutional amendment which will tamper with the first amendment.

Can we be absolutely certain that the Flag Protection Act of 1989 is contitutional? I cannot give such an assurance. The Judiciary Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights heard mixed testimony and a division of opinion from noted legal and constitutional scholars on the constitutionality of the proposed statute.

If the Court reviews the amended Federal statute and rules it unconstitutional, then we should simply repeal it and do nothing further. We should not divert time to consider any proposed amendment to the Constitution which has no possibility of passing the Congress.

Today, however, we are making a legislative correction to the present Federal statute to make it conform to the Supreme Court decision and to serve as a model which State legislatures may elect to follow.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2978.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

First, Mr. Speaker, let me commend Chairman BROOKS and my subcommittee chairman Mr. EDWARDS for the prompt and responsive action they have taken on this highly emotional matter. Chairman EDWARDS quickly convened hearings so that we might discuss how to heal the wounds the Supreme Court's flag decision wrought and examine ways to protect our flag without weakening our Constitution.

We had at those hearings a compilation of witnesses that through their expert and impassioned testimony provided solid arguments on all aspects of potential remedies to the Court's decision, and I salute Chairman EDWARDS and Chairman BROOKS for their leadership and abilities that have allowed us to respond to the American people's demand for action. But, I must admit that I am disappointed that we are here today to consider a statute as opposed to a constitutional amendment to protect our flag.

I am disappointed and I am fearful that this is not the proper course of action.

A constitutional amendment protecting against desecration of our flag would strengthen our first amendment by making a single exception to the rule. All acts of speech would continue unfettered, except for the single, vulgar act of flag desecration. If two-thirds of both Houses of Congress approve this amendment, and three-quarters of our States concur, then we will honor our flag while protecting, and indeed, strengthening our Constitution. Taking statutory action I fear generates the potential for constitutional catastrophe in the future.

Putting aside the probability that the Supreme Court will see this proposal as simply a quick way to usurp an earlier decision and strike this law down, my greatest fear is that by statutorily attempting to outlaw something that the Court has determined is an act of free speech we run the grave risk of setting a precedent by which the U.S. Congress can chip away at and ultimately obliterate the first amendment to the Constitution. If the Supreme Court were to hold this law constitutional, what would stop future Congresses from statutorily outlawing other forms of unpopular political dissent?

If the Court were to allow this Congress to outlaw, by statute, something that it has already said is an act of free speech, then what protections are there to prevent a full-blown congressional assault on the first amendment? If this statutory effort succeeds, might we not be providing a blueprint by which future Congresses can bypass the Supreme Court, stifle dissent, outlay distasteful forms of speech, and diminish, if not eliminate the protections of the first amendment?

I support efforts to protect our flag, but I wish we were here working to protect Old Glory by constitutional amendment, rather than running the risk of setting a potentially dangerous statutory precedent.

□ 1330

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SYNAR].

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, I understand the desire of many who want to prohibit the burning or other desecration of the American flag. I do believe it is possible to protect this symbol by passing this statute and not taking the unnecessary step to amending the Constitution.

I will vote for the statute because I believe it is the appropriate constitutional response to the Supreme Court decision. This is the only way to balance the potential conflict between protection of a symbol and protection of the democratic principle of free speech.

The vast majority of Americans always will respect the flag and do not need a constitutional amendment to teach them that respect. The incidence of flag burning and desecration is so small that it is measured in years. For the very few persons who show disrespect for the flag, we should not give them such the aura of importance by amending the first amendment for the first time in 200 years.

I appreciate the strong feelings all of us have for the American flag, particularly those who have fought to defend our country. The statute I will support today does not denigrate that service nor the American flag.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. STAGGERS].

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Flag Protection Act of 1989 and urge my colleagues to join me in defending this Nation's most revered symbol of freedom—the American flag. Also, I would like to congratulate Chairman BROOKS and subcommittee Chairman EDWARDS for their fine work in putting together a bill that will protect the American flag from physical harm and pass constitutional muster.

However, by passing H.R. 2978 we will be addressing only half the problem. Another crime against the integrity of the American flag is the fact that many American flags are made not by the American worker, but by foreign workers on foreign shores. Every foreign-made American flag that comes into this country constitutes an assault on our sacred national banner. Imported American flags have come into this country with motorcycles and other images, superimposed violating our flag code. Until we ban the importation of foreign-made American flags we will not be fully protecting the integrity of the American flag.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN].

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] for yielding this time to me and, Mr. Speaker, the Federal law of the statute on the books today was a bill I introduced in 1968, and it became law. We debated it fully on the floor of the House, it passed overwhelmingly, went to the Senate and was signed into law by the President. The publisher of Hustler magazine was convicted under that act for wearing a flag as a diaper, and he was fined.

However, Mr. Speaker, now the Supreme Court has spoken. I favor a constitutional amendment, but I shall vote for this bill because I cannot stand any desecration of the American flag.

LISTEN TO OUR FLAG SPEAK TO US

Today I don't feel as proud as I used to. People are burning me and desecrating me, with the permission of the highest Court in the land. My blood flows from my stars and stripes every time a match flame touches me.

I am not just a piece of cloth, I am the soul of America. I am what you stand for, one nation under God, indivisible with liberty and justice for all.

I am proud to lead your parades, proud to be with you in battle and in peace. I am happy as I flutter in the breeze, but I am saddened when I am lowered at half-mast.

And when they wrap me around the casket of your dead son, father, brother or sister, my red, white and blue become my arms and my stars become my eyes. I hold them close in loving care and my tears are real for they died so that I may continue to wave over the land of the free and home of the brave.

I hope you stop letting me be burned or trampled upon because I am your flag, the flag of the United States of America.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS].

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, first let me express my appreciation and commendation to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] and the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS] for taking such a deliberative approach to this matter. When the Supreme Court decision was first handed down in Texas versus Johnson, the furor in Congress was such that a constitutional amendment could have been rammed through. The American people have demonstrated since that time that they do not want to tamper with the Constitution. They like it fine just as it is.

Mr. Speaker, there has been no epidemic of flag burning since Texas versus Johnson. My sense is that the best thing that we in Congress can do is nothing.

Mr. Speaker, we do not need a constitutional amendment. We do not need a special statute. What we need is more faith and belief in the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. Let us maintain that faith, and we will be protecting the flag of the United States and the Republic for which it stands.

Mr. Speaker, the bill before us, H.R. 2978, is one of several unnecessary, if not dangerous, proposed responses to the Supreme Court ruling in the Texas versus Johnson flag desecration case. I oppose H.R. 2978, and urge my colleagues to think about the questions that have been raised over the past months concerning various ways to tamper with the Supreme Court decision.

We in Congress appear to have narrowed the debate. We talk as if we were presented with two options: either a statutory measure or a constitutional amendment to counteract the decision. I suggest, however, that a third option, no action, would be most in keeping with the values embodied by the flag and the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of the United States.

Like many of my constituents and people across the country, I am disturbed by the image of flag burning evoked in the discussion of Texas versus Johnson, as it challenges some of my deepest, most personal convictions about this country. But the Supreme Court decision provoked in me a passionate feeling of pride, for it affirmed the basic principles that so uniquely define our Nation.

What makes America such a great democracy is that we do not silence the political expression of even those whose views we find most offensive. That is what the Supreme Court ruled when it affirmed the highest court of Texas in overturning a Texas statute which convicted Gregory Lee Johnson of flag desecration, in a decision firmly grounded in judicial precedent.

First amendment protection not only applies to conduct, but it applies to conduct relating to the use of the flag. If we were to pass a constitutional amendment to counteract this ruling, we would be taking the unprecedented, and I believe shameful step of weakening the Bill of Rights.

Proponents of statutory measures tout bills such as H.R. 2978 as a method of prohibiting flag descration while avoiding the drastic procedure of changing the Constitution. However, while statutory measures may be less direct than a constitutional amendment in limiting the rights of free expression, they would nevertheless open up dangerous avenues for the suppression of this fundamental freedom.

Yet the exact intent for enacting statutory measures such as H.R. 2978 remains unclear. Some proponents of statutory prohibition of flag burning have argued that this approach would not challenge the Texas versus Johnson ruling if the measure simply pertains to physical desecration and does not contain language concerning the message the flag desecrator would be attempting to convey. On the other hand, numerous legal scholars—including both proponents and opponents of the Court's ruling—have asserted that the statutory prohibition necessarily would be related to Government interest in suppressing free expression, and would be found in conflict with the Texas versus Johnson ruling.

The debate during the House Judiciary Committee consideration of H.R. 2978 underscores the fact that we are moving forward with this legislation without having clearly defined its goal. Ten Members of Congress, in the additional views of the report to accompany this bill, asserted they voted in favor of the measure "to show support for protecting the flag," while maintaining at the same time that "a statute purporting to protect the flag would be unconstitutional"

If the intent of H.R. 2978 is purely to ensure that protection of the physicial entity of the flag, then it seems we are wasting a lot of time. There is no epidemic of flag burning in this country, nor has the Supreme Court ruling prompted a new wave of antiflag behavior. I question the assumption that the American people are clamoring for Congress to pass laws it believes are unconstitutional.

If the intent of H.R. 2978 is to counteract the Supreme Court decision in Texas versus Johnson affirming the right to express political views through conduct relating to use of the flag, then we should call a spade a spade, acknowledge the potential repressive ramifications of the bill, and vote it down.

I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on H.R. 2978.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN].

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Speaker, I am a veteran and an opponent of flag burning. But I am opposed to this bill and proposed constitutional amendment because they go against the meaning of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

The Constitution says that Congress shall pass no law restricting free political expression. No law!

Why do you suppose the Founders felt it necessary to draft such a guarantee? To protect "popular" expressions of political opinion? Of course not. By definition, "popular" political expressions need no protection. Only unpopular expressions are ever so controversial that they run the risk of being stifled.

But stifling such expressions—no matter how outrageous or repugnant they may be—is a limitation of freedom, a requirement of orthodoxy of thought that the Founders felt was far more dangerous to a free democracy.

Never was this stated better than in a Court decision guaranteeing the right of a controversial and repugnant group to march through a town that was almost universally hostile to them.

In that decision, the Court held:

There is no such thing as a false idea. However pernicious an opinion may seem, we depend for its correction not on the conscience of judges and juries but on the competition of other ideas.

That's how I feel about the flag. The vast majority of Americans who love the flag don't need to be protected from the thoughts of those who don't.

Americans do need to be protected, however, from any law in which the state defines which political expressions are permissible and which ones aren't.

The flag, which I love, is beautiful not only for its colors and its field of stars and stripes: it is beautiful because it symbolizes our constitutional freedoms—including the free exercise of political expression—even if some jerk wants to bring ridicule on himself by reviling the flag itself.

Some of my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, feel that passing this bill or a constitutional amendment is necessary to show patriotism and the strength of American democracy.

I disagree. And I call my colleagues attention to the experience of James H. Warner, a United States Marine aviator who was a prisoner of war in North Vietnam.

One day, Jim Warner's North Vietnamese interrogator confronted him with a photograph of American war protestors burning an American flag.

"There" sneered the interrogator, "people in your country protest your cause. That proves you are wrong."

"No," Warner replied, that proves that I am right. In my country we are not afraid of freedom."

There it is—the very element that makes this country, this Government and its Constitution so special. We love freedom, and because we do, we tolerate dissent, however repugnant; that makes us different from all other nations, and that is why I, as one Member of Congress, will vote against this legislation and any of the proposed constitutional amendments.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY].

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, it is with a heavy heart that I rise in opposition to H.R. 2978, a bill to legislate the illegality of flag burning. My disagreement should not in any way be misconstrued as questioning the liberal credentials of my liberal friends who advocate this procedure as a means of foreclosing more drastic action. The great respect I hold for the chairman of the subcommittee, Congressman DON EDWARDS, is well known in this body. Members like Mr. EDWARDS and others of us who deeply believe in the soundness of the special properties embedded in the Bill of Rights, and who reverently praise the Founding Fathers for enacting them—find ourselves hard pressed to defend and preserve those liberties against the dangerous assault launched by forces driven by a misguided perception of their patriotic duty. The chaotic circumstance in which we find ourselves is caused by the emotional response of an unthinking public in demanding reversal of the Supreme Court's flag burning decision.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that I can oppose this bill without impugning the motives of the sponsors and without calling into a question my own commitment to freedom and liberty. I happen to believe that the public situation is much calmer now than it was immediately following the Court's decision and I don't think this Congress should in a state of the hysteria or otherwise take any action to restrict the freedom of speech.

Further, I find it very difficult to rationalize that the issue of flag burning as a form of political dissent, can be legitimately divorced from the right of free speech. No matter how much anger and hostility it arouses, burning a flag to make a statement, to express dissatisfaction, perhaps excessive in nature—sometimes even misguided—represents the very essence of the meaning of the first amendment. Mr. Speaker, let's revisit that amendment. Just by chance some in this House may not have read it or at least may not understand its significance. It reads: "Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech." Freedom of speech, religion and assembly were placed first because they were the first and foremost concerns confronting the 13 Colonies. That amendment does not say, as this bill does, that defacing the flag must be excluded from any definition of free speech, it says Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech.

Fear that extremists who vehemently oppose the desecration of the flag will violently desecrate the Constitution is not sufficient rationale to support this legislation.

I ask my colleagues to vote "no" on this bill.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the bill pending before the House.

Mr. Speaker, last June outrage sounded out against the Supreme Court when it announced its decision in Texas versus Johnson. The issue of protecting our Nation's flag is one which is unsettling to American people.

Why?

Because the flag is more than cloth and color. It is a symbol of our Nation.

It is such an important symbol that brave men and women have laid down their lives to protect it.

I take you back to a fire base in Vietnam in 1969. Dr. Larry Rogers of Jonesboro, AR, was at that fire base when it came under heavy mortar attack.

He remembers that the flag pole was held in place by rock. A mortar round landed near the pole and the flag began to fall. A young soldier ran forward to keep it upright.

He was hit by an incoming round and killed. Another soldier was wounded when he undertook the same mission.

Dr. Rogers said the memory of those two soldiers came rushing back the day he heard about the Supreme Court's ruling in the Texas versus Johnson case.

The ruling was wrong, Dr. Rogers said, not only because of how it abuses the flag of our Nation, but what it meant for those two soldiers and the sacrifice they made on that day in Vietnam.

My constituents support action to reverse the Supreme Court decision. They want the flag of our country protected and that they do not see its desecration as a legitimate exercises of free speech.

About 70 percent of the thousands of people responding to a recent constituent survey told me they want to see the flag protected from acts of vandalism by way of a constitutional amendment.

They believe, as I do, that the flag is more than cloth and color; and that it deserves protection. Desecration of the American flag threatens our freedom, challenges our strength, and tramples upon the sensitivities of patriotic Americans.

It is imperative that we right the wrong. The Supreme Court went too far in its decision; a decision which has literally made combat veterans cry.

I recognize and my constituents recognize that free speech is a precious right, but limits have already been placed on this right—the ban on crying fire in a crowded theater, causing panic and injury, for example.

I believe that protecting our flag would cause no erosion of free speech in this country.

The men and women of our Armed Forces have fought and died to protect the flag and what it stands for. Now, it's time for those of us in Congress to act.

If adequate protection can be afforded to the flag by passage of a statute, that certainly is the fastest way to resolve the issue. But, if a statute will not suffice, then we will push the amendment. One way or the other the flag will be afforded protection.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI].

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, while I think the constitutional amendment is probably one that has to be passed someday, I rise in support of the bill.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ACKERMAN].

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SKAGGS].

Mr. SKAGGS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 2978, the Flag Protection Act of 1989, and ask permission to revise and extend my remarks.

The central question here—and the question the Supreme Court would probably ask in determining the constitutionality of the bill—is why Congress would pass this bill. As the Court expressed it in the second element of the four-part O'Brien test for evaluating attempts to regulate expression, the question of constitutionality turns in part on whether the bill furthers "an important or substantial governmental interest."

I have listened to the debate here today and read the committee's report without finding an answer to this question. So I would like to ask the distinguished chairman who is managing the bill: What is the governmental interest in protecting the physical integrity of the American flag in all circumstances—even, for example, when someone burns a flag in the privacy of his own home, with no witness and no publicity?

The closest thing to an expression of a governmental interest I can find in the committee's report is the following:

H.R. 2978 * * * recognizes the diverse and deeply held feelings of the vast majority of citizens for the flag, and reflects the government's power to honor those sentiments through the protection of a venerated object.* * *

This bill would honor the sentiments of the vast majority by criminalizing the behavior of the minority who are expressing different sentiments. And that is, and should be, unconstitutional.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VISCLOSKY].

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, I come to the floor of the House today to register my disgust for the act of burning the American flag, and to support H.R. 2978, which would again make such an act illegal.

The Stars and Stripes long ago heralded the first practical test of the idea that people should govern themselves. Through civil and foreign war, economic suffering, and political challenge to the ideals of the Nation, our Constitution survived, and the flag flew to symbolize the success of the American experiment. Now, the ideal of self-government is firmly established and advancing through the world. The partisans of monarchy and aristocracy have nearly been vanquished, and dictators, proletarian, and otherwise, are watching their people rise up. In this country, few and despised are the citizens who challenge our ideals by desecrating our flag.

Unfortunately, two such men have come to national prominence in this regard. One urged Americans to step on Old Glory. Instead, they filled the steps of the Art Institute of Chicago in patriotic protest. The other burned a flag several years ago in Texas to call attention to his political cause. No one paid attention to his cause, though many people expressed their revulsion at his action. Long after his claim to public awareness and contempt had lapsed, a Supreme Court decision put him back in the spotlight.

The Court warned the Nation that the laws protecting us from such men conflicted with the constitutional right of free speech. Today, we vote on whether it is possible to adapt that law, to maintain both the sacred meaning of our Constitution and the physical integrity of our flag. I say it is not only possible, but necessary. The authors of H.R. 2978 have balanced these two paramount concerns and crafted a bill that protects the flag as the symbol of the contract from which we derive our sacred rights.

The benefits of dealing with the situation by law rather than by constitutional amendment are many. First, the amendatory process is long and tedious. I want a law to protect the flag immediately. Second, a statutory solution would not sully the Constitution with references to flag burners, tramplers, and other members of the far fringes of our society. The Constitution is an elegant document which outlines American political ideals. Flag burners may seek such a prominent place in our society, but I will not concede it to them.

The overriding majority of Americans respect the flag. A law to protect the flag will meet vast approval, and I sincerely doubt it will be invoked on more than a handful of occasions in our lifetime.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. APPLEGATE].

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the bill although I am a cosponsor of a constitutional amendment and I hope that this is the direction we eventually get to. Although I think the bill is weak, and I think it will ultimately be ruled as unconstitutional, it is the only game in town. The weaknesses, the real reasons for the bill, are only partially addressed. I think it says, "knowingly mutilate, deface, burn or trample upon." These are physical violations.

However, Mr. Speaker, what this does not address is desecration of the flag which protects the sanctity of the flag. Webster's dictionary says that "desecrate" means to violate the sanctity, to treat irreverently or contemptuously (the flag of the United States in the instance) and anyone who does that should be dealt with harshly.

Mr. Speaker, I do support the bill, and I also want to commend the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] for getting a commitment from the Speaker of the House of Representatives saying that we will have a hearing and vote on the constitutional amendment before the end of the year.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KLECZKA].

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, the American flag represents our democratic values. Love for this special object has inspired a majority of the people to protect it by law. Forty-eight States and the Federal Government have enacted flag-protection laws. It came as no surprise, then, that the American people were outraged over the Supreme Court's recent decision in the Texas versus Johnson case, ruling that flag burning as a form of political protest is protected by the first amendment.

Today, the House has the opportunity to vote for passage of legislation, H.R. 2978, protecting the flag—and the ideas it represents. This bill would pass constitutional muster. In its previous flag decisions, the Supreme Court indicated it would favor content-neutral legislation protecting the flag without infringing upon freedom of expression. Conduct symbolizing a specific message, such as flag burning, is considered to be symbolic speech protected by the Constitution in most cases. However, in the 1968 case of United States versus O'Brien, the Court ruled that destroying a draft card was not protected speech. In that case, the Court rejected arguments that any conduct can be labeled speech whenever it has communicative intent. Since then the Court's symbolic speech decisions have permitted Government regulation of conduct with speech elements, as long as the regulation is content-neutral. Under such circumstances the Government's purpose must not be suppression of free expression.

H.R. 2978 complies with these guidelines by removing language now in the Federal flag statute penalizing individuals for "casting contempt" on the flag by mutilating, defacing, burning, or trampling on it. The contempt wording strikes at the heart of "intent," which has a communicative element protected by the first amendment.

Many groups have demanded the Constitution be amended to protect the flag. But it's noteworthy that some veterans' groups support a statutory solution to the flag-protection issue. For instance, the Vietnam Veterans of America [VVA] urges a vote in favor of H.R. 2978. The Disabled Veterans of America [DVA] and Paralyzed Veterans of America [PVA] support statutory action to rectify this problem as well. I agree with these men and women who have placed their lives on the line for the ideas embodied in our flag.

It would not be responsible to open our Bill of Rights and Constitution to tampering over this one issue. I wholeheartedly concur with the VVA, whose recent newsletter on this subject said a constitutional amendment "could very well curb in a substantial way our society's fundamental rights of free speech."

Freedom of speech and expression—even repugnant acts like flag desecration—is vital to preserving a democracy. Most Americans would agree that the point of punishing someone for desecrating the flag cannot be to censor the views of the mutilator. The point of a flag protection law is to give force to our Nation's shared belief that the flag is worthy of special protection. Since flag desecration dishonors the individual rather than individual freedom, our democratic principles in the Constitution must not be diluted through constitutional amendment.

For these reasons, I am voting for passage of H.R. 2978, and urge my colleagues to do likewise.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CAMPBELL] who is batting cleanup for us.

Mr. CAMPBELL of California. Mr. Speaker, burning the flag is a form of expression. Accordingly, it is protected by the first amendment. Whether we choose to take the word "defile" out of the statute or not cannot change that reality.

Indeed, nothing that we say can characterize and change the first amendment expression of the person who speaks. How we characterize it does not change it. It is free expression. Accordingly, what we propose to do today is unconstitutional.

Now the Supreme Court has told us that occasionally we may have an incidental infringement upon free speech to achieve a neutral goal where the impingement upon free speech is no more than necessary and only incidental to that neutral goal.

□ 1340

The case most often cited is United States versus O'Brien in which a draft card burner was prosecuted, and even though his burning of the draft card was a form of free speech, the neutral goal was to have a draft card in the possession of every young man.

What is the neutral goal of this statute? It is not that there be a flag in the possession of every citizen, because we do not mandate that a flag be in the possession of every citizen. No, the goal of this statute is quite clear. It is to prevent flag burning. It is to prevent speech. Accordingly, it is unconstitutional.

To preserve the flag is an important goal, one which I happen to share and for which I support a constitutional amendment. And I recognize that there are those who hold the first amendment so sacred that they would not adopt an amendment to the Constitution that in their view would lessen the first amendment, and I respect that point of view. I do not share it. I do not share it because among the full panoply of first amendment free speech rights that we have, taking away this one form will not infringe speech seriously, and it will gain for us one inviolable symbol for our country, one that I as a member of what is called the Vietnam generation sees so little of, so little respect for the symbols of our country. But I respect those who would not touch the Constitution. I simply ask them, if you believe as I do that burning the flag is a form of protected speech, do you not do more violence to the Constitution by passing this unconstitutional statute?

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the final minute.

Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Members that the bill that we are hoping to pass today is a constructive step forward. I think that it will be held constitutional. To provide that it has immediate consideration by the Supreme Court, we have provided in this bill the following provision:

If the question of the constitutionality of this section, under the first article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States, is properly presented in any case before a United States District Court, that court shall, if the Supreme Court of the United States has not previously ruled on that question, immediately certify that question to the Supreme Court. * * * The Supreme Court shall, if it has not previously ruled on that question, accept jurisdiction over the certified question and advance on the docket and expedite to the greatest extent possible the disposition of that question.

I think this provision ensures that if we have people out there who are still disposed to burn a flag somewhere, their case will go to a district court, it will immediately be certified, and it will go to the Supreme Court. In this way, we will get an expedited decision on whether the Justices do in their judgment believe, as they should, that this legislation is fully constitutional.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for support for the legislation.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I, like many Americans, was dismayed by the Supreme Court's June 21 decision that ruled that the first amendment protects those who burn the American flag. I am pleased that the House now has the opportunity to address this issue through H.R. 2978, the Flag Protection Act of 1989.

The American flag is more than a piece of cloth. It is the symbol worldwide for freedom and democracy. I served in the Navy, fighting for the values represented by our flag. For me and other veterans and for most Americans, burning the American flag is an affront to the fundamental values of this Nation. Our flag must be treated with respect and dignity.

H.R. 2978 is a decisive response to the Supreme Court's decision. Under this legislation, anyone who intentionally or maliciously desecrates the American flag will be fined or imprisoned for 1 year or both. Anyone who dishonors the flag is trampling on the values for which the flag stands and should be punished.

With passage of this legislation the Congress is sending the message that we will under no circumstances condone the desecration of the flag. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2978.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I am told that the study of the history and symbolism of the flag is called vexillology—but that is not because the issue we address today is especially vexing. At least it need not be.

I rise in support of the Flag Protection Act. It is most effective, the quickest and least complicated way to ensure that our national symbol is not desecrated.

This law is necessary, Mr. Speaker, because the flag is the symbol of national unity. We must all realize and remember just how important the flag is—for all of us. Those who would burn the flag should be punished—and under this bill they will be.

But before I get into the specifics of this legislation, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to share a little history with the House. One of our predecessors in this body—a man named Francis Hopkinson—designed the American flag we honor and defend today.

Hopkinson served in the Continental Congress of 1776 as a delegate from New Jersey. In 1777, seeking to symbolically sever the United States from Great Britain by removing the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew from the flag, Hopkinson replaced them with a flag of 13 red and white stripes and 13 white stars on a blue field. On June 14, 1777, his design was accepted by a resolution of Congress.

A gifted man, Francis Hopkinson was the first graduate of the College of Philadelphia—now the University of Pennsylvania—in 1757. He practiced law, wrote political satire, and even composed George Washington's favorite song, "Beneath a Weeping Willow's Shade." But his most lasting contribution was his design of the flag and the great seal of the United States of America.

But Mr. Speaker, this story, like so many others in this town, ends on a sad note. Francis Hopkinson never received the credit he was due for his design. In fact, when he asked for compensation—in the form of a quarter cask of wine—he was denied by the Continental Treasury Board—obviously the forerunner of today's Office of Management and Budget. Apparently even before Gramm-Rudman they had a hard time meeting budgetary constraints.

So if tempers flare when we discuss the flag; if temperatures rise when we debate how best to protect it, I hope people will forgive us. This House loves the flag, Mr. Speaker, not only because members like JACK BROOKS and SONNY MONTGOMERY fought for it overseas; and not only because every day we pledge ourselves to what it represents. Perhaps the reason we have a special fervor and a special devotion to the flag in this House because it was designed by one of our own.

Which brings us to the present, and the Flag Protection Act of 1989. There are those who look at this law and say wait—they say we have to go through the slower, more cumbersome, more solemn process of amending the Constitution. No fewer than 10,000 times over the past two centuries, members have stood on this floor and introduced constitutional amendments. As you know, Mr. Speaker, only 26 times have those amendments become part of the Constitution—and only 4 of those 26 were amendments designed to overrule the Supreme Court.

So if there is a clear and present danger—and we believe there is—let us address it now, with this clear and present solution. The simple fact is that there is no need to encumber our Constitution to defend our flag.

But let us remember that burning is not the only danger the flag faces. No, Francis Hopkins's broad stripes and bright stars are just as threatened by demagoguery as they are by desecration.

Perhaps unfortunately, there is no way to prevent politicians from wrapping themselves in the flag, or touring a flag factory, or even coopting the pledge of allegiance to the flag. That form of flag-abuse remains legal.

Those who would tear the flag apart—rip at the fabric that unites all of us as Americans—by pretending that our flag is somehow the exclusive province of one party or one politician, they too should be punished. Not with legal sanctions, as the flag-burners will now face, but with the moral force of every American—Republican and Democrat alike. Because while the flag-desecrators have gotten all of our attention, the flag-demagogues pose just as great a threat.

During the Civil War, demagogues sought political gain by pressing the President to remove from our flag the stars of the Southern States. They knew that such a move would be popular with the folks back home—and didn't care if it did violence to the Nation's long-term unity tha the flag is supposed to represent. Fortunately, President Abraham Lincoln knew that the flag was more enduring than even our most divisive conflict. And he kept the flag whole.

The threats to the flag are very different today. But it is up to us to follow Lincoln, and keep the flag whole.

And so, Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this bill. It is strong and sensible; prompt and pragmatic; reasonable and realistic. I know it is sufficient to end the desecration of our flag. I hope it is sufficient to end the demagoguery as well.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to H.R. 2978, the Flag Protection Act of 1989. I take this action because of the reverence I have for the flag and the freedoms it represents.

The House Judiciary Committee recently held hearings on this bill. In the committee report on H.R. 2978, the committee notes that during those hearings, several witnesses, including Members of Congress, constitutional law scholars, and decorated war veterans supported the Supreme Court decision. They argued that flag burning is a form of symbolic speech protected by the first amendment, and that flag burning poses no threat to a free nation; therefore, the court's decision in Texas versus Johnson should not be disturbed.

Mr. Speaker, while I would not, as a means of expressing my right to free speech burn the flag, I do agree with the Supreme Court's recent ruling in the Texas versus Johnson case. In that case, the Court held that "if there is a bedrock principle underlying the first amendment, it is that the Government may not prohibit the expression of an idea simply because society finds the idea itself offensive or disagreeable." The Court found that "we do not consecrate the flag by punishing its desecration, for in doing so we dilute the freedom that this cherished emblem represents."

The facts of the Johnson case are well known. During demonstrations at the Republican National Convention in 1984, Gregory Johnson, a member of the Revolutionary Communist Youth Brigade, was observed ripping down Old Glory from a local bank. While Mr. Johnson poured lighter fluid on the banner and set it afire, other protesters chanted "America, the red, white and blue, we spit on you." Johnson was arrested for violating Texas law prohibiting "desecration of a venerated object."

While I consider the acts of Johnson and his associates to be disgusting and disrespectful, I am consoled by the fact that, by adhering to the Court's decision, the American flag, and the ideas for which it stands—ideas of liberty and equality—will survive the mindless and puny assaults of men like Johnson.

In closing Mr. Speaker, let me say that I recognize many men and women have given their lives and their time for our country and the principles upon which it is founded. These sacrifices, I would suggest Mr. Speaker, have not been made on behalf of a piece of cloth; they were made on behalf of the freedoms that cloth represents. And, of all the freedoms our Nation holds dear, free speech is perhaps the most important. As the Court in Johnson found: "to courageous, self-reliant men, with confidence in the power of free and fearless reasoning applied through the processes of popular government, no danger flowing from speech can be deemed clear and present, unless the incidence of the evil apprehended is so imminent that it may befall before there is opportunity for full discussion. If there be time to expose through discussion the falsehood and fallacies, to avert the evil by the processes of education, the remedy to be applied is more speech, not enforced silence."

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the Flag Protection Act and the effort of the Judiciary Committee to respond sensibly to the Supreme Court's decision in the flag burning case.

The American flag is the most important symbol of our Nation. I served under its banner in two of our armed services and in two wars, and my son served under the flag in Vietnam. I love the flag and the country it symbolizes. I take a back seat to nobody in my desire to protect them both.

I will, therefore, proudly cast my vote for the Flag Protection Act today, which will clarify the law that makes it a crime to "knowingly mutilate, deface, burning or trample upon any flag of the United States."

I will not, however, support efforts to change the Constitution. The Bill of Rights and the first amendment, which protects our right of free speech and expression, have not been amended in 200 years, and they should not be.

Congress should not be stampeded by the acts of a nut in Texas and an inept or opportunistic prosecutor into changing our most sacred political document. Neither the protestor nor the prosecutor deserve the satisfaction and influence that would give them.

To me, the Ten Commandments and the ten amendments of the Bill of Rights are the most sacred documents ever written. I would not tamper with either of them. And I wouldn't trust this Congress or any group of modern politicians to improve either of them.

The Flag Protection Act deserves the support of Congress. I urge my colleagues to vote for it and resist any attempt to tamper with the Bill of Rights.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to express may views on an issue that is very important to most Americans: the protection of the American flag. Some of my colleagues feel that protecting the American flag can only be accomplished by a constitutional amendment. Others, however, feel that a statute would achieve the same goal.

I would prefer, if possible, to protect the flag by the enactment of a law rather than changing the Constitution. Many constitutional scholars have indicated that legislation, if drafted properly, would be upheld by the Supreme Court.

In over 200 years, there have been more than 2,500 proposed changes to the United States Constitution, and only 26 amendments were adopted. Fortunately, Americans have been very reluctant to change this framework for self-government. If we can write a statute to do the job of protecting the American flag from desecration, then there is no reason to change the Constitution.

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, as one of the bill's cosponsors, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2978, the Flag Protection Act. Our flag is the beacon of our freedoms. It is the most visible symbol of the spirit of our Constitution and our Nation. It is a symbol that warrants strong protections against those few who would deface it, and thereby attack all for which it stands.

We should protect our flag as the mighty and visible symbol of the triumph of the vision of our Nation's founders. It represents the virtues which we embody as a nation. It represents the vitality and growth which our democracy has nurtured. From 13 quarreling colonies to 50 united States, from fledgling Nation to military superpower, from a primitive agrarian economy to major industrial power, this flag has been our symbol.

The flag has represented the essence of our Nation. It unites millions of Americans from divergent backgrounds. It has been defended with the lost lives of those who have gone into battle on behalf of our Nation.

To allow the flag to be desecrated by the deranged few for whom the meaning and the essence of our symbols has been lost, is a travesty. It is something we cannot permit to occur.

Johnson, who burned the flag in the case which was taken to the Supreme Court, was one of those deranged few who feel prompted to desecrate our Nation's symbols. The Nation was justifiably outraged by his actions. The immediate rush to take protective measures was an expression of our true love for our flag and the complete dedication we have to the values and principles which it represents.

This statute can and should be enacted quickly. It provides the necessary protection for this symbol which we all hold dear, and it can be the law of the land without delay if this House acts today and we can secure the support of the other body and the President. Let there be no mistake about it. This legislation is a forceful and effective response to the Supreme Court's ruling. Without unnecessarily limiting freedoms, it does provide protection for our flag and thereby for the values for which it stands.

I am proud to be a cosponsor of this legislation. I urge all of my colleagues to join in support today.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the flag of the United States of America. I am outraged and angry at the Supreme Court decision that brings me to the floor of the House this afternoon to explain what all Americans should understand. The American flag is a national symbol, and as such, it's ownership is shared by every American.

I continue to support an amendment to the U.S. Constitution that would protect our flag from improper or profane abuse. The U.S. Constitution contains the rights which are, as Americans, determine to be unalienable to American citizenship. Just as the design of our flag has grown and changed to reflect the growth and change of its American owners, the Constitution was envisioned as amendable to reflect the growth and change of the United States and the rights which Americans consider unalienable.

All Americans have the right to know that their flag and the ideals for which it flies are equally protected. Americans have united, celebrated, fought and died under the Stars and Stripes of the flag. The flag belongs to the whole Nation, and nothing should be able to take that ownership away.

My vote of support for H.R. 2978 is a vote of support for protecting the American flag. However, I do not think that this legislation is the answer to protecting our rights as Americans, and I will not rest until those rights, and the flag that represents them, are protected together in the U.S. Constitution.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this bill and I would like to explain why. I share the disgust that so many have expressed with those who would desecrate the American flag. The flag symbolizes so much of what we hold sacred in this country. I can imagine little that would be tougher for a veteran who fought for this country than to see this cherished symbol defiled. I can imagine nothing sadder than a widow or mother viewing the flag-draped coffin of a loved one who gave his life in defense of our country. She, too, would not want to see this symbol defiled.

At the same time, however, we must remember that our flag stands for more than just pride in our country. It stands for a 200-year tradition of tolerance for political dissent. It stands for people with bitterly contrary viewpoints being able to air their differences without fear of reprisal. In short, it stands for freedom, and sometimes that means the freedom to do things that most of us find reprehensible.

In his majority opinion Justice Brennan states: "We are tempted to say, in fact, that the flag's deservedly cherished place in our community will be strengthened, not weakened by our holding today. Our decision is a reaffirmation of the principles of freedom and inclusiveness that the flag best reflects, and of the conviction that our tolerance of criticism such as—the flag burner in this case—is a sign and source of our strength. The way to preserve the flag's special role is not to punish those who feel differently about these matters. It is to persuade them that they are wrong. We do not consecrate the flag by punishing its desecration, for in doing so we dilute the freedom that this cherished emblem represents."

When I look at the recent events in China, I thank God we have the right to speak out against our Government without fear of persecution. I love the flag, but I have to ask myself, how can we condemn the Government of China for its repression of millions when we cannot tolerate the isolated actions of a single, petty protester who burns a flag?

Thomas Jefferson once said:

I tolerate with the utmost latitude the right of others to differ from me in opinion without imputing to them criminality. I know too well the weakness and uncertainty of human reason to wonder at its different results.

I cannot condone flag burning, but I also cannot support efforts to prohibit it. I fear that in the rush to condemn such behavior, we devalue one of the essential freedoms that makes America the greatest country in the world. There is no shortage of people who would defend the Bill of Rights in the easy cases. Today, I ask my colleagues to stand up with me in defending it in this difficult case as well.

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court's ruling earlier this summer saying that burning or desecrating the American flag is a valid act of poliical protest tore at the very fabric of one of our most important symbols of nationhood. This was a ruling which confused and frustrated so many across our land, including me.

The flag is such an important symbol of all that America stands for, that is vitally important that we in the Congress, along with those in State legislatures throughout the Nation, take the steps needed to preserve and protect our flag.

The best way to do this—and to do it right—is by amending the Constitution. The proposed Michel-Montgomery Amendment is straightforward and unambiguous: "The Congress and the States shall have the power to prohibit the act of desecration of the flag of the United States and to set civil and criminal penalties for that act."

Mr. Speaker, you have given your promise that the House will have the opportunity to vote on the Michel-Montgomery Amendment. I will support that amendment because I believe the flag deserves the highest level of support we can extend it.

But today we are presented with a bill which, it is said, will address the problem in the interim—before the process of amending the Constitution can run its full course.

My vote, therefore, in favor of H.R. 2978 today is a reflection of my deep belief that we must take every possible step to protect the flag—and that this is the first, not the final, step along that road. We need to rally around the flag today as boldly as our forebearers did, so that our actions today reflect positively their true faith and allegiance in years past.

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution before us to protect the integrity of the American flag. There is no issue more precious and dear to our hearts than the need to enact legislation swiftly into law to safeguard Old Glory.

I am gravely disappointed in the Supreme Court's decision earlier this year and I believe that most of the American public, and certainly the majority of residents of the Third District of Tennessee, agree that the Court must be reversed. While I am disappointed that we are not considering a constitutional amendment today, I believe that an act of Congress is urgently needed to redress the Court's ruling and for that reason I will support H.R. 2978 on passage.

It is my strong hope, however, that following enactment of this proposal the House will have the opportunity to adopt a constitutional amendment which I believe is a necessary and appropriate response to the Court's grievous decision.

Many Tennesseans have expressed to me their strong desire for timely congressional action to ensure that the American flag is cherished and protected. These are citizens who have defended the U.S. flag in times of war and citizens who believe in all that the flag symbolizes. I will support H.R. 2978 in the name of all these patriots and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, everybody wants to protect our country's flag from desecration. Everybody also wants to protect fundamental first amendment rights of expression. Today's flag bill, H.R. 2978, is the first attempt to achieve both of those worthy goals.

Some Members ask for a "yes" vote on the basis that, H.R. 2978 accomplishes both goals safely. Some ask us to vote "no" because it fails one or both of the goals. The bill obviously engenders very strong feelings.

At the time of the Supreme Court decision, I believed that the Court had erred. I don't think that a local ordinance prohibiting flag desecration steals essential rights of free speech of our citizens. They have lots of ways to express themselves. The specific right to desecrate the flag is not essential to freedom.

I prefer a constitutional amendment to remedy the error, although I agree that such an amendment must be carefully and specifically drawn so that, in the opinion of legal scholars, it will not broadly inhibit rights of free expression. That said, I have nothing against efforts to achieve the same end by law.

The Court will tell us soon enough whether the law is adequate to the goals cited earlier. If not, we can then pass an amendment. As a matter of fact, I would prefer that hearings and committee work go forward on an amendment while we await the inevitable challenge to the statute.

While I prefer an amendment, I don't think it is wise to vote against the statute. I will support it as one worthwhile step in the overall effort to protect our flag.

Mr. McCANDLESS. Mr. Speaker, on June 21, 1989, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that a Texas law prohibiting the desecration of the flag was unconstitutional. The 5 to 4 majority held the burning of the American flag by a protestor was a form of expression, designed to convey a political idea, and was therefore protected by the first amendment's guarantee of free speech.

While I have great respect for the Supreme Court, in my opinion, as a veteran, as a Member of Congress, and, most importantly, as an American, the majority of the Court was wrong.

In prior cases, the Court has ruled that not all forms of expression are protected by the Constitution. "The first amendment does not guarantee the right to employ every conceivable method of communication at all times and in all places."—Los Angeles City Council versus Taxpayers for Vincent—1984—. For example, obscenity, even if used in a political context, is not protected free speech and may be outlawed. Likewise, "fighting words,"—words that are "likely to provoke the average person to retaliation, and thereby cause a breach of the peace,"—are not protected by the Constitution. Nor is a sound truck going through a neighborhood at 3 a.m., giving a political speech, protected by the first amendment. To most Americans, the burning of the flag is no less offensive than obscenity; no less provocative than fighting words; and no less obtrusive than a sound truck in the middle of the night.

There are two possible congressional responses to the Supreme Court's ruling: one is by statute; and the second is by constitutional amendment. The legislation before us, H.R. 2978, proposes a statute.

During the 5 days of hearings before the Judiciary Committee, a number of constitutional scholars testified that a statute would be insufficient to overturn the Court's ruling. In addition, they expressed their grave concerns, about attempting to limit by statute something that has been ruled to be a constitutional right. I agree. We should not attempt to overrule a first amendment decision by statute. Passage of H.R. 2978 would establish the precedent of allowing Congress to repeal constitutional protections by statute. Such a precedent is abhorrent and an affront to the Bill of Rights. Consequently, I must vote against H.R. 2978.

If we are to reverse the Supreme Court's ruling and prohibit the desecration of the flag, Congress must adopt a constitutional amendment and send it to the States for ratification. I am a cosponsor of House Joint Resolution 350, which proposes the following amendment to the Constitution: "The Congress and the States shall have the power to prohibit the physical desecration of the flag of the United States." The proposed amendment would allow Congress and the legislatures of the individual States to outlaw the desecration of the flag. Prior to the Court's decision, Federal law and the laws of 48 States prohibited such acts.

Contrary to some of the statements made, House Joint Resolution 350 would not impose an intolerable limit on the right of free speech. While the amendment would allow the prohibition of a specific act, there are a multitude of alternative ways to express ideas and to convey dissent without resorting to the physical desecration of the flag.

I regret that the procedure used by the House leadership to bring H.R. 2978 before the House does not provide for the opportunity to amend the legislation, nor provide for the opportunity to have a vote on House Joint Resolution 350 or any other proposed constitutional amendment.

For each of us, the flag holds a special meaning. We take pride in our Nation's 200 years of freedom—a history that has never been equaled. The stars and stripes of the flag are symbolic of all we cherish—our history, our form of government, our country—and should be protected by the Constitution. Because H.R. 2978 does not provide that protection, and sets a dangerous precedent, it should be rejected.

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, few pronouncements have drawn such an angry response from Congress and the Nation as the recent Supreme Court ruling concerning flag burning. We have agreed for some time that freedom of expression does not include the right to falsely yell "fire" in a crowded theater; it does not permit me to attack another citizen, and certainly it should not include the right to desecrate the symbol of our Nation's freedoms—a symbol for which many Americans have given their lives. While I hold the Court in the highest regard, I found the Texas versus Johnson decision reprehensible.

In the wake of that decision, I sponsored many of the 38 bills which were introduced proposing that the Constitution be amended to prohibit desecration of our flag. I also endorsed additional bills suggesting a simple statute. Much as I would prefer the constitutional amendment approach as a final solution, I recognize that many members are resistant to changing the Constitution. It is my understanding that 4 days of hearings revealed a majority of constitutional scholars and other experts to believe that a statute alone would be insufficient to overturn the Court's decision. However, despite that fact, today we are considering legislation providing for a "content neutral" statute. Since it is the only opportunity we are being offered to express our commitment to protecting the flag, I feel I have no choice but to support this measure. To be blunt, it is better than nothing. Only time will tell if this measure is sufficient. Hopefully, the expedited review process provided for in this measure will provide a swift answer to the constitutional test. Again, I recognize that many of my colleagues on the committee point to this provision as a negative, believing that it will encourage the very activity we hope to prevent. However, I cannot in good conscience cast a vote against a measure designed to prevent desecration of our flag, even if flawed.

In summary, I support a constitutional amendment, and believe it is the best solution. Unfortunately, the committee did not choose to bring such an amendment to the floor. If the statute is found to be unconstitutional, a constitutional amendment will be our only recourse, and my support for that amendment will definitely be there.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, the flag is the symbol of everything for which this country stands.

But the Bill of Rights in general, and the first amendment in particular, are the substance of that for which this country stands.

It is foolish to preserve the symbol by damaging the substance, whether the damage is done by amending the first amendment, as some have proposed, or by seeking to circumvent it, as the pending bill, H.R. 2978, proposes. I urge a "no" vote on H.R. 2978. And I urge those who are pushing the constitutional amendment to reconsider that rash course.

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the intent of H.R. 2978 and will support it. I do, however, have some reservations about its enforcement prospects. Some legal authorities say that a constitutional amendment is necessary to enforce the protection of the flag.

I support this legislation as a step in the right direction toward addressing the Supreme Court decision in Texas versus Johnson. I am a cosponsor of House Joint Resolution 336, a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to the protection of the flag of the United States. I am hopeful that the House leadership will allow a vote on a constitutional amendment in this session.

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of legislation to protect the integrity of the U.S. flag. From the time we were children, most of us began our day pledging allegiance to this symbol of our Nation. As we grew into men and women, many Americans fought and some died to protect what our flag symbolizes. I don't believe you will find many in this country who do not revere the United States flag.

Still, actions have been taken against our flag in the past few years which have deeply offended the sensibilities of many of our countrymen. Our flag has been burned, trampled upon, and treated in other manners of disrespect. I do not believe this mistreatment should go unaddressed.

If we allow the flag to be desecrated, then we also allow a desecration of the sacrifices our people have made on behalf of our country as symbolized by our flag. In effect, we permit our national honor to be trampled upon as well.

Let us not forget that the U.S. flag has given us courage in times of war, both at home and in the trenches. As it holds a special place in our hearts and our history, so it must hold a special place in our future. Let us protect, and therefore preserve, the flag and everything it means to our proud people.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, as President Woodrow Wilson said in 1915, "The flag is the embodiment, not of sentiment, but of history. It represents the experiences made by men and women, the experiences of those who do and live under that flag." Indeed, for 210 years, the flag has been a constant in American life, representing our greatest triumphs and our deepest grief. From the six brave men who raised the flag at Iwo Jima in 1945 to 1989 when the American flag rested over the bodies of those young men killed in the explosion of the U.S.S. Iowa, the American flag has symbolized the ideals of freedom, equality, and opportunity upon which our Nation was built.

I was raised to love and respect the American flag. I can remember my excitement when Neil Armstrong placed the flag on the Moon in 1969. I felt proud to be an American. Unfortunately, with the Supreme Court's recent ruling, we can no longer guarantee that future generations understand the significance of this important national symbol. As you know, the recent Supreme Court ruling overturned flag desecration laws in 48 States. I joined the millions of Americans who were outraged by the decision. This is an insult to the many men and women who fought so hard to protect this powerful symbol of our Nation's honor.

Legislative action is necessary, and today this Chamber has the opportunity to take action. I support this legislative effort to construct a statute that will pass constitutional muster and strictly prohibit the desecration of our cherished flag. I am also a cosponsor of a bill introduced that would allow Congress to add an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the desecration of the American flag. I feel that in these tense and turbulent times, we must, more than ever, ensure that our Nation's most powerful symbol stands proud at all times.

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, we have an opportunity today to cast a vote on whether to make it a Federal crime to burn or deface the American flag.

The Supreme Court ruled that burning the American flag is an expression of free speech and is therefore protected by the first amendment right of freedom of speech.

My constituents are outraged by the Supreme Court ruling—I share their outrage.

H.R. 2978 is a statutory remedy and some argue that it is wholly inadequate. However, I believe this is a step in the right direction. I support the bill and will vote "aye" because we must make every effort to guarantee the protection of the American flag.

However, I believe the issue will not be fully resolved without amending the Constitution. I hope the Democratic leadership will give the full House the opportunity to vote on a constitutional amendment as well.

Mr. LIGHTFOOT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to H.R. 2978, the Flag Protection Act. The issue of protecting the flag is a matter which has stirred strong, even passionate, reactions and for good reason. What we are talking about here is the integrity and dignity of one our most enduring and precious symbols—the American flag. In considering this issue, I have come to the conclusion that the only way to really guarantee the preservation of the sanctity of the flag is through a constitutional amendment. Not for a moment do I question the patriotism or loyalty of those who oppose such an amendment and favor a statute. I am sure they have chosen the route they genuinely believe will be the most effective. I simply do not see it that way for two basic reasons.

First, I share my colleagues' belief that amending the Constitution is not a process to be taken lightly. Any deletions or additions to the Constitution require the most careful, thorough deliberations and should be done only in regard to matters of supreme national importance or beliefs. In my view, the flag is just such a matter. In this symbol is the embodiment of all that went into the creation of our Nation as we know it—the struggles and sacrifices, both large and small.

Second, I believe this legislation creates a clash between the legislative and judicial branches of government. The Supreme Court, the preeminent instrument of judicial review in this country, has stated that burning the flag is an expression of free speech protected by the constitution. Given that and the consensus that something must be done to ensure the flag is not desecrated, it makes sense that constitutional protection of the flag is needed. A statute flies directly in the face of the Supreme Court's interpretation of the constitution. An amendment clearly establishes, without question, the guidelines for treatment of the flag.

In my view, nothing less is acceptable and I strongly urge my colleagues to work for an amendment to the constitution to preserve and protect our flag.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 2978, the Flag Protection Act. This bill protects the American flag by statute only, thereby avoiding what I regard as unwise and imprudent constitutional modifications. H.R. 2978 punishes by means of stiff fines and jail sentences "whoever knowingly mutilates, defaces, burns, or tramples upon any flag of the United States * * *," and allows for the proper disposal of the flag when it has become worn or soiled through normal usage and the passage of time. The measure also provides a procedure for expedited Supreme Court review of the constitutionality of the new statute.

As a veteran of World War II, and as a Member of the House of Representatives, I am proud of the symbolism of the U.S. flag and support efforts to preserve its integrity. I am pleased to see the Congress respond so swiftly to the June 21 ruling by the Supreme Court in Texas versus Johnson striking down a Texas law prohibiting desecration of the U.S. flag. I believe this legislation will pass the constitutional test under the Supreme Court's opinion opening the door for a congressional statute focusing exclusively on the conduct rather than the expressive intent of the actor.

The American flag deserves every possible protection under the Constitution. I commend my colleagues for effectively taking action today to protect the flag, the greatest symbol of democracy and freedom known throughout the world.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 2978, the Flag Protection Act.

The goal of this legislation is both clear and one which enjoys strong support among my constituents and people across this country: to prevent the desecration of our Nation's proud symbol, the American flag. In fact, prior to the Supreme Court's decision in Texas versus Johnson, there was little debate or overt disagreement with existing statutes that prevented just such desecration.

Following the Supreme Court's ruling, the sentiment in our Nation to prevent the desecration of the flag remained strong, perhaps even grew. Where the rupture occurred, of course, is over the question of whether the flag should be protected by statute or via an amendment to the Constitution; and whether, if a statute would not pass muster with the Supreme Court, the Constitution should be amended at all. To a greater extent than is perhaps desirable, the debate has evolved into one of statute versus constitutional amendment.

For me, and for many other Mainers, the overriding objective is not solely to see a new amendment to the Constitution, but to see that the flag is duly and appropriately protected. If we can provide that protection by the least-intrusive statutory process, then I would view that as a wholly satisfactory solution.

I am aware that there are constitutional and legal experts who have declared that, effectively, no statute can meet the standard put forth by the Supreme Court. I am equally aware of two other points as well: first, that other constitutional and legal experts have vouched that a statute can work; and, second, that this world is littered with experts of every stripe who have been wrong.

So it is with these thoughts in mind that I vote in favor of the Flag Protection Act today. If, however, it does not pass successfully through the judicial review process, I hope the Congress will move swiftly to provide similar protection through a constitutional amendment.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 2978.

In a few days, our country will mark a most important bicentennial anniversary. Two hundred years ago, on September 25, 1789, the Congress of the United States completed final action on the first 10 amendments to the Constitution; and our Bill of Rights was sent to the States for ratification.

These amendments, statements which declare to the world that ours is a land of liberty, have become a document for the ages, providing us with the very foundation of our United Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I am troubled, deeply, by the sudden desire on the part of some to tamper with the Bill of Rights.

For two centuries, our Nation has grown and prospered and developed into the greatest democracy known to history. America has endured two wars involving the entire globe as well as several other killing conflicts.

And, we have done all these things and more without ever having a need to alter or amend our Bill of Rights.

Mr. Speaker, nothing has happened in recent times to justify changing a course of action that has served us so well for so long.

An individual of troubled heart and mind, and armed with a cigarette lighter, decided to burn an American flag. Mr. Speaker, while you and I and most Americans believe this fellow was a jerk, the United States of America certainly is able to overcome this assault without changing the most fundamental laws of our land.

Clearly, I oppose any plan to amend the Bill of Rights. I also oppose H.R. 2978.

For almost 200 years exactly, our Nation has needed neither a constitutional amendment nor a statute aimed at altering the very first amendment in our Bill of Rights. The plain truth is we still don't.

Mr. SCHUETTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to the flag-burning statute being considered by the House of Representatives. As one of the original sponsors of an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the physical desecration of the flag, I still firmly believe that an amendment is the best and only way to remedy this tragic situation. The statutory approach is a sham, a coverup, and it just won't fly.

The American flag is the unique symbol of freedom and liberty for people all over the world. I'm sure most of my colleagues in this body are in agreement with me on this.

This past weekend, I attended a celebration in St. John's, MI, where I was presented with a petition, containing over 3,000 signatures. The petition, Mr. Speaker, which is sponsored by a variety of veterans groups in my State of Michigan, stresses their strong support for an amendment to ban the physical desecration of the flag.

Although no one likes to see the flag desecrated, and most of us are in agreement on the need to do something about the situation, supporters of the statutory approach and proponents of an amendment diverge when it comes to determining the best way to protect the flag against desecration.

I believe we need an amendment for a variety of reasons. Just as the Supreme Court found the Texas statute to be unconstitutional, so they would do the same thing with a Federal statute. Many eminent scholars have testified that there is no way a statute could be drafted which would not again be declared unconstitutional by the Court.

A recent issue of the Congressional Quarterly also outlined several of the reasons why a statute would not work. They mentioned the 1968 United States versus O'Brien case in which the 7 to 1 majority held that "we cannot accept the view that an apparently limitless variety of conduct can be labeled 'speech' whenever the person engaging in the conduct intends thereby to express an idea." Mr. Speaker, I would contend that this "apparently limitless variety" could certainly refer to the burning of the flag.

The same case was used by the dean of the University of Chicago Law School, Professor Stone, to point out the fact that essential to the Court's ruling was their determination that when "speech and nonspeech elements are combined in the same course of conduct, a sufficiently important governmental interest in regulating the nonspeech element can justify incidental limitations on first amendment freedoms." I honestly think that the Government has a very important and even compelling interest in protecting the flag.

Judge Robert H. Bork, in his statement before the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights, offered an additional argument against the statutory approach. He said that if the Supreme Court strikes down a law, Congress cannot come right back with a legislative proposal specifically designed to overturn, not remedy, a Supreme Court decision. The very hearings at which he testified, before which I also testified on the need for an amendment, are themselves sufficient proof that Congress intends to pass a law designed simply to circumvent the intent of the Supreme Court when it handed down its decision.

Mr. Speaker, I do not support any infringement on each individual's free speech. Our first amendment supports freedom of speech. Even though the remarks by Joey Johnson are reprehensible to me, they are fully protected as speech, and I support his freedom to make them. It is when we step over the line from speech into conduct, conduct which is not necessary to the expression of one's views, that there should be a distinction.

Our flag is important to this country. Millions of veterans have fought and died so that our flag might wave over the land. Millions of peoples from other nations see in our flag the liberties and freedoms for which they yearn.

Mr. Speaker, if I believed that a statute would truly protect the flag, I would gladly support it. Unfortunately, a statute will not work, and in many cases could actually protect flag burners. Moreover, enactment of a statute will only delay action on a constitutional amendment, which is the only guarantee of protection for our flag. I hope and trust that the Members of the House of Representatives will soon have the opportunity to vote on legislation calling for a constitutional amendment to protect our flag.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KOSTMAYER). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2978, as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SENSENBRENNER) there were—yeas 6, nays 9.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5 of rule I and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 2978, the bill just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

REAUTHORIZATION OF SPEAKER'S CIVIC ACHIEVEMENT AWARD PROGRAM

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2358) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1990 and 1991 for the Civic Achievement Award Program in Honor of the Office of Speaker of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 2358

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(1) by striking out "and" after "September 30, 1987),"; and

(2) by inserting after "September 30, 1989" the following: ", and $1,033,785 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990".

Section 2(a)(4) of such joint resolution (2 U.S.C. 1002(a)(4)) is amended by striking out "may" and inserting in lieu thereof "shall".

SEC. 3. AWARDS FOR PROGRAM PARTICIPATION.

Paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of section 2(b) of such joint resolution (2 U.S.C. 1002(b)(1), (2) and (3)) are each amended by striking out "satisfy award standards" and inserting in lieu thereof "participate in the program".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GILLMOR] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY].

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

H.R. 2358, as amended, extends the authorization for the Civic Achievement Award Program for 1 year. The authorization for fiscal year 1990 is $1,033,785. The bill also makes minor adjustments relating to program element requirements and awards.

The Civic Achievement Award Program, which is conducted by the Close Up Foundation under the auspices of the Library of Congress, was established in 1987 to improve the level of civic literacy among fifth through eighth graders.

The program provides a powerful incentive for students to increase their civic knowledge and skills by enhancing knowledge of the history, government, geography and, economics of this country. Additionally, students are provided the opportunity to put those skills and knowledge to work on civic projects for the benefit of their communities.

Recent studies have shown, and I strongly believe, that the middle grades are the best and last chance to reach youngsters and instill in them a sense of community service.

In the 1988-89 field test year, approximately 23,000 students participated in the program, representing 800 classrooms nationwide. The 1990 authorization would permit 60,000 student participants in thousands of classrooms throughout the country.

The preparation of young Americans for leadership in the 21st century must begin now. And the efforts of the Civic Achievement Award Program in promoting civic awareness among elementary school students is a significant start.

Mr. GILLMOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2358, the reauthorization of the Speaker's Civic Achievement Award. The goal of this program is to increase civic awareness among our youth. I am a firm believer in increasing civic awareness not only among our youth but to people of all ages. By investing in our youth, hopefully we can perpetuate this awareness.

The members of our subcommittee made a careful study of this program and I would like to thank our members for their commitment not only to education but to fiscal responsibility as well.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the gentleman from Missouri and his staff for their outstanding commitment to education and their dedication to assuring the continuation of this fine program.

There exists a nationwide consensus about the need to strengthen the education of our young people. Reports document the appalling lack of understanding of basic government, geography, economics, and current events among school-aged children. There is a growing concern about our Nation's ability to be competitive in the global marketplace. Each of us is disheartened by the current number of dropouts, teen pregnancies, and the extent of drug abuse.

The Carnegie Council on Adolescent Development recently released a report which identifies the middle school years as a period of "extreme vulnerability." The study states that these years are "potentially society's most powerful force to recapture millions of youth adrift." The report also recommends that middle schools promote curricula which includes "cooperative learning * * * critical reasoning and service to the community."

In the past few months, we have also witnessed increased attention directed at providing incentives for voluntary community service. In another recent report, the children's defense fund applauds the resurgence of youth service, and emphasizes service opportunities for disadvantaged youths.

Mr. Speaker, the Civic Achievement Award Program [CAAP] was designed to address these concerns and these reports attest the program's methodology. CAAP is unique—it targets students in grades five through eight, teaches them basic facts, strengthens reading, writing, and analytical skills, and contains a community service project. This program has been admirably developed and conducted by the Close Up Foundation for the past 2 years on a pilot basis. Without exception the program has been enthusiastically received by students, parents, and educators. CAAP has clearly demonstrated its ability to work with students from diverse backgrounds to promote citizenship and community service through education.

This legislation will permit this exciting program to reach approximately 60,000 students throughout the country next year, more than doubling the number of participants involved. I should note that the bill authorizes a modest increase over the 2 previous years' funding level. The Close Up Foundation has expressed interest in seeking funding from the private sector to supplement Federal support of the program. I commend and encourage this approach. Whenever possible, we must encourage the creation of public-private partnerships to maximize the reach of the Federal dollar.

The foundation enjoys an excellent reputation for its ability to create such partnerships for another educational activity. A properly implemented and effective partnership with the private sector would extend this program's civic learning goals in a significant way. With CAAP, the economies of scale are staggering. For example, a private sector matching program would increase participation eightfold, allowing approximately 500,000 students to take part in CAAP this coming school year.

All of us can take pride in the fact that this 2-year-old congressional program has already begun to address critical education issues. I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this measure. Our action today assures the expansion of a highly successful and cost-effective program.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2358 to reauthorize the Speaker's Civil Achievement Award Program through fiscal year 1990. I would like to commend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST], for introducing this measure, as well as the chairman of the Committee on House Administration, Mr. ANNUNZIO, the ranking minority member, Mr. THOMAS and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY], for bringing this measure before the House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support the Civic Achievement Award Program. Established in 1987, this program promotes civic awareness among fifth through eighth grade students by promoting reading and research skills, enhancing knowledge of American history, geography and culture, and providing the opportunity for students to work on civic projects in their communities.

Though only 2 years old, the Civil Achievement Award Program has been extremely well received by both educators and students. Established through the Library of Congress and administered by the Close Up Foundation, in cooperation with the National Association of Elementary School Principals, the program has enjoyed the participation of approximately 25,000 elementary and middle schools in all 50 States. While we are unfortunately constrained from expanding the program to cover 1 million students as the Close Up Foundation had hoped, I understand that efforts are proceeding to seek supplemental funding from the private sector, and I would like to encourage and support this worthy endeavor.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, today the House is considering legislation that I wholeheartedly support. H.R. 2358 provides for a 1-year extension of a program of awards designed to recognize achievement in civic literacy by students in grades five through eight. This past year four schools from the First Congressional District in Nebraska which I represent are participating in the field test of the Civic Achievement Award Program. These schools include Northern Hill Elementary School in Norfolk, Osmond Public School in Osmond, Pilger Elementary School in Pilger, and St. Paul's Lutheran School in Utica, where this Member attended elementary school. This Member is particularly knowledgeable about the success of the program in the first of the listed schools as I presented these young Nebraskans with their awards at the conclusion of school this year. Their achievements and knowledge was most impressive.

This program is one of the Close Up Foundation's newest educational initiatives. It is administered by the Close Up Foundation in cooperation with the National Association of Elementary School Principals, and is coordinated by the Library of Congress. It was created to develop greater civic literacy and involvement among young people in these critical learning years. Under the program, annual awards are given to students, schools, and classes which develop and demonstrate civic knowledge and skills in the fields of American history, government, geography, economics, and current events.

The Close Up Foundation has earned a reputation for providing high school students across the country with a one-of-a-kind learning experience in Washington, DC. Since 1971, they have helped States and local communities organize thousands of students who come to our Nation's Capital for a 1-week program to observe our Government in action. Based on their vast experience and expertise, Close Up decided to expand their proven programs to our youngest citizens in grades five to eight.

Once again, Close Up has scored a tremendous success. I urge my colleagues to join with me in voting to extend for another year the authorization for the Civic Achievement Award Program which will help build a solid base for civic competence by motivating and inspiring these students to become better citizens.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2358, which reauthorizes the Civic Achievement Award Program for 1 year at $1 million, serving 60,000 students.

This program was developed by the Close Up Foundation, which efforts I have strongly supported since I came to Congress, and the program trust started in 1971. While I was at first skeptical that Close Up could design a program that would foster civic awareness among fifth through eighth graders, I am now sold on the program and what it has done for 25,000 young students.

I had supported Close Up's effort to expand the program to 1 million students in fiscal year 1990, but am prepared to support this compromise at a lower funding level.

There has been concern about the Library's involvement in the program and other questions some Members have which should be settled during and after a promised hearing by the House Administration Committee designed to look more closely at the program before authorizing substantive increases. I believe this was a good compromise, although I have absolute confidence in Close Up now and its work with the National Association of Elementary School Principals and the Library to design and administer a good program.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill. It's an exciting program. The students love it. So do the teachers and principals. This is a small amount of money that reaps an enormous return.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 2358, the bill just passed.

AMERICAN FOLKLIFE CENTER REAUTHORIZATION

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2346) to authorize appropriations for the American Folklife Center for fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 2346

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 8 of the American Folklife Preservation Act (20 U.S.C. 2107) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" after "1988,"; and

(2) by inserting after "1989" the following: ", $998,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, $1,050,100 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991, and $1,120,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1992".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GILLMOR] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY].

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2346 extends the authorization for the American Folklife Center for fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992.

The American Folklife Center was established at the Library of Congress in 1976 by the American Folklife Preservation Act, Public Law 94-201, with a charge to preserve and present the diverse folk cultural traditions within the United States.

I believe the American Folklife Center is a key documentary and archival resource that plays a crucial role in preserving important aspects of American culture.

Both the Congress and public are served by the Folklife Center. From African-American religious services in Georgia and Virginia, to Nevada ranching traditions, and Cambodian community traditions in Massachusetts towns; these projects have helped to conserve the rich variety of our Nation's folklife at the local level.

Significant among the Center's plans for its next authorization period will be its participation in the celebration on cultural pluralism in America and a field project, exhibit, and book on Italian-Americans in the American West.

In fiscal year 1990, the Center's authorization would be $998,000, which represents a $22,828 increase over the 1989 authorization, an increase of only 2.3 percent. The authorization for 1991 would be $1,050,100 and, for 1992, would be $1,120,000. This represents an increase of $52,100 and $69,900, respectively. These levels are sufficient to permit the funding of one GS-07 position in fiscal year 1990. The Center has operated for 13 years at modest funding levels and with a small staff—15, plus temporaries. This legislation appropriately accommodates the basic needs of the Folklife Center while remaining well within the budgetary constraints faced by all Federal agencies.

It is both appropriate and important for the Congress to encourage and support the activities of the American Folklife Center. In doing so we are contributing to a better understanding of the achievements and experiences of the people who have made this country what it is.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GILLMOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2346, authorizing appropriations for the American Folklife Center for fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992.

Established at the Library of Congress in 1976, the American Folklife Center functions to preserve and present the many cultural traditions we have within the United States, and has come to play an important role in the actual preservation of our American culture. The center itself seeks to document and preserve the many cultural influences that have fashioned our society and to bring those influences to the attention of our scholars, researchers, students, and the general public.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2346 is legislation that deserves our full support. With relatively modest increases in funding, the American Folklife Center can continue to serve our citizens by offering them diverse examples of our country's many cultures. I urge my colleagues to support this bill and help us carry on the important work of the American Folklife Center.

Mr. Speaker, having no further requests for time, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2346.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on House Administration be discharged from further consideration of the Senate bill (S. 1075) to authorize appropriations for the American Folklife Center for fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 1075

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 8 of the American Folklife Preservation Act (20 U.S.C. 2107) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" after "1988"; and

(2) by inserting after "1989" the following: ", $998,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, $1,050,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991, and $1,120,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1992".

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H.R. 2346) was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 2346, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

SENIOR EXECUTIVE SERVICE PERFORMANCE BOARD REVISION ACT

Mr. SIKORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2986) to amend title 5, United States Code, to clarify provisions relating to the composition of any performance review board making recommendations concerning performance awards for career appointees in the Senior Executive Service.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 2986

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 5384(c) of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking "(c)" and inserting "(c)(1)"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(2) Not less than a majority of the members of any review board referred to in paragraph (1) shall be career appointees whenever making recommendations under such paragraph with respect to a career appointee. The requirement of the preceding sentence shall not apply in any case in which the Office of Personnel Management determines that there exists an unsufficient number of career appointees available to comply with the requirement."

(b) Section 5381 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by inserting " 'career appointee' " before "and".

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KOSTMAYER). Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SIKORSKI] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. MORELLA] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SIKORSKI].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SIKORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous matter on H.R. 2986, the bill presently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIKORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2986 was introduced by Congresswoman MORELLA and myself in response to the discovery that Department of Housing and Urban Development [HUD] guidelines do not require performance review boards to consist of a majority of career senior executive members when the board makes performance award bonus recommendations for career executives.

Performance review boards, or PRB's, were created pursuant to the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978. According to that law, PRB's must consist of a majority of career senior executives as opposed to a majority of noncareer appointees when the board appraises the performance of a senior career executive. The results of an executive's performance appraisal forms the basis of that executive's performance award bonus.

Investigations by the Civil Service Subcommittee indicate that all agencies currently require PRB's to consist of a majority of career executives when making either performance appaisals or performance award recommendations—all agencies that is except for HUD. HUD has not required PRB's to consist of a career majority when the board makes bonus recommendations for career executives for at least the past year. It was a career senior executive who blew the whistle on the fraudulent activities of noncareer appointees at HUD and it's a troubling coincidence that HUD is the only agency which does not ensure that performance bonuses for career executives are decided by a board consisting of at least a majority of career people.

Left unchanged, this is contrary to the spirit if not the intent of the civil service law. Instead of instituting a bonus system which motivates and awards individuals for successful performance, HUD's actions threaten to politicize and void the award process.

Therefore, H.R. 2986 simply clarifies provisions in the Civil Service Reform Act by requiring agencies to ensure that performance review boards are composed of a majority of career appointees whenever making performance award recommendations for career senior executives. It should be noted that the provisions of the bill will not apply where the Office of Personnel Management determines that there exists an insufficient number of career appointees available to comply with the majority requirement.

It should also be noted that the Office of Personnel Management [OPM] opposes this bill as unnecessary. OPM recently issued proposed regulations which would mandate the same provisions as exist in H.R. 2986. Unfortunately, I believe and the subcommittee believes that the issuance of regulations will not provide a permanent solution, and one that would prohibit future OPM directors from revoking those regulations and once again permit agencies to engage in the type of activity we have seen at HUD. This is buttressed by the interpretation of OPM's general counsel of current civil service law and regulations which, in his opinion, do not require a career majority on performance review boards when making performance award recommendations.

I want to thank Mrs. MORELLA for joining me in a bipartisan effort to quickly address this issue, and I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2986 so that we may resolve this issue quickly.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I certainly commend the chairman of our Subcommittee on Civil Service for his leadership in this particular effort and for explaining what this bill is about to our constituencies and to the Members of this body.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2986. This bill was introduced in order to prevent agency heads from politicizing performance review boards when considering bonus awards for career senior executive service personnel.

This bill simply clarifies the Civil Service Reform Act to ensure that performance review boards include a majority of career civil service personnel whenever possible.

There has been a great deal of discussion this session about the waning of morale of those who serve our country as civil servants. I believe that H.R. 2986 will be a morale booster; it will give career civil servants the opportunity to help political appointees to determine the award of bonuses among senior executive personnel.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the chairman of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, Mr. FORD, and the ranking member, Mr. GILMAN, as well as the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. SIKORSKI, chairman of the Subcommittee on Civil Service for bringing H.R. 2986 to the floor so expeditiously and I urge our colleagues to support this measure.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2986, legislation that clarifies provisions in the Civil Service Reform Act by requiring agencies to ensure that Senior Executive Service [SES] performance review boards be composed of a majority of career appointees when making performance salary bonus recommendations for career senior executives. I commend the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SIKORSKI] and the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. MORELLA], for introducing this measure.

It only makes sense that our career officials need to be reviewed by their peers. If this cannot be the case then at least a majority of the review board should be considered peers of the individual being scrutinized.

While current authority exists for OPM to ensure that SES performance review boards be composed of a majority of career members of the SES, it appears there has been some problems in making it happen.

Accordingly, I am pleased to support H.R. 2986 and urge my colleagues to do so.

Mr. SIKORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I commend the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] and especially the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. MORELLA] for her leadership and vigilance in behalf of civil servants.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I strongly support H.R. 2986 and thank my colleagues Mr. SIKORSKI and Mrs. MORELLA for their work on this legislation.

H.R. 2986 assures equity for career executives. It says that Performance Review Boards [PRB], which make recommendations regarding performance awards of career appointees, must consist of a majority of career appointees. The purpose of this is to guarantee input by long-term career employees and to reduce the risk of politicizing the performance review process.

Up until recently there appeared to be no need for this legislation. We assumed that the current requirement was sufficient. Unfortunately HUD proved us wrong.

After a number of HUD career executives complained that performance awards for career members of the SES were given without peer review, we looked into it.

Guess what? HUD guidelines stated that "* * * the requirement to have more than one-half of the Board career members during the award phase is waived * * *" And the Office of Personnel Management agreed that there is no requirement to have a majority of career SES members when making a performance award recommendation.

H.R. 2986 clears up the confusion and sends a clear message to all Federal agencies—including HUD—and to the Office of Personnel Management: any Performance Review Board recommending awards to career SES employees must consist of a majority of career executives.

The intent of the Civil Service Reform Act is to give career employees a voice in management. It is ridiculous to think Congress gave career executives a voice in the appraisal process but silenced them when awarding bonuses.

Again, I praise the chairman of the Civil Service Subcommittee, Mr. SIKORSKI, and my friend and colleague Mrs. MORELLA, for their swift and thoughtful action. I urge my colleagues to set the record straight, and to vote in favor of H.R. 2986.

Mr. SIKORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, knowing that our colleagues will have 5 days to revise and extend their remarks on this bill, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SIKORSKI] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2986.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STOCK RAISING HOMESTEAD ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 737) to amend the Stock Raising Homestead Act to resolve certain problems regarding subsurface estates, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 737

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. MINERAL ENTRY UNDER STOCK RAISING HOMESTEAD ACT.

(a) MINERAL ENTRY UNDER THE STOCK RAISING HOMESTEAD ACT.—Section 9 of the Act of December 29, 1916 entitled "An Act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes" (39 Stat. 862; 43 U.S.C. 299) is amended by adding the following at the end thereof:

"(b) PROSPECTING; NOTICE OF INTENTION TO LOCATE; EXPLORATION, DEVELOPMENT, AND PRODUCTION.—

"(1) PROSPECTING; LOCATION OF CLAIMS.—Notwithstanding subsection (a), no person other than the surface owner may enter lands subject to this Act to prospect for minerals or to locate a claim under the mining laws of the United States on such lands without—

"(A) filing a notice of intention to locate a claim pursuant to paragraph (2); and

"(B) providing notice to the surface owner pursuant to paragraph (3).

Any person who has complied with paragraphs (2) and (3) with respect to any such lands may, during the authorized prospecting period, enter such lands to prospect for minerals, with minimal surface disruption, and to locate a mining claim on such lands. During such period no such person may construct any road, use any explosives, or use any mechanical earth moving equipment on such lands. With respect to any lands for which a notice is filed under paragraph (2), the term 'authorized prospecting period' means the period beginning ten days after notice is provided under paragraph (3) with respect to such lands and ending with the expiration of the sixty-day period referred to in paragraph (2).

"(2) NOTICE OF INTENTION TO LOCATE A CLAIM.—Any person seeking to prospect for minerals or to locate a mining claim on lands subject to this Act may file with the Secretary of the Interior a notice of intention to locate a claim on the lands concerned. The notice shall be in such form as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe. The notice shall contain the name and mailing address of the person filing the notice and a legal description of the lands to which the notice applies. The legal description shall be based on the public land survey or on such other description as is sufficient to permit the Secretary to record the notice on his land status records. Whenever any person has filed a notice under this paragraph with respect to any lands, during the sixty-day period following the date of such filing, no other person (including the surface owner) may—

"(A) file such a notice with respect to any portion of such lands;

"(B) locate a mining claim on any portion of such lands; or

"(C) acquire any interest in any portion of such lands pursuant to section 209 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976.

The Secretary may establish such fees as may be necessary to cover the administrative costs of processing notices filed under this paragraph.

"(3) NOTICE TO SURFACE OWNER.—Any person who has filed a notice of intention to locate a claim under paragraph (2) for any lands subject to this Act shall provide written notice by registered or certified mail to the surface owner (as evidenced by local tax records) of the lands covered by the notice under paragraph (2). The notice shall be provided at least ten days before entering such lands and shall contain each of the following:

"(A) A brief description of the proposed prospecting activities.

"(B) A map and legal description of the lands to be subject to prospecting.

"(C) The name, address, and phone number of the person managing such activities.

"(D) A statement of the dates on which such activities will take place.

"(4) ACREAGE LIMITATIONS.—The total acreage covered at any time by notices of intention to locate a claim under paragraph (2) filed by any person and by affiliates of such person may not exceed six thousand four hundred acres of lands subject to this Act in any one State and one thousand two hundred and eighty acres of such lands for a single surface owner. For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'affiliate' means, with respect to any person, any other person which controls, is controlled by, or is under common control with, such person.

"(5) MINERALS COVERED.—This subsection applies only to minerals not subject to disposition under the Mineral Leasing Act (30 U.S.C. 181 and following), the Geothermal Steam Act of 1970 (30 U.S.C. 100 and following), or the Act of July 31, 1947, commonly known as the Materials Act of 1947 (30 U.S.C. 601 and following).

"(c) MINERAL EXPLORATION, DEVELOPMENT AND PRODUCTION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding subsection (a) of this section, except for prospecting in accordance with subsection (b), no person may conduct any mineral exploration or development activities on lands subject to this Act without the consent of the surface owner thereof unless the Secretary has authorized the conduct of such activities under paragraph (2).

"(2) AUTHORIZED MINING OPERATIONS.—The Secretary may authorize a person to conduct mineral exploration and development activities on lands subject to this Act without the consent of the surface owner thereof only under the following conditions—

"(A) BOND.—Before the Secretary may authorize any person to conduct mineral exploration or development activities, the Secretary shall require such person to post a surety bond to be held by the United States, or to provide such other type of financial guarantee satisfactory to the Secretary to insure (i) reclamation of the surface, (ii) payment to the surface owner as compensation for damages to crops and tangible improvements of the surface owner, and (iii) compensation for loss of income by the surface owner due to loss or impairment of grazing, or other uses of the land by the surface owner, to the extent that reclamation required by the plan of operations would not permit such uses to continue at the level existing prior to the mineral exploration and development activities.

"(B) PLAN OF OPERATIONS.—Before the Secretary may authorize any person to conduct mineral exploration or development activities, the Secretary shall require such person to submit a plan of operations satisfactory to the Secretary and which complies with this subparagraph. The plan shall contain such terms and conditions as the Secretary determines necessary. The conditions shall include, at a minimum, procedures for (i) reclamation of the surface, (ii) minimization of damages to crops and tangible improvements of the surface owner, and (iii) minimization of disruption to grazing or other uses of the land by the surface owner. The plan shall provide for payment of a fee for the use of the surface lands. The fee shall be paid to the surface owner by the person submitting the plan of operations. The fee shall be paid in advance of any mineral exploration or development activities or at such other time or times as may be agreed to by the surface owner and the person conducting such activities. The Secretary shall establish the surface use fee, taking into account the acreage involved and the degree of potential disruption to existing surface uses (including loss of income to the surface owner due to the loss or impairment of existing surface uses). The Secretary shall provide the plan to the surface owner at least sixty days before the Secretary determines that the plan complies with this subparagraph. The surface owner may submit comments and recommend plan modifications to the Secretary during such sixty-day period.

The Secretary shall suspend or revoke his authorization under this paragraph whenever he determines, on his own motion or on a motion made by the surface owner, that the person conducting mineral exploration or development activities is in substantial noncompliance with the terms and conditions of the plan and failed to remedy the violation after notice from the Secretary within the time required by the Secretary.

"(3) DAMAGES FOR FAILURE TO COMPLY.—Whenever the surface owner of any land subject to this Act has suffered any damages or loss referred to in paragraph (2)(A), if such damages or loss results—

"(A) from any mineral exploration or development activities undertaken without the consent of the surface owner under paragraph (1) or an authorization by the Secretary under paragraph (2), or

"(B) from the failure of a mine operator to remedy any substantial noncompliance with the terms and conditions of a plan under paragraph (2)(B) pursuant to a notice from the Secretary under the last sentence of paragraph (2), the surface owner may bring an action in the appropriate United States district court for, and the court may award, treble damages. Such damages shall be reduced by the amount of any compensation which the surface owner has received (or is eligible to receive) pursuant to the surety bond or other financial guarantee required under paragraph (2)(A). The surface owner of such lands may also bring an action in the appropriate United States district court for treble damages against any person undertaking any minerals prospecting activity on such lands in violation of any requirement of paragraph (1).

"(4) PAYMENT OF DAMAGES.—The surface owner of any land subject to this subsection may petition the Secretary for payment of all or any portion of a surety bond or other financial guarantee required under paragraph (2)(A) as compensation for damages and losses referred to in paragraph (2)(A). Pursuant to such a petition, the Secretary may use such bond or other guarantee to provide compensation to the surface owner for such damages.

"(5) BOND RELEASE.—The Secretary shall release the surety bond or other financial guarantee required under paragraph (2)(A) upon the successful completion of all reclamation activities required pursuant to the plan approved under paragraph (2)(B) or at such earlier date as may be agreed to by the surface owner.

"(6) MINERALS COVERED.—This subsection applies only to minerals not subject to disposition under the Mineral Leasing Act (30 U.S.C. 181 and following), the Geothermal Steam Act of 1970 (30 U.S.C. 100 and following), or the Act of July 31, 1947, commonly known as the Materials Act of 1947 (30 U.S.C. 601 and following).

"(d)(1) CONVEYANCE TO SURFACE OWNER.—The Secretary of the Interior may convey interests owned by the United States (including mineral interests) in lands subject to this section to the surface owner pursuant to the provisions of section 209 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 without regard to the requirement contained in such provisions that findings be made under subsection (b) of such section.

"(2) The Secretary shall take such actions as may be necessary to simplify the procedures which must be complied with by surface owners of lands subject to this Act who apply to the Secretary to obtain title to interests in such lands owned by the United States.".

(b) TECHNICAL CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 9 of the Act of December 29, 1916 entitled "An Act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes" (43 U.S.C. 299) is amended by inserting "(a) GENERAL PROVISIONS.—" before the words "That all entries made".

(c) REGULATIONS.—Within one hundred and eighty days after the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior shall promulgate such regulations as may be necessary to implement the authorities vested in him under the amendments made by this section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KASTMAYER). Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RAHALL] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RAHALL].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 737, the bill presently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 737 seeks to address a long-standing dispute which not only pre-dates the enactment of the Stock Raising Homestead Act in 1916—which was one of the last western settlement type initiatives under which individuals could gain title to public lands—but a controversy which this 73-year-old law originally sought to resolve.

This is the conflict that can arise when those interested in the raising of livestock, and those engaged in the occupation of mineral exploration and development, seek to gain the use of the same land.

Throughout the Western States there are approximately 70 million acres of land on which title to the surface is held by private individuals under the Stock Raising Homestead Act.

However, the mineral estate to these lands was not made part of the title and continues to be owned by the United States. As such, these minerals are subject to the various mining laws.

Today, the increased interest in gold exploration and development in States like California and Nevada has aggravated the inherent conflicts of this type of land ownership situation and is giving rise to the need for this legislation.

While some provisions relating to the rights of surface owners faced with the prospect of their land being mined are provided for in the Stock Raising Homestead Act, in my view, current law is inadequate to handle the types of situations that can arise.

For its part, the BLM under existing law may be somewhat hampered from taking a more aggressive posture, although some questions have been voiced as to whether the agency has shown enough concern in these matters.

H.R. 737 seeks to strike a balance between the rights of the private surface owner, and those interested in the underlying locatable minerals, through a two-stage procedure for gaining access to, and undertaking mining activities on, Stock Raising Homestead Act lands.

The first stage involves initial entry to the land. Under the bill a person would have to file with the BLM a "notice of intention to locate a claim" in order to gain access to Stock Raising Homestead Act land. This person would then have a 60-day exclusive right to prospect and locate a claim on the land subject to the notice. However, the prospector could only enter the land after providing the surface owner with 10 days' notice.

The second stage involves mineral exploration and development activities. If the surface owner and the mineral developer could not reach an agreement on how mining activities should proceed, access for mining purposes could then be obtained by filing a bond and plan of operations with the BLM.

Under the bill, the surface owner would have an opportunity to comment on the proposed plan of operations before it is approved. In addition, if mining activities are undertaken without surface owner consent, his or her interests are protected through a surface use fee which must be paid by the mineral developer, the bond which must be posted and the ability to seek treble damages from the courts.

It should be noted that the scope of this legislation is limited to locatable minerals. Unlike with leasable or salable minerals, where the Federal Government has discretionary authority, the mining law has worked to preempt the private surface owner's rights on these Stock Raising Homestead Act lands.

It is this preemption that has given rise to instances where ranching operations have been disrupted, if not outright destroyed.

Mr. Speaker, before I reserve the balance of my time, I do wish to commend our full committee chairman, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL], for his leadership and help on this legislation. In particular, I wish to commend the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG], for his diligent efforts in seeking a compromise resolution of this issue. This is an issue that affects his home State of Idaho to which he will speak in just a moment. I also wish to commend the gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN], who has introduced this legislation, in whose district the subcommittee held hearings and whose leadership has been invaluable as we seek to address this problem as it affects the Western States.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 737, a bill to amend the Stock Raising Homestead Act. Chairman RAHALL and I have worked with both ranchers and miners to arrive at a bill that recognizes the importance of both of these western land users, while at the same time protecting the rights of the surface owner/miners to explore for the developed mineral deposits of these lands, rights that are held by the Federal Government.

I would also at this time like to congratulate my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN], who brought this issue before the Subcommittee on Mining and Natural Resources, an issue that for some time in his State of California has developed into a contentious problem with miners and ranchers or landowners going head to head over this issue.

I think the whole in the text of the changes that we have proposed embodied in H.R. 737 were well explained by my chairman. I think what is real is the desire to build a compromise and recognize the rights of both the landowner, the surface owner, and the subsurface owner of rights and minerals, in this case the Federal Government.

I think what is unique in this situation is that in 1916 when this particular law became public policy and the homesteading process occurred, it was little understood that over a generation or more land like this would change hands on more than one or two or three occasions. And in many instances when land purchasers in the West today acquire property that is currently under this law they fail to recognize the fine print. In essence, that they have acquired the surface rights but they have failed to acquire the subsurface rights, simply because they are unacquirable, they are still held by the Federal Government because this was land once acquired into fee simple land through the homesteading process under the Homestead Stock Raising Act.

As a result, conflict can immediately arise when this landowner finds himself or herself faced with a situation where they wake up some morning and there is someone out in the middle of their land prospecting for minerals and they have little, to no, ability to stop them from doing so simply because these people have complied with the law.

That certainly is a circumstance that has come to pass on more than one occasion on western lands that are within the context of this public policy.

As a result of that, and as my chairman mentioned, with the now occurrence of substantial increased mining interests in the West on these types of lands, and others, real conflict was at hand and we thought it was important to bring the interested parties together to bring about a resolution, forced by the introduction of the Lehman bill that is now embodied in H.R. 737.

As a result of that, I think we have crafted a compromise that solves the problem as was explained by our colleague. This is an issue that deals with not just a few acres here or there but literally millions of acres spread across the Western States.

In my State of Idaho, well over 3.5 million acres; in the State of California, a similar amount; in other States substantially more.

So we are dealing with an issue that is broad-based in nature, that takes a law that is many years old now, many generations past, reforms it into, I think, a modern-day approach of compromise where both parties are placed on notice by a process provided for in the law.

Mr. Speaker, let me thank my colleagues, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RAHALL] and certainly the gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN] for their diligence in working with us to craft a compromise which we thought was necessary.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 737, a bill to amend the Stock Raising Homestead Act. Chairman RAHALL and I have worked with both ranchers and miners to arrive at a bill that recognizes the importance of both of these western land users while, at the same time, protecting the rights of surface owners miners to explore for and develop mineral deposits on these lands.

The Stock Raising Homestead Act of 1916 led to the entry and patenting of approximately 70 million acres of public lands throughout the West—about 3.5 million in Idaho. Congress chose to reserve to the United States all minerals in a stock-raising homestead patent, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove those minerals. Thus, a split-estate was created whereby the land surface was privately owned and the subsurface federally owned.

H.R. 737 amends section 9 of the Stock Raising Homestead Act, dealing with the acquisition of mining rights, which is the only portion of the Stock Raising Homestead Act that remains in effect today.

H.R. 737 requires that a mineral claimant give notice to a surface owner prior to entering on the surface for the purpose of non-mechanical prospecting. Notice is given by filing a "notice of intention to locate a claim" with the Bureau of Land Management. The filing of such notice gives the claimant a 60-day exclusive right to prospect for minerals and to locate a claim on lands identified in the notice. A claimant may hold up to 6,400 acres in any one State and 1,280 acres on any one stock-raising homestead at one time. During this 60 days of holding an exclusive right to enter, the claimant must give the surface owner a 10-day notice of proposed activities prior to entering on the surface.

H.R. 737 also requires there must be an agreement between the surface owner and the miner prior to mineral exploration and development. If these two parties cannot agree, access can be gained to the stock-raising homestead lands by the miner filing a bond and a plan of operations with the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary giving approval of the plan of operations. Under the latter scenario the claimant must pay a surface use fee, established by the Secretary, to the surface owner. The Secretary may revoke or suspend operations if a claimant is in substantial noncompliance with the terms and conditions of the plan.

The bill also establishes a process whereby a surface owner may be awarded damages if a claimant inflicts uncompensated damage or losses on a surface owner.

Mr. Speaker, the bill before us is an equitable solution to a conflict of rights that arose between two important and traditional land users in the West—miners and ranchers. H.R. 737 resolves those conflicts, and I recommend that the bill be passed.

The administration has indicated that they have no objection to House passage of H.R. 737.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN].

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 737 and would just like to take a moment to thank my colleagues who have done such a great job on this bill.

□ 1420

I thank the chairman of the Subcommittee on Mining and Natural Resources, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RAHALL] and the ranking member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG].

When this bill came before the committee, it had some controversies in it. It had some problems. Rather than reject it offhand, they decided that there was merit in the substance. They came out and saw my situation firsthand. They related it to what was happening in other parts of the West, and the results is a bill that is not only a good bill, but a substantial improvement over the bill I initially introduced. For that I am very grateful.

The bill we have before Members represents nearly 5 years of work in trying to solve the problem of split-estate land ownerships that were created by the Stock Raising Homestead Act of 1916. This act disposed of about 70 million acres of land. What set the 1916 act apart from previous homestead acts was that it conveyed the surface of the property to the private owner, but the Federal Government retained the subsurface for future mineral development.

Clearly, the private owners surface must be disturbed in order for mineral development to begin. What the act did not do was give the private land owner much protection from indiscriminate mineral operators. I was curious to learn when a constituent of mine contacted me with this problem that there is virtually no protection for the private land owner, short of going to court, to collect damages. In fact, there is not even a requirement that the mine operator give notice that he will enter the property.

Finally, in 1985, the BLM admitted that there was no administrative remedy to solve my constituent's problem. Although the BLM agreed to cattlemen's groups request to write regulations to solve the problem more than a year ago, there is no indication that the Bureau has any intention of issuing those regulations. As a result, I introduced legislation similar to this in the 100th Congress, and although no hearings were held at that time, it gained strong bipartisan support.

In June of this year, the subcommittee held a field hearing on the bill, and the amended bill that is before Members is a direct result of that hearing. The bill that has emerged from this subcommittee, and the subcommittee with even greater bipartisan support, because it adequately addresses the rights of the private surface owner as well as recognizing the needs of the mineral operator. H.R. 737, as amended, gives substantial protection to the land owner, but it does not unduly restrict the mining beneath these lands. Balancing private property rights and legitimate mining interests is very difficult and very delicate. This bill strikes the right balance.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to commend the principal interests involved here, the mining industry and the cattle industry, for deciding to get together on this rather than fighting it out all the way.

Mr. Speaker, we have worked very hard to bring a bill of this caliber to the House for consideration. I deeply appreciate the assistance of the chairman, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RAHALL], and the ranking member, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG]. I look forward to sending the bill to the Senate today.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KOSTMAYER). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RAHALL] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 737, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONGRESSIONAL SCHOLARSHIPS FOR SCIENCE, MATHEMATICS, AND ENGINEERING ACT

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 996) to establish the congressional scholarships for science, mathematics, and engineering, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 996

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Congressional Scholarships for Science, Mathematics, and Engineering Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) science and technology are cornerstones of America's efforts to develop products and services which will compete in the global marketplace and improve Americans' standards of living and quality of life;

(2) Americans' ability to pursue scientific and technical careers and to render informed judgments on scientific and technical issues have been hampered by low levels of educational attainment in science and mathematics;

(3) the achievement of universal "scientific literacy" by all Americans, including those who choose not to become scientists or engineers, is an essential goal of all programs designed to strengthen American competitiveness in science, mathematics, and engineering;

(4) young people from across the Nation who have demonstrated talents and interests in science and mathematics should be encouraged to pursue careers in those fields, both to inspire other students and to increase participation in scientific and technical professions;

(5) the preparation of a new generation of scientific and technical professionals, and the education of all Americans in the risks and benefits of modern science and technology, requires a strong, coordinated effort to strengthen the teaching of science and mathematics by encouraging qualified individuals to enter the teaching profession; and

(6) greater emphasis must be placed on increasing the participation in teaching of science and mathematics, as well as in the scientific and technical professions, of groups of Americans currently underrepresented in those fields.

SEC. 3. PURPOSES.

It is the purpose of this Act—

(1) to strengthen the United States science, mathematics, and engineering base by offering opportunities to pursue postsecondary education in science, mathematics, and engineering;

(2) to encourage role models in scientific, mathematics, and engineering fields for young people;

(3) to strengthen the United States scientific, mathematics, and engineering potential by encouraging equal participation of women with men in scientific, mathematics, and engineering fields; and

(4) to attract talented students to teaching careers in science and mathematics in elementary and secondary schools.

SEC. 4. FOUR-YEAR SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—The Director of the National Science Foundation (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Director") shall establish and implement a competitive, merit-based program for selecting one male and one female from each congressional district of the United States each year to receive a four-year congressional scholarship for science, mathematics, and engineering.

(b) NOMINATING COMMITTEES.—The Director shall establish for each congressional district, or, to the extent a contiguous group of congressional districts reflects a geographic region similar in demographics, geography, and economic status and activity, for each such group of congressional districts, a broad-based committee of educators, scientists, mathematicians, and engineers who shall serve as volunteers without compensation. Each such committee shall submit to the Director nominations of one male and one female from each congressional district for scholarships under this Act. If the Director rejects a nomination made under this subsection on the basis that the nominee does not meet the requirements of subsection (c) or (d), the nominating committee shall submit a substitute nomination. The membership of each committee shall reflect geographic distribution within its area. Committees established under this subsection shall not be subject to the Federal Advisory Committee Act.

(c) ELIGIBILITY.—Only individuals who are citizens or nationals of the United States, or who are aliens lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence, shall be eligible for scholarships under this section. Scholarship awardees shall be selected while in their senior year of high school, or, if they have previously graduated from high school, upon making application for admission as a freshman to an institution of higher education, but, prior to receiving a scholarship, must have been accepted for admission to an institution of higher education in the United States that is currently accredited by a nationally recognized accrediting agency or association.

(d) CRITERIA FOR NOMINATION AND SELECTION.—Individuals shall be nominated and selected for scholarships under this section on the basis of potential to successfully complete a postsecondary program in science, mathematics, or engineering, and on the basis of motivation to pursue a career in science, mathematics, or engineering. In addition, consideration may be given to the financial need of the individual, and to promoting participation by minorities and individuals with disabilities. The Director shall determine the criteria for measuring the potential and motivation of nominees.

(e) NATURE AND AMOUNT OF SCHOLARSHIPS.—Scholarships awarded under this section may be used only for tuition, fees, room and board, and other reasonable education expenses. Such scholarships shall be $5,000 per year, except as necessary to accommodate a recipient completing a four-year academic program in less than four years.

(f) MAINTAINING ELIGIBILITY.—(1) In order to maintain eligibility to receive funds pursuant to a scholarship awarded under this section, a student must—

(A) be enrolled at an institution of higher education in the United States that is currently accredited by a nationally recognized accrediting agency or association;

(B) major in any field of science, mathematics, or engineering;

(C) maintain superior performance, as determined by the Director; and

(D) except as provided in paragraph (2) or (3), carry a full-time academic work load, as determined by the institution in which the student is enrolled under standards applicable to all students enrolled in that student's program.

(2) Upon application by a scholarship recipient, the Director may make an exception to the requirements under paragraph (1) in any of the following cases:

(A) Active duty as a member of the armed services.

(B) Disability certified by a qualified physician.

(C) Exceptional personal circumstances or emergencies.

(D) Pregnancy, child-rearing, or other family responsibilities.

(3) Each exception made under paragraph (2) shall be effective for not longer than 2 years, after which the recipient may reapply for an additional exception under such paragraph.

(4) If an individual who has received an award under this section fails to maintain eligibility under this subsection, such individual shall be required to pay to the United States such amounts as would be payable, in the same manner as they would be payable, if at the time the amounts were received the amounts were a loan and the recipient were a new borrower under part B of title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965.

(g) NOTIFICATION OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.—The Director shall notify each Member of Congress of selections made from such Member's district before public announcement of such selections is made.

(h) MONITORING IMPLEMENTATION AND COMPLIANCE.—The Director shall monitor the implementation of and compliance of the nominating committees with this section.

(i) SOLICITATION, NOMINATION, AND SELECTION OF STUDENTS.—The Director shall ensure that the solicitation, nomination, and selection of students for the programs established by this section shall be carried out without discrimination on the basis of race, age, physical disability, religion, ethnic background, economic status, or sexual preference.

(j) SELECTION OF NOMINATING COMMITTEES.—The Director shall ensure that the selection of nominating committees under subsection (b) shall be carried out without discrimination on the basis of race, age, physical disability, religion, ethnic background, economic status, or sexual preference.

SEC. 5. TWO-YEAR SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—The Director shall establish a competitive, merit-based program for awarding congressional scholarships to students enrolled in a baccalaureate degree program in science, mathematics, or engineering who are willing to commit themselves to teach elementary or secondary science or mathematics.

(b) ELIGIBILITY.—Only individuals who are—

(1) citizens or nationals of the United States, or who are aliens lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence;

(2) majoring in science, mathematics, or engineering;

(3) in the last 2 years of a baccalaureate degree program; and

(4) enrolled in an institution of higher education in the United States which is currently accredited by a nationally recognized accrediting agency or association,

SEC. 11. REPORT.

The National Science Foundation shall prepare and submit to the Congress no later than February 1, 1990, a report examining current efforts to improve the quality of elementary and secondary mathematics and science education and career potential for the underprivileged through joint efforts of business, school districts, and institutions of higher education, and recommending ways the Federal Government could encourage such efforts. The report shall include, to the extent possible, a comprehensive list of existing efforts, an assessment of what factors have made some such efforts more successful than others, and a review of the extent to which such efforts have drawn on Federal programs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE].

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 996, a bill to create congressional scholarship for undergraduate study in science, mathematics, and engineering represents an important investment in the Nation's future. H.R. 996, as amended, is the result of a bipartisan effort by the committee.

For those Members that are here that are reviewing the progress we are making in today's legislative affairs, I wanted to share with them a note I received this morning from my nephew who is 6 years old. It comes from California, and he says, "Dear Uncle Bob, things just are not good. School is just about to start and I don't know any math. What should I do? Signed. Timothy."

I congratulate Mr. WALGREN for his leadership in crafting H.R. 996, as amended. Also, I would like to acknowledge the efforts of our colleagues on the other side of the aisle, Mr. WALKER of Pennsylvania, the ranking Republican member of the committee, along with Mr. BOEHLERT of New York, Mr. SLAUGHTER of Virginia, and the other members who have contributed to strengthening the bill.

The reason I took time to read the vignette of my nephew's was to pinpoint the fact that he is 6 years old and he understands how important mathematics is.

H.R. 996 truly is a bipartisan attempt to address the critical problem of attracting more students to careers in science, mathematics, and engineering.

A continuous supply of scientific talent is the basic requirement for sustaining the scientific and technological enterprise of the United States. Nothing less than the quality of life of our people and the security of the Nation is at stake. Yet we are confronted with evidence of declining percentages of college students electing to study science, engineering, and mathematics at the same time that the size of the college-aged population is declining. Moreover, the composition of this college population includes increasing numbers of minorities, who have traditionally been underrepresented in science. And, although there have been some increases in participation by women, the percentage majoring in the physical sciences and engineering has leveled off at a fairly low rate of participation.

Clearly, we cannot succeed in fulfilling our national requirements for scientists and engineers unless we take steps to reverse current trends. The Congressional Scholarship Program created by H.R. 996 is designed to have high visibility throughout the country in order to encourage role models in science, mathematics, and engineering for young people and, particularly important, more role models for women.

The bill establishes a merit-based, competitive undergraduate scholarship program at the National Science Foundation. Since its creation in 1950, the Foundation has been the leading Federal agency supporting broad-ranging basic research in the sciences, mathematics, and engineering in the Nation's universities and supporting science and engineering education at all levels. The proposed scholarship program taps the long experience of NSF in the administration of student support activities and associates the prestige of NSF with these congressional scholarships.

The bill creates three distinct types of undergraduate scholarships: A 4-year scholarship for one male and one female from each congressional district; scholarships for the junior and senior years for students willing to commit to teaching elementary or secondary science or mathematics; and scholarships for the junior and senior years for students willing to work as a scientist or engineer or willing to attend graduate school, to pursue advanced studies in science, mathematics, or engineering.

H.R. 996 authorizes appropriations for congressional scholarships as a separate program within NSF science and engineering education activities. The committee expects the scholarships to be funded from available discretionary appropriations for such NSF education activities. However, since the committee did not intend for the scholarship program to take funds away from other ongoing science education activities, H.R. 996 increases the total authorization level for science and engineering education at NSF by the amount needed for the scholarship program. Further, H.R. 996 restricts the reprogramming authority of the NSF Director relative to ongoing science education activities so that the congressional scholarships must be funded either from increased appropriations for all of science and engineering education activities or from reprogramming from other NSF program areas, as provided in the National Science Foundation Authorization Act of 1988.

An important goal of the scholarships program is to raise national awareness of the importance of science and technology to our future. To achieve a high level of visibility for the congressional scholarships, NSF is charged to publicize widely the availability of the scholarships, to establish committees at the congressional district level to nominate candidates for the 4-year scholarships and to notify Congressmen of awards to their constituents in advance of public announcement, to enable Members, if they desire, to take an active role in recognizing awardees.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 996, as amended, will increase the number of scientists and engineers in America while providing a highly visible symbol of the national stake in science, mathematics, and engineering education. I urge my colleagues to support passage of H.R. 996 with the committee amendment.

□ 1430

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 996 is the Science Committee's recommendation for carrying out the President's proposal to provide scholarships to science, math, and engineering undergraduates.

I think this is a good bill. I congratulate the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE] for his efforts in bringing this bill to the floor, and also those who have worked solidly on the bill for a number of months: My colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN], who chaired the subcommittee and who did the work on the committee; the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT], the vice chairman of that subcommittee, who has contributed so much to the bill; the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLAUGHTER], who also helped develop much of the language in this bill. I think those Members formed the corps that brought us the kind of legislation we have before us today.

The reason for the President's recommendation for such a program in the first place was the recognition that American students are performing poorly in science and fewer are going into the field. As a result, we see American high school students scoring at or near the bottom in international assessments of science and math achievement. In several graduate fields of science, the majority of the students are foreign nationals, and more of them are returning to their home countries after they finish with their work. After they finish, they are not remaining here, as had been the case in the past, but instead they are going home to their own countries.

The Federal Government has long used scholarship programs as a way to overcome such problems. The National Defense Education Act offered scholarships in response to the sputnik launch, and a wide variety of Federal programs such as health scholarships and ROTC offer money as an incentive to students to enter fields or to work in locales that need them.

The administration has one fairly minor disagreement with us on this particular bill. They think it ought to be under the Department of Education. We think it ought to be under the National Science Foundation. The reason for the disagreement is because we think the emphasis here ought to be on science, and that the way we get emphasis on science is to ensure that the National Science Foundation administers the program. It has en excellent track record for merit selection, and these new scholarships complement the graduate fellowship program the National Science Foundation has been running for more than 30 years.

H.R. 996 is a bit more conservative in terms of the size of the general 4-year scholarship grants, but it is much more diverse in also providing 2-year scholarships to students who are willing to commit to teaching, further graduate study, or a career in science.

I think we also need to point out that our bill is responsible to the taxpayer because it requires the students to pay back the grants if they fail to fulfill 4 years of undergraduate science study or their service commitment in the 2-year programs. In the 4-year program, the money would convert to a student loan, while for the 2-year scholarships there is a payback requirement with full interest.

In light of the justifiably overriding concern with illegal drug use in our country today, I might also note that language supplied by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUECHNER] sets the example of dropping scholarship recipients from the program who are convicted of a drug offense or other felony while they are in the program. In such cases there are punitive payback penalties.

Finally, H.R. 996 incorporates within it a bill I had originally sponsored dealing with underprivileged use. This would require a study by the National Science Foundation to submit a study of successful programs in which businesses, universities, and school districts have worked together to improve education for the underprivileged. The most successful innovations have come and should come from the State and local level. Many excellent programs exist or are starting, but it is difficult for groups to find out what other sections of the country are trying or what methods have been most successful. This report will help supply that information.

Mr. Speaker, I would certainly urge my colleagues to support H.R. 996.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN], chairman of the Subcommittee on Science, Research and Technology.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, at the outset, I want to salute the leadership of the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology, both the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE] on the Democratic side, and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] on the Republican side, for their time, focused effort, and leadership in bringing this measure through the committee to the floor of the House of Representatives in such a direct fashion.

The warning flags that are flying about the state of American education in science, math, and engineering deserve the attention of the Congress. We have a good and valid vehicle before us in order to support science and math and engineering education in our country. There is a very wide realization that nothing could be more important.

When we look back, we realize how important science, math, and engineering have been to our country. In many ways, we realize we were, in a sense, just lucky to be the first to develop the atom bomb that ended World War II. Had it turned out differently, the fate of the world and the United States would have been much different. But when we look back at the Manhattan project we realize that many of the critical contributions that saved our country and preserved the world we value were made by people who essentially were not educated in America. They were the product of European educational systems with names like Einstein, Szilard, Fermi, Teller, and others. How confident can we be that future breakthroughs will be found first by Americans when so many measures put American students far behind other nations in science capacity.

America's education system must be improved. Evaluations of our schools come back entitled "A Nation at Risk" and "The Rising Tide of Mediocrity." Looking at those reports, we cannot but be driven to do more in science and math education on all levels. When we compare American students with those in other nations, we realize that we are not the world leaders in science and math education.

American students, the headlines say, are performing "at the bottom." American students are behind those from Spain and behind those from South Korea in many measures of achievement in science and math education. And even the very top, the top 1 percent of the American student body, now fall to the median abroad, scoring no better than average in international ranks. When we think how important science and math have been in our country and how important they will be in the future of global economic competition, we have to make a major, major effort in this area.

This bill is a small bill. It is not a big budgetary item, but it makes a very real contribution to improving and strengthening American education in science, math, and engineering. The bill recognizes that the first critical area is in high school. If people are not interested in learning the fundamentals that lie at the start of an education in science and math, they cannot catch up later on. Students cannot do well in calculus in college if they have not mastered algebra in high school. So we must start at the high school level.

There's simply just not enough science and math in American high schools. How will we keep up with students in other countries who generally take 4 years of math, and 4 years of physics and chemistry, while an average student in the American system is not likely to take more than 1 or 2 years of courses in these areas.

So, excellence must start on the high school level, and we provide in this bill prized scholarships for graduating high school seniors, significant financial support by the Federal Government for one young man and one young woman from each congressional district. Every high school student in America will get the message that science education is a valued pursuit, and that we value the qualities these young people develop. Just as we have Congressional Medals of Honor to recognize other levels of American excellence, we should have congressional science and math scholarships to motivate young men and women in science education. If we do no attract women to science in full measure we will be turning our backs on one-half of the thinking power we could otherwise rely on. So that part of this bill is critically important.

However, Mr. Speaker, we realize that these young people will only excel in science education if they are interested by a good teacher. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT] was determined to provide scholarship aid to the best of those who would go to on to teach in targeted schools.

Mr. Speaker, sadly many high school students are now taught science by people who, in many cases, are not interested in science. It was not their field of study. Often the last science course they may have had was when they themselves were in high school. That clearly is not good enough. So, we provide in the bill scholarship support in the junior and senior years for those who will go on and teach on the secondary level.

Third, in response to the points made by Mr. SLAUGHTER from Virginia, we provide scholarships in the junior and senior year for those who have the greatest potential to go on to graduate school. Giving real support for the most talented college students to stay with their education into graduate school will pay great dividends in keeping the best students in science careers.

I want to emphasize that all the selections under this bill will be merit selections conducted by the National Science Foundation. On the high school level, the NSF will convene a representation of teachers, practicing scientists, and community leaders. On the college level, the NSF itself will conduct a selection process on the national level. All awardees are to be the very best we have and, therefore, be the symbols for other people to aspire, to perform, and know that they, too, can participate fully and have a critical contribution to make to the future of our country.

Mr. Speaker, I urge support for the bill.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT].

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 996. This bill is, to be blunt, a rare chance for the House to put its money where its mouth is on education.

We all have done plenty of talking about education. We all can recite the depressing statistics about student performance and teacher preparation, especially in mathematics and science. We all can enumerate the important factors influencing education that are beyond the Federal Government's control.

But with H.R. 996, we at last can do something more. We can take some affirmative steps to improve math and science education in this country and to attract more students to those fields.

I'd like to draw particular attention to the teacher scholarship provisions in the bill, which began life as my bill, H.R. 1293.

To my mind, the single factor that most determines the quality of education is the quality of our Nation's teachers. All the innovations in curriculum and computers, the best physical plants in the nicest locations will fail to excite and educate students, if our schools are not filled with dedicated, bright, enthusiastic, and imaginative teachers. We need only think back on our own experience—on our own mentors—to recognize the truth of this proposition.

Are we attracting those teachers now? Certainly not in great enough numbers. Students expressing an interest in teaching today are among the lowest scorers on standardized exams; many don't even come from the academic tracks of their high schools. The situation is especially dire in science and math, fields in which principals are already reporting difficulty recruiting qualified candidates. This is certainly not the situation we want as many of our current teachers approach retirement age.

The Federal Government can make a difference in this area. By offering science, math, and engineering students prestigious, highly competitive National Science Foundation scholarships in return for teaching, the Government can attract top students to teaching and send a message about the importance of the field.

The Federal Government offers scholarships to attract physicians to underserved areas, to encourage graduate study in science, to recruit for the military. Surely the need for excellent science and math teachers is as critical. Indeed, it's not an overstatement to claim this is a legitimate national security issue.

H.R. 996 goes further than the President's science scholarship proposal by requiring a greater commitment from the students and by looking beyond graduation to solving the critical need for teachers and for scientists and engineers in the workforce.

I look forward to working with the administration, my colleagues on other House committees and in the Senate to fashion a workable scholarship program that recognizes the full range of problems confronting our education system.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLAUGHTER].

Mr. SLAUGHTER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to ask the House to support the critically important technology education legislation, H.R. 996, which is the Congressional Scholarships for Science, Mathematics and Engineering Act, as forwarded by the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology under the leadership of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE], and the ranking member of the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

We have before the House today, a bill introduced by our able colleague, Mr. WALGREN of Pennsylvania, who is the chairman of the Subcommittee on Science, Research, and Technology. By this bill, we are recognizing the abilities of those young people who have demonstrated skill and aptitude in the fields of science, mathematics and engineering and rewarding these students for demonstrating technological excellence.

I am pleased that the House Science, Space and Technology Committee has incorporated into H.R. 996 elements of the science scholars program I introduced earlier this year in H.R. 1217, the Science, Mathematics and Research Technologies Scholarships Act. This program would identify national shortages in science, mathematics, and engineering and award merit scholarships to students displaying proficiency in these fields for their final 2 years of undergraduate training. In return, the students would pledge to go on to graduate study or work in the technoligical field following graduation.

This 2-year scholarship and career program would provide 500 annual scholarships in the amount of $5,000 each, with an additional $2,500 in Federal funds available if matched by universities on a dollar for dollar basis. This leveraged funding provision will enable the Federal Government to stretch our education dollars further and ensure that most of our scholars will be receiving full scholarships at the universities of their choice.

While I am certainly pleased with the provisions adopted from my legislation into the bill we are considering today, I hope our committee will return to this issue in the near future and add a graduate science scholars component to our scholarship program. By adding a graduate scholars link, I believe we will better be able to ensure that our Nation's finest science scholars receive the high level of education needed to place America's technological efforts in the future.

Finally, I believe H.R. 996 is a stepping stone on the path to revitalize technological pursuit. It is imperative that we develop incentives to attract and train those highly qualified individuals who will close the pending technological gap and increase the woefully small number of American students now pursuing degrees in science, mathematics, and engineering. I encourage my colleagues to support this needed legislation.

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Congressional Scholarships for Science, Mathematics and Engineering Act of 1989 to create several annual scholarships for aspiring students to pursue science, math or engineering on the college level.

As an original cosponsor of this bill, and chairman of the House Science, Space, and Technology Subcommittee on Energy, Research and Development, I believe the enactment of this legislation is essential to the future of American competitiveness and should be adopted with all possible speed.

Science, mathematics, and engineering education must be a top priority for or Nation because the workforce of tomorrow depends on the education of our students today. We must produce scientifically and technologically literate adults who are prepared to function in the complex, high-tech marketplace which is evolving.

We can no longer afford to let our students graduate unprepared to meet the challenges that will afford our Nation the full opportunity to prosper in the 21st century. Let's make sure we have the tools available to encourage superior math and science performance. This legislation will encourage our high school students to aspire to a scientific career and I believe this is essential to our national interest.

I urge my colleagues to join with me in supporting this valuable and timely proposal.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise some budget concerns with this bill contained in the CBO cost estimate. The CBO is of the opinion that this bill establishes mandatory spending because the bill does not specifically limit the scholarship payments to amounts provided in advance in appropriations acts. It is my understanding that it was not the intent of the Science and Technology Committee to create a new mandatory spending program and that these new congressional scholarships will be funded from available discretionary appropriations. It is further my understanding that sufficient reprogramming authority exists to shift funds within the National Science Foundation budget to pay for these new scholarships.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 996 is a bill to create scholarships for mathematics and science students. This program is very similar to a program included in H.R. 1675, the Educational Excellence Act. H.R. 1675 contains the President's education package. I am very much in support of mathematics and science scholarships and I am pleased that this bill includes one of the ideas contained in the President's education package. I do have some reservations about congressionally controlled scholarships. However, I realize that this bill would create localy based committees for the nomination of candidates. Furthermore, this legislation appears to violate section 302(b) of the Budget Act which prohibits new mandatory spending not authorized in the budget resolution.

The Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources has considered its version of H.R. 1675 and has included the Mathematics and Science Scholarships Program. I am hopeful that our committees and the Senate will be able to work together to enact a scholarship program which will best serve the needs of mathematics and science students in this country. I do intend to continue to work for the enactment of H.R. 1675 and I feel consideration of this bill is a step toward that end.

There was no objection.

MILDRED AND CLAUDE PEPPER SCHOLARSHIP ACT

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2666) to establish a Mildred and Claude Pepper Scholarship Program.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 2666

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Mildred and Claude Pepper Scholarship Act".

SEC. 2. PROGRAM AUTHORITY.

From the sums appropriated pursuant to section 3, the Secretary of Education is authorized to make grants to the Washington Workshops Foundation for the purpose of establishing and maintaining the Mildred and Claude Pepper Scholarship Program.

SEC. 3. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this Act, $500,000 for fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1991 and 1992.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, a year ago Claude Pepper asked me to develop a scholarship program for hearing-impaired students. He asked that we pass legislation implementing it and requested that the effort be named in honor of his late wife Mildred.

Today we consider Mr. Pepper's request. H.R. 2666 is the bill establishing the Mildred and Claude Pepper Scholarship Program at the Washington Workshops Foundation. These scholarships will be used to enroll hearing-impaired high school students in seminars sponsored by the foundation. On July 12, the Subcommittee on Postsecondary Education by voice vote ordered this bill to be reported favorably to the full Committee on Education and Labor. On July 26 that committee ordered the bill to be reported, again by voice vote, to the full House.

The Washington Workshops Foundation, which will administer the Pepper scholarships, was very important to our late colleague. The foundation through its workshops programs brings students from different backgrounds to Washington from all 50 States to learn and participate first hand in the government process. Chairman Pepper helped found the program in 1968, and he was the first Member of Congress to participate as a speaker in the workshops' weekly congressional seminars. He continued his commitment to the foundation by participating each year as a speaker, and he was a member of the foundation's advisory council.

This scholarship program will enable the Washington Workshops Foundation to plan five special 1-week sessions for hearing-impaired students to participate in congressional and diplomacy seminars. Each seminar will enroll 75 hearing-impaired students, enabling these students to come to Washington to learn about the Federal Government through on-site meetings with Government officials. The Washington Workshops Foundation would administer the program in conjunction with its on-going congressional seminar and diplomacy and governmental affairs seminar programs. In addition, 25 hearings-impaired students will be eligible each year through this Pepper Scholarship Program to take part in a 3-week internship in a congressional office.

Earlier this year, the entire Florida delegation wrote to the Secretary of Education urging him to provide funds for this scholarship program from his discretionary account. However, without an authorization, it is unlikely that this funding will be forthcoming. Thus, there is a real need for this authorizing legislation.

H.R. 2666 would provide an authorization of $500,000 in fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary in 1991 and 1992, to establish and maintain the Mildred and Claude Pepper Scholarship Program. I believe such a program would be a fitting tribute to a great man and his wife—a great lady. I urge my colleagues to adopt this bill.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I join Chairman WILLIAMS in supporting the passage of H.R. 2666, the Mildred and Claude Pepper Scholarship Act, which provides authorization of $500,000 for grants to the Washington Workshops Foundation. This scholarship program will provide the opportunity for secondary school students who are hearing impaired or otherwise physically disabled to participate in congressional and diplomacy seminars and in the Washington Workshop's Congressional Internship Program.

These grants will enable the Washington Workshops Foundation to bring 100 students of different backgrounds from all 50 States to Washington to learn about, and to participate firsthand in the legislative and foreign policymaking processes. Because grants will go to physically disabled students, primarily those with hearing impairments, the Mildred and Claude Pepper Scholarship Program will offer a unique introduction to the Federal Government and the legislative process, an introduction by active participation.

I join my colleagues in supporting a bill which honors Chairman Pepper's longstanding support of the Washington Workshops Foundation. This scholarship program embodies his dedication to breaking down the barriers between the physically disabled and hearing impaired and the larger society—a society which, as Claude Pepper knew, can only benefit from their increased participation and contributions as full citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of H.R. 2666, legislation to establish the Claude and Mildred Pepper Scholarship Program, which as you know was extremely important to our late colleague, the gentleman from Florida, Claude Pepper.

I commend the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] for introducing this measure.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2666 will authorize a program of grants to the Washington Workshops Foundation which will in turn provide grants to hearing impaired high school students selected from a cross-section of schools throughout the country; $500,000 will enable 375 students to participate in the Washington Workshops' congressional and diplomacy seminars. In addition, 25 interns will be placed in Member offices on Capitol Hill.

Additionally, the establishment of the Mildred and Claude Pepper Scholarship Program will honor our late friend and colleague Congressman Claude Pepper. The causes which Claude Pepper espoused were many and varied, yet his intensity and involvement never diminished. Accordingly, I believe that this program is a fitting tribute to this great man.

We are all familiar with the Washington Workshops Foundation and its contributions over the past two decades in offering our Nation's young people the unique opportunity to learn about our governmental process through first-hand and practical experience here in Washington. The longstanding success of the program has been acknowledged by educators, Government officials, teachers, parents, and students alike.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2666 will honor our friend, the late Claude Pepper, who was instrumental in founding the Washington Workshops Program in 1968. Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to join today in support of this worthy bill.

□ 1500

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 36 seconds to our colleague, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RAHALL].

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the pending legislation. Nothing could please the late Chairman Claude Pepper more than to bring others the best and brightest from public service, which was his lifelong commitment, and I think that this legislation establishing the Mildred and Claude Pepper Scholarship Act does just that.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of H.R. 2666, the bill to establish the Mildred and Claude Pepper Scholarship Fund. This bill authorizes the Secretary of Education to make grants to the Washington Workshops Foundation for the purpose of establishing and maintaining these scholarships, authorizing an appropriation of $500,000 for fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary for the next 2 fiscal years.

The Washington Workshops Foundation brings students from different backgrounds from all 50 States to Washington to learn and participate in the government process. The late Claude Pepper helped found the workshops in 1968, more than 20 years ago. He was the first Member of Congress to participate as a speaker in the workshops' weekly congressional seminars, and he continued his commitment to the foundation throughout his life.

Because of Chairman Pepper's longstanding commitment to the foundation, and in light of his dedication to the handicapped, the foundation determined to honor him and his wife Mildred by establishing the scholarship program in their names. For that reason, the Committee on Education and Labor decided to authorize funding for the establishment of the scholarship program, as its own living tribute to our beloved Claude Pepper.

The scholarships to be offered by the foundation are to go primarily to secondary school students who are hearing impaired or otherwise physically disabled, giving them the opportunity to participate in civic education programs in Washingtron, DC. The workshops will administer this program in conjunction with its ongoing congressional seminar and diplomacy and global affairs seminar programs.

I commend the Committee on Education and Labor, under the leadership of our esteemed chairman, AUGUSTUS HAWKINS, for bringing this bill to the floor of the House so that others may join with us in honoring our friend and colleague Claude Pepper and his wife Mildred. I wish to commend also Representative PAT WILLIAMS, chairman of the Postsecondary Education Subcommittee, for his thoughtfulness and foresight in making it possible for the Congress to consider this further, living tribute to Chairman Pepper. Nothing would please Chairman Pepper more than to bring others, the best and the brightest, into public service which was his own lifelong commitment.

I know that my colleagues from both sides of the aisle of the House of Representatives will join me in assuring passage of H.R. 2666 today.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2666, the Mildred and Claude Pepper Scholarship Act. We all know of Claude Pepper's commitment to the young and the disadvantaged in America, and this legislation will assist those to whom he dedicated his lifetime of public service.

H.R. 2666 authorizes a program of grants to high school students who are disabled and economically disadvantaged to participate in the Washington workshop's congressional and diplomacy seminars which are annually held in Washington. These programs offer an invaluable and unique opportunity for citizenship education for our Nation's young people. This legislation would offer the opportunity to participate to less advantaged students who would not normally be able to participate.

Additionally, this measure will authorize 25 scholarships for special internship assignments on Capitol Hill. These scholarships would be offered in conjunction with the ongoing Washington Workshop's Advanced Congressional Seminar which is available to students who have completed the first seminar. This is an academically oriented program which offers transferable college credit upon completion of the program.

This program will be a very advantageous transition tool for the disabled student entering the adult world. It will also provide invaluable practical experience for students to learn first hand of the lessons of the U.S. Government. I urge our colleagues to support this important legislation.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, in June of this year, I rose before this House to pay tribute to Claude Pepper as "a man who spent the majority of his working life in public service in both Chambers of Congress." It is fitting that the first bill that we consider to honor this public servant is one which introduces young Americans who are hearing impaired or physically disabled to public service.

I join Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. COLEMAN in supporting the passage of this proposal—the Claude and Mildred Pepper Scholarship Act. Not only will 100 young people benefit each year through their attendance and participation in the Washington Workshops' Seminars and Congressional Internship Program, but the country itself will benefit by having broadened the horizons of these youth so that they might consider public service as part of their future.

I urge my colleagues to support this tribute to our former colleague.

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2666, the Mildred and Claude Pepper Scholarship Act.

Throughout his legislative career, Claude Pepper worked to improve the quality of life for all Americans. He fought for the rights of the Nation's poor and elderly, young people, and the physically disabled.

He was also dedicated to educating students about the keystone of American government—democracy. This bill does just that. It authorizes funds for establishing and maintaining scholarships to enable high school students who are hearing impaired or otherwise physically disabled to participate in programs sponsored by the Washington Workshops Foundation. The grants will allow those students to take part in congressional seminars, diplomacy and global affairs seminars, and the Washington Workshops' Congressional Internship Program.

Claude Pepper was involved with the Washington workshops since the program was established and he had taken an active part in the program each year. These important programs give young people a unique chance to experience the workings of Congress firsthand, and I fully support Congressman Pepper's efforts to expand the workshop's vital mission.

Too often our great Nation and its democratic form of government are taken for granted. In reality, we are blessed to be able to participate in the governing of our country and the determination of our future. Billions of people do not have that right. Whole nations of the world exclude their people from voicing their political beliefs. America is different and it has been since 1776.

Claude Pepper knew and appreciated our democratic heritage. He fought against the forces he believed threatened our Nation and he also fought to teach our young people about the Government they are privileged to live under.

As a salute to Claude and Mildred Pepper and to the beliefs for which they stood, I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to pass H.R. 2666, the Mildred and Claude Pepper Scholarship Act.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to express my support for H.R. 2666, legislation authorizing the Education Department to make grants to the Washington Workshop Foundation to establish the Mildred and Claude Pepper Scholarship Program.

This legislation would authorize a program of scholarships to hearing-impaired or otherwise physically disabled secondary school students, who are also economically disadvantaged, allowing them to participate in the Washington workshops' congressional seminars, diplomacy and global affairs seminars, and the Congressional internship Program. The congressional seminar is an academically oriented program of instruction on the American national Government. The Global Affairs Seminar offers students a better understanding of the national and international organizations in Washington and how they help in the formulation of foreign policy and global affairs. It is also expected that through the Pepper Scholarship Program 25 hearing-impaired students would be able to participate in a 3-week internship in a congressional office.

This outstanding program was very important to the late Congressman Claude Pepper, and I would urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this legislation.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KOSTMAYER). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2666.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 2666, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 2742, the Library Services and Construction Act Amendments of 1989. The Library Services and Construction Act was the first, and continues to be the largest, Federal program of assistance specifically for public libraries. The act is designed to assist libraries in extending and improving services, to provide some support for library construction and renovation, to promote sharing of resources among libraries, to improve services to Native Americans and to support library literacy programs.

It is important to note that while this legislation makes few changes to the existing law, it was drafted with the White House Conference on Libraries in mind. A portion of the funding needed for the 1990 conference has already been appropriated and planning for State and local level meetings that will precede the national meeting has already begun. This conference process will provide the Congress with a comprehensive assessment of the needs of our Nation's libraries. The recommendations that will come from this meeting will serve as the basis for the next reauthorization of the LSCA programs in 1994.

H.R. 2742 broadens the current Library Services and Construction Act to encourage the use of new technologies to improve library services, adds additional literacy and child-centered activities in title I, and includes a variety of technical amendments to increase flexibility and efficiency to the programs. It also provides public libraries with the opportunity to become more involved with preservation efforts.

This legislation was reported favorably by the Committee on Education and Labor and I urge my colleagues to join me supporting H.R. 2742.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to support, under suspension of the rules, H.R. 2742 the Library Services and Construction Act Amendments of 1989.

H.R. 2742 has strong bipartisan support. The LSCA Amendments of 1989 have been supported by the testimony of State and local librarians during hearings and have been endorsed by the American Library Association, representing over 48,000 librarians throughout the Nation.

The legislation makes technical changes to the LSCA, adds a new title IV, for assessment and evaluation of current programs, which was requested by the administration, and adds a new title VIII, for competitive grants for "family learning centers" providing family-oriented services in each State. Title VIII cannot be funded until all other titles have been funded.

The Library Services and Construction Act provides the majority of funds directly to State library agencies, which then tailor library programs which are responsive to the current, local needs of libraries in that State. Additionally, LSCA leverages State and local funds for public libraries, enlarging the impact of federally appropriated moneys.

An example is the current challenge to libraries as they seek to cope with the high costs of implementing computer and information-sharing technology. As an example in Missouri, funding through the LSCA has made possible the creation of a statewide database of library materials. Computers have been placed in 117 libraries, which access over 6 million items of the shared resources of public, academic, and school libraries.

LSCA funds are critical to the continued expansion of access to library materials and services, through such resource sharing, improved delivery of materials, and through expanded services for the elderly and visually impaired.

This legislation will also assist libraries in coping with the growing problem of illiteracy in American communities. In Missouri, LSCA has provided roughly $1.5 million in the last year for grants for literacy programs in libraries, for materials, for training volunteer tutors, and for the coordination of literacy activities with other agencies working to combat illiteracy.

The Library Services and Construction Act Amendments of 1989 continue to provide both State and local librarians with the expanded resources and the flexibility to respond to these and other problems, such as the preservation of deteriorating library holdings and materials.

I join Chairman WILLIAMS in supporting the extension of the LSCA and the important library services it supports throughout the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

□ 1510

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2742, to extend and amend the Library Services and Construction Act. Permit me to commend the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, Mr. HAWKINS, and the ranking minority member, Mr. GOODLING, for bringing this measure to the floor. I would also like to recognize the sponsor of this legislation Mr. WILLIAMS, the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Post-Secondary Education, and the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, Mr. TOM COLEMAN, for their efforts in drafting this legislation.

H.R. 2742 authorizes critically important funding to ensure the continuing provision of assistance under the Library Services and Construction Act, the largest Federal program supporting public library services. The legislation includes $201.5 million in funding for fiscal year 1990 which will be distributed to States and localities through either a formula or on a direct grant basis.

Under the formula basis for distribution, $100 million for library services is included, along with $55 million for library construction and technology enhancement, and $35 million for interlibrary cooperation and resource sharing. Funds under this section of H.R. 2742 will be available to local libraries through their State governments. In addition, local and community institutions may apply directly to the U.S. Department of Education for grant subsidies. In this category, H.R. 2742 includes $1 million for foreign language materials acquisition and $10 million for library literacy programs.

Mr. Speaker, we are well aware of the tremendous need for Federal financial assistance to benefit our local library programs. Throughout the Nation and in my own 22d Congressional District, public libraries fulfill a critical role in the educational process. Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support this important public resource by voting in favor of H.R. 2742.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my support for this bill which will enhance the Nation's libraries. Even in a time of deficits and scarcity, this authorization is one that deserves approval.

This is one Government service which can be used by all our citizens. Use of the services requires some exertion on the part of users, and that is a good thing. Those efforts pay huge rewards to those citizens who avail themselves of library services. Diligent scholars, casual readers, and new readers, young and old, can all find treasures in a library, and benefit from services provided by library staff.

While the Federal role in library services is a minor one, it is nonetheless, an important one. The heavy load is borne locally, but the Federal Government must be the cheerleader and coordinator.

The Library Services and Construction Act is very important to the Federal efforts to promote libraries. I heartily support its goal and these amendments to the act.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I join Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. COLEMAN in supporting the reauthorization of the Library Services and Construction Act, which, since its inception in 1965, has become the largest, single Federal program supporting public libraries services.

The Library Services and Construction Act Amendments of 1989 are essentially technical changes, made upon the recommendations of the library community, including the Pennsylvania State Librarian Sara A. Parker, who testified before the Subcommittee on Postsecondary Education during its oversight hearing in April of this year.

Libraries are a vital part of the community, and one of the virtues of the LSCA is that States are given the flexibility to tailor-make programs to meet local needs and priorities.

Additionally, Federal library funds provide seed money to extend the reach of libraries: to expand access to library materials and programs, particularly in rural areas; to leverage overcrowded and run-down facilities; to augment State funds for the installation of computer technology and information-sharing systems, which are crucial to libraries in this age of information; and to provide increased funds for literacy programs and materials.

This bill creates authority for statewide preservation plans for deteriorating library books and documents. Because Pennsylvania has some of the oldest libraries in the Nation, with some collections going back almost 250 years, the need for such a preservation program has been long felt.

Further, the amendments to the LSCA strengthen the coordination between the States and the Department of Education, and provide an additional title for evaluation and assessment," incorporating one of the central recommendations of the administration's own library bill, which I introduced by request. Although some of the other recommendations made by the administration were not adopted, this is due, in large measure, to the bipartisan decision to await the outcome of the White House Conference on Libraries before making fundamental changes in the Federal role in expanding and improving library services.

I can think of no better close than quoting the Pennsylvania State Library Advisory Council, LSCA funds comprise a major source of innovative funding in Pennsylvania * * * rarely does a Federal program receive such overwhelming support by both professionals and users as does LSCA. I urge my colleagues to support the passage of this bill.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, today I wish to offer my support for H.R. 2742, which reauthorizes and amends important programs under the Library Services and Construction Act through fiscal year 1994.

I am very pleased that the intent of legislation which I introduced for intergenerational library literacy services, H.R. 957, has been incorporated into H.R. 2742. This provision amends title I to allow programs for assisting libraries in developing intergenerational library programs that will match older volunteers with libraries interested in developing after school literacy and reading skills programs for unsupervised school children during afterschool hours.

Across our Nation, more and more children are being left unattended in libraries after school because of the lack of adequate, affordable day care. Library staff time is increasingly being spent in ensuring that these children do not disturb other children or damage library property. According to a 1988 report prepared by the Service to Children Committee of the Public Library Association, a division of the American Library Association, "what to do with and about library latchkey children has become one of the most rapidly developing public policy arenas." In Los Angeles County, a 1985 survey found about 2,000 children a day whose parents used libraries as an after school center.

Using older volunteers in intergenerational library literacy programs is a positive way to address this problem. As the ranking minority member of the House Aging Subcommittee on Human Services which has oversight responsibility over older American volunteer programs, I am very much aware of the significant and meaningful contributions which these older individuals make to the lives of others, to their communities and to the Nation. We know that libraries are committed to helping children and it is appropriate that they be given volunteer assistance for expanding and enriching services such as clubs, events, and programs for unsupervised children after school. This intergenerational approach will also utilize the vast talents and knowledge of older adults to help a new generation to grow and develop as literate, informed adults.

Through this legislation, I hope that States and local community libraries will be encouraged to develop new intergenerational programs to constructively address the situation of latchkey children which has been a longstanding concern of librarians who serve young people. I also wish to thank the members of the committee, the American Library Association, the National Extension Homemakers Council, the American Home Economics Association, the National Association of Retired Senior Volunteer Program Directors, and the National Organization of Women for their support of legislation for intergenerational library literacy programs.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of H.R. 2742, a bill to extend and amend the Library Services and Construction Act.

As a member of the Education and Labor Committee, it was my privilege to have been involved in this reauthorization process, and to have had the opportunity to reaffirm my commitment to meet the needs of public libraries at all levels, including construction, renovation, and equipment needs. The bill before us today has been broadened to meet the needs of our special populations such as the physically disabled, the elderly, and the illiterate.

I am pleased to say that the State of West Virginia has, under the leadership of the State Library Commissioner Frederick Glazer who has served under both Democratic and Republican Governors for many years, expanded and extended library programs throughout rural, remote West Virginia so that all individuals no matter their walk in life, would have access to library services. Our State legislature has cooperated, year in and year out, to do its part to assure adequate funding to benefit libraries across our State, and has provided funding that would also meet the maintenance of effort requirement necessary for it to receive Federal LSCA title I funds.

When enacted in 1965, only one in six Americans had adequate access to a public library. Today, more than 90 percent of Americans have some access to library services. The Library Services and Construction Act has gone further to assist States in improving library services for special populations than any other Federal program.

It pleases me also to note that the Congress has approved legislation calling for the Second White House Conference on Libraries and Information Sciences. This national conference is to be preceded by meetings at the local, State and regional levels, involving participants from not only the library profession but also draws on the general public. It is the intent of the Education and Labor Committee, on which I serve, to give careful consideration to the recommendations of the White House Conference in the 1994 reauthorization of the LSCA. For that reason, the committee refrained from making significant modifications to the act until after this important conference.

One significant change, however, is the inclusion of a new title VIII to provide for family learning centers in libraries. The Secretary is authorized to make grants to the States to award competitively one family learning center per State. The center will encourage libraries to provide family oriented services to promote lifetime learning and family involvement in education. Funds may be used to purchase resources and materials in both print and electronic formats in such areas as child care, child development, nutrition, parenting skills, and job and career information.

The committee bill makes slight changes to title II, the construction title of LSCA, allowing the use of funds to expand the focus from the construction and renovation of public libraries to include their enhancement through technology, in order that residents in even the smallest communities will have access to a global information network.

It is my hope that before the fiscal year 1990 appropriations process is concluded, that title II LSCA funds for construction will have been reinstated in the appropriation measure for the continued benefit of the states.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is appropriate to state my hope and expectation that Postal Revenue Foregone will receive adequate funding in order to continue the commitment we made, dating back to the earliest days of the Republic, to promote the dissemination of information throughout the Nation through free and reduced rate postage for certain preferred classes of mail. Those who benefit from free and reduced rate postage include the blind and visually handicapped, local newspapers, libraries, schools and colleges, and religious, charitable, and other nonprofit organizations who qualify for free matter for the blind, and for other purposes. The effect of reduced, inadequate appropriations for Postal Revenue Foregone will be to see an immediate increase in postal rates to make up the difference. It is important to keep in mind that even if legislation is enacted into law which takes the U.S. Postal Service off-budget, such legislation will not include Postal Revenue Foregone, which will continue on-budget and be subject to the appropriations process. Loss of this subsidy will spell disaster for many libraries, schools and colleges, both large and small.

I commend this bill, H.R. 2742, to my colleagues and hope that it do pass.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to voice my support for the passage of the Library Services and Construction Amendments. This legislation contains many important components that are critical to the continued excellence of our libraries back at home in our local communities.

I want to thank my subcommittee chairman, Congressman PAT WILLIAMS, for his leadership on this legislation. He has been able to create a strong coalition of bipartisan support for the Library Services and Construction Amendments. This broad support is important as we face the rising demands for continuing, lifelong educational opportunities. I feel that our libraries can step up to help and continue to fill this need. This legislation provides our libraries with many of the economic tools to do so.

In particular, I would like to point out and support the increase in the maximum award for literacy program grants from $25,000 to $35,000. This is a program that has made lasting impressions on communities all across my district and the Nation as well. In our continuing fight against illiteracy the local libraries have stepped into the fray to address the needs and provide the services and support for millions of adults that are seeking out some form of help.

We in the Government may be able to theorize about how to make a difference in the fight for a more literate society but it is our libraries that are doing it day in and day out. They provide the consistent thread of literacy throughout our society.

This authorization is one that we must support if we are serious about addressing the problems that illiteracy presents. My only regret is that we are unwilling to provide an even greater level of assistance to our libraries. We need to see more outreach services funded for our libraries and we need to see even greater access to adequate funding in order to acquire updated equipment. We need the money for bricks and mortar, but that by itself is not enough. For a library to be effective we must have more than just a shell we must be able to fill it with talented people and the required technology.

I applaud the fine work that has gone into the writing of this legislation and I hope that it only wets the appetite of this House for more innovative library programs.

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2742, the Library Services and Construction Amendments.

In 1989, the United States of America lags behind almost all other Western industrial nations in the percentage of our citizens who can read and write. My colleagues and I on the Education and Labor Committee want to reverse that trend and this bill is one part of our overall plan to increase literacy.

With the exception of the Nation's schools, there is no institution in the Nation which is doing more to promote literacy than our Nation's libraries. Librarians across the country serve on the frontlines of the war on illiteracy.

Free or inexpensive reading classes are one of the many uses which many of our libraries serve. Libraries also provide countless hours of entertainment for Americans of all ages. They provide braille and talking books for the blind, books in foreign languages for students, scientists, and immigrants, and they host and participate in a wide range of community activities.

Unfortunately, for all the benefits which libraries provide, many are in dire financial straits. Many small and rural libraries have difficulty making their payrolls and keeping up with their expenses. Some have so much trouble that they are unable to expand or even maintain their collections.

Books are the record and hallmark of civilization, and access to books and library services is crucial. H.R. 2742 is designed to improve those services and to expand them to groups which have not been included in the past. I thank my colleague, Congressman WILLIAMS, for his efforts on this bill and I urge all of my colleagues to support its passage.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KOSTMAYER). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2742, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 2742, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 982, the bill presently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 982, the Postal Reorganization Act Amendments of 1989, is the bill which will move the United States Postal Service "off budget."

Unhappily, I am managing this bill today only because of the untimely and tragic loss of our colleague, MICKEY LELAND. H.R 982 is MICKEY's bill. He managed similar legislation last year which passed the House 390 to 16. He skillfully shepherded this year's off-budget bill through subcommittee and committee and gathered 366 colleagues as cosponsors of the bill.

H.R. 982 will return the Postal Service to the off-budget status it enjoyed prior to 1985. Mr. Speaker, there are only 55 Members left who were here when the House considered the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970. That act was designed to remove politics from the Post Office and transform an inefficient, highly subsidized, Government agency into an independent Government corporation required by law to operate in a businesslike manner and to break even.

Shortly before reorganization, the Post Office Department had a budget of $9.1 billion and received appropriations of about $1.4 billion. Next year, the Postal Service budget will approach $40 billion, and the Service will receive an appropriation of less than $500 million. Nine out of every $10 appropriated goes to reduce the rates paid by preferred mailers. The remaining appropriated money pays for liabilities incurred by the old Post Office Department before passage of the Reorganization Act. Today, no money is appropriated to pay for the costs of delivering the mail. Those costs are paid by postal ratepayers. And the Postal Service, as required by law, is breaking even over the long haul.

A 1985 administrative action by then OMB Director David Stockman has impaired the ability of the Postal Service to operate in a businesslike manner. Director Stockman included the receipts and expenses of the Postal Service in the fiscal year 1986 Federal budget. So, those receipts and disbursements now, at least on paper, affect the Federal deficit. If the Postal Service reduces spending, the deficit is reduced by a corresponding amount. Similarly, if the Postal Service increases rates, its receipts increase and the deficit is reduced by a corresponding amount. This is all a fiction of course. In reality, the postal finances do not affect this country's long term deficit since, over time, the Service breaks even. By law, it cannot operate at a deficit, and hence it does not contribute to the Government's deficit.

However, now that it is on budget, the Postal Service has become a target of the budgeteers. The 1987 Budget Reconciliation Act required the Service to reduce its expenses by $1.245 billion. More than $800 million of that amount was mandated to come from reduced capital spending. I know each one of you has at least one post office construction project in your district which has been delayed or cancelled because of the 1987 act. Nationwide, more than 700 projects were affected.

The 1987 act also required $430 million in operating expense reductions. This led to Saturday closings, reduced window hours, and the end of Sunday mail processing, among other things.

Why did the Congress, at the administration's urging, agree to disrupt postal operations? Because, on paper at least, the $1.245 billion "hit" on the Postal Service reduced the Federal deficit by a corresponding amount.

This year some budgeteers want to take another bite out of the Postal Service. The administration has taken the position that the Budget Summit Agreement assumes $400 million in postal reforms. In other words, it wants the Postal Service to give $400 million of ratepayers' money to the Treasury. The Committee on Post Office and Civil Service has said "No, we won't do that. It's not good policy, and it will accelerate the next rate increase. We'll find the money somewhere else." This still has to be worked out in the reconciliation process, but I am hopeful we can avoid another hit on the Postal Service.

□ 1520

By the passage of this bill we will get us out, finally, out of the game of playing post office. I was here, Mr. HORTON was here, in the days before the Postal Corporation. I was one who quite vigorously opposed Mr. Nixon's bill to create the Postal Corporation. I was hard-headed about it and could not be convinced that that post office would ever get into a position where it could pay its own way and not have a continuing subsidy from the taxpayers.

I have been proved to be wrong, and I am proud of the fact that I have been proved to be wrong because it has now been 7 years since the taxpayers have had to pony up to keep that business going. It is doing very well indeed even though this year on paper it is going to show a tremendous loss.

Now I think Mr. HORTON would agree with me that anybody who was here to play post office in the old days does not want to go back to playing that game again. I can promise you, going back to the good old days of the politics of post office is not the good old days at all. What we were gradually doing over recent years was being brought back in through the back door into the business of making political decisions so that we were taking the heat for business that Mr. Nixon got us out of.

It was clear to MICKEY LELAND, and to at least 366 other Members who cosponsored H.R. 982, that the Postal Service should not be caught up in our annual, or sometimes biennial, budget battles. The Postal Service's contribution to deficit reduction is on paper only, but the costs to the Postal Service and the American public in terms of disruptions and operating reductions are very, very real.

As I mentioned earlier, under MICKEY LELAND's leadership this bill received the support of 390 Members last year. This year it deserves the support of each and every one of us.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD], the chairman of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, has explained, H.R. 982 is a very important piece of legislation. Its principal sponsor was MICKEY LELAND.

I was the ranking member of the subcommittee.

Mr. Speaker, at the risk of contradicting myself, I am troubled and sad as I rise in support of H.R. 982, which will remove the U.S. Postal Service from the unified Federal budget. Neither the content nor the scope of this legislation gives me cause for concern. My dilemma is personal.

Not too many weeks ago, I envisioned a format where I would share with the chief sponsor of this worthwhile legislation principal responsibility for its passage in this body. Unfortunately, a tragic plane crash has forced a revision of the script, but it has not lessened the need for enactment of this bill.

If our dearly departed friend and colleague, MICKEY LELAND, were present, he would be leading the charge and asking for an overwhelming majority vote for H.R. 982. As principal Republican sponsor of the bill, I am happy to pick up the torch which was lighted and carried forward by MICKEY. Passage of this bill will represent a huge step toward a return to normalcy in postal financial operations.

When the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970 transformed the old Post Office Department into the U.S. Postal Service, it created a quasi-independent, business-oriented enterprise. It subsequently was placed on off-budget status, an arrangement which permitted the fledgling Postal Service to progress and prosper.

In 1985, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, David Stockman, succeeded in moving the Postal Service from off-budget to on-budget status. Since the Postal Service was operating at a surplus, the move permitted Mr. Stockman to reduce the overall deficit.

Obviously, when the Postal Service is on-budget its receipts reduce the Federal deficit and its expenditures increase the deficit.

As a result of 1987 budget summitry, the 1987 Reconciliation Act required the Postal Service to reduce operating expenditures by $430 million and capital spending by $815 million over a 2-year period. The result was a deferral of more than 700 construction projects and reductions in service such as the closing of retail service windows. Those cutbacks had a severe impact on postal operations in fiscal years 1988 and 1989.

There is a difference in postal and Federal accounting practices which distorts the Federal deficit. The Postal Service has an accrual accounting system which follows generally accepted accounting principles where capital expenditures are depreciated over the assets' useful life. For example, a $5 million postal facility expected to last 20 years would show a postal expenditure of $250,000 a year. The Federal Government operates on a cash basis, so the same facility would be listed as a $5 million expenditure in a single year.

H.R. 982 was referred to both the Post Office and Civil Service and Government Operations Committees. Both committees held hearings on the legislation and both reported the bill unanimously to the full House. I played a unique role in the consideration of this bill. I am the only Member, on both sides of the aisle, serving on the respective subcommittees and committees of jurisdiction.

From the perspective of both committees, the bill makes sense. It is consistent with the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970, which was the subject of interest to me and members of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee. It is consistent, too, with responsible Federal budget policy, which was the specific issue of interest to me and Members of the Government Operations Committee.

Both committees unanimously reported the legislation to the full House and practically every member of both committees is a cosponsor. The broad bipartisan support for H.R. 982 is further demonstrated by its 360 cosponsors.

Mr. Speaker, the bill benefits the Postal Service by allowing it to meet its statutory responsibility to operate in a businesslike manner. It benefits the Federal Government by not having Postal Service expenditures, which are funded totally through its rate structure, reflected as part of the Federal deficit. And it is sound public policy.

Mr. Speaker, I commend Chairman FORD for bringing this legislation to the floor and for his leadership in helping steer it through his committee. I also want to commend Government Operations Committee Chairman CONYERS for his support and leadership on that committee. I would ask that I be allowed to include in the RECORD following my remarks the statement of Chairman CONYERS in support of H.R. 982.

□ 1530

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 982, the Postal Reorganization Act Amendments of 1989. This bill, which has also been reported by the Government Operations Committee, moves the Postal Service off-budget and thereby unlocks the fiscal handcuffs that currently shackle the service and make it a hostage of the budget process.

The Postal Service is a unique governmental entity. It sells a service—mail delivery—and functions on a self-sufficient, user-funded basis. Moreover, it operates nationwide, serving virtually every individual and business in the United States.

To perform this invaluable role in a businesslike and cost-effective manner, the Service must be free from political pressures unrelated to its operations. Mail delivery should respond to the demands of Postal Service customers—it should not be scaled up or down depending on Federal budget considerations. Moreover, postal services are fully funded by postage rates. Thus, the Postal Service does not contribute to the Federal deficit, and therefore should not be included in deficit reduction plans.

On-budget treatment leaves the Postal Service all too vulnerable to budgetary pressures to hike revenues by jacking-up postal rates or to cut expenditures by slashing services or cancelling or deferring critical capital investments.

The Federal budget uses cash basis accounting—rather than the more businesslike accrual method used by the Postal Service—and thus does not allow for capitalizing plants, equipment, and facilities over their useful life. As a result, $1 of capital investment is treated in the budget the same as $1 of short-term operating expenses. Given the massive capital investments the Postal Service must make each year to assure continued effective operation, this budgetary treatment spells disaster. Simply put, the Service's capital expenditures show up in the budget as deficit spending and thus become a tempting target for the long knives of the budget-cutters.

H.R. 982 was referred jointly to the Post Office and Civil Service Committee and the Government Operations Committee. My legislation and National Security Subcommittee held hearings on the bill last month. The testimony of the Postmaster General and our other witnesses vividly illustrated the folly of operating the Postal Service to meet deficit-reduction goals rather than sound postal policy.

In 1970, with passage of the Postal Reorganization Act, Congress gave the Postal Service a mandate to operate as a economically self-sufficient, quasi-independent Government agency. To further assist the Service in meeting this goal, Congress removed it from the Federal budget in fiscal 1974. From fiscal year 1974 to fiscal year 1985, the Postal Service made great strides in both service and productivity.

In 1985, however, the Postal Service was taken hostage by OMB Director David Stockman. In an effort to use the Services' budget surpluses to offset the Reagan administration's massive deficits, Mr. Stockman, administratively, placed the Postal Service back on-budget. This blatantly political move simply set the stage for a bloody raid on the Postal Service fund.

That raid took place 2 years later with passage of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987. The act directed the Postal Service to transfer $465 million from the Postal Service fund to a newly established escrow fund. Moreover, it stipulated that those moneys would not be available for 1 fiscal year. The Reconciliation Act also directed the Service to divert money from its operating funds to the Federal Employee Health Benefits Funds.

These unexpected and unwarranted fiscal burdens on the Postal Service led to the cutbacks in window hours and other services that so many of us have heard our constituents complain about. While, less visible to the public, the long-term affects on the Postal Services' capital investment program were even more serious, as critical efforts to upgrade outdated plants, equipment, and facilities were delayed.

The Postal Service is at a crossroads and we must determine its future path. We can continue to let the Service be held hostage by the budget process, or we can unlock those fiscal handcuffs and set it free to enter the 21st century as an efficient, cost-effective provider of essential services. For me the choice is obvious, and I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important legislation.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the ranking Republican on the Committee of Post Office and Civil Service, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of H.R. 982, legislation to amend title 39, United States Code, with respect to the budgetary treatment of the Postal Service Fund, and for other purposes, a bill initially introduced by our distinguished deceased colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LELAND], along with our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD], and the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. HORTON], and which I was pleased to cosponsor.

The primary purpose of the bill is to provide that transactions of the U.S. Postal Service [USPS] shall not be included within the President's budget or the congressional budget and shall not be counted in calculating the Federal deficit, thereby moving the Postal Service "off budget."

From 1973 to 1985 the Postal Service was taken off budget. In 1985, David Stockman, the then Director of OMB, put it back on. He did this because the Postal Service was running a surplus and it would make the Federal deficit appear smaller. It was only early in 1988 when the Budget Reconciliation Act became law that monetary demands were placed on the Postal Service.

In fiscal year 1987, the Postal Service budget exceeded $32 billion and not $1 of taxpayer money was appropriated for postal operations.

What this means is that the profits reaped making the Postal Service efficent and cost-effective goes into paying off cost overruns for other sectors of the budget that are not as cost conscious as the Postal Service.

The Postal Service was operating in the black. It is wrong to squeeze it dry to pay for the mistakes made by others.

We will long remember MICKEY LELAND's devoted efforts in making our Postal Service one of the best throughout the world. Accordingly, I support H.R. 982 and as a tribute to our former colleague, MICKEY LELAND, I urge my colleagues to fully support this measure.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the chairman of the Subcommittee on Postal Personnel and Modernization, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MCCLOSKEY].

Mr. MCCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, this legislation is crucial not only to efficiency in the Postal Service but our overall Nation's economic progress.

The U.S. Postal Service needs to be able to plan and implement long range goals to ensure that it can meet future business needs. Our mail system is the most widely used, inexpensive form of communication which reaches virtually every household in America. The system needs to constructively respond to changes and growth in our economy and population. H.R. 982 will help the U.S. Postal Service meet the needs of American businesses and the general mailing public.

Two years ago, the U.S. Postal Service was subject to unprecedented cuts imposed by Congress, under the orchestration of the Office of Management and Budget [OMB]. Due to OMB's insistence on what would be scorable savings and what would not be scorable, the House and Senate conferees for the budget reconciliation reluctantly agreed to require the Postal Service to write two checks totaling over $1.2 billion to the Treasury.

As a result of these actions, the Postal Service and the American people are still suffering from the lack of needed postal facilities and other major capital improvements.

This bill is necessary to protect the U.S. Postal Service from political attempts to utilize its budget to hide a deficit which is not the fault of the U.S. Postal Service, a self-funding agency.

H.R. 982 is identical to H.R. 4150 which passed the House during the last Congress by a vote of 390 to 16, except that it does not provide increased borrowing authority for the U.S. Postal Service. H.R. 982 simply states that the Postal Service shall not be included in the President's budget for the purpose of calculating the Federal deficit, and that the fund shall not be taken into account in making calculations under the 1985 Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Deficit Control Act.

Pragmatic constraints have required belt tightening in all aspects of the Federal Government's operations. However, the Postal Service provides an essential service throughout the Nation, 6 days a week. We are seriously impairing the Postal Service's future ability to perform this vital service.

Necessary postal facility construction has been dramatically curtailed as a result of restrictions on the capital budget. Basic customer services were also curtailed due to restrictions on operating costs.

The Postal Reorganization Act of 1971 mandates that the Postal Service operate in a self-supporting, business-like manner. On-budget treatment of the Postal Service makes this impossible. This bill will simply ensure that the Postal Service will be able to make long-range plans and budget accordingly without fear of political intervention.

H.R. 982 is needed to ensure the fiscal integrity of the Postal Service. Passage of this legislation is a strong affirmation that Congress will not sacrifice an effective National Postal System. We must balance our Federal budget, but using the Postal Service to mask the deficit is bad policy.

H.R. 982 was introduced by my distinguished colleague on the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, MICKEY LELAND. MICKEY's postal leadership and his concern for postal employees will long be remembered. This bill was one of his major priorities and by considering this legislation today, the House is honoring his memory.

I also commend Chairman BILL FORD for leadership in this effort. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 982.

□ 1540

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE].

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, today, H.R. 982, the Postal Service Reorganization Act Amendments of 1989, comes before the House under suspension of the rules. H.R. 982 removes the Postal Service from the President's budget and from use in calculating the Federal deficit. I strongly support this measure and respectfully seek the support of my colleagues in seeing that this change is implemented.

From 1973 through 1985, the Postal Service was not considered part of the unified budget. In fact, the President's budget in 1973 noted that the "treatment of the Postal Service * * * reflects its independence from Federal control." Unfortunately, in 1985 OMB placed the Postal Service back on budget. Then, in 1987 budget summit required the Postal Service to reduce operating expenses and its capital spending regardless of its independent business judgment. This kind of micromanagement leads to underinvestment in facilities and equipment which dramatically affects service to the public.

In addition to micromanagement, other accounting difficulties have detracted from an accurate picture of postal resources. The U.S. Postal Service operates on an accrual accounting basis while the Federal budget uses a cash accounting basis. While the Postal Service's accounting method recognizes money spent for capital improvements, the Federal budget considers these expenditures as operating losses contributing to the Federal deficit. The on-budget status of the Postal Service contributes to the confusion over the amount of the Federal deficit.

As a newly appointed member of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, I ask my colleagues to join me in supporting H.R. 982, the Postal Service Reorganization Act Amendments of 1989. As originally passed in 1970, the Postal Reorganization Act freed the old Post Office Department from patronage and political manipulation. The Postal Service is a business and must be given the opportunity to operate on a business cycle. Only by returning the Postal Service to off-budget status may this be accomplished.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 982, a bill to move the U.S. Postal Service off-budget.

In 1970, the Postal Reorganization Act established an independent U.S. Postal Service and created the Postal Service fund, a revolving fund in the U.S. Treasury. The fund consists of revenues received by the Postal Service for services it provides, amounts borrowed, and any other Postal Service receipts. Each year, Congress appropriates to the fund an additional amount to reimburse the Service for the delivery of free and reduced-rate mail under what is known as the postal revenue forgone appropriation.

Under current law, with the Postal Service on budget any surplus in the Postal Service fund reduces the Federal deficit and, conversely, any deficit in the Postal Service fund increases the Federal deficit.

The House passed nearly identical legislation last year, Mr. Speaker, by a vote of 390 to 16. The only difference between last year's bill and the one before us today is that this bill does not contain the provision that would have increased the borrowing authority fo the U.S. Postal Service.

Further, the bill would not apply to the Postal Service for revenue forgone, which would continue to remain subject to any automatic deficit reduction that might be ordered under the Gramm-Rudman Act.

Mr. Speaker, as a cosponsor of H.R. 982, I am fully supportive of this effort to take the U.S. Postal Service off-budget, and hope that my colleagues will join me in assuring passage of the bill.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my strong support for H.R. 982, to take the Postal Service off budget. As a long-time cosponsor of this legislation, I know how important this bill is to the thousands of postal workers across our Nation.

In the past few years, the Postal Service has been the target of budget cuts that have harmed its workers and affected its ability to provide its vital service to the American public. Although the Postal Service does not contribute to the Federal deficit, it has been considered fair game for legislators wielding the budget-cutting axe. Restoring the Postal Service to its former off-budget status is necessary to prevent against further budget cuts.

The Postal Service is unique in the extent to which it affects and is affected by the general public. Unlike any other Government fund, the Postal Service provides an essential public service to virtually everyone in the country on a daily basis. Other Federal programs can control their costs by regulating the extent to which the public has access to and utilizes their services. But the Postal Service has no control over the volume of mail or the extent to which the public uses the postal system. It is a universal service, open to all. This makes the Postal Service far more sensitive to arbitrary budget cuts. When its operating budget is cut, the Postal Service has no choice but to reduce the level of service it provides. This has a direct and almost immediate impact on the general public.

This is why it is essential that the Postal Service be moved off budget. This is the only way to protect postal workers and ensure that the Postal Service is able to continue to provide the best possible service to the American public.

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Speaker, Today I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting H.R. 982, a bill to remove the U.S. Postal Service from the Federal budget.

The Postal Service provides service to every community in our Nation. It delivers over 150 billion pieces of mail annually usually within 24 hours from the time the Postal Service receives the mail and it does all of this at an average cost of 25 cents to the customer.

H.R. 982 restores the Postal Service to the commonsense budget status it enjoyed just a few years ago. That status was removed as a quick-fix accounting gimmick. This bill recognizes the unique quality of the Postal Service—it is self-sufficient and pays its own bills by selling postal services. The only appropriations it receives are from revenue forgone as mandated by Congress. No longer will it be forced to cut back necessary services.

Instead, the Postal Service can dedicate funds to improve its facilities and service to their customers, just as any other business operation would. With the increasing volume of mail, this is a necessity if the Postal Service is to maintain its high quality of service.

I believe that postal service to our constituents and to the American people in general must not be compromised. By adopting this legislation, we can help to ensure that that service remains available to all Americans. H.R. 982 is a most important measure and I urge its passage.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose H.R. 982, which would remove the Postal Service from the Federal budget. Separately enacting H.R. 982 is unnecessary because it will be included in the reconciliation bill we will consider later this month. In addition, classifying the Postal Service as off budget would create a bad precedent in terms of budget policy and would be inconsistent with the bipartisan budget agreement for 1990 and the 1990 budget resolution unless it is accompanied by reforms similar to those assumed in the budget.

It is unnecessary to consider the bill today. Both the Post Office and Civil Service and Governmental Affairs Committees have included the text of H.R. 982 in their reconciliation submissions to the Budget Committee. The reconciliation bill will be approved during the next few weeks because its enactment is necessary to prevent across-the-board sequestration reductions from going into effect in October. We expect the reconciliation bill to be on the House floor in about 2 weeks.

In general, the Budget Committee opposes excluding any agency or program from the Federal budget because it is improper budget policy. It is an evasion of budget discipline and often results in the programs and agencies remaining "on budget" receiving larger spending reductions in order to meet overall deficit targets. Further, classifying an agency or program as off budget makes the budget a less accurate measure of the fiscal position of the Federal Government within the whole economy.

It is true that the bipartisan budget agreement and the 1990 budget resolution assumed that the Postal Service would be classified as off budget. However, the bipartisan agreement and the budget resolution also assumed that significant reforms or reductions in the indirect subsidies going to the Postal Service from the Treasury would be enacted at the same time. Without the reforms, the bipartisan budget agreement would not have assumed that the Postal Service would be put off budget. H.R. 982 does not contain any of the reforms assumed in the budget agreement.

Whatever postal reforms are to be enacted will be included in the pending reconciliation bill. That is why it would be more appropriate to act on H.R. 982 in the context of reconciliation. Classifying the Postal Service as off budget without any reforms would be improper budget procedure and would be inconsistent with the bipartisan budget agreement and the 1990 budget resolution.

For these reasons, I oppose enactment of H.R. 982 as separate legislation. I ask you to join me in deferring any decision about putting the Postal Service off budget until the reconciliation bill is considered by opposing H.R. 982 today.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, when the bipartisan budget agreement was put together, it was agreed that the Post Office could go off budget if about a half billion dollars in savings could be realized.

H.R. 982 does the easy part. It takes the Post Office off budget. Unfortunately neither it, nor the Post Office Committee's reconciliation bill does the hard part.

It is often said that an agreement is an agreement. H.R. 982 is half an agreement, and the easy half at that. As such it is not worthy of support.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, in the 100th and 101st Congresses, I supported a return of the Postal Service to the off-budget status that it maintained prior to fiscal year 1986. That year, the Postal Service was put back on budget in still another jerry-rigging of the numbers to make the deficit appear smaller than it actually was. The U.S. Postal Service [USPS] should have remained off budget, and the deficit figures, that much more honest. I strongly support the intent of this legislation.

But, as part of its nationwide cost-saving effort, the USPS has recently been engaged in pushing out private stamp vending through promotions such as installations of postal stations in department stores and malls. As a result, the private postage stamp vending industry is literally being put out of business. Vendors have been forced to remove their machines from retail centers, as consumers have begun to purchase stamps at face value at former machine locations. According to the International Association of Postage Stamp Vendors, headquartered in my district, over 1,200 vending machines had to be removed by vendors in 1988, with losses of over $1 million in sales.

It is clear ot me that the viability of the postage stamp vending industry is being threatened by the expansion of the USPS into what had previously been the private sector. Thus, while I support H.R. 982, provisions should be made to prevent the encroachment of the USPS into the market of the private vendors of postage stamps.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I have no additional requests for time. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 982, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have no additional requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KOSTMAYER). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 982.

The question was taken.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5 of rule I and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report on the bill, H.R. 2696, as well as the Senate amendments reported in disagreement, and that I may include extraneous material and tables.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2696, ENERGY AND WATER DEVELOPMENT APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1990

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 2696) making appropriations for energy and water development for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the conference report is considered as having been read.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of September 7, 1989.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BEVILL) will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MYERS] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BEVILL].

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present the conference report on the fiscal year 1990 energy and water development appropriation bill for your favorable consideration. Our colleagues will recall that debate on this bill occurred in the House on June 28. The bill was passed by voice vote in the House and in the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, our conference committee meeting was held on Thursday, September 7. I wish to compliment our friends from the other body, particularly the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JOHNSTON], the chairman of the Senate subcommittee, and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD], the ranking minority member, for the fine spirit of compromise displayed in the conference meeting. I also wish to thank my colleagues, the House conferees, for their support and their valuable contributions during the conference deliberations.

Now I would like to comment on various aspects of the conference agreement.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is one that will be signed by the President. It is below the subcommittee's section 302(b) allocation for budget authority.

Mr. Speaker, for the various agencies and programs under the jurisdiction of the Energy and Water Development Subcommittee, the committee of conference recommends $18,555,427,000 in new budget authority. This amount is $177,054,000 more than the budget requests, $12,417,000 more than the House bill and $105,955,000 more than the Senate bill.

The reason for the increase over the budget is in the defense area. The amount for defense programs is $269,034,000 above the budget request. This increase is for waste cleanup. The amount for domestic programs is $91,980,000 below the budget request.

The conference agreement we present to you today is the culmination of nearly 8 months of effort on the part of the House committee and the same review by the Senate committee. During this period we have heard testimony from hundreds of witnesses—contained in eight hearing volumes of thousands of pages. This is the first appropriation bill conferenced for fiscal year 1990. Bringing it up at this time and at this level, is an indication that Congress is serious about deficit reduction and attempting to avoid a comprehensive continuing resolution.

The House considered the energy and water development appropriation bill on the floor in 1 day. The Senate had a total of 71 numbered amendments to the bill. But, within those 71 amendments, there were nearly 400 individual items in disagreement. The conference agreement represents the best efforts of the House and Senate conferees to achieve consensus on those 400 items. Many items had to be reduced or changed to accomplish agreement with the Senate. In addition, we had to keep in mind the need to have a bill that was acceptable to the administration.

Your House conferees did their best to maintain the House position. However, to bring back a conference report that is within the budget allocation for the energy and water development programs, a great many items had to be compromised.

We would like more money for energy and the water projects. But, if we stay within the 302(b) allocation, we cannot provide all of the funds for all of the programs and projects to the extent we would like.

Mr. Speaker, the conference agreement contains $3,152,017,000 in title I for the Army Corps of Engineers. This is $20,201,000 less than the bill as passed by the House and $3,940,000 less than the Senate-passed bill. These funds will finance 436 water resources projects in the planning or construction phase.

For title II, the Bureau of Reclamation, the conferees recommend a total of $997,542,000 which is $1,412,000 more than the House-passed bill and $200,000 more than the Senate-passed bill. This will fund 115 water resources projects in the planning or construction phase.

In my view, the conference agreement provides for a financially prudent and environmentally sound water resources development program.

The conference agreement contains $13,844,383,000 for the Department of Energy programs in title III. This includes $2,215,466,000 for energy supply, research and development activities; $338,019,000 for power marketing administrations; $346,000,000 for the nuclear waste disposal fund; and $1,114,431,000 for general science and research activities. The energy accounts include $143,817,000 for solar, geothermal and electric energy systems and storage; $595,875,000 for nuclear energy; and $330,750,000 for magnetic fusion. The conference agreement provides a total of $9,656,034,000 for atomic energy defense activities. This is an increase of $1,556,034,000 over the fiscal year 1989 level and is $269,034,000 above the President's budget request. This level includes increased funds for defense waste cleanup.

Mr. Speaker, the conference agreement includes $581,485,000 for nine independent agencies and commissions in title IV, including $150,000,000 for the Appalachian Regional Commission, $298,150,000 for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, and $121,000,000 is provided for the Tennessee Valley Authority.

I will insert a table in the RECORD at this point which summarizes the financial aspects of the conference agreement.

I would like to call Members' attention to several minor typographical errors in the conference report printed in the September 7, 1989, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. On page H5460, column three, in the portion of the report dealing with general science and research activities, the amount mentioned initiating the first tunnel sector contract for the superconducting super collider was $125,000,000. This amount should have been $25,000,000. On page H5481, the title number for general provisions was printed as title IV. It should have been title V.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I join my chairman in first thanking the staff of our subcommittee who worked diligently for the last several weeks working on this, as well as the members of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for Energy and Water Development; also the Senate who worked in cooperation with us. Several of my colleagues have asked about how long it took to work out the differences, and there were a number of differences between the House version and the Senate version, and I just discussed this with one Member here. He was amazed that we worked only a few hours in settling the differences. So, Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Members and the staff for making this an expedited proceeding. Between now and the end of the fiscal year we only have, as I look at the calendar, 12 legislative days, assuming that for the next 2 weeks we work both Mondays and Fridays. We only have 12 legislative days. Assuming this passes today, and the other body takes it up, and it goes to the President, we still have 12 remaining appropriations bills that must be completed by the end of the fiscal year. So, we have a very, very large task.

My colleagues, this is the first appropriations, conference report to come before this body and I strongly support it. It is basically the House version of the bill. There were some changes. There were a few programs that the House was unable to sustain. There are going to be some questions by some of the Members. The Members of the other body were adamant about some of the projects that we had included. Some of the projects they included we have taken out. It was a compromise.

The bill is $177 million above the request of the President. Most, if not all, of this is in defense activities, particularly the defense waste and environmental restoration activities in the Energy Department.

This is the first time that we have sent a bill to the President from energy and water development appropriations that the defense part of the bill is larger than the domestic. Total budget authority and outlays are within the 302 (b) iimits, as the chairman has said. We have not heard from OMB, as often we do, but I feel confident that the President will sign this bill.

So, Mr. Speaker, I strongly endorse this and hope that we will get the support of all Members. It is a good bill. It is a lean one, a little more lean than we would like to see. It funds the corps at less than last year, about 2 percent, but it is a good bill. It is the best we can come up with within the 302(b) and the President's request.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my appreciation and thanks to the chairman of the Subcommittee on Energy and Water Development, Mr. BEVILL, and the ranking member, Mr. MYERS, for their efforts in securing prompt consideration and passage of this bill.

There are many provisions in this bill which I strongly support. For example, the bill contains language prohibiting the completion of the San Luis Drain to a discharge point in the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta. In addition, the bill contains a prohibition on long-term water marketing in the Central Valley project.

However, the bill does contain one provision which troubles me, and I would like to explain my position on this issue for the record. This provision would implement a controversial settlement between the United States and the Strawberry Water Users Association in Utah.

As my colleagues may recall, the interim cost ceiling increase for the central Utah project was enacted last year as Public Law 100-563. This legislation included $15 million to fund a settlement with the Strawberry Water Users Association.

As the situation was represented to us last year, funding was needed to compensate the Strawberry Water Users for lost grazing privileges as lands were taken for construction of the central Utah project [CUP]. We were told that the proper funding level was $15 million. In addition, we were assured that, once funds were appropriated pursuant to our authorization, steps would be taken to correct some very damaging land management practices which had been the rule on many acres of land managed by the water users in eastern Utah's high country. On the strength of these assurances, the Congress passed the $15 million authorization.

We have now learned that Members of both the House and Senate were not told all the facts about the $15 million authorization for the Strawberry Water Users Association.

In a interim report issued last week, the General Accounting Office [GAO] issued a very damaging analysis of this authorization.

The GAO concluded that the $15 million compensation far exceeds what the Strawberry Water Users were entitled to. According to GAO, the $15 million authorization, plus a 1986 payment of $2.8 million, substantially exceed the value of the compensatory contracts signed by the Strawberry Water Users and the United States.

Because the GAO's interim findings were not revealed until just last week and because further investigations are pending, I will not force a vote on opposing the Strawberry appropriation at this point.

However, I intend to pursue this matter to ensure that any funds disbursed to the Strawberry Water Users are fully justified. I will review each and every transaction involving this funding. In addition, the spending record for these activities will be closely examined as we proceed with reauthorization of the CUP. If necessary, any discrepancies in expenditures will be corrected with corresponding reductions in funding for other parts of the CUP.

Mr. Speaker, resolving the many problems associated with completing the central Utah project will obviously not be easy. I took forward to working closely with Mr. BEVILL, Mr. MYERS, and Members of the Utah delegation as we proceed with this task.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO]. We have worked very closely on some projects of his concern.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 2696, the energy and water development appropriation for fiscal year 1990, and to thank the chairman, the gentleman from Indiana, the gentleman from California and the members of the committee and the staff for their diligence, and for once again assisting the people of my district with important water development, shoreline protection and harbor maintenance and improvement programs. We are always grateful for the assistance provided by this committee on these vital projects.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to engage the gentleman from Indiana—the distinguished ranking member of the committee—in a colloquy regarding language the conferees have adopted in their report concerning repair of groin No. 1 in the Ventura Pierpont Groin Field adjacent to Ventura Harbor.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I would be pleased to respond to my friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO].

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Thank you, it is my understanding that the conferees, at page 15 of the report, direct the Army Corps of Engineers to assume responsibility for 100 percent of the cost associated with the restoration and nourishment of the beach between groin No. 1 and groin No. 2 in the Ventura Pierpont Groin Field, as long as such renourishment can be accomplished at a cost which does not exceed the costs which have been allocated under the corps' current plan for providing the maintenance dredging of Ventura Harbor. By using this approach the corps will accomplish two goals. First; sand dredged from the harbor will be disposed of in the most expeditious and least costly manner, second, groin No. 1, which the corps has been directed to repair in the Water Resources Act of 1988, and the adjoining beach and public property which it protects, will be protected from subsequent damage and erosion. After many hours of negotiations, a local cooperative agreement has been worked out for repair of the groin, including cost sharing by the local sponsors. The corps feels, and the local sponsors agree, that restoration of the beach following repair of the groin is essential to ensure protection of the project.

The language the conferees have included will ensure that protection and in addition save the corps money by providing a nearby site for disposing of the dredged sand, accordingly, it is my expectation, and I hope the committee agrees, that the corps will commence work on the groin repair immediately so that when the maintenance dredging occurs the conferees' instructions will be fulfilled. I am hopeful it will not be necessary for the committee to revisit this issue in the future, and I thank you once again for your assistance.

Mr. MEYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO] is absolutely correct in his statement of the committee's language and intentions in regard to this project, and I hope he will keep the committee informed of its progress.

□ 1600

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I also agree that the gentleman from California is correct.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CARPER.]

Mr. CARPER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to engage in a colloquy with the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. BEVILL, and the distinguished ranking minority member, Mr. MYERS.

Mr. Speaker, the bridge which crosses the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal at St. Georges, DE, is in need of repair. The Corps of Engineers and the State of Delaware's transportation engineers disagree on the type of repairs that the bridge requires. The Corps of Engineers believes that a major rehabilitation costing up to $20 million is necessary. The State of Delaware feels that less costly repairs of the bridge will be sufficient. This is because the State of Delaware believes that a new bridge must be built across the canal at St. Georges. Very soon the corps wants to shut down the bridge to as few as two lanes, cutting the capacity of the bridge in half. Delaware and the Federal Highway Administration contend that such a major disruption can be averted, at least until alternative routes are completed.

The Senate Appropriations Committee included in its committee report accompanying the energy and water appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990 language which directed the corps to work in conjunction with the State of Delaware and the Federal Highway Administration to develop a plan of action to minimize traffic disruptions over the bridge. Funds available for the rehabilitation of the bridge would be released once those three parties have reached a consensus on what repairs are necessary.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to indicate to the distinguished chairman and the entire House that Delaware has attempted to secure the corps' cooperation in this effort without success for the last 2 years.

Mr. Speaker, the conference report language is different than what is contained in the Senate's report language. Do you agree that nothing in the conference report undoes what was stated in the Senate's language as it relates to the corps working in conjunction with the State and the Federal Highway Administration to determine what repair work is necessary? Do you further agree that the language that was developed in the conference report was intended only to achieve a clarification of the Federal authority of the corps to build a new bridge at St. Georges, DE?

And finally, does the gentleman agree that the review of the legal authority of the corps to build a new bridge should not delay the efforts of the corps, Delaware, and the Federal Highway Administration to develop a mutually agreed upon plan of action to minimize the disruption of traffic over the canal?

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the gentleman is correct.

Mr. CARPER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished chairman for this clarification. Let me say in closing that the State of Delaware will never abdicate its responsibility to ensure the safety of motorists traveling through its transportation system. We seek only to minimize the extent to which repairs to St. Georges bridge disrupt traffic on this major artery, and to have those repairs begin after alternative routes to divert traffic have been completed. I hope the corps will cooperate with us in meeting those objectives.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I have listened to the remarks of the gentleman from Delaware, and I concur with the chairman that the gentleman is correct.

The gentleman and his Governor did appear before our committee. We met with him, and I agree with the chairman in his response.

Mr. CARPER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Indiana, and also the distinguished chairman of the committee.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Nebraska [Mrs. SMITH], a very valued member of this committee and one we will miss after next year.

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time and for his comments.

Mr. Speaker, I rise as a member of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Energy and Water Development in support of this conference report on H.R. 2696, making appropriations for energy and water development for fiscal year 1990. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

I support this bill even though it does not provide full funding for every undertaking wanted and needed for my State. But it does address the major energy and water concerns of Nebraska.

As a member of the Committee of Conference on this bill, I want to thank my colleagues in the House for sticking up for Nebraska when it counted.

My amendments approved by the conferees added about $18 million to the President's budget requests for Nebraska projects for fiscal year 1990, bringing the Nebraska total to about $35 million, down from about $40 million in the previous fiscal year.

I commend our distinguished subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BEVILL]; the subcommittee's ranking minority member, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MYERS]; the distinguished chairman of our counterpart subcommittee in the other body, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. JOHNSTON]; the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD]; and all the conferees for bringing this excellent bill to the House for consideration and final approval in such timely fashion.

Once again our subcommittee is the first to bring up an appropriation conference report to send to the President.

The House has nearly always done its work on its version of this bill and other appropriations measures with far greater dispatch than the other body.

For fiscal 1989 and 1990 year, however, both bodies are moving right along, the result mainly of the nonpartisan spirit in which members of the energy and water appropriations subcommittees of both bodies work together.

This nonpartisan cooperative spirit is chiefly the reason that the differing versions of this bill passed both House and Senate by voice votes.

Then came the task of putting these two complicated bills together. As all Members are aware, it takes sophisticated computer systems to compare the differences in the two versions involving thousands of line items and pages and pages of report and bill language.

Yet, because of extraordinary staff in both bodies, many of whom had to work into the wee hours, the conferees were able to reconcile nearly 400 individual items in disagreement contained within 71 Senate amendments to the bill. We had to keep in mind that the bill has to be acceptable to the White House.

I wish to state my thanks on behalf of the people of Nebraska my appreciation for the cooperation and understanding of the Office of Management and Budget with respect to its renewed support of the completion of the North Loup Division, Nebraska, Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin Program, including the Davis Creek Dam and all related facilities as authorized.

This bill contains about $23 million for this project, full funding for fiscal 1990. Completion is scheduled by fiscal year 1994. Without the committee unwavering, faithful support, however, on both sides of the aisle, this money would not be in this bill.

I thank the House and Senate for its repeated demonstration of support for the North Loup Division and the dozens of other projects funded in the bill for Nebraska and for the Nation.

As Chairman BEVILL has presented here in detail, this is a carefully crafted conference report. It meets every budget test.

I want to restate Chairman BEVILL's observation that this conference report is the culmination of an intense period of effort by the House and Senate committees.

During this period we have heard or received written testimony from thousands of witnesses, including more than half of the Members of the House—contained in eight hearing volumes covering more than 12,000 pages.

Accomplishing all this within the timeframe we set for ourselves demonstrates we are serious about doing our part about deficit reduction and about again avoiding the continuing resolution chaos of both 1987 and 1988.

We are claiming success. But it was achieved with great pain. The funds in this bill rarely reflect our preferences. We would like more for energy, for the weapons program, and for water-resource development.

As hard as we have tried to address every concern expressed to the subcommittee, not every one of our colleagues is pleased with what we have done. Indeed, to stay within the budget constraints, we had to spread significant pain around. A great many items had to be compromised.

But dissent will be heard. We will hear some colloquys to clarify the intent of some bill and report language. We may hear from colleagues who oppose one or more of the amendments in technical disagreement.

As a member of the Committee of Conference, I am particularly grateful for my colleagues' support when together we headed off a Senate move, provided in Senate amendment No. 5, to completely eliminate water-project planning funds earmarked for Nebraska, Minnesota, and Alabama.

This funding is provided under section 22 of the Water Resources Act of 1974, which authorizes technical assistance to States in coordinated studies with other agencies.

In conference, the Senate agreed to back off a little if we would add seven more States to the list. But there just was not enough money for all of these States to receive the maximum authorized $300,000.

To avoid a major falling out over this relatively small account, we reluctantly agreed to conference report language listing the 10 States without specific guidance to the Army Corps of Engineers as to how much each State should be allocated.

While congressional "agreement" ostensibly was thus reached, the Corps of Engineers may as well get ready for a very heavy pitch from the State of Nebraska for the $300,000 it so keenly needs to address its water-project planning backlog.

The conference provided $8,975,000 for section 22 funds, down only a little from $9,505,000 for fiscal year 1989.

Last year, I insisted full funding be retained for Nebraska from this account because our State had received minuscule amounts from this fund for many years.

Nebraska received only $20,000 in fiscal 1988, down from $30,000 the previous year, and up only slightly from the $17,000 allocated for each of the 2 years of 1985 and 1986.

I pointed out to the Senate conferees that Governor Orr had presented testimony to the committee requesting a total of $455,000 to address a backlog of water project studies.

I said that for years Nebraska got "peanuts" from this account. I said fiscal 1989's $300,000 was only a good beginning. We have large-scale water problems, and adequate planning money is long overdue.

I provide for the RECORD this list of priority study projects from Michael Jess, Governor Orr's director of the State Department of Water Resources:

1. Instream flows below Gavins Point and Fort Randall on the Missouri River.
2. Restoration of the rainwater basin in the Holdrege area.
3. Public-use maps for the Salt Valley near Lincoln.
4. Comprehensive resources including recreation, historical, and cultural aspects on the Missouri River from Sioux City to Rulo.
5. Backwater areas of the Missouri River for selected wildlife habitat.
6. Statewide instream flow data for fish and wildlife.

This bill approved by the House-Senate conference includes my amendments as follows:

Davis Creek Dam $17 million, plus $6 million requested in the President's budget, for a total of $23 million.

Missouri River Mitigation, a new planning start, the Senate adding $150,000 to my amendment for a grand total of $300,000.

Section 22 environmental study funds for the State of Nebraska, approval of continued funding but without specified amounts.

Papillion Valley and Tributaries flood control, Big Channel project $500,000, for a total $2,500,000 for construction; for operation and maintenance $512,000.

Missouri National Recreation River $100,000 for operation and maintenance and $620,000 for construction.

Antelope Creek, Lincoln, flood survey, $100,000.

Elm Creek, Decatur, flood survey, $75,000.

With minor adjustments, the conferees also approved the following Nebraska funds, requested in January by the President:

Gavins Point Dam-Lewis and Clark Lake, operation and maintenance (O&M) $4,225,000.

Harlan County Reservoir O&M $1,178,000.

Salt Creek and Tributaries Lakes, Lincoln, O&M $737,000.

Wood River, Grand Island, flood survey $62,000.

Farwell Irrigation District, construction, $460,000.

O'Neill Unit, preconstruction work, $700,000.

Glendo Dam, Wyoming, providing water for Nebraska users, $1.2 million for reconstruction.

Groundwater recharge demonstration projects at York and Wood River, unspecified amounts for construction and planning from total appropriation of $7,323,000 for 21 projects nationwide.

I urge my colleagues to approve this conference report.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN], a very valued member of this subcommittee.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity.

Over the years that I have been here, I have tried to point out the difference between wealth and paper money. There is no question but what we are in bad shape from a financial standpoint when we look and see the increased deficit, the terrible drug situation, the loss of exports, our deteriorating highway system and bridges, and the like. The only basis we have got to handle our problems is our country itself, and it is high time that we begin to put first things first.

I am proud of this subcommittee and the members of it and proud to be a member of it.

Some years ago, I am glad to say that the only time in history, so Mr. Cannon said, I made a motion to override the President's veto on the public works appropriation bill on the grounds that it was up to Congress to select the projects and the President to recommend.

So I say to you today that I am proud of what the committee has done here. In some instances they did not get everything they would like, and there may be some things all of us would differ with, but I want to commend every member of this subcommittee for the efforts they make and to say I am proud to be a part of this.

You have heard me say this before. We had better look after our own country. I believe in a balanced budget, but we ought to be careful where we balance it.

Some years ago I heard a fellow say that Ethiopia is the only country in the world that had a balanced budget. It did not owe a dollar and did not have one, either.

So we have got to see that this country continues to run. We need to look after our highways and bridges and dams. We had better get busy on that.

So within the limits of the possible, this committee has done the very best that anybody could do, and I am glad to say that we were united on it. It may be that something will come along in supplementals that we overlooked, but we are doing a good job.

The problems that we have that are financial are not from what we spent on our own country. We had better look after our own country first, because that is what all the rest depends on.

Mr. Speaker, again I commend the members of this committee and I am proud to be a member of it, along with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BEVILL] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MYERS] and all of them.

I will tell you this, too. We have one of the finest staffs around. I could spend an hour talking about what a fine staff we have on the Appropriations Committee. They are all budget people. They know what they are doing. They are not politicians as such, but they do believe in policy and in sound business.

May I say again, we worked across the board. It is a bipartisan committee.

As you know, I represent my State on the Appropriations Committee, where I have served longer than any other Member. There are many provisions which are of interest and of real value to my State as shown in the report.

I am glad to say as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the same is true of all sections of the United States, Appalachia, where corridor V is contained, TVA; demonstration projects on watershed protection and flood control in the foothill area from Tennessee to Grenada; on the eastern section of my district, the Tombigbee Water Management District, Town Creek, in much of which the Soil Conservation Service is a partner.

This is of special interest to the people of my district. The same goes for projects in the rest of my State and the region.

Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to point out how much Federal programs mean to our Nation. This is one place where the benefits are not only essential for the moment, but also add to our national wealth for many years to come.

As I have pointed out many times, since 1941 the national wealth has increased 36 times.

Mr. Speaker, I have pointed out for some years, I believe it was first during the term of President Johnson, that hopefully when we slow down the growth of military expenditures, we can divert our energy, and attention to worthwhile, valuable and essential public works. We must keep the wheels turning for you cannot repay a cheap dollar borrowed with a hard-to-get earned dollar; thus we must have a vital economy.

We have tried through the years to get an authorization for the backlog of worthwhile projects, so we could begin to spend money wisely and now the time may have come so that we must do it. I think our committee and all our colleagues have done a great job in providing authorizations so that we will have some place to focus our resources when the time comes.

I remember when the Mount St. Helens volcano eruption occurred, we brought out a supplemental bill and called the committee back together so our House colleagues could get on with the task of taking care of that area which suffered from the volcano, Mount St. Helens.

Whether it is in California, Maine, New York, or wherever it may be, this committee has looked without partisanship to taking care of flood control in all our country.

It is unreasonable to expect any section of the country to handle water from 41 percent of the United States by itself—from parts of Canada and New York State—the water goes down the Mississippi to New Orleans.

Let me tell you that in 1928 in the lower Mississippi, we had one of the most disastrous floods in the history of the United States. Following that, the Congress had the Corps of Engineers prepare a plan to try to handle the flooding along the Mississippi River because at that time you could not control the volume of water draining 41 percent of the Nation. You have to work with it.

Now we have gotten control of the main stem to a great degree, but when the main stem drains all the water from 41 percent of this country into our area, then the tributaries have to go into a flooded river which means wide spread flooding over several States.

I want to tell you, the damages we have in my area which is in the tributary area, we had three 100-year floods in 10 years. Millions of acres were flooded including this year. I have been advised that 70,000 acres will continue flooded until next June.

So I say while we are starting out on new things, we have to live with all the water from 41 percent of the country, for it goes down into this funnel that hits New Orleans.

Let me digress a little bit here, and I think it is worthwhile to say it. Some years ago, I was walking over from the other body where we had been in a conference, and the late Secretary of the Treasury, Joe Fowler, who was Chairman of the Commission which was to build up a sufficient productive capacity for us to compete with Russia, said, "Jamie, you know, if I was in charge of Russia, I would declare 5 years of peace."

Just think, he said:

> It would bring disaster to our economy. Just think if all the boys were to come home from the service, if all the contracts with the Federal Government for military equipment were canceled, what would happen here. Our economy would break down. At that time we had more cars than we could park, more clothes than we could wear, and the finest time in the history of this country. But I decided that it simply could not take a war or preparation for war in order to have prosperity. We could have prosperity if we would use the same energy in protecting and developing our country, and would end up with a rich country.

I want to congratulate my fellow colleague on this bill. They have provided something for us to turn to so we may improve our country, and if we will just do that, we can do wonders.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I thank our chairman for those very kind remarks, and also I thank the gentlewoman from Nebraska [Mrs. SMITH] for her kind remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HORTON].

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. I would like to engage the chairman and the ranking minority member in a colloquy on the Rochester Institute of Technology research funding on microelectronics and imaging sciences.

Mr. Speaker, the Rochester Institute of Technology has been engaged in an effective program of microelectronics and imaging sciences research with the Department of Energy over the past year. The House Subcommittee on Energy and Water Development has found this institution to be highly capable in these fields and an asset to the work of the Department of Energy's weapons research activities.

Officials at RIT have agreed to allay concerns of conference committee members by pursuing a program to protect any and all sensitive information relating to weapons research at the Rochester Institute of Technology.

□ 1610

Given this, would the chairman agree that the House conferees would encourage the Department of Energy to make available appropriate funding for continued microelectronics and imaging sciences research being conducted at the university?

I yield to the chairman for the purposes of answering this question.

Mr. BEVILL. I would say to my friend from New York that I agree.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman. I would also ask the ranking minority member if he would comment.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORTON. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join the chairman in assuring the distinguished gentleman from New York that it is the intention of the House conferees to encourage the Department to continue the excellent working relationship it has developed with the Rochester Institute of Technology in microelectronics and imaging sciences research.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman and the ranking minority member. I rise also in support of this legislation, and urge its approval.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], a distinguished member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BEVILL], the chairman of the subcommittee, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MYERS], the ranking member, for having accepted in the appropriations bill a million and a half dollars for the O'Hare amendment and $750,000 for the McCook and Thornton amendments. Accepting these amendments means a great deal to the people of Chicago in dealing with the flood-control program which has concerned the city and the north suburbs of the city for many, many years, and this will go a long way in helping deal with that problem.

I thank the gentlemen very much for what they did.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his comments. If the gentleman figures out how to handle the snow now, we will take that on next. We have taken care of the floods, and if we can take care of the snow now, I can get out of Chicago.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER].

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I certainly support the conference report and would like to enter into a colloquy with the distinguished chairman of the appropriations subcommittee on Energy and Water Development, Mr. BEVILL, and the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MYERS] on the Missouri River Mitigation Program. I thank the gentlelady from Nebraska [Mrs. SMITH for her special help, and all of the members of the subcommittee. I thank them for their effort and assistance.

I am grateful that the conference agreement on H.R. 2696 includes an appropriation of $300,000 for the Army Corps of Engineers to conduct activities for the four-State Missouri River Mitigation Program as authorized in section 601 of Public Law 99-662.

Is it the understanding of the distinguished members of the committee that these funds, appropriated under "planning" in the "general investigations" account, will be obligated by the Corps of Engineers for planning and/or designing of this project? I yield to the chairman.

Mr. BEVILL. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman. I yield to the distinguished ranking member for the same question.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. In response, yes, the conference did consider this and discuss this, and is the agreement and understanding of the conference.

Mr. BEREUTER. Is it also the understanding of the gentleman that obligation of these funds in such a manner by November 17, 1991, is sufficient to prevent deauthorization of the project as required in section 1001(a) of Public Law 99-662? I yield to the chairman for that question.

Mr. BEVILL. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BEREUTER. I yield to the ranking member for that question.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. The colleague of the gentleman, the gentlewoman from Nebraska [Mrs. SMITH], brought this to our attention in the conference. This is correct.

Mr. BEREUTER. I thank the chairman and ranking member for this clarification and reassurance.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CHAPMAN], a distinguished member of this subcommittee.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report and would ask the chairman one question: The House report includes language providing for western access at the Cooper Lake and Channels project. Referring to the statement of the managers on page 5 of the conference report which states that the House report language not change what the Senate has accepted by the conference. Am I correct in assuming that the report language on western access included in the House report was accepted by the committee of conference?

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, yes, the gentleman from Texas is correct. The west-end access report language was accepted by the conference committee.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished chairman, and I urge adoption of the conference report.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. NIELSON].

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BEVILL], and the ranking member, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MYERS] for their diligent work on this appropriation bill, H.R. 2696. As usual, they are the first and best in the appropriation process, and I appreciate that very much.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate particularly their looking after the central Utah project and treating us so well there. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER], who spoke earlier about his concern about the $15 million added in the Senate, that money has to go only for improvements in the water irrigation system and cannot be distributed to the membership at large. I will make sure that they handle that money correctly. I do appreciate his indulgence in that particular regard, and I commend him for his work as well.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. POSHARD].

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the people of southern Illinois, and especially Monroe County, I would like to state my strong support of H.R. 2696.

Besides all of the good work it does elsewhere, it helps the people in and around Harrisonville, IL, escape from the very real threat of a devastating flood. This bill will dramatically improve the quality of life for a thousand or more people and save valuable farmland from ruin.

I want to thank Mr. TOM BEVILL, the chairman of the Energy and Water Development Subcommittee, and his outstanding staff, and the committee chairman, Mr. JAMIE WHITTEN, for standing with the residents of southern Illinois in their time of need.

Government should help people who want to help themselves. The people in Monroe County need our help to keep the flood waters away from their doorsteps, so they can improve the quality of their lives and their childrens' lives.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON].

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise with mixed reactions here today.

Looking at this conference report on the one hand, I want to commend the actions of our distinguished ranking member and the chairman. Frankly, this is a classic example of the House being the good guys in the good-guy-bad-guy routine.

The reality is the legislation before us, focusing on the Upper Mississippi River Environmental Management Program, does, indeed, double the amount of appropriation from a year ago, and that is good news for all of us concerned about saving the valuable resource.

The bad news is that the House funding level was not included, and that is not the fault of our House conferees. I do not feel it is. Frankly, I have been made aware that we simply have a lack of support from a number of other people, especially on the Senate side. That is a challenge for all of us in the Midwest to focus on in the future.

There is a message here that each and every one of us has to understand, and that is the 1986 Water Resources Act called for an absolute balance in funding between navigation on the one side for Lock and Dam 26 and, on the other side, for the environmental management program. In order to maintain that balance, we would have needed $19 million in funding for the environmental management program in the next fiscal year. Unfortunately, the administration level is at $14.8 million, and that is the level that we ended up with.

We have continued to fall further behind in this balance between navigation and the environment. One of these days we are going to have to get serious about maintaining that commitment to that Public Water Resources Act of 1986.

As I said earlier, and let me say to the gentlemen who are here, you are the good guys. You are the ones who did increase that funding level above and beyond what the President asked. I appreciate very much their efforts in that regard, and I ask for them to continue to be valiant soldiers next year when we continue this battle again.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to our distinguished friend and colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE].

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE].

□ 1620

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentlemen for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we could have a little bit of a colloquy on the question affecting the Hackensack River Basin in New Jersey.

Is it the chairman's understanding that the $600,000 included in H.R. 2696 for fiscal year 1990 for the Hackensack River Basin study will be used for a new study to determine the need for flood control improvements in the Hackensack River Basin?

Mr. BEVILL. If the gentleman will yield, yes, that is my understanding.

Mr. ROE. Is it the chairman's understanding that the study will use the most up-to-date data available on residential and business development in flood danger zones, it will take into account the cost of damage to currently undeveloped land, and it will further evaluate the feasibility of the widest range of possible alternatives for flood control in addition to a tidal barrier?

Mr. BEVILL. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. ROE. I thank the chairman of the subcommittee very distinctly for that.

Mr. Speaker, may I now take up another matter. As my distinguished friend said as I was coming down to the well, it is serious.

Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to compliment the chairman and ranking member particularly of this subcommittee for an extraordinarily good job in an almost impossible situation. But I want to call to the attention of both the chairman and members of our committee our deep concern on the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology as it relates to the Magnetic Fusion Program.

What happened is, when we worked on this program first in the House and the House was taking up the matter, we really came to certain understandings as to what direction we could follow as far as the fusion program was concerned.

In effect what the language in the bill says, which raises deep concern for our committee, and I read from the report:

The conferees provide $330,750,000 for the fusion program. In order to provide the Department with the flexibility to develop a meaningful program.

And that is the Department of Energy:

The conferees are recommending that these funds be provided without further allocation between program component projects and activities within the fusion program. The secretary may reserve a modest portion of such funds which shall be available to carry out any new policy directions only after a consultation with the Appropriations Committee of both the House and the Senate.

Which we applaud.

So in effect what we are doing in passing this conference report is giving to the Secretary of Energy $330 million to do with practically as he sees fit within this program.

May I close on this remark and point out to the Committee on Appropriations why I think this is so important. That means the only thing he has to come back to your committee on is if the committee allocates part of those funds modestly for some new program direction. It seems to me that leaves us in a terrible problem with our national laboratories at Los Alamos, Livermore, Sandia, Oakridge, Princeton and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. At this point, as the authorizing committee, we would not even be able to direct them as to where they should fire people, hire people, what should they do. We do not have any specific program direction, nor do we know whether the Department of Energy is going to follow any direction or any policy direction, including that of your Committee on Appropriations.

So we raise great concern about this issue. And I am going to vote for the conference report, but simply because of my 20 years of great confidence and experience with the leadership of both of you. But I do not think that the energy policy of the Nation should be held captive by the other body, and I think someplace along the line we are going to start a whole series of investigative oversight hearings on this very same issue, because I do not think it is the intent of Congress to give to a secretary, no matter who he is, the total right to determine the fusion program of this country after the taxpayers have spent $6 billion on that program to date.

Again I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I have some questions pertaining to a certain item contained in this conference report.

On page 52 of the report the language describing the conferees agreement on the Magnetic Fusion Program disturbs me. I recognize the hard work that my colleagues on the Appropriations Subcommittee of Energy and Water have put into this bill, nevertheless, I am very concerned that there is a great deal of misunderstanding about program accomplishments and program direction among the committee members. The implications of the language suggest that the Magnetic Fusion Program is in some disarray. The language suggests even though Congress has supported this program for more than a decade, there is very little to show for the investment. I believe this is totally incorrect.

The Committee on Science, Space, and Technology, which has programmatic jurisdiction over the magentic fusion activities carried out by the Department of Energy, has been monitoring this activity for many years. Basically, the problem that we see is that it is difficult for the untrained and the casual observer to fully comprehened the complexity and difficulty associated with harnessing the energy of the Sun in a machine built to earthbound specifications and produce the energy necessary to operate as an electrical energy power plant. Contrary to the observations of the Appropriations Committee, progress in the last decade has been impressive and has exceeded what many careful observers thought could be achieved. Problems have been solved which could not have been anticipated by the early pioneers of magnetic fusion research. New technologies have been developed, and new methods of analyzing and understanding the phenomenon that occur in the extremely high temperature gases that are required in a magnetic fusion reactor. These accomplishments are showing the way to achieve the ultimate goal—a commercial powerplant based upon the fusion of atomic nuclei as the energy source.

It seems to me, that the language in the appropriations conference report fails to acknowledge these accomplishments. In fact, the language suggests that the program needs to be completely revamped, redirected, set on a new course.

What happened to the views of this House that accompanied the energy and water appropriations bill? Did we not make recommendations as to where funds would be appropriated and for what purposes they would be spent?

Was it not the House position that the Capstone Project, the Compact Ignition Tokamak [CIT], be started? This is the critical project that is the focus of much of the research underway in many of the labs. Is not the key milestone of the Magnetic Fusion Program critical if progress is to be made in reaching its goal of producing clean energy? How can we make progress if we continually delay moving forward with funding this essential demonstration project which for the past 2 years has not received funding?

The original House version of the language did include funds to begin construction of this important next step, the Compact Ignition Tokamak. However, the conferees agreed to drop this requirement and appear to believe the judgment as to which way to proceed in the program should be placed totally in the hands of the Secretary of Energy. The bill does not provide any direction as to how the funds should be used or where the program should be heading. The bill vests full authority with the Department of Energy to change the program as it sees fit. This fully ignores the past guidance provided by the Congress to the Department on how to proceed with the Magnetic Fusion Program. It ignores the program direction totally that has been established by years of research and analysis by our most experienced scientists and technology managers.

Is it the intent of the Appropriations Committee to simply provide the Secretary of Energy with a lump sum for the Magnetic Fusion Program? Is this money to be spent at the pleasure of the Secretary as he sees fit without specific accountability to the Congress? Is it to be totally at the discretion of the Department of Energy as to how these funds will be meted out to the laboratories at Los Alamos and Livermore, to Sandia or Oak Ridge, to Princeton or MIT?

In fact, by agreeing to this language we indeed produce a totally unfocused program which will cost the Nation not only enormous amounts of money but also critical time—time that is needed to bring magnetic fusion powerplants into reality in a timely manner.

And if the Speaker will allow me, I must raise serious objection to the Appropriation Committee charging itself with the responsibility to manage the Magnetic Fusion Program, set policy, and direction while neglecting, and in fact, ignoring the oversight responsibility of the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology for this activity. I would point out to this body that the decisions of the Appropriations Committee both in the House and the Senate were done without consultation with the authorizing committees. Is it the intent of the Appropriations Committee to take over the management of the fusion program? Are you to set policy for the fusion program? Will Appropriations conduct technical oversight and assume all responsibility for review and approval of new program initiatives?

This in my view is a grievous error and in the long run will cost this Nation much more than the few dollars we will save by the actions taken on the fiscal year 1990 budget for Magnetic Fusion Programs.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, the subcommittee shares the concern of the gentleman in the well who just spoke. It has been a tremendously costly program in the last many years.

This committee has repeatedly asked the Department to make recommendations back to us, to give us all a direction in order to narrow our confines and our direction in the future. So the Department has a study underway to come back and advise both the gentleman and the Appropriations Committee about the future of the fusion program.

We all recognize that there is a potential in magnetic fusion, but it seems that we may have wasted money and we are concerned about that. I know the gentleman shares that same concern because we have discussed it. So we share his concern. This is an effort to ask the Department to come down and tell us what direction it believes should be pursued. Not that they would have the final say, but to make some recommendations and to help define our direction.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, I would hope that with the chairman and the distinguished ranking member that as we unfold the programmatic aspects as to how we operate this while in DOE they are trying to make up their minds, that with the help of the Appropriations Committee and the authorizing committee we can set the policy we ought to be setting.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. What we are attempting to do here is to help force the Department to make up its mind.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to our friend and colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2696, the conference report to accompany the Energy and Water Development Appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990, and request permission to revise and extend my remarks. This is the first conference agreement on the 13 annual appropriations bills. I am pleased to report that the conference agreement is below the 302(b) subdivision for the Energy and Water Development Subcommittee.

The bill provides $18.625 in discretionary budget authority and $17.866 billion in discretionary outlays. The bill is $354 million in discretionary budget authority and $39 million in discretionary outlays below the appropriations subdivision for this subcommittee. The direct loan levels in the bill equal the discretionary subdivision for this subcommittee.

I would like to compliment the committee and the subcommittee chairman, Mr. BEVILL, for this bill and the timely fashion in which it was acted on throughout the legislative process. I look forward to working with the committee on the conference reports to accompany the remaining appropriations bills.

Mr. Speaker, I include for the RECORD, a Dear Colleague letter and a fact sheet regarding the 302(b) subdivision for this subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET,
Washington, DC, September 12, 1989.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: Attached is a fact sheet on the conference report to accompany H.R. 2696, Energy and Water Development Appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990. This conference report could be considered at any time.

This is the first conference report to accompany an appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990 and is below the Appropriations Committee 302(b) subdivision in both budget authority and outlays for this subcommittee.

I hope this information will be helpful to you.

Sincerely,

LEON E. PANETTA,
Chairman.

CONFERENCE REPORT TO ACCOMPANY H.R. 2696, ENERGY AND WATER DEVELOPMENT APPROPRIATIONS BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1990 (H. REPT. 101-235)

The conference report to accompany the Energy and Water Development Appropriations Bill for Fiscal Year 1990 was filed on Thursday, September 7, 1989. This bill is scheduled for floor action on Tuesday, September 12, 1989.

COMPARISON TO THE 302(b) SUBDIVISION

The conference report provides $18,625 million of discretionary budget authority, $354 million less than the appropriations subdivision for this subcommittee. The bill is under the estimated discretionary outlay subdivision by $39 million. A detailed comparison of the bill to the spending and credit subdivisions follows:

COMPARISON TO SPENDING ALLOCATION

Pursuant to section 302(b) of the 1974 Budget Act as amended by P.L. 99-177 (Gramm-Rudman-Hollings), the Committees of the House are required to subdivide the spending authority and credit authority allocated to them in the Budget Resolution for Fiscal Year 1990 (shown in H. Rept. 101-50). The Appropriations Committee reported its 302(b) subdivisions on June 21, 1989 (H. Rept. 101-97). These subdivisions are the official scorekeeping targets for appropriations subcommittees.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN].

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to clarify the intent of the language contained in the conference report pertaining to Central Valley project water contracts. The committee has expressed its concern that the Bureau of Reclamation not commit the remaining yield of CVP water without full evaluation of the consequences of this action. The language states that it is the committee's intent to prohibit the execution of new long-term contracts for the remaining yield of the CVP. It is my understanding that this prohibition is to extend at least until October 1, 1990, and until after the Bureau completes the requisite analyses and studies. The language makes specific reference to the proposed allocation of 1.5 million acre-feet of remaining yield of water from the American and Sacramento Rivers and the Delta Export Service area, however, there is one contract in my district that would be adversely affected by this language if a broader interpretation is adopted by the Bureau.

Although the moritorium makes specific reference to the export of Sacramento and American Rivers and the Delta Export Service areas, it is not clear if the intent of the moritorium is extended to prohibit new long-term contracts for diversions for in basin use on other rivers or CVP projects.

For instance, a country in my district has been making arrangements to begin utilizing its 9,000 acre-feet allocation from New Melones Reservoir. The country's water district has nearly completed the necessary State and Federal requirements needed prior to contract negotiations. Although their planned diversion facility will divert only 1,500 acre-feet initially, with capacity of up to 5,000 acre-feet, the project could be delayed if a broad interpretation of the report language is applied.

Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that the moritorium language in the House bill was agreed to in the conference. Is it the committee's intent that the prohibition apply to all long-term contracts, regardless of their type or size?

Mr. BEVILL. If the gentleman will yield, yes, that is the committee's intent.

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that Mr. MILLER, the chairman of the authorizing committee, of which I am a member, has indicated his intention to exercise the committee's jurisdiction and conduct oversight hearings on long-term CVP water contracts before they are executed. In an effort to facilitate the subcommittee's consideration and approval of the Tuolumne Regional Water District's proposed contract, I will be introducing legislation in the very near future to allow that contract to be executed. As an in-basin user, the Flood Control Act of 1962, section 203, guarantees that the district's water needs will be met prior to any diversions from the river basin in connection with the operation of the CVP. The in-basins uses of New Melones water was anticipated and evaluated in the final supplemental environmental impact statement for the New Melones unit in 1980. It is clear that the district's New Melones allocation and its contract should not be upheld because of the controversy over the countracting of the remaining CVP yield. I look forward to working with my chairman and good friend, Mr. MILLER, in resolving this matter this year.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to our distinguished friend and colleague, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I take this time in order to engage in a colloquy with the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. BEVILL.

Mr. Speaker, the committee on conference under general investigation provided $600,000 for a study of the Licking River in Kentucky. Is it the gentleman's understanding that within this $600,000 the Corps of Engineers shall expend the necessary funds to conduct a study of methods to prevent flooding caused by the Licking River at West Liberty, KY?

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, let me state that he is correct.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to our friend and colleague, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman and members of the committee for their cooperation and support for the West Memphis and vicinity flood control project.

Funding contained in the fiscal year 1990 energy and water development appropriations bill is to support completion of the preconstruction engineering and design work for the West Memphis, AR, and vicinity flood damage protection project.

One of the officials assigned to this project with the Memphis District of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers told me that there is "* * * no reason to delay this project any further."

The next step for the West Memphis project is to begin construction—actual construction. It is urgent that all parties—the Corps of Engineers and the local sponsor—proceed as rapidly as possible to initiate and to complete construction of this flood damage protection project.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. DYSON].

Mr. DYSON. I thank the subcommittee chairman.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this conference report. I also rise to thank the chairman of the subcommittee, the ranking minority member and the very able staff of this subcommittee for what they have done for hurricane protection on the coast of Maryland.

I represent Maryland's First Congressional District and I don't believe that there is a single congressional district in this country that is more dependent on water and water resources. This bill is vitally important to the people I represent, even though its importance may be hard to discern in the hundreds of separate projects it will fund.

I would like to point out just a few of these, because the significance of this legislation can only be appreciated when we take into account how the projects it funds will affect the lives and well being of the people it serves.

The First Congressional District includes Maryland's 31 miles of exposed Atlantic coastline. Exposed is the right word, because that coastline is subject to constant battering by midwinter northeastern gales and midsummer hurricanes.

As most of Washington knows, and this includes many members of the Congress who visit my district, Maryland's Atlantic coast is the home of Ocean City, one of the largest and most popular resorts on the eastern seaboard. Each summer day Ocean City draws some 350,000 vacationers to its beaches, making it Maryland's second largest city for at least 3 months out of the year.

Right now the barrier island on which Ocean City is located is disappearing at an alarming rate. Each passing season's storms sweep ever more of the island out to sea. The result is that Ocean City's residents and visitors lie unprotected against the brutal power of a severe storm.

Their only natural defenses are the barrier island's beaches and dunes, and these have all but disappeared. They have eroded to such an extent that the Army Corps of Engineers now predicts a major, "100-year storm" would cause catastrophe if—or when—the next one falls against the unprotected city.

Local officials recognize this danger. They understand that a severe, "100-year storm" would, given the city's crumbled natural defenses, sweep over the city in minutes. Its surge tides would flood highways and make its bridges impassable.

The National Hurricane Center predicts that it would take 30 hours to evacuate Ocean City in the event of a major storm. The people of Ocean City know that they cannot count on getting 30 hours' warning. That means that unless something is done to rebuild Ocean City's protective dunes and beaches, a severe storm would claim countless lives.

Several years ago local and State officials developed a plan for rebuilding the barrier island's defenses. State and local taxpayers have invested more than $14 million in the project, but by itself, it isn't enough. To complete the job Federal assistance is urgently—and justifiably—needed.

This legislation makes $8.2 million available for the Atlantic coast of Maryland's hurricane protection project. I have worked long and hard on this proposal. I have studied every possible aspect of this project and every possible alternative. Without it, the city and its residents are only one storm away from certain disaster.

The hurricane protection project will, by rebuilding Ocean City's natural defenses, protect its property and its people from the worst effects of severe storms. It will also erect an enormous wall of protection against the onslaught of nature's most brutal storms. And this will give the people in Ocean City the precious time they would need to reach safety.

This legislation is therefore absolutely critical for Ocean City. But it also appropriates $13.6 million for a variety of projects that will be undertaken on behalf of smaller communities in my district. Rivers will be dredged for recreational and commercial vessels. Harbors will be deepened to create new commercial opportunities for growth and development. These communities likewise depend on water and navigable waterways for their existence, and the energy and water resources appropriations bill we are now debating is equally important to their futures.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend my friend and colleague, Congressman TOM BEVILL, chairman of the Appropriations Energy and Water Resources Subcommittee, for the painstaking job of drafting this legislation. He and his subcommittee members have put together an excellent bill. It will meet the needs of Ocean City, of other communities in Maryland's First Congressional District, and of countless other cities and towns across the country. I strongly support the bill he has brought to the floor today, and I urge my colleagues here today to give their support to this legislation.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ECKART].

Mr. ECKART. Mr. Speaker, today the floor is considering the conference report on H.R. 2696, the energy and water development appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990, and I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this report. I would also like to commend Chairman BEVILL, Chairman JOHNSTON, the conferees, and the staff for their diligent work on this bill and their promptness in bringing this piece of legislation to the floor.

This appropriations bill is extremely important for the communities around this Nation. At this juncture, I would like to mention the increasingly important role that the Corps of Engineers plays in the upkeep and maintenance of our Nation's harbors, shores and rivers. I know that the Reagan administration and the present Bush administration wanted to slash the budget for the corp's operations and maintenance budget by closing more than 600 recreation areas and eliminating maintenance dredging of harbors with less than 25,000 tons of commerce, but the Appropriations Subcommittees realized the importance of these projects, and did not back down to the administration's request.

Among the many district projects this bill provides for is the emergency dredging of the Ashtabula River's navigational channel to remove the shoals that plague boaters and impede access to the area's greatest resource, Lake Erie. Like many other communities, Ashtabula's main source of revenue comes from its tourism business and the recreational boating and fishing industry. If boats are denied access to the lake, the local commerce would soon find itself in dire straits.

The problems with the Ashtabula River are far from over as toxic sediments loaded with PCP's and heavy metals still poison the river's bottom, but this emergency dredging measure does alleviate the most pressing problem at hand—access to Lake Erie.

Again, I would like to thank the appropriations subcommittee and its staff for all its assistance in this matter that is so important to residents along Lake Erie, and I urge my colleagues to support the conference report.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2696 contains $18,555,427,000 for fiscal year 1990. This amount is $2.097 billion greater than the amount appropriated in fiscal year 1989 and $177 million more than requested by the administration for fiscal year 1990. The total is within the $18.979 billion 302(b) allocation for the Subcommittee on Energy and Water Development.

TITLE I: CORPS OF ENGINEERS

The conference agreement contains $131 million for general investigations; $1.099 billion for construction; and $1.378 billion for operation and maintenance. In addition, the conference report includes $336 million for flood control, Mississippi River and tributaries; $69 million for the regulatory program; $10 million for the revolving fund; and $129 million for general expenses.

As reported by the conference committee, H.R. 2696 provides for 32 new construction starts, including the 11 that were proposed by the administration. The bill also restores cuts to the operation and maintenance account recommended by the administration. These cuts would have resulted in the closure of hundreds of harbors and recreational areas across the country.

TITLE II: BUREAU OF RECLAMATION

The conference agreement contains $11.5 million for general investigations; $662 million for construction; and $212 million for operation and maintenance. For other accounts within this title, H.R. 2696 includes, without change, the amounts proposed by the administration for fiscal year 1990.

The bill provides for three new construction starts for the bureau and deletes language proposed by the House pertaining to the payment of compensation to the Strawberry Water Users Association in Utah.

TITLE III: DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

The conference agreement contains $2.215 million for energy supply, research, and development activities; $1.431 billion for uranium supply and enrichment activities; $1.114 billion for general science and research activities; $346 million for the nuclear waste disposal fund; $9.656 million for atomic energy defense activities; and $355 million for departmental administration. Other accounts within title III are funded at the levels contained in the administration's budget.

The appropriation for general science and research activities includes $225 million for the superconducting super collider. Of this amount, $135 million is dedicated to construction and $90 million to research and development. The bill also contains language pertaining to minority participation in construction of the SSC. In addition, the appropriation for energy supply, research, and development includes $331 million for DOE's magnetic fusion program.

TITLE IV: INDEPENDENT AGENCIES

As reported by the conference committee, H.R. 2696 contains $150 million for the Appalachian Regional Commission; $7 million for the Defense Nuclear Facilities Safety Board; $300,000 for the contribution to the Interstate Commission on the Potomac River Basin; $121 million for the Tennessee Valley Authority. Other agencies within this title are funded at the level proposed in the administration's budget.

TITLE V: GENERAL PROVISIONS

The conference report deletes language proposed by the Senate imposing limitations on the procurement of advisory or assistance services by the Department of Energy.

Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to the conference report on energy and water development appropriations for fiscal year 1990.

In December 1987, the Nuclear Waste Policy Act of 1982 was amended by House and Senate conferees to the budget reconciliation bill, which was signed into law. The law specifically designates Yucca Mountain in Nevada to be the only site to be studied for the high level nuclear waste repository. In accordance with the act, the nuclear waste disposal fund was established to license, construct, and operate the repository. I remain adamantly opposed to the designation of Yucca Mountain and must once again protest the continued politicization of the site characterization process. I will continue to work for a proper designation procedure—one that is scientific and objective.

When the House of Representatives considered and passed the initial version of energy and water development appropriations, the committee report included language critical of the Department of Energy's handling of the Yucca Mountain site characterization to date. I saw a glimmer of hope that my colleagues had come to the realization that site characterization bears close scrutiny to ensure public safety.

However, the conference report not only omits any mention of the House committee's concerns, this legislation holds hostage over half of the funds appropriated to Nevada for the conduct of the State's oversight responsibilities until the Secretary of Energy determines that Nevada has forfeited its independence and jumped on the Department of Energy site characterization bandwagon. This political and economic coercion epitomizes the congressional attitude toward the high-level nuclear waste dump and is another good example of why Nevada will not roll over and play dead. I find the coercion abhorrent and will vote no on the conference report. I urge my colleagues to also vote no so that the conferees can inject reason and objectivity into this issue.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 2696, energy and water development appropriations for fiscal year 1990. Of great importance to my home State of West Virginia is funding for the Appalachian Regional Commission [ARC] and for the Army Corps of Engineers water development projects.

Since 1965 the ARC has worked to fight poverty in Appalachia through a variety of health, education, and job training programs. Of course, a key component to any economic development strategy, and a major component of the ARC's program, is the construction and maintenance of infrastructure. The ARC has played a significant role in the economic development of Appalachia by funding, and working to finish, the construction of the 3,000-mile Appalachian corridor system.

Despite the ARC's efforts, much work remains to be done. Many in Appalachia continue to struggle against poverty, illiteracy, shortages in health care, high infant mortality and high unemployment rates. The corridor system, the foundation of any future economic prosperity in the region, is still only two-thirds complete. It has been estimated that at current funding levels, the construction of the corridor system will not be finished until at least 2065. Corridor G, which links various communities in my district with important economic centers, will not be completed for another 25 years at the current rate of funding.

The compromise appropriates $150 million for the ARC, which has been, and remains to be, of critical importance to West Virginia and other areas of Appalachia. While I am disappointed that the compromise did not contain a funding level closer to the level contained in H.R. 1166, legislation I introduced which reauthorized the Commission at $185 million per year for 5 years, I am encouraged by the nearly $40 million increase over last year's appropriation. I must commend the conferees for setting aside $20 million of that funding specifically for corridors G and H in West Virginia. This represents a trend in the right direction, and will be immensely helpful to the continuing development process of the region.

Also of importance to the economic prosperity of West Virginia is the funding of water development projects, contained in the compromise, which will greatly improve West Virginia's ability to efficiently transport goods. The bill provides $78.9 million for continued construction of new locks at Gallipolis on the Ohio River, about 30 miles upstream from Huntington, WV. This construction will replace the badly deteriorated locks which were completed in 1937. In addition, the compromise provides $20.8 million for construction at Winfield Locks on the Kanawha. The water traffic which must pass through these locks has quintupled, making the original design of the locks obsolete.

The bill also contains funding for flood control. Of particular importance to sourthern West Virginia is $51.3 million for flood control projects on the Levisa and Tug Forks and upper Cumberland River. These projects, such as the flood walls at Williams and the flood proofing of homes in that area, are crucial to the future of the Tug Valley communities which have been repeatedly destroyed by severe flooding.

The compromise agreement also provides important funding for the operation and maintenance of existing Corps of Engineers projects throughout West Virginia. Included is funding for the operation and maintenance at the following areas:

	Thousands
Beech Fork Lake	$632
Bluestone Lake	1,043
Burnsville Lake	1,124
Charleston Riverfront	250
East Lynn Lake	999
Elkins	12
Kanawha River Locks and Dams	7,765
R.D. Bailey Lake	1,364
Stonewall Jackson Lake	682
Summersville Lake	1,063
Sutton Lake	1,269
Tygart Lake	641

Again, I want to commend the conferees for their cooperation and attention to the funding needs of the ARC, and these other worthy projects, and I wish to urge my colleagues to support the adoption of this report.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr.Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report on the energy and water development appropriations bill for fiscal 1990. This is a good and balanced conference report, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to take this opportunity to commend the good work of the chairman of the Energy and Water Subcommittee, Mr. BEVILL; Mr. MYERS, the ranking minority member; and, the subcommittee's dedicated staff. They have done an admirable job over the years in defending the interests of the House during our conferences with the other body, and this year was no different.

Mr. Speaker, I would especially like to thank Mr. BEVILL and Mr. MYERS for their assistance in obtaining conference approval for $150,000 to initiate work by the Corps of Engineers on a reconnaissance study of flood problems along the west side of the Yolo Bypass in Yolo and Solano Counties in my district. This study will evaluate the existing levees and other flood control facilities on the west side of the bypass and adjacent streams, including Cache Creek, Putah Creek, and Willow Slough, and suggest appropriate measures for providing a high level of flood protection in the area west of the bypass, particularly near the cities of Woodland, CA and Davis, CA.

This area was inadvertently left out of a larger, Sacramento regional flood control study which will be completed in the fall of next year. By getting started on this study now, the corps will move closer to completing the evaluation of all of the flood protection systems in the Sacramento metropolitan area.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2696 also provides funding for a number of other key water development projects in California, even though the total budget for water projects and programs in the bill is actually below the 1989 level.

Specifically, the bill provides $3 million to initiate repair work on 32 miles of levees along the Sacramento River in an effort to provide Sacramento with greater flood protection.

By getting started on this project in fiscal 1990, we can provide a large number of homeowners with 100 year flood protection and insulate them from high flood insurance requirements as well as accelerate our drive for greater flood protection for the entire community.

When combined with the lowering of the water level behind Folsom Dam, these levee repairs will provide approximately 70 year protection for the Natomas area, 90 year protection for much of downtown Sacramento as well as more than 100 year protection for portions of Sacramento south of the American River.

The bill also includes $5.5 million to launch construction on the Cache Creek project, which is another important project which will enhance the level of flood protection available to Sacramento.

When functioning properly, the settling basin prevents roughly 1.1 million cubic yards of Cache Creek sediment from flowing to the adjacent Yolo Bypass, the waterway that steers Sacramento River floods away from the city of Sacramento. Sediment reaching the bypass decreases the waterway's flood-carrying capacity, thus putting Sacramento at greater risk.

This project is critical to raising the level of flood protection available to the residents of Sacramento, and I am very appreciative of Mr. BEVILL and Mr. MYERS for their willingness to work with us to see that this project was funded.

And, Mr. Speaker, the bill includes the final $2.945 million necessary to complete work on the $35.4 million Fairfield vicinity streams flood control project. This project is key to providing the cities of Fairfield and Suisun with additional flood protection.

Mr. Speaker, I am also very pleased to point out that the bill rejects most of the administration's recommendations to cut funding for solar and other renewable energy research programs.

The bill provides $95 million solar and other renewable energy programs, $24 million more than the administration requested and slightly above the level appropriated in fiscal 1989.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I thank Mr. BEVILL and Mr. MYERS for their cooperation and support, and their sensitivity to the many water development and energy-related problems facing the Nation and the State of California, in particular. I urge my colleagues to support this conference report.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 2696, the energy and water development appropriations for fiscal year 1990. In doing so, I commend the chairman Mr. BEVILL and ranking member of Mr. MEYERS of the subcommittee for their untiring efforts to bring a fair and responsible bill to the floor.

This is a workhorse appropriations bill. It funds numerous water development programs across the Nation for both the Army Corps of Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation. These projects support economic development, public safety, and agriculture in virtually every state of the union.

In my own State, this compromise bill will provide the minimum level necessary to make further progress on the Garrison Diversion Unit. Garrison is the backbone of economic development in North Dakota. It offers the promise of irrigation of over 100,000 acres in a State parched by drought for 2 successive years, it brings the hope of dependable water supplies to Indian reservations, and it provides water delivery systems for municipal and industrial uses throughout the State.

One would assume that such a critical project—which is a Federal promise to North Dakota resulting from the State's agreement to accept a 500,000 acre permanent flood—would enjoy the support of the Bush administration. Regretably, the administration submitted a mothballs budget for Garrison of only $9 million for fiscal year 1990. At this level, the project would have been shut down, virtually all project employees would have been laid off, and the promise and hope of North Dakota for water development would have been obliterated.

Fortunately, the conferees settled on a $30 million level after hearing the plea for fairness from the entire North Dakota delegation. I want to express my special thanks to the chairman and ranking member for their cooperation in this regard.

I am also pleased to inform my colleagues that this conference report also responds to the critical need for flood protection in the West Fargo area of my State. A great irony in my State is that the western part may yearly face the threat of drought while the eastern section may confront devastating floods each spring. The report does include $5.5 million to begin the construction of the Sheyenne River flood control project, which will help protect several communities in the Fargo area from the annual danger of spring flooding. For this, too, I want to note how my constituents appreciate the cooperation of the subcommittee.

The bill funds numerous other water development and protection projects in North Dakota including the operation of the Garrison Dam, numerous other dams, and American contribution to a joint flood control project with Canada in the Souris River Basin.

In conclusion, this bill makes some important investments in our Nation. Those it supports in North Dakota will play a critical role in my State's development. I would only underscore that it's now time for the Federal Government to deliver on its solemn pledge to the people of my State by providing the resources for immediate and full-scale development of the Garrison diversion project.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend Chairman BEVILL and the conferees on energy and water appropriations for their creativity in putting scarce Federal dollars to work on essential Federal projects. I also want to acknowledge my colleague, Representative VIC FAZIO, for his efforts to seek a solution to the growing problem of inadequate disposal sites for dredging projects in the San Francisco Bay region.

This is an urgent problem that requires urgent attention. The Army Corps of Engineers and the Environmental Protection Agency have been involved in a joint task force to designate appropriate disposal sites as alternatives to the currently overloaded disposal sites in San Francisco Bay. The report to H.R. 2696 directs the corps' to use its operations and maintenance account to ensure that the work of the task force will continue and that the designation process will be completed expeditiously. It is my hope that the Army Corps of Engineers will meet its commitment to prepare the studies necessary to designate an ocean or upland disposal site to alleviate the toll that burgeoning dredge material is taking on the San Francisco bay environment. Full resources should be obligated to complete the designation process as early as possible.

On May 23, 1988, I requested a General Accounting Office study, along with Representatives MILLER, BOXER, and STARK, to analyze dredging and disposal practices in the bay. I look forward to reviewing the study and to working with my colleagues to develop sound dredging policy that includes the development of a long-term plan for the bay region.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I have no further request for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KOSTMAYER). The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 392, nays 27, not voting 11, as follows:

TARAWA DECLARATION

(Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, last week I had the privilege of sharing with my colleagues the editorial commentary that was made by the New York Times entitled "Vandals of the Pacific." I made reference again to the dangerous advent of the usage of drift net as is now used by Taiwan and Japan throughout the Pacific. I would like to share with my colleagues some of the provisions of the declaration that was issued by the South Pacific or the Pacific foreign countries in Tarawa on July 10 and 11 of this year:

Recognizing the crucial dependence of the Pacific island peoples on marine resources; profoundly concerned at the damage now being done by pelagic drift net fishing to the economy and environment of the South Pacific region; deeply regretting that Japan and Taiwan have failed to respond to the concerns of regional countries about this most serious issue; noting that all countries inside and outside the region are affected by the mismanagement of the resources of the world's oceans, by the environment dangers of drift net fishing and by the threat to safe navigation; resolves for the sake of this and succeeding generations of Pacific peoples to seek the establishment of a regime for the management of albacore tuna in the South Pacific that would ban drift net fishing from the region; such a ban might then be a first step to a comprehensive ban on such fishing; calls on the international community to support, and cooperate in, the urgent conclusion of a convention establishing the zone; commends the Republic of Korea for its decision to cease drift net fishing in the region; and calls on Japan and Taiwan to follow this example and abandon immediately their damaging drift net operations.

Mr. Speaker, I also have two articles I would like to share with my colleagues and include as part of the RECORD.

TARAWA DECLARATION

THE SOUTH PACIFIC FORUM MEETING AT TARAWA ON 10-11 JULY 1989

Recognising the crucial dependence of the Pacific Island peoples on marine resources;

Profoundly concerned at the damage now being done by pelagic drift net fishing to the economy and environment of the South Pacific region;

Convinced that this indiscriminate, irresponsible and destructive fishing technique threatens the survival of the albacore tuna resource, and so the economic well-being of Forum Island Countries;

Deeply regretting that Japan and Taiwan have failed to respond to the concerns of regional countries about this most serious issue;

Noting that it is in the mutual interest of the major fishing nations active in the region, and the Forum, to conserve fisheries stocks;

Noting that all countries inside and outside the region are affected by the mismanagement of the resources of the world's oceans, by the environmental dangers of drift net fishing and by the threat to safe navigation;

Recalling the relevant provisions of the 1982 United National Convention on the Law of the Sea, and in particular Articles 63, 64, 87, 116, 117, 118 and 119;

Recognizing that the use of drift nets as presently employed in the Southern Pacific Albacore Tuna Fishery is not consistent with international legal requirements in relation to rights and obligations of high seas fisheries conservation and management and environmental principles;

Resolves for the sake of this and succeeding generations of Pacific peoples to see the establishment of a regime for the management of albacore tuna in the South Pacific that would ban drift net fishing from the region; such a ban might then be a first step to a comprehensive ban on such fishing;

Determines, to this end, to convene an urgent meeting of regional diplomatic, legal and fisheries experts to develop a Convention to give effect to its common resolve to create a zone free of drift net fishing;

Calls on the international community to support, and cooperate in, the urgent conclusion of a Convention establishing the zone;

Resolves that individual member states of the South Pacific Forum will take all possible measures in the interim to prevent drift net fishing within their waters, and otherwise actively to discourage the operations of drift net fishers;

Further resolves that member states acting individually and collectively will take what action they can within relevant international organizations to contribute to the cessation of this harmful form of fishing;

Commends the Republic of Korea for its decision to cease drift net fishing in the region;

Calls on Japan and Taiwan to follow this example, and abandon immediately their damaging drift net operations.

THE ASIAN FLEETS THAT STRIP

(By Timothy Egan)

SEATTLE.—In southeast Alaska, where many villages are kept alive by the annual return of hordes of Pacific salmon, nearly 40 million were expected last year. But barely a fourth of that number went back there to spawn.

In the Pacific Northwest, fishing for steelhead, a trout that looks like a salmon, is as cherished a sport as climbing Mount Rainier. But this year the rivers have been barren of the big steelhead.

The cause of the fish drought, Government officials say, is fishing fleets from Japan, Taiwan and South Korea whose huge nets drag the North Pacific illegally every night. According to the State Department more than $500 million in salmon that would normally return to American rivers is pirated annually by the boats. For American fishermen from Northern California to Alaska, catching these migrating fish is a $3 million business, but now many runs face extinction.

Alaskan fishermen say illegal foreign fishing is causing more environmental havoc than the spill in March of 11 million gallons of oil in Prince William Sound. They contend that it is as if someone from outside the country were allowed to come into Iowa and take half the corn crop without compensating farmers.

In a practice condemned by critics at "stripping the sea," more than 700 vessels from Asia drag at least 30,000 miles of nearly invisible drift net, as it is called, across the North Pacific every night. Ostensibly, they are fishing for squid, but the nets take in salmon, dolphin, whales, shorebirds, sea lions and anything else that might get snagged.

AN IMMORAL FISHERY

American fishermen say these nets are robbing them of their livelihood and cutting off the fish supply to rivers once thick with king and other salmon. "It's an immoral fishery," said Mark Tennant, president of Seacops, a group of 2,000 West Coast fishermen and environmentalists." It doesn't make either biological or economic sense."

For months, the State Department has been negotiating with Japan, Taiwan and South Korea, trying to get them to enforce international regulations that are supposed to keep foreign fishing fleets out of the migratory path of American-bound salmon. By international agreements, these salmon belong to the country of origin. Typically, a Pacific salmon migrates to the high seas, then returns to spawn at the end of its life in the river of its birth.

Under a law passed by Congress in 1987, if no agreement is reached by Thursday President Bush can order trade sanctions against the violating countries. Edward Wolfe, the Assistant Secretary of State for Oceans and Fisheries, said the Taiwanese will almost certainly face sanctions for repeated pirating of American-bound salmon.

For years the Taiwanese have said there was no proof of illegal fishing. But American boats have chased Taiwanese ships caught fishing in the high seas. Abandoned ghost ships from Taiwan, empty of crew but with the stench of salmon in the hulls, have drifted ashore off the Washington coast.

REPORTS OF BRIBERY

But the most striking evidence was made public last week, when the Coast Guard released a videotape taken earlier this month showing frantic crewmen dumping salmon from a Taiwanese ship caught fishing in waters they had agreed to avoid. When Coast Guard officers boarded the ship, the Taiwanese crew tried to bribe them, the Coast Guard reported.

This issue is now at the highest levels of the State Department, and it is causing a serious bilateral confrontation with Taiwan," said Mr. Wolfe. He said illegal drift net fishing has already caused the extinction of entire runs of salmon and is seriously depleting populations of dolphin and other sea mammals.

"Ultimately, the Government position will be to end all drift net fishing," said Mr. Wolfe. "Right now, we're just putting out fires."

The Taiwanese are considered the worst violators. About 80 percent of their 250 drift net boats are fishing illegally, according to the Coast Guard. But the Japanese have the largest fleet, with 170 vessels dragging the North Pacific. Late last week, the Japanese agreed to an American demand for electronic monitoring of their drift net fleet, a move that officials say would help curb illegal fishing.

Typically, each foreign boat carries 30 miles of plastic net, which rakes over a large section of water. By comparison, North American fishermen use nets no more than half a mile in length.

By Government estimates, at least 7 million to 10 million American-bound salmon are taken illegally by foreign fishing fleets every year. American fishermen say the number may be three times higher. Japanese, Taiwanese and Korean officials have given no figures on the salmon catch, but the Japanese say they accidentally snare at least 2,500 porpoises every year.

"When you put a million miles of net out every month, said Steve Posey, a member of the Seacops group, "it doesn't take long to wipe out a fishery."

DRIFT NET PERIL MOVES TO SOUTH PACIFIC

The "wall of death" has spread from the northern Pacific to the waters of the South Pacific. Island nations as well as Australia and New Zealand will begin a campaign this month to stop Taiwan and Japan from using drift gill nets in the region. If they are successful, then whole species of fish could disappear from parts of the South Pacific. This would be a devastating blow to the economies of some of the smaller nations such as the Solomon Islands, that are dependent on fishing.

The drift nets, made of nylon, are known as the "wall of death" because they snare both large numbers of fish and other marine animals such as turtles, dolphins, seals, sea lions and small whales. The fish are caught by their gills in the nets, which have a mesh of about 170 millimetres. Sea birds, attracted by the struggling fish, are also often trapped.

The Japanese and Taiwanese boats are after tuna, especially albacore. But according to the New Zealand Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries, the species could disappear from the region within two years unless drastic action is taken to curtail the use of drift nets. Talbot Murray from the Fisheries Research Centre in Wellington says that four times as many albacore were being taken as the species could sustain.

Last season, about 45,000 tonnes of albacore—mostly juveniles—were caught. The juvenile fish swim near the surface at night when the nets—about 15 metres deep and up to 56 kilometres long—are cast. When boats travel side by side, the nets can stretch for hundreds of kilometres across the Pacific.

More than 1200 vessels from Japan, Taiwan and South Korea have used drift nets to catch squid in the north Pacific. The boats have been catching salmon illegally. Recently the U.S. and Canada have moved to restrict the number of boats that fish in northern waters from June for about six months (This Week, 3 June).

But nations in the South Pacific were unaware that when the fishing season finished in the northern hemisphere, large numbers of boats travel south. The season begins in December and lasts until early April. "We thought there were only a few boats using drift nets," Murray said. "But last fishing season we discovered that more than 160 vessels were involved."

Most of the boats were from Taiwan.

Thirty boats were Japanese and two came from South Korea.

Most of the fishing is done in the Tasman Sea between Australia and New Zealand, and east of New Zealand at a latitude of about 40 degrees south. This brings the boats in conflict with boats that fish for albacore using two standard methods—trolling and long lines. Both these methods use bait. Not as many fish are caught and the longline fishery catches adult, rather than juvenile, albacore. Ironically, fishing fleets from Japan, Taiwan and Korea participate in the longline fishery.

A series of meetings will be held in Suva, Fiji, this month in an attempt to reduce the use of drift nets. One meeting will discuss what legal sanctions can be taken against nations that use drift nets on the high seas, outside territorial waters. Scientists, who know very little about the marine ecosystem in the South Pacific, will discuss ways of exchanging data and measuring the impact of the fishery.

But the main meeting will be from June 26 to 28 when government representatives from Japan, Taiwan and South Korea will confront the Forum Fisheries Agency (FFA) which represents 16 nations of the South Pacific Forum. The FFA hopes to obtain assurances that the use of drift nets will be curtailed. The agency is anxious to reach agreement with Taiwan and Japan because it is believed that other nations, in particular Indonesia and the Philippines, want to establish a fleet for drift netting.

New Zealand wants drift nets to be banned from the South Pacific, but Australia is worried that if this happens the boats will go to other areas such as the Indian Ocean where the southern blue-fin tuna, a highly valuable resource, would be threatened.

SUBCOMMITTEE TO HOLD HEARINGS ON DEPOSIT INSURANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, Congress recently passed legislation to revitalize the savings and loan industry. It is now necessary to take a look at another crucial area—the health of the deposit insurance system for commercial banks and credit unions.

The Subcommittee on Financial Institutions Supervision, Regulation and Insurance, which I chair, will hold 3 days of oversight hearings from September 19 through September 21 to examine these insurance funds. The hearings have been scheduled to gather facts. I have no evidence that either fund is facing any kind of problem. But I believe it is better that we learn about any possible problem as soon as we can, if, in fact, there is a problem.

The hearings will be strictly factual. They will not be a lobbying forum. They will examine the health of the insurance funds. They are not intended as the beginning of debate on the powers of financial institutions.

Since the savings and loan rescue plan was signed into law by President Bush last month, several prominent persons have recommended that deposits in banks, savings and loans, and credit unions be fully insured for only the first $25,000 or $50,000 in each account, not the current $100,000. Others have made still more suggestions regarding reforming the deposit insurance system.

Any debate over these proposals must be based on solid factual ground. That is why I am holding these hearings. Congress must have the facts before it decides to act. At the hearings the subcommittee will hear from Government officials, industry representatives, and distinguished scholars in a quest to get all the facts.

Mr. Speaker, deposit insurance was born in the Depression of the 1930's with the aim of protecting small depositors. Some claim that it has since grown into a protector of banks which appear too big to fall.

Many specialists argue not for fiddling with deposit insurance, but for making banking practices safer, and for better supervision by bank regulators. Safer banking practices reduce the risk of loss to the insurance fund, and better supervision and examination lead to discovering problems while they are still small and manageable.

Viewed from afar, commercial banking looks secure. Last year banks reported profits of $25 billion, along with the highest return on stockholders' equity since 1974. However, economists from the Brookings Institution have written a paper which says the big picture masks serious weakness. Some 150 banks with assets of $926 billion have capital ratios between 3 and 6 percent. Many of them are high-profile institutions: 13 of the 15 largest banks in the country, with assets of $700 billion, fit the category.

The hearings will investigate the financial health of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation [FDIC], which insures deposits at commercial banks, and the National Credit Union Share Insurance Fund [NCUSIF], which insures deposits at credit unions.

The FDIC insures over 13,000 banks with $1.75 trillion in insured deposits. Last year, the FDIC suffered the first loss in its 55-year history, losing $4.2 billion from 220 bank failures. This year thus far, 154 banks have failed, and the total is likely to approach or exceed 200 institutions. At the end of 1988, the FDIC had a reserve ratio of 83 cents for every $100 in deposits.

The NCUSIF insures almost 14,000 credit unions with $160 billion in deposits. The NCUSIF showed a gain of about $25 million last year on income of some $100 million. Credit union failures in 1988 cost the NCUSIF $60 million. Current reserves in the credit union insurance fund are nearly $2 billion. The NCUSIF reserve ratio is $1.26 for every $100 in insured deposits.

Mr. Speaker, I am looking forward to the oversight hearings on the bank and credit union insurance funds. They should provide information that will prove to be extremely valuable to Congress in determining whether there is a need to reform the deposit insurance system, and if so, what direction such reform should take.

A TRIBUTE TO PETER BORGHERO

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Mr. Peter Borghero, an outstanding citizen of northern California, who is retiring this month as president of the Oakland Scavenger Co.

Peter Borghero is a lifelong resident of Oakland. He still resides there with his wife, Mary, and his son, John. He attended local schools and joined the Oakland Scavenger Co. in 1937 as a helper on a collection truck. In the early 1940's, he advanced to driver and route supervisor.

Peter enlisted at the outbreak of World War II and served the U.S. Army for 5 years as a platoon sergeant. He was awarded both a Silver Star and a Bronze Star for service to his country.

After the war, Peter returned to the Oakland Scavenger Co. and was promoted to district manager in 1957. He was first elected to Oakland Scavenger's board of directors in 1964. He was elected secretary in 1973, vice president in 1974, and president in 1985. He held that position until his retirement this month.

Peter is active in many community organizations including the Oakland Chamber of Commerce, director, 1976–1981; the Chambers of Commerce of the cities of Alameda, San Leandro, Hayward, Castro Valley, Union City, Newark, and Livermore, and the California Chamber of Commerce. He is also active in the Alameda County Sheriff's Department "rangers"; the New Oakland Committee, crime prevention committee; the Athenian Nile Club, board of directors; the Lakeview Club, founding member; and the Festival of the Lake, past president.

As one of the State's leaders in solid waste management, Peter has served as past president of the California Refuse Removal Council—Northern District, and, past State president of the California Refuse Removal Council. He has also been a member of the National Solid Waste Management Association and a past chairperson of the Industrial Solid Waste and Hazardous Waste Committee of the San Leandro Chamber of Commerce.

The Oakland Scavenger/Waste Management Co. provides service to over 1 million people through franchise agreements with city and sanitary districts located in Alameda County.

I would like to commend Peter Borghero for over 50 years of service and dedication to both the Oakland Scavenger Co. and the people of the Ninth Congressional District.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order this evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE HONORABLE MICKEY LELAND

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KOSTMAYER). Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS], is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to join my colleagues in expressing our deep sense of sadness and loss at the tragic death of our friend, Congressman MICKEY LELAND. I want to extend my heartfelt sympathy to his wife, Alison, and his son, Jarrett.

The people of Houston's 18th Congressional District have lost an outstanding representative in Congress. MICKEY's colleagues in this House have lost a close friend who could always be counted on to offer good advice and the hand of friendship in difficult situations.

As chairman of the House Select Committee on Hunger, he gained the respect of all with whom he came in contact, both in this country and abroad. Because he was so committed to the task of eradicating hunger from the face of the Earth, he earned the love of an entire Nation.

The people of Texas were indeed fortunate to have Congressman LELAND represent their interests on public issues with such energy and dedication, both here in Washington and at home in Houston.

MICKEY LELAND never gave up in his fight against injustice, racism, poverty, and hunger. He felt that we could make a difference and he always sought to address the very best in everyone of us.

All of us will miss his many contributions to our joint legislative efforts. His work set a high standard of excellence for others to follow. Along with his many other friends, I'll deeply miss him—but I'll never forget him.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ANDREWS]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, GEORGE THOMAS LELAND lived to be 44 years old. He was the 44th black to ever serve in the U.S. Congress. On the day of his death, he was one of the most prominent black leaders in America and an outstanding and proudful representative of Houston. MICKEY LELAND was also a good friend of mine, and I will miss him very much.

MICKEY LELAND just positively glowed—when he talked about issues like hunger and civil rights; when he talked about his family, especially his wife Alison and his young son Jarrett.

The last time I talked with MICKEY was on the House floor late at night. He told me he was going to be a father again. He was so happy, and so was I.

He had a great gift: A tireless enthusiasm for life, for people and for public service. He loved government, from inner-city politics to world events. His energy for these things was contagious.

In all the times I have been with MICKEY, I never saw him take himself too seriously. He saw a lot of humor in life. What he did take seriously were issues, and after his first trip to Africa, the problems of world hunger became a passion with him. As chairman of the Select Committee on Hunger, he gave voice to efforts to stop the starvation and dying that exist in Africa.

I doubt many would have given MICKEY much of a chance 44 years ago. He had a tall ladder to climb out of the fifth ward. Houston was a different city then: Segregated schools, white-only leadership, ignored poverty, and a police department with few blacks. The fifth ward has never felt the Houston boom times. It remains today much as it did then—poor, crime ridden, and isolated.

MICKEY was one who fought to change that. He started as a student leader at Texas Southern University, and he worked long and hard for reforms that many of us take for granted today.

He also made it to the top. He was lucky in some ways—he had a strong and supportive mother and loyal friends—lots of friends. But most importantly, he had a determination that was resolute. Hidden beneath that wonderful smile was a commitment made of steel. He never gave up.

The respect for MICKEY grew in Congress. He became more serious, more effective, and for Houston and Texas his leadership became vital. MICKEY's influence helped gain mass transit funds, a bigger space program, and antidrug awareness for Houston. He was important in shaping the future of our city.

Young people are already talking about Congressman MICKEY LELAND—what he did and what he stood for. Someday in the fifth ward of Houston, or the poorest neighborhood in some other Texas city, some youngster will think about MICKEY's life and he will try harder and work longer and will fight to get to the top. And just like MICKEY LELAND, he will help to make Texas a better place to live. And that is MICKEY LELANDS's greatest legacy.

During the darkest days of the Civil War, Abraham Lincoln wrote to a friend. He said:

I know there is a God and
I know He hates injustice
But I know He had His hand in it
I see the Storm coming and
If He has a place and part for me, I believe that I am ready.

Today, we know there is a God and we know that he hates injustice. We watched the storm blowing across the mountains of East Africa but we know God must surely have had his hand in it. And whatever the test, we know that MICKEY LELAND was ready.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, this is the second time in the last decade that our Nation has lost an outstanding crusader for the cause of ending world hunger. And for me it is the second time that it has been the loss of a dear, close friend. MICKEY LELAND the legislator and Harry Chapin the singer/songwriter were both young, dynamic, warm, creative, caring, gentle people. They gave everyone a sense of joy in working with them and the mere sight of MICKEY or Harry coming down the hall, always delighted me. We miss both of them very much.

I mention the two of them now in the same breath because MICKEY's role in the hunger issue was shaped by Harry Chapin and they were so much like one another—in life and in death. It is a shame that they never met, I used to say that to MICKEY. In 1979, 3 years before he died in a tragic car accident between one of his many benefit concerts and talks on world hunger, Harry Chapin had convinced President Carter to create the Presidential Commission on World Hunger. We sat on the Presidential Commission with Senators DOLE and LEAHY, and John Denver, to name a few. It was the Hunger Commission in 1981 that recommended the creation of a special congressional panel on hunger. I introduced the resolution, along with MICKEY, to create the committee in 1982 and again in 1983.

After the select committee resolution was introduced, we had to struggle to convince the leadership throughout the House of the importance of this issue. Several committee chairmen expressed jurisdictional concerns about a new committee and although MICKEY was viewed as a young firebrand back then, we tried to assure them that we would work to supplement and assist the standing committees in their work. Those were the days when our Justice Department believed that information concerning hunger in America was anecdotal. There were some on both sides of the aisle who were inclined to oppose our proposal. But MICKEY and I had an understanding that partisan politics would not become the focus of the committee. When the Presidential Commission was created there was a similar understanding with Harry Chapin. Both men honored their word and the outcome benefited millions of impoverished people around the world. It also gave us reason to be very proud of this House—so many of us who could not normally find common ground on contentious issues, always could be proud of the cooperation to be found on tackling the hunger problem.

There were numerous leaders and groups who were closely allied to MICKEY and his role in the select committee. A group called the Coalition for a Select Committee on Hunger was created and it lobbied Capitol Hill, especially the Rules Committee which has jurisdiction over the establishment of select committees, to gain support for the initiative. TONY HALL, our chief advocate on the Rules Committee, helped significantly in bringing our select committee to fruition.

MICKEY LELAND was faithfully true to his word in keeping partisanship out of the work of our select committee, and we must now remain faithfully true to what MICKEY, and before him, to what Harry Chapin died for. Our Select Committee on Hunger exists because the American people and the Congress understood that hunger was not a black versus white or Democratic versus Republican issue. The committee has been effective because that was the basis of its conception. The Hunger Committee gives us reason to be proud because right from the beginning, during the creation of the Presidential Commission on World Hunger back in 1979, nobody pointed fingers and said "I understand what hunger or poverty is more than you do because I'm a member of such-and-such political party or such-and-such race."

MICKEY LELAND's service in the U.S. House of Representatives since 1979 can best be described as the work of an outstanding humanitarian whose heart was so large that he allowed it to pull him wherever he was needed. His mind heard and his heart felt the extensive suffering in Africa, and he went there. His heart felt the suffering in Asia and he went there. He heard about the suffering from the homeless and the impoverished in America and he never hesitated to go pour some soup, comfort the confused, and hold the hand of an AIDS victim, be it black or white.

No novice to lawmaking, prior to his coming to the Congress in 1979, Congressman LELAND represented the 88th District in the Texas Legislature from 1973-78. In the Congress MICKEY LELAND was a member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce where he served on the Subcommittee on Telecommunications and Finance, the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment and the Subcommittee on Energy and Power. He also served on the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. He was chairman of the Subcommittee on Postal Operations and Services and was a member of the Subcommittee on Compensation and Employee Benefits. Congressman LELAND was appointed as an at-large whip by the House leadership for the 100th congressional caucuses: arms control and foreign policy caucus, arts caucus, environmental and energy study conference, Hispanic caucus, humans rights caucus, maritime caucus, Sunbelt caucus, travel and tourism caucus, and the caucus on women's issues.

MICKEY LELAND loved this House and I'm certain he misses it as much as we now miss him. He could never rest if he thought he was the possible cause of disharmony here. MICKEY's devoted mind and compassionate heart would take him in and out of every office and corridor on the Hill until he resolved the misunderstanding. It was too soon for him to go. He had so much more to give to all of us. America has lost a great congressman, a humanitarian.

To MICKEY's devoted wife, Alison and his young son, Jarrett, his mother, Alice Rains, and his brother, Gaston Leland, go our heartfelt condolences.

In memorializing MICKEY LELAND, let us rededicate ourselves to the lofty ideals which he held so near and dear and which can be best summed up in words MICKEY often repeated: "A hungry child knows no politics."

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HALL].

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, as we come before the House today to pay homage to our dear friend, MICKEY LELAND, I am reminded of what a great privilege it was to work with him. Through the years, from the Texas Legislature to this U.S. House of Representatives, I watched MICKEY strive in relentless dedication to meet the needs of his district and of Texas.

For many years, MICKEY and I served on the Energy and Commerce Committee together and though he had a special constituency built around aiding the hungry and the homeless, he also found time to support the energy thrust, because he knew the trauma visited upon those who produce the Nation's power and energy, and the many jobs that were lost because of unreasonable and archaic energy regulations that shackled his State, his people, and his Nation. He voted a good Texas vote on energy and on other matters of import to those he represented.

My deepest and kindest feelings are extended to his wife, Alison, and to his son, Jarrett, and to his mother. I would like for it to be made of record here, and for Jarrett to know in the future, that he has lifelong friends who will always try to assist him in his dreams and aspirations that were lost in this tragedy, and that there are legions who will stand always ready to befriend him in memory of my friend—our friend, MICKEY LELAND.

The test of a person's life is whether or not they stood for something. Did they have a cause? Were they true to that cause—and was it worthwhile? The harsh and stark statistics of those who die from malnutrition and starvation give mute testimony to the legacy of MICKEY LELAND. The poet Thomas Babington Lord Macaulay said it best when he wrote,

And how can men die better
Than facing fearful odds
For the ashes of his fathers and the temples of his gods?

As we adjourn today, Mr. Speaker, let us do so in loving memory of one so capable of serving and so capable of friendship. May God bless MICKEY LELAND.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA].

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, Era mi Hermano. He was my brother. Era mi Amigo. He was my friend. Era un siervo del Senor. He was a servant of the Lord.

The poor, the homeless, and the hungry of the world have lost a great champion.

From the fifth ward in Houston to faraway Ethiopia he cared for them, he worked for them. His compassion for the starving people of the world was deep. They, too, have lost a great friend.

He fought injustice in so many ways within and without the system; he rebelled and yet he made people see the light. We will continue his mission; it was a mission of concern for those who struggle and for whom he so many times extended his hand in help.

When we look up in the evening sky we will see his light shine brightly. He gave his all. For us, there is yet time, there is still hope, there is still the fight—there is the will to go forward with his good works.

Two thousand years ago the Lord fed the multitudes through His miracle with a few loaves of bread and some fish. In this spirit we will continue in MICKEY LELAND's name—as he would want us to do. MICKEY LELAND did not want us to build statues or monuments, or to name buildings and streets after him. His only wish was that we move ahead with his fight to feed the hungry of the world.

The Lord willing, we will do this in his memory.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from the Texas delegation [Mr. PICKLE].

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, MICKEY LELAND was flamboyant, controversial, excited, hell-bent on a mission. That mission was to bring about more fairness and equity for all people, particularly minorities. He carried that mission out in complete satisfaction and with great pride.

MICKEY had a purpose in life over and above just bringing about fairness. He wanted to help hungry people, wherever they existed in the world. In my judgment he literally died in a blaze of glory, carrying out a mission that he felt deeply about, helping people. MICKEY's course is one of great credit to our Nation. He flashed across the political horizon of Texas and this great Nation as one of the most respected Members in this House. He was not just "a do-gooder" in the traditional sense. MICKEY could reach across the aisles, both sides, on progressive matters or on matters that affected our States, on matters that would be conservative to some people because he felt that Members must make progress, Members must have business to make jobs.

So in that vein, Mr. Speaker, I say to Members that MICKEY LELAND's life has meant a lot. One of those rare people that come along that a person will never forget, and although he was devilish and difficult at times, he always knew exactly what he wanted to do and where he wanted to end up. He always won.

This Nation is a much better Nation because of the life of MICKEY LELAND. Those Members in the Texas delegation who served with him and loved him, say "You are a great person, MICKEY LELAND. We will miss you very much."

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT].

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, I am not alone in thinking and speaking of MICKEY LELAND in the present tense. Everyone I have encountered in the weeks since MICKEY passed on seems to be doing the same—whether they knew him or not.

It's not just the common mistake all of us make about someone whom we loved and just lost. It is something special about MICKEY. For most of us, MICKEY still is.

"When Nature has work to be done," wrote Ralph Waldo Emerson, "she creates a genius to do it."

MICKEY certainly was one of those geniuses. His genius was the magic that only a few people in our history and our religious traditions have had. He lived his vision.

He said just a few months ago:

I am as much a citizen of this world as I am of my country. To hell with those people who are critical of what I am able to do to help save people's lives. I don't mean to sound hokey, but I grew up on a Christian ethic which says we are supposed to help the least of our brothers.

And that he did, often pointing out that the Talmud says, "If you save one life, you save the whole world."

In the days and weeks after MICKEY and his compatriots died—doing the difficult jobs they loved—even strangers called MICKEY by his nickname and spoke of him in a reverential way.

His friends told MICKEY stories. Two kinds of stories—about his serious dedication and commitment to worthwhile causes and about his good natured humor.

GEORGE THOMAS LELAND was always MICKEY. MICKEY was casual and easygoing; relaxed in mood, but intense in belief and feeling.

It was easier to catch MICKEY in a hallway and spend an hour with him than make an appointment to talk 15 minutes. He was as much at ease on the floor of the Texas House of Representatives or the Congress—places where he shared 17 years of his life with us—as he was at home in the fifth ward of Houston. As much at ease in a formal dinner as on a bus at dawn with his constituents. As much at ease talking to the President in the White House as sleeping on a heating grate across the street to make a point.

MICKEY was just so completely likeable. Even when one occasionally got mad at him, it couldn't last long.

I honestly know of no one who remained MICKEY's enemy. Even those he fought with passion warmed to his smile, his infectious laugh, his generous hand, his forgiving arm around a shoulder.

MICKEY charmed and disarmed.

MICKEY always had a way of making people notice what he had to say.

The dashikis, the shoulder bags, the finely tailored suits, the trips to Cuba, the pointed comment, the infectious and ebullient laugh, the crusade to end hunger, and his missions to Ethiopia—even, perhaps especially, his last.

MICKEY had a way of making people notice him. Not for himself. He always wanted us to see something else, and he knew he had to grasp our attention first. He succeeded as few others have or could.

He wanted us to see that a society that deprives any of its citizens of equality, justice, and opportunity, deprives itself of humanity.

He wanted us to see that condoning hunger and starvation anywhere, deprives us all of nourishment.

In death, as in life, MICKEY LELAND makes us see beyond ourselves and beyond the moment.

Through his eyes, we see the face of the withered little Sudanese girl who dies in his arms.

Through his eyes, we remember that most of the people in the world are not white, but black and brown and yellow.

Through his eyes, we know that real hunger is not what we feel when the restaurant service is slow, but what most of the world's people endure—going for days, weeks, months, even years without a decent, nourishing meal.

Through his eyes, we know that, by far, the worst form of poverty is the poverty of the soul that permits the other kinds to fester and grow.

Through his eyes, we recognize that the homeless are not America's failures, but examples of how America has failed some of its own.

For a few incredible years, we had MICKEY LELAND among us helping keep us sane and responsible and caring.

MICKEY was a dear, dear friend. In the Texas Legislature and in Congress he was a political and philosophical ally to whom I looked for the guidance and wisdom that only someone with his experience, his talent, and his compassion could offer.

MICKEY will always be there for me, making me see what he saw, as he will for so many others.

There will be—as there no doubt should be—physical memorials to MICKEY. There may be buildings or statues or placques bearing the name of MICKEY LELAND.

"Far and away the best prize that life offers," Theodore Roosevelt said, "is the chance to work hard at work worth doing."

MICKEY won that prize long ago. So the real memorial to MICKEY will be remembering what he cared most about, the work worth doing that he worked so hard at—clothing the poor, housing the homeless, feeding the hungry, and loving our neighbors as ourselves.

□ 1800

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST].

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, by now, everyone knows of MICKEY's great work on behalf of the hungry. Those of us in the Texas delegation mourn MICKEY both as a leader and as a friend. My comments today will be of a personal nature, about my friend, MICKEY LELAND.

MICKEY and I entered Congress on the same day—January 3, 1979. Our districts were similar—he, of course, had the largest black population in the State. I have the second largest. We were on the same side of most issues. But, the relationship was much more than that.

The things I remember most about MICKEY were his sense of joy of life and his humor. I saw that joy at his wedding. I saw that joy again when he brought his new son, Jarrett, to a luncheon meeting of the Texas delegation. I saw it most recently when Congress was getting ready to recess for the summer. MICKEY was walking around the floor of the House telling everyone that he and Alison were expecting their second child. MICKEY loved life, and it showed.

MICKEY could be gracious too.

Two years ago MICKEY and I joined forces to pass an amendment to an appropriations bill preventing the demolition of public housing projects in Dallas and Houston. Afterward, MICKEY thanked me for letting him hitch a ride on my amendment, saying how much he owed me for initiating the idea. However, I know that it was MICKEY who really deserved the credit for the amendment's passage on the floor. I could not have done it without him. MICKEY had been chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus and had many more friends in the House than I did. It was MICKEY's name on the amendment and MICKEY's work on the floor that passed it. And, everyone else knew that.

MICKEY also was a peacemaker. He worked long and hard to foster better understanding between members of the black and Jewish communities—two groups that had traditionally been allies in the struggle for civil rights and civil liberties but which have grown apart in recent years. MICKEY sponsored a group of black and Hispanic kids from his district in Houston each summer to visit Israel and spend time on a Kibbutz. MICKEY and I worked together promoting better understanding between these two groups, he as the only black member from Texas and I as the only Jewish Member of Congress from our State.

MICKEY radiated good humor, and everyone—Democrats and Republicans—genuinely liked him.

MICKEY's loss is incalculable. Everyone knows that he was a champion of feeding the hungry and helping the homeless. But, MICKEY also was a vital part of the Texas team in Congress. MICKEY used his credibility and his influence to stand up for things that were important to our State in a way that only he could do. MICKEY supported the superconducting super collider; he helped the delegation save the V-22 helicopter made in Jim Wright's home town, and MICKEY's last vote before his death was in favor of the savings and loan bailout legislation that was vital to the economic recovery of our State.

MICKEY was still a young man—only 44. Had he lived, he might have become chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee or perhaps a U.S. Senator.

MICKEY was taken from us too soon. I, like all of you, loved him as a brother, and I will miss him very, very much.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN].

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, there comes a time in every generation when the inner qualities and outward accomplishments of a few special individuals allow them to rise above the hue and cry of everyday life. They come from all walks of life, from all kinds of backgrounds, and they pull ahead of their peers through singular accomplishments and dedication to the causes that drive them.

MICKEY LELAND, with whom I shared a desk back in our Texas Legislature days, was one of those extraordinary individuals. In Houston, in Austin, and in Washington there has never been such an eloquent champion of human rights, civil rights, and social justice; never such a tireless activist in the fight for human progress.

Four years ago, MICKEY was in an Ethiopian refugee camp. An official was describing the situation; MICKEY was looking at it.

I was asking him about this little girl who looked to be about 70 or 80 years old,

MICKEY said.

A skeleton of a person with a thin layer of skin draped on her, who had just a faint breath of life in her. While I was talking to him, she died. I can see her face right now. Every day I see her face.

The girl was 14. Saving humanity was what MICKEY's life—and his death—was all about. He lost that girl; we all lost that girl. But his tireless efforts on behalf of the hungry, spurred by that vision of the little girl's face he saw every day, saved millions. Using his position as chairman of the House Select Committee on Hunger, he galvanized unresponsive Federal agencies as well as the U.S. Congress to make fighting hunger a top priority when it was not one before.

Jane Ely is a columnist for the Houston Chronicle and in a eulogy titled "Mickey Leland's Hope Survives," she wrote that:

MICKEY LELAND will live longer than most of those he left. His death has brought us a loss we can never calculate. But his life has given us a glory we can ever celebrate.

Because it is such a moving piece, I would like to place the rest of the article in the RECORD following my remarks.

My friends, we will never forget MICKEY. But that's the easy part. The hard part will be to never forget the issues and the causes for which he stood, for which he fought and for which he died. It's difficult to believe he's gone, just like that. A lot of us in Congress have returned to Washington, half-expecting MICKEY to come bounding around the corner, just like he always did, with a smile on his face and new ideas to save humanity.

MICKEY LELAND the man is gone, but MICKEY LELAND the spiritual leader will never leave us. We must mourn, but we must also use the occasion of his death to revitalize our own dedication to fighting hunger and poverty and injustice. We would do him and his memory great injury if we did not celebrate his cause with the same attention with which we mark his passing.

So go on from here with a renewed sense of purpose to fight injustice and a rekindled sense of urgency of just how little precious time we may have to do it. MICKEY would appreciate our remembrances, but he would demand our participation. I know he would because he was my true friend. You cannot say that about many people in this life, and I will miss him dearly.

I hope you all will join me in our prayers for MICKEY, his family, and friends, and for all those little girls and boys and people out in the world who looked to him—and through him, to us—for a faint beacon of hope in a very dark world.

Thank you very much.

MICKEY LELAND'S HOPE SURVIVES

(By Jane Ely)

The official notices said there were no survivors from the plane crash in faraway Ethiopia. That shows what the official notices know.

The plane carrying Rep. Mickey Leland may have smashed into the side of a mountain, but Mickey Leland will never die. He will never die because of the life he lived and, therefore, the lives he touched.

Charisma is a much overused word these days. But anyone who ever strolled down a street in Houston's wards with Mickey—and he was and ever will be Mickey, not Leland, not the congressman, but Mickey—has seen the word lived.

Youngsters adored him; he adored them more. Adults revered him; he, virtually without exception, returned the regard. Almost all he encountered cherished him in some sense; he reciprocated the appreciation until it swelled to cloak the crowd.

Mickey Leland had a mercurial magic that cannot be denied. The ever-young Fifth Ward scamp could drive you to distraction, reduce you to profanity, frustrate you beyond description, and always, always, educe in you a shrug and a grin and the comprehension, "That's Mickey."

Simply, Mickey was a good and caring person, and with that he made us all better. Sunday, a friend called him "a charmer." Oh, yes, he was, he was a charmer. And, in a very real way, he was the world—but, especially, Houston.

Mickey Leland genuinely typified the city he represented in the United States Congress. He was brash, he was caring. He was impatient, he was tolerant. He was impulsive, he was deliberative. He was radical, he was establishment.

He was never content with the way things were, he was ever confident he—and we—could make them better. He wore his heart on his sleeve, but he kept his humor in that heart.

Much of Mickey's charm came from a remarkable contrast in his character. His total inability to take himself seriously for very long was utterly delightful. His absolute passion about the issues he embraced was entrancing, even if they were not your issues, not your views.

Mickey Leland was chairman of the House of Representative's Select Committee on Hunger because he was wholly committed to ending hunger in the world—not just his congressional district, not just Houston, but the world.

Mickey Leland was chairman of the hunger committee because he was a person of magnificent, infinite hope. He simply believed hunger could be ended, the world could be bettered, all of humanity could rise to its best.

Mickey Leland was Mickey Leland because of his consuming hope and his contagious optimism his hope could—and would—be fulfilled. He lived a life of hope. He gave a myriad of lives that same hope.

He could wander into a pulsating, darkened night club, and they'd leave the dance floor to flock to the light he seemed to radiate. He could leap to the stage of a racially mixed elementary school and quiet squirming youngsters. He could kneel beside an elderly constituent in a rickety home for senior citizens and draw out the sparkle of youth.

He gave them all hope. That hope can't be killed by a plane crash, that hope cannot die. His name may be forgotten, but his influence will live through generations.

Mickey's politics frightened only those who didn't know him. To the conservatives who saw him from afar, he may have been a dreaded liberal threat. To the conservatives who knew him, he was a friend, and they loved him for his consuming compassion.

He was unhappy that some didn't like him, but he wouldn't, couldn't, be less in order to achieve esteem. He could and would compromise his style, some of his methods. He would stand in the fires of hell to be true to his principles.

The way Houston has begun to mourn the death of Mickey says much about him. Across the city Sunday, people of all faiths sought solace in their churches for their loss of a man who professed Catholicism—but truly was ecumenical.

With tears watering their faces, they laughed with their memories—memories of a man of soulful compassion and genuine joy.

Much of Houston grieved for his wife, his son, his unborn child. Much of Houston relished the adoration he had for his family and the heritage he left it.

The temptation is to cry out the cliche, to declare, "Dammit, this is proof, the good do die young." But the temptation is not the ultimate reality.

Mickey Leland slammed into the side of a mountain in Ethiopia and never again will walk the streets of Houston, carry its message to the Congress, spread—through words—his message of hope.

But Mickey Leland will live longer than most of those he left. His death has brought us a loss we can never calculate. But his life has given us a glory we can ever celebrate.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUSTAMANTE].

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Speaker, let me thank the very distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] for allowing me to share in this hour as we honor our friend and colleague, MICKEY LELAND. I join all of my colleagues in paying condolences to his wife, Alison, to his son, Jerrett, and to his mother, Mrs. Alice Rains.

Mr. Speaker, I knew MICKEY for 20 years. He was a special friend. I knew him in his early years as he fought the good fight. He fought the good fight for good government against oppression, against racism. He fought the good fight for the homeless, for those who suffer from hunger, for those that were denied civil rights.

Yes, MICKEY was a great humanitarian, and, because he was a great humanitarian, when he first came to Congress he asked Speaker O'Neill to name a committee here in the Congress that he would head, and that was the Select Committee on Hunger.

Let me share two experiences of the many experiences that I had with MICKEY in my lifetime, in the lifetime in which I knew MICKEY in the last 10 years. As chairman of the Select Committee on Hunger, MICKEY went with me to Eagle Pass to a hearing in Los Colonias or the barrios of that part of my district in Texas. We had a hearing on the problems that people suffer in that particular area of my district: malnutrition, problems with the homes, problems with health.

□ 1810

During this hearing, we found a little child who was suffering from an earache, and because they did not have the money to take her to the clinic and the clinic would not take her, MICKEY decided that we would embark on this mission to take this child to this clinic, and because of MICKEY's action that child, of course, was relieved of her ailment.

So all of us who have known MICKEY and have traveled with him knew of his great work, his tremendous heart for those who ailed. For that reason I am proud to have served with him and to count him as my good friend.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Houston, TX [Mr. FIELDS].

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] for calling this special order tonight.

The sense of loss hit me two nights ago when I returned to Congress and I realized that MICKEY was not here. Most people are going to talk about MICKEY as a great legislator, but I want to talk about him as my best friend in Congress. When I came to Congress in 1981, I thought that at best MICKEY and I would be acquaintances. I never though that I would call him my best friend.

Back in 1981, we took a plane ride one night. We left Houston at 1:30 in the morning and arrived in Washington at 7:30. During that plane ride, we got a chance to know each other and to initiate a friendship. It was on that plane ride that I asked MICKEY how he would classify himself, and when he told me that we would classify himself as a humanitarian and I saw his sincerity, I really began to appreciate and understand this person. I began to realize that there were numerous similarities. We both liked athletics. We both loved Texas. We loved our families. We had love for our God, and I began to see that we were a great deal alike, even though I was a white conservative Republican and he was a black liberal Democrat, we were both human beings.

I have got so many good memories of MICKEY that will be with me the rest of my life, things that have shaped my life and will make me a better person.

I remember a time he dressed down the motion picture industry because they were not presenting proper black role models. I remember his work in a Houston crackdown, an antidrug effort in Houston.

I remember the time that he took his personal time to get my grandmother's ditch cleaned out in Denver Harbor.

I remember his joke telling on the airplane back and forth to Houston every weekend.

I remember the time he took the time to eat dinner with my family in Houston, canceled an event just to go and have dinner with my family.

I think about the time just 3 weeks ago when we went to see "Honey, I Shrunk the Kids." He had his beloved son, Jerry.

I remember him coming to my wedding.

I guess one of the times that I will hold most dear is one of the last conversations I had with MICKEY. He was telling me that he was always concerned whether he was doing what God wanted him to do, that he held his Christian faith so dear.

So many tonight are going to talk about the loss of a great public servant. I want to talk about the loss of my best friend, who is irreplaceable. Through his influence, I will be a better person and his friendship for me is irreplaceable.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LAUGHLIN].

Mr. LAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS], dean of the Texas delegation, for yielding to me.

All of us who knew MICKEY had a special relationship because he was such a special person. I want to talk to you today and make mention of my special relationship. It started back when MICKEY was elected to Congress. At that time there was not a single cadet from the 18th Congressional District at the U.S. Military Academy, the U.S. Naval Academy, or the U.S. Air Force Academy. The best we could find, there had not been one in many years.

My relationship began with MICKEY because I was an Army Reserve officer representing West Point and recruiting students to go there and working with those students. Seeing there were no cadets at the military academies, I called MICKEY and asked for an appointment, an opportunity to present the academy side of the equation, and MICKEY agreed. We had counselors from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point come to Houston and MICKEY got some counselors from the Houston Independent School District to come to that meeting, and they presented the educational and leadership opportunities that students would receive at the service academies. At the end of that briefing, MICKEY said:

I have been a militant and I have been antimilitary, but after hearing the educational opportunities and the leadership opportunities that the students in my district have not gotten, for whatever reason, I commit the leadership from my office to the counselors from the Houston Independent School District, the principals and the students.

From the day forward we had students go to all the military academies from MICKEY's district.

To me, these are just some of the statues to MICKEY's life. While the list is not complete, these living statues to MICKEY's effort and leadership at West Point have been people like Carlton Borders, Yvette Hunter, Steven Marcontell, Daniel Correa, Rodolfo Cuellar, Enrico Cacciatore, Gilberto Barrera, and Thomas Cupit.

At the U.S. Air Force Academy, these students were admitted because of MICKEY's efforts and leadership: Kevin Lawrence, Scott Moffat, David Ortiz, Damon Alsup, Marcus Hervey, Rodney Harris, Carlos Frada, Glen Guyton, Horatio Rodgers, and Virgil Simpson.

At the U.S. Naval Academy: John Carroll, Ana Vaughan, James Thompson, and Chester McMillian.

I want to share with you a few words of these youngsters who have benefited because MICKEY gave them this opportunity. These are the remarks of Midshipman James Thompson.

Coming to the Academy is definitely a life long goal. My future is set, if I earn my degree. If it wasn't for MICKEY LELAND I wouldn't have had this chance.

He was loved at my school in Houston. He had programs set up to send school children to Israel. He was everyone's friend.

When I read the tragic news, I was deeply touched. It hit me like the death of a family member. He meant that much to me. It was a great loss to us all.

The remarks of Midshipman Chester McMillian:

I first knew about MICKEY LELAND when he was involved in saving Houston housing projects. I could see from his appearances on the news what kind of person he was.

He stuck up for people. He was a voice for the homeless and the hungry.

He has always been by inspiration. He is one of the reasons I want to graduate. To dedicate that achievement in his memory. To prove that he didn't make a wrong choice in nominating me to the Naval Academy.

Those, my friends, are living tributes to the kind of effort that went unnoticed that MICKEY LELAND gave the people of his district and the people of our State and the people of our Nation.

I am proud to call MICKEY LELAND my friend.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CHAPMAN].

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank our dean, the gentleman from Texas, for yielding to me.

MICKEY LELAND was my friend. He became my friend after I was elected in 1985 to the U.S. House of Representatives and he became my friend because on my first day in Congress he extended his hand of friendship and said, "JIM, just tell me how I can help." What a tribute it was to MICKEY LELAND, who came from the fifth ward of Houston, whose roots were so different than my own, whose issues in his home district were in many cases very different than the issues of the first congressional district, some 200 miles away, but when he said, "I want to help." MICKEY LELAND meant it. He did in the early months of my congressional career over and over again counsel with me about how to be an effective Member of Congress, how to understand those issues that concerned millions around the world who did not live in east Texas and how to gain a greater respect and understanding for those whose circumstances in life were not nearly as good as perhaps my own had been.

□ 1820

Tonight my sympathy goes to his wife, Alison, to Jarrett, and I just want to say that for my friend MICKEY, we know he made a difference. We know he made a difference for the homeless, for the hungry, for America, and for all mankind. What a great tribute to this great Congressman and this great American to say that, as he passed through this world, he left it better than when he found it.

MICKEY, we will miss you. We will miss your work. But you leave a tremendous legacy for all of us.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE].

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas for providing this opportunity for MICKEY LELAND's friends to both express our condolences to Alison, Jarrett, and the entire Leland family, and also to share some of our own feelings and our own memories.

There is no one who meant more to me as a friend and colleague and ally than MICKEY LELAND. I shall miss him greatly.

TOM FOLEY, our Speaker, in eulogizing MICKEY LELAND made the observation that he had a very special capacity for friendship. I think that was so much on target, for MICKEY, indeed, was a very special person.

There is not anyone whom I have ever known who was more engaged with life, more real, more genuine than he. He had an unusual ability to communicate across language and cultural barriers.

He always saw the human face behind the impersonal statistics or political abstractions, and he never gave up on people, even people with whom he was engaged in debate or controversy. He would never strip their dignity from them. He always was able to maintain a close personal relationship.

MICKEY LELAND, as is well known, had a special love for the African Continent, and for especially its children.

I was very privileged in my capacity as chairman of the Africa Subcommittee to join with MICKEY on several trips to Africa. The most recent time that we traveled together to Africa was to the country of Angola. I had been involved in securing the release of an American flier who was in an Angolan prison at that point, and the Angolan Government specifically asked that MICKEY LELAND accompany me in collecting the flier on our trip to Angola, because they wanted him to be involved with the discussions with President dos Santos of Angola about the negotiations that then had been suspended. He wanted to know MICKEY LELAND's advice, get his suggestions as to the best way to proceed.

MICKEY LELAND had an extraordinary prestige and status throughout the African Continent. It cut across ideology. It cut across all the labels that divide people one from another. He was effective because he was able to get to the universal human feelings that exist no matter what the nationality, no matter what the ideology of the head of state that we were talking to.

He played an enormous role diplomatically that is not well known or appreciated within this country in terms of relations to the African Continent. He was willing to take risks.

I guess in closing I can only say that it is certainly my hope that the inspiration of his life will transcend the tragedy of his death, and that we will in our own activities in the days and weeks and months ahead do everything we can to continue the mission that MICKEY set out for all of us to protect those in our country and in this world of ours who are the most economically vulnerable.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, just a little while ago we passed a bill with well over 400 of MICKEY's colleagues voting for a piece of legislation that he introduced earlier this year. He introduced it in the last Congress and we passed it for him, and the other body did not follow on. We think we will have a different result this time.

It was a great tribute to how people reacted to him that when we brought this bill to the floor there were 366 of his colleagues who joined him as cosponsors. Those of us who have sought cosponsorship on bills around here know that people do not lightly lend their name to our legislative ideas, and it is quite a compliment when any one Member can solicit and receive a positive reaction from that many of his colleagues. It makes it very easy as the chairman of a full committee to have people getting bills like that, because there is a fair assumption that with 366 cosponsors one is going to succeed on the floor.

MICKEY served on our committee for a good many years and made friends throughout the Federal work force. I would share with the Members this: that just a couple of weeks ago I went to speak to the 100th anniversary of the formation of the American Postal Workers' Union, the letter carriers' union, in Milwaukee, the birthplace of that union. A lot of Michigan letter carriers met me as I came into the hotel, and they crowded around me, and the very first question that I had from these Michigan people who recognized me as I came in was, "What is going to happen now that we do not have MICKEY LELAND? Who will replace MICKEY LELAND?"

I found myself spending my visit with the people from my own State and another State reassuring them that we would do the very best we could to replace MICKEY LELAND with somebody who would share his concern. That is all they wanted. "Will it be somebody who agreed with MICKEY LELAND, somebody who will treat us like he did?"

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, MICKEY LELAND was a friend. He was a buddy. He is one with whom I talked frequently in the cloakroom when we had time to spend during debate on bills, during when we were in progress during the wee hours of the night. He was a man with whom I worked on many causes over the years and got to know very well. We liked to practice our fledgling Spanish proficiency together, and I can hear him now saying, "Companero, mi amigo, que paso," as we would commiserate with one another in the cloakroom.

Most of all, he helped me in a case to free Southern farmers from the shackles of an archaic foreign policy which prevents them today from selling their products into international trade. MICKEY LELAND was far ahead of most foreign-policy experts, because he knew that when American capitalists traded with Latin American Communists that not only would it make trade and commerce but it would make conversation and communication among people. He understood that if people did business with one another that better relations might follow.

MICKEY LELAND was an example. He was an example to all who desire change in our country to make things better. He is an example of how to work within the Democratic process to make it work better. He is an example of how to light one candle instead of curse the darkness.

My love goes out this evening to Alison and to his family.

MICKEY, we are all here thinking about you, and we will carry on those things that we worked for together.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished Member and our whip, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER].

□ 1830

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the dean of the Texas delegation for yielding me this time to join with him and the members of the Texas delegation and all of the Members of this House in speaking of our friend, MICKEY LELAND.

Mr. Speaker, all too often we rise in this body during a series of special orders to remember with sadness the passing of one of our colleagues. We review the accomplishments of careers and remember service together.

There is a special poignancy and grief today as we remember MICKEY LELAND. We will remember MICKEY for his service and career but also for how he touched each one of us individually. Nearly every one of us has a story of MICKEY, mixed with humor, irreverence and kindness.

Two years ago, I was fortunate to travel to the Soviet Union on a trip led by our former Speaker which included MICKEY LELAND. While there, MICKEY and I worked together on a panel investigating human rights abuses in the Soviet Union. MICKEY demonstrated on that trip and on countless other occasions that his concern for the human condition knew no geographic, racial, or religious bounds. He sought to bring dignity and comfort to Americans and to people on every continent.

It is no small legacy to MICKEY LELAND that millions of people were saved from starvation in Ethiopia and the Sudan over the past 5 years because of his efforts. The attention of the public and of Members of Congress richochets around the world, from one crisis to another. Long after the attention of the Congress and the media had moved to other parts of the world MICKEY sought to ease the suffering in the Horn of Africa. Now it is up to us to fix our attention to the needs of our brothers in that region. The work of one man must now be taken up by many of us.

MICKEY LELAND could have chosen an easier course for his life. No doubt he could have been a successful pharmacist, leading a quiet life in Houston. Instead, he chose public service, and humankind is better for it. His life reminds me of the words of an Irish poet, Arthur O'Shaughnessey, "We are the music makers. We are the dreamers of dreams. Yet we are the movers and the shakers of the world forever it seems." In his all too short life, MICKEY LELAND moved and shook the world.

To Alison, to Jarrett, to his mother and brother, we send our condolences and our pledge to continue MICKEY LELAND's work.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I have feared the moment when I would have to rise here finally to acknowledge the bitter reality of the loss of MICKEY LELAND, and the reason for that is because of the loss not only of the light of his friendship, but the light of his conscience.

It is truly difficult to believe because I think all of us still expect MICKEY to walk down the aisle with that bright smile on his face, sometimes with his son accompanying him, saying hello and greeting fellow Members. There are few Members who are that warm in terms of friendship with their colleagues, working with him on the Select Committee on Hunger when he served as chairman, asking those biting questions and yet, turning aside and smiling because he knew that the witness was uncomfortable; the problems that we had when we first established the select committee. I can remember very well the members of the Agriculture Committee were concerned about the loss of possible jurisdiction with the select committee and yet, and yet who could look at MICKEY and not allow him the opportunity to try to serve his conscience and this country through the select committee?

I guess more than that though I feared the loss of his conscience, because there are few Members in this institution who become the conscience of the House. The House is like a body. There are Members who represent its eyes, its ears. There are some that represent the adrenalin that makes a body move. But MICKEY represented the conscience of what this House was all about, the conscience of trying to serve people in need. The Hunger Relief Act and the various bills that we worked out together were a tribute to him, because he was really the inspiration for most of that legislation.

I take some comfort in the fact that if MICKEY were here he would look at all of us and say: "Fight on." And I believe that great men in history were great because they truly believed in something that others could fight on for. And so today as we remember MICKEY, I think all of us acknowledge that he will be great because his fight on attitude will be nourishment to us and to his family to fight on for those things he deeply believed in.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SARPALIUS].

Mr. SARPALIUS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I too have lost a good friend, someone whom I have known for 12 years.

I could stand up here and tell about the many awards that MICKEY has received, his degrees, his honors. I could tell Members about how that twinkle in his eye moved each one of us when he talked about the problems of hunger in the world. I could tell about his leadership, what an effective Member he was of this institution, and in his Committee on Hunger.

But I am reminded of the dinner that I had with MICKEY the night before he left on his trip. He shared with me the same story that he shared with many of my colleagues, the story of the young girl who died in his arms of starvation. But I imagine that when MICKEY finally went to meet with the Good Lord, he probably went to that girl and held her once again in his arms, and he probably told her of what an inspiration she was to him, how she gave him the drive to try to make this world a better place to live.

I believe that when the day comes for us to stand before the Good Lord I think he is basically going to ask us two questions. One, in our lifetime what did we do to serve him, and there is no doubt that MICKEY served the Lord. And a second question probably would be: In our lifetime, what did we do to serve others? What we accomplish for ourselves means nothing in life, but it is what we give of ourselves to serve Him and to help other people, and I imagine when it was time for MICKEY to talk about what he had done to help other people he probably had to talk a long time.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ACKERMAN].

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to enter into a monolog with the gentleman from Houston.

I am going to miss you in the card game next month, MICKEY. Oh yeah, we will try to laugh, clown around the way you would have wanted us to. But it is going to be hard.

Yes, someone will surely tell your joke about Boo, the one you always told at least a thousand times, laughing all the while so hard that it brought tears to your eyes. And we will have tears in our eyes, too.

You know how you always want to tell something to someone but never ever get around to it? I am glad I have this chance.

MICKEY, you are the worst card player I ever met. You could never keep a poker face. You telegraphed every card you drew. You could not hide either delight or disappointment, and we never saw you fold. You hung onto every card no matter how miserable the lot you were dealt.

You hung in against the odds trying to improve your hand, and if you found yourself ahead, you would never leave the game. You would stay all night until you gave it all back and then some.

And that is how you lived your life. A thousand other people would have cursed the hand that you were dealt, but not you. You never complained. You hung on and built it into a royal flush, naturally in spades.

□ 1840

You had a right to be angry, and you were. But you were never bitter. You were angry about injustice, you were angry that people are hungry and homeless; you were angry that millions of people are dying from a disease for which everybody knows the cure; you were angry because there is indifference. But, MICKEY, you were the most pleasant angry man that we have ever met.

And you were driven, driven so others, especially the children, could find relief from their pain. You scaled mountains and flew through storms, you set a pace that left us breathless, and like a shooting star you set the night on fire and disappeared so fast we could not ponder why you went or tell you how beautiful you were.

They are writing songs about you, MICKEY. Common people you never met are writing poems.

And the children, MICKEY, the children all over the world are calling your name.

You have redefined the entire cause, MICKEY, a cause that you helped give life to. Never again can we think of feeding the hungry, housing the homeless, uplifting the downtrodden without thinking of MICKEY LELAND. These are now synonymous.

MICKEY LELAND, you are not gone, you live in your work. Every time a person helps another, that is MICKEY LELAND; and every time a good deed is done, that is MICKEY LELAND; every time a stranger stops to help a child, MICKEY LELAND lives; every time a mother smiles because her child is fed, MICKEY LELAND lives; every time a black South African expresses a desire to control her own destiny, then MICKEY LELAND lives; every time an Ethiopian Jew is reunited with his brothers in the Promised Land, MICKEY LELAND lives.

As Cuban political prisoners thirst to breathe free air, then MICKEY LELAND lives; as caravans of food cross borders undetained, MICKEY LELAND lives; when the rains are on time, when crops come in, when children sing, when women laugh, when men no longer war, then MICKEY LELAND lives.

Every time a guy with a twinkle in his eye and nothing but a big pair of 4's hangs in against an open pair of kings, then MICKEY LELAND lives.

Did you ever know that you are my hero, everything I wish that I could be?

We can fly higher than an eagle with you with the wind beneath our wings; we can fly higher than the eagles because you were the wind beneath our wings.

You know, MICKEY, you always complained you could never quit when you were ahead, but I got to tell you, buddy, you left the game a winner.

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, I sadly join with my colleagues today in mourning the death of Congressman MICKEY LELAND. My deepest sympathies are extended to his family and those touched by this remarkable man. Any death is tragic, the circumstances of his—a plane crash while on a humanitarian mission of mercy in Ethiopia—make his even more painful.

Those who have eulogized MICKEY have cited his remarkable accomplishments. Having grown up in a poor, black section of Houston, a product of a single parent home, MICKEY was familiar with the ugly face of discrimination and humiliation. He could have easily become bitter and disillusioned by the "system." Instead, he chose to improve it.

Not only did he go to college, an admirable achievement considering his roots, but he was a student spokesman for civil rights and was active in the anti-Vietnam war movement. MICKEY did not limit his activism to just national issues. Perhaps his most noteworthy achievement during his college years was his work in establishing a free neighborhood health clinic.

This pattern, involvement in the sweeping national issues combined with a hands-on approach to helping those most forgotten and most in need, is one that was a consistent theme throughout MICKEY's life. Always giving, MICKEY fought the hardest for those who could not fight for themselves. He worked endlessly for the creation of the House of Representatives Select Committee on Hunger and he was rightfully appointed to be its chairman.

As chairman of the Black Caucus, MICKEY took the lead in rebutting the Reagan administration's attacks on affirmative action and he fought the President's "constructive engagement" policy toward South Africa.

In describing himself, MICKEY once said, "I am now an activist on behalf of humanity everywhere, whether it is in Ethiopia * * * South Africa * * * Chile * * * in any part of the world where people are desperate and hungry for the freedoms and rights they deserve as human beings."

What hurts the most about MICKEY's death is not remembering what he accomplished in the past, but what he would have done in the future. The best way to honor him is to be true to his words and deeds. It is our moral obligation to strive to bring his dreams to fruition.

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to honor the memory of one of our colleagues who gave his life in service of his country and his fellow man.

Most of us knew MICKEY LELAND as an astute politician and able leader. However, this legislative giant had another side. His passion for equity and justice led him to become a leader in the fight against hunger. It was this fight which led him far away from his home district to a second home on another continent. His dedicated work to feed the starving children of Ethiopia was an extension of his devotion to the children of Texas. MICKEY understood that one could not look into the hollowed out cheeks of an African child without seeing the essence of every child. One could not see the anguish of an Ethiopian parent helplessly watch a child perish from malnutrition without inately understanding the pain of every parent who finds themselves unable to save their child from the ravages of life. MICKEY understood and felt the compassion that connects us all as human beings who share the same planet.

MICKEY was a man of principle, charity, and sacrifice. I am proud to have called him my friend.

Mr. BUECHNER. Mr. Speaker, this assembly is to a large degree predicated on the power of the spoken and written word, yet there are times when words seem woefully inadequate to the task assigned them. This is undoubtedly one of those times, for here I must try to honor a lifetime of service and achievement for the betterment of all men with a brief statement. Although mine will be but one voice in thousands who mourn MICKEY LELAND, reticence at this moment would be a great disservice to my memory of our colleague.

It seems somehow sad that all of the work MICKEY had done for those in need did not receive national notoriety until after his death. Stated simply, he had no tolerance for the fact that there should be hunger in a world of plenty, or that children had to grow up without proper education or medical attention. All of us are constantly faced with the horrors of world poverty, and eventually we become almost callous to it. More than anyone else, however, MICKEY never learned to turn away from human suffering, and I am sure that there are a great many people who are grateful for this fact.

Aside from being a great leader, MICKEY was also a good man. And while the world will undoubtedly remember the former, those of us who were lucky enough to know him will prefer to remember the latter. MICKEY was a friend and a gentleman even to those of us whose politics, on many issues, were antithetical to his own. It is important to keep people and politics distinct; MICKEY was not in Congress to serve political ends, but rather people. This is an example from which we can all undoubtedly learn.

There are many scales by which government leaders are judged; such words as liberal and conservative, idealistic and pragmatic are used to try to summarize our approach to the role of government, and most are severely inadequate. Yet if there is one pure standard by which we must evaluate ourselves it is the degree which we show concern and empathy for the governed, and to all men. In my experience, there has been no man who embodied this value more than our fallen colleague from Texas, and I can imagine no greater monument to a statesman than this.

Mr. Speaker, I fear this assembly will seem oddly incomplete for some time to come. Still, I hope that a part of MICKEY LELAND will remain, that being his dream and dedication, for they are his greatest legacy, and in them are preserved a great humanitarian, a great Congressman, and a truly great man.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, it is with the greatest sadness that I rise to join my colleagues in paying tribute to the late MICKEY LELAND. At a time when our Nation and our world face so much strife and uncertainty, we are dearly in need of the kind of committed people who have pledged their lives to confronting and solving the complex and intraceable problems we face. MICKEY LELAND was, indeed, such a dedicated and committed person, and so his loss is all the more tragic for all of us.

Mr. Speaker, MICKEY LELAND was truly a role model for all of us, for he possessed those qualities to which we all aspire. He was a man of great compassion who cared about and fought for the voiceless and the disenfranchised. His efforts to eradicate hunger world wide are now legend.

He was instrumental in the establishment of the Select Committee on Hunger, and it was his efforts which were responsible for the House and Senate approving $800 million in aid for the famine-ridden people of Ethiopia. At the time of his tragic death, as well as continuing his efforts to try to eradicate hunger, MICKEY LELAND was also pushing for increased funding to fight another terrible problem facing our Nation, the high rate of infant mortality.

It was indeed a privilege for me to know MICKEY LELAND during his 11 years in the U.S. House of Representatives, to have had the opportunity to work with him and to watch him as he passionately took on the causes that were so dear to him and, in the process, made our Nation and our world a better place to live.

Mr. Speaker, I know there are no words that can be spoken which can make up for the terrible loss we have all suffered with the death of MICKEY LELAND. I believe what would be fitting, however, would be to honor the memory of MICKEY LELAND by continuing the fight he fought and by seeking to achieve the goals that were ever present on his horizon. In this way, the great legacy of this outstanding American, MICKEY LELAND, would truly live on.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I join today with my colleagues—especially those from Texas—to mourn the loss of MICKEY LELAND, to remember his great acts of friendship and to pay homage to his ability and his many accomplishments.

MICKEY always reached for the heart. His cause was humanity and his enemy was injustice. His weapons were his keen intelligence, his kindness and his incomparable skill at appealing to the very best in each of us.

His tragic death succeeded in focusing the attention of the world on the terrible scourge of hunger. His loss has caused all of us to recommit ourselves to eradicating that scourge from the earth. I think he would be pleased by that.

MICKEY was a comrade-in-arms in a cause very special to me—improved understanding and cooperation between America's black and Jewish communities. He was the creator and sponsor of an innovative program that for many years has sent minority youth from Houston to Israel, where they shared experiences in a kibbutz with Israeli youth. This effort was supremely typical of MICKEY's creative and productive work.

MICKEY LELAND was a tireless advocate for civil rights. He was a hero in the fight to improve the well-being of the world's children, and he worked endlessly for peace on earth—and I shall miss him very much.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to have this opportunity to pay tribute to our late colleague, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. LELAND.

I worked closely with MICKEY LELAND on the Select Committee on Hunger. As the ranking majority member of the committee and the chairman of its International Task Force, I had the chance to collaborate with MICKEY on a number of issues in which we were mutually interested.

From these experiences, I came to know MICKEY's genuine and deep commitment to the elimination of hunger, both here and overseas. Hungry people were very much on his heart, and he felt moved to do all that he could to help them.

MICKEY LELAND had the special gift of being able to share his excitement for hunger and human needs issues with others. His concern was infectious. Many of those who did not understand the urgency of these issues became committed after being around MICKEY and experiencing his enthusiasm.

He also was talented in dealing with both the powerful and the poor in other countries, especially those in developing countries. Clearly, MICKEY was a citizen of the world. But he truly was also a brother of the Third World. He was very much at ease traveling in poor nations and mingling with their rulers and their neediest subjects. He seemed effortlessly skillful in communicating with them and conveying to them his empathy with their struggles and aspirations.

We were fortunate to have such a talented "Congressional Ambassador." With his death, our country has lost a tremendous resource for good will. It was rare to find a person who could embody and express so well American ideals and values in his interactions with citizens of the Third World.

We have lost a dedicated champion for the hungry and the needy. Yet, through his death, new attention and concern have been focused on the issues for which he gave his life in Ethiopia.

So, as we mourn the loss of this exceptional human being, let us consider how each of us is obligated to continue the work in which he was involved. In life, MICKEY LELAND made great contributions to improving the lives of countless people around the world. In death, he challenges us to keep his commitment and to rekindle the spirit that inspired him.

Let us be open to the different ways in which we might be called—as MICKEY LELAND was—to help the poor, the hungry, and the disadvantaged. Ultimately, our continuation of his service is the finest tribute we can provide.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I equate MICKEY LELAND with vitality.

That is one reason why it is so utterly difficult to accept his death.

Whatever the subject, if MICKEY was interested, he was vibrantly so.

From the most serious—issues of life and death—to the very lightest—I saw how MICLEY LELAND approached life with intensity.

He surely knew the difference between what mattered much, or little. The ultimate test of effort was what it meant for the life of individual human beings.

Saving one life—what more could one ask, he felt, unless it could be many.

He touched and indeed saved the lives of many. This is an enduring memorial to him. Lives that would have been snuffed out instead endured. From that will flow new life, generation after generation, into eternity.

May his wife Alison and entire family find some consolation in the monument of his life, while they bear an incalculable loss that we, his colleagues and friends, share in smaller, though very real, measure.

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, when we lost Congressman MICKEY LELAND, he was far from his home and his family, but he was in the midst of his passion. He was striving to deal with the single problem which had been the focus of his commitment for years: hunger. He was also in the place where years before his life was transformed, amidst the starvation plagued people of Ethiopia.

I had not known MICKEY LELAND long when we lost him, but I did have the special privilege to have worked side by side with him in the Congress. I saw the depth of his commitment and the intensity of his passion. I felt the warmth of his smile, his sensitivity, his concern. I will never forget my last conversation with him, just a few days before he left on his illfated journey to Ethiopia. As we talked about the Select Committee on Hunger, the work of which was his passion, he happened to mention a personal injury and the physical pain he was fighting. He also spoke of his young child and his excitement about the anticipated birth of a new child. But he did not miss a beat. Clearly, there was no thought in his mind of letting his personal pain nor his love for his own family interfere with the rough assignment he had planned for himself in Ethiopia. That was so typical of him. He loved life and lived it to the fullest, but it never kept him. He loved life and lived it to the fullest, but it never kept him from his life saving work against hunger.

In the days while we all waited, hoping against the odds that he would be found, and after we learned of the tragedy that we had feared, tributes poured in. The ones I know would have meant the most to MICKEY LELAND were from those whom he represented and whose lives he sought to sustain and improve. He understood people and their needs. None could be more fundamental, more basic than food and seeing that that need was met was his passion. His commitment to eradicating hunger was solidified in Ethiopia when he witnessed the last breath of a young girl fighting starvation. He returned time and again to that nation where hunger was of the most devastating proportion, where it was ravaging lives by the thousands. But the face of that dying girl was etched on his conscience wherever he was. In his Houston congressional district, in the corridors of the Capitol, at a White House barbecue, or in the mountains of Appalachia, MICKEY LELAND never missed an opportunity to fight to ensure that not another person would have to die the horrible, prolonged death of hunger that he witnessed.

In the 8 months I served with MICKEY LELAND in the Congress, I know that words of tribute would ring hollow to him if they are not coupled with a continuation of his commitment. His all too short life was lived to the fullest. But when we lost him, he knew that there was much still to be done. Hunger still ravages lives in the streets of New York City, among the homeless in Westchester, and in the drought stricken stretches of the African Sahel. Lives that have been saved from hunger and the public awareness of the extent of hunger are tributes to this man. If we can now move on to eradicate hunger, his life and his death will have not have been in vain. For then, the commitment that was the driving force in his life will have been fulfilled.

Equally important, MICKEY LELAND's memory will be honored by other commitments, other passions to improve this world in which we all live together. MICKEY LELAND was the kind of man who followed the creed of our late Senator Robert Kennedy who was fond of saying, "Some men see things as they are and say, why; I dream things that never were and say, Why not?" Whether the plight is drugs, illiteracy, child abuse, injustice, violence or homelessness, MICKEY LELAND was impatient to find answers. He wanted to know how it could be.

In life, he fought to eradicate hunger from the face of the Earth, but he cared deeply about the many sufferings of the people of this world. He would not want us to stop and mourn, but to intensify our efforts on behalf of humanity to eradicate the problems which confront our world. He would want us to dream of a better world and to recommit ourselves every day to helping those with whom we are privileged to share this life.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to express my deep sorrow at the death of my Texas colleague and friend, Congressman MICKEY LELAND of Houston, TX. His death was a tragedy and he will be missed, not only by his colleagues, but by the Nation and the world.

Since coming to Washington in 1978, MICKEY had been one of the strongest proponents of minorities and the homeless in the House. He was continually fighting against injustice, racism, poverty, and hunger. This is most apparent in his work in creating and chairing the Select Committee on Hunger.

MICKEY had traveled to most of the poverty and hunger-stricken countries, and upon his return he always advocated greater aid by the United States. He fought hard for his aid packages. Sometimes they were too ambitious, but eventually the most important sections would be adopted. His humanitarian efforts will serve as a guide and inspiration for all of Congress.

Additionally, he served his other committee assignments well. He chaired the Postal Operations Subcommittee of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee. In this position he was instrumental in passing a bill giving the Postal Service greater power to investigate mail fraud. He was also a key player on the Energy and Commerce Committee by defending minority set-asides on many bills.

MICKEY LELAND served his constituency well in our Nation's capitol and his country well in the eyes of the world. He was a friend and I will miss him. I extend my prayers and heartfelt sympathies to his wife, Alison, and his entire family. MICKEY LELAND will not soon be forgotten.

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with mixed emotions to pay tribute to my friend and colleague, MICKEY LELAND.

I feel great personal sadness at the loss of my dear friend and sadness for the loss to our Nation of a great statesman. And yet any time I think of MICKEY as he was, vibrant and alive, I smile. He was a source of great joy to many. His memory should be an inspiration to us all.

MICKEY had a special impact on each and every person with whom he came in contact. I believe that his great compassion for others, his sense of humor, and his fairmindedness touched all who knew him in a special way.

As we have seen since his untimely and unfortunate death, MICKEY had a talent for transcending the many barriers which separate us. He was a special person in that way. He was not bound by party lines or economic circumstances or color or race or handicap.

I first came to know MICKEY when I was deciding whether or not to make my first run for Congress. During that decisionmaking process, I contacted all of the Texas Democratic Congressmen from the surrounding area to seek support. MICKEY was kind enough to endorse me during my first congressional campaign. Later, when I came to Washington as a freshman Congressman from South Texas, we became better acquainted during the regular weekly Texas Democratic delegation luncheons. MICKEY and I would eventually spend a good deal of time traveling together back and forth to Texas.

MICKEY and I shared many similarities, but there were differences as well. We both represented lower income, minority districts in Texas. We both felt a great need to improve economic conditions and find a way to lift unfortunate people out of the trap of poverty and into a better, more stable way of life. Politically, we shared the goal, but didn't always have the same opinion on how to reach that goal. And yet there was always one thing I could count on from MICKEY—loyalty. If I really needed him, he never once let me down.

I used to always say, MICKEY LELAND is Texas' secret weapon. He could make inroads where no one else could.

I had the great fortune of travelling with MICKEY as he attempted to improve conditions around the world. My first trip was with the Select Committee on Hunger as they traveled to Vietnam and the Far East. My mission was to attempt to reunite a former reeducation camp detainee with his family in the United States. MICKEY had set up the trip partly to bring home Amerasian children, and to investigate the hunger conditions of the general population in these Far East countries.

The trip mixed success. The Amerasian children came home. The reeducation camp detainee is still in Vietnam, but until the day he died MICKEY continued to work with me to reach that initial goal of release of captives in Vietnam.

I gained a great respect for MICKEY during that trip and the inevitable followup. I saw his compassion first hand. And I saw his passion. He had a zeal, a God-given mission to wipe out hunger, to wipe out involuntary captivity, to provide freedom from chains for all the world.

Shortly thereafter, MICKEY asked me to accompany him to Cuba. He was going to meet Fidel Castro to secure the release of several political prisoners with families in Florida. He thought my Hispanic background and knowledge of Spanish would be of benefit. Additionally, we were trying to find another avenue to secure release of the Vietnamese detainee. MICKEY also invited my young son to accompany us.

Needless to say, MICKEY's mission was successful. He was able to do what many tried and failed to do for a very long time. He secured the release of the prisoners. And he found a new fan in my son, Sollie. MICKEY, because of his genuine concern, humor, and love of children made a lasting friend in my son. Working against the odds, he accomplished what many official negotiators could never do. He was respected by world leaders of all persuasions.

Like I said before, simply by the force of his personality and his conviction, he was our secret weapon.

My final trip with MICKEY probably had the greatest impact on me. Again, under the jurisdiction of the Select Committee on Hunger, MICKEY had a mission to free the captives. This time it was a domestic trip to south Texas, and the captives were residents of colonias, held by poverty, lack of food, and sanitary conditions—Americans living in Third World conditions.

MICKEY and I joined ALBERT BUSTAMANTE on the border for a field hearing. We heard official testimony and then went out to look at the living conditions in the colonias first hand. While there, I saw MICKEY perform one of the most compassionate acts I have ever witnessed. There was a small child in one of the shacks who desperately needed medical care. The mother had attempted to take the child for treatment and through a series of miscommunications came home emptyhanded because she lacked any resources to pay for the needed medical attention. MICKEY didn't hesitate at all. At his leading, we took the child to the nearest medical facility where the appropriate treatment was administered.

His drive to help the less fortunate was not a matter of rhetoric or grandstanding. It was real.

He was a workhorse not a showhorse, and he in essence put his money where his mouth was. I admired him for that—and so did many others.

We will all miss MICKEY; he enriched our lives; he made the world a better place.

He was truly a man of all seasons. His memory will live on and inspire us all.

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Speaker, I want to join my colleagues in expressing my deep sorrow at the loss of our colleague, Representative MICKEY LELAND.

I had the privilege of serving with MICKEY on the House Energy and Commerce, and on several occasions we traveled together in the conduct of the committee's business. Even though I disagreed with him on some issues, I always had the greatest respect for the energy and eloquence with which he pressed his views, and considered him a good friend.

It is common these days to criticize Congress and some of its Members, and it is a shame that the public gets far too one-sided a story about this institution. The fact of the matter is that it is a great institution, and one of which the people should be proud. And MICKEY LELAND was one individual that brought distinction to the public's business that we debate here every day.

For people who believe in causes, MICKEY LELAND showed them how to get results. And for those who felt government is not doing enough for the downtrodden, MICKEY LELAND showed them it would do more. And for every time people threw up their hands at a problem and said it couldn't be solved, MICKEY LELAND rolled up his sleeves and said, "Let's get to work."

Mr. Speaker, MICKEY LELAND's presence in this Chamber is already missed, because in every sense of the word, he was representative of the people. He was truly a dedicated Member of this body, and it is entirely fitting that we commemorate not just his passing, but his contributions to the House of Representatives.

Thank you.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, like many Members of this institution, I know MICKEY LELAND for many years from our mutual work in Congress representing neighboring districts in our home town of Houston. He was one of the more congenial and charming Members of this body, and his personality was such that he developed personal friendships on both sides of the aisle, irrespective of political philosophy.

Despite the fact we held differing views on many issues before Congress, I have always recognized the MICKEY believed fervently in what he thought was right, and he pursued those causes with determination and courage.

In seeking out the Ethiopian refugees, he knew that he was risking his life in an all but forgotten part of the world. He accepted that risk because he felt the cause was worth it, and because he knew his efforts were needed. He traveled repeatedly to a scene of tremendous suffering in the belief that he could offer hope to some, and perhaps aid in the survival of others. In the end, the cause which he loved so much, and for which he accepted all the danger, took his life.

This institution will miss MICKEY's courage, fervent belief, and endless determination.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, the loss of Congressman MICKEY LELAND will affect this Congress, and our Nation, very deeply. MICKEY's tragic death deprives us—at a crucial time—of one of the leading voices of concern for the disadvantaged, for racial and religious conciliation, for human rights and human dignity, and for pragmatism.

MICKEY LELAND was a Democrat, a liberal, a black spokesperson, an internationalist, and a committed activist. But what he believed serves us as just one example of his contribution. Because equally important was how MICKEY LELAND operated, how he deftly and poignantly raised issues, how he assembled unlikely coalitions, how he focused our attention on complex and remote issues through his diligence and great personal commitment.

MICKEY moved with great dexterity among the disparate groups and personalities which share his concerns about issues. Almost unique within this institution and, regrettably, in American political life, he made real contributions, and achieved real success, in bridging the gaps which separate white from black, Jew from gentile, domestic issues from international concerns. And that ability was a great talent in a world of politics in which divisiveness and conflict are seemingly valued more than cooperation and compromise.

Just last year, as the political conflicts between Jewish and black Americans was a topic of persistent discussion and concern, MICKEY was given the Jewish National Fund Tree of Life Award for his exceptional service to the community. At that time, our colleague Representative MEL LEVINE said that MICKEY was a "visionary in his efforts to improve black-Jewish relations." And so he was, a visionary on political reform, on world hunger relief, on empowerment of the dispossessed of the world—on a wide range of challenges which overpower and paralyze many politicians, but which to MICKEY LELAND, presented only opportunities to improve the quality of life for children and men and women here at home, and around the world.

"I am now an activist on behalf of humanity everywhere," MICKEY said in 1985, "in any part of the world where people are desperate and hungry for the freedoms and rights they deserve." And if that statement seems grandiose to some, let us recall that MICKEY made it shortly after he watched an Ethiopian child starve to death before his own eyes.

The record of legislative initiative that MICKEY wrote and achieved in ensuing years demonstrates the sincerity of that commitment. On issue after issue—homelessness, hunger, job training, and many more—MICKEY was a forceful and persuasive leader who demanded more than symbolic rhetoric from the Congress and others in government.

We shared a special status in this Congress, both chairing select committees that are specifically designed to raise issues that may be a little tougher than the Congress can address, to discuss solutions that may exceed current political "acceptability," to educate not only the public but our colleagues in the House as well. MICKEY served as a member of my Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families, and he liked the forum so well he went off and got the Select Committee on Hunger created, and he wrote a brilliant record as chairman of that important panel, taking Members to see the human desperation not only in Ethiopia and Central America, but in Appalachia, in the migrant camps of the American South, and on the Native American reservations of the West.

Some believe Members of Congress conduct these investigations and visits for publicity. But as a recent Washington Post story noted, MICKEY's trips were rarely the subject of press attention at the time. In fact, as Dale Roussakoff aptly noted, "It says something unfortunate about Washington that Representative MICKEY LELAND, in his death, is more widely celebrated for his good deeds than when he was doing them."

One of our colleagues said in that same column that MICKEY "had to become a martyr before people understood," and in some ways, that's true. I suppose that there would be a degree of acceptance in our loss of MICKEY if we truly believed that his death would stoke the conscience of the Congress and the Nation more than momentarily, and would empower us to take the steps he wanted us to take, to do the good work he died trying to persuade us to undertake.

I don't think MICKEY wanted to be a martyr. I doubt he even wanted to be a visionary, though he was one. He wanted to make a difference, to give some measure of a voice to those who are too poor, or too powerless, or too hungry to make much of an impact on the political system. Even as he died, he succeeded in making the difference, and in changing the rest of us to live up to his remarkable level of commitment and achievement.

My family joins me in expressing our very deepest grief to Alison, their child, and to the families and friends of MICKEY and the other congressional and agency employees who lost their lives. Their life's work, and their sacrifices, will continue to inspire us for many years to come.

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Speaker, today we are honoring a member of my class who came into Congress with me following the election of 1978. Since those early days I have counted MICKEY LELAND as a good friend, so you can imagine my shock when I heard, during a visit to the Soviet Union with the House Armed Services Committee, about the tradegy that took the life of MICKEY in Ethiopia.

Although MICKEY and I did not necessarily agree on some of the issues, I nonetheless had great respect for him through the years. Congressman LELAND was a person who was nice to be around. He was a very pleasant individual with a good personality who related well to people. I think this is one of the main reasons he was loved so much by his constituents as well as his many friends. He believed in making things better for, not only the people of Houston's 18th Congressional District, but for the underprivileged throughout the world. He had a vision of improving their lot in life. He was in the forefront of fighting against injustice, inequality, hunger, and poverty. It was because of his deep concern for the impoverished in that part of the world that MICKEY LELAND was where he was at that time. He was on a mission to try to help those who were suffering. Also, we mourn the others who lost their lives in this tragic plane crash last month.

MICKEY LELAND is gone from our midst but he will not be forgotten. We shall remember his commitment and move forward to carry on his good work in behalf of the needy of this world. I would like to extend my deepest sympathy to Alison and his entire family. May God richly bless you all.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay my respects to one of our most highly regarded colleagues, the Honorable MICKEY LELAND of Texas. A good and decent man, an honorable Member of this body, is no longer with us, and it represents a loss for us all, not just this Congress as an institution, but for our Nation as a whole. Unfortunately, the American public often looks down its nose at the institution of government, and it is sad that it takes the untimely passing of a man so distinguished as MICKEY, for many to realize that this body is full of dedicated, hard working individuals, as exemplified by our dear colleague from Texas.

We are all aware of this circumstances of MICKEY LELAND's death, but are we truly aware of the circumstances of his life, or that the very way he died makes a statement about how he lived and how much he cared?

I am one of the unfortunate Members of the Congress who did not get to know MICKEY LELAND very well on a personal basis. With 435 of us running around here, we can't all be as close as we would like to be. I did, however, know of the man and his work, and his dedication to improving life for those less fortunate than what we all like to think life is like. Certainly, in this regard, he was well known to me and countless others.

But the passing of MICKEY LELAND reminds us of the work as yet undone, and of the challenges to be met; and the life of our dear colleague reminds us of how to do our work and to face those challenges: to serve with unwavering devotion, so that we may all serve with distinction. Thank you, MICKEY, for the work of what was tragically too short a lifetime, and the standards you have set for all of us to follow.

Mrs. MEYERS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the loss of our colleague, MICKEY LELAND, touched many of us very deeply. MICKEY LELAND reached out to people. He had a gracious smile and extended his hand out to colleagues in Congress and to his fellow human beings who are desperate and starving in Africa. He lived a fully productive life with compassion and empathy; with energy and fervor for a cause; with enthusiasm and joy; and with modesty.

MICKEY LELAND was strong in his conviction to help the hungry. He called attention to the nutrition and health needs of hungry people. particularly vulnerable children, in rural America. He was in the forefront of the Nation's fight against infant mortality—a severe and unacceptable problem plaguing many of our country's urban areas.

Internationally, MICKEY LELAND brought to our attention the plight of Ethiopian famine victims. He led efforts to increase funding for basic health needs in developing countries through UNICEF's child survival activities and vitamin A programs, expanded use of U.S. agricultural commodities, and micro-enterprise credit programs for the poor.

Mr. Speaker, MICKEY LELAND's death has affected us deeply because we all know that the work he did was very good. This man and his good deeds will be sorely missed. Our hearts and prayers go out to his family.

Mr. STOKES. I am deeply saddened at the loss of Congressman MICKEY LELAND. I am pleased that the distinguished dean of the Texas delegation, JACK BROOKS, is honoring MICKEY today with this special order. Thank you, JACK, for giving us the opportunity to remember MICKEY in our own unique way.

I am sure that everyone who has come to pay homage to our distinguished colleague, MICKEY LELAND, feels a great sense of loss. There is a void in this House which will take a long time to fill. I will miss him and this body will miss his insight and his talent.

MICKEY was a man I admired; a man I respected; and a man I was proud to work with to improve the quality of the lives of people all over the world. I am honored to pay tribute today to MICKEY's outstanding efforts on behalf of the underprivileged, the malnourished, and the hungry.

From the beginning MICKEY was a maverick. MICKEY made a lasting impression. He was not afraid to let anyone know how he felt about controversial issues. He was frank and honest. I respected him for these qualities. MICKEY had a way of resorting to the dramatic in order to make a point during legislative debate. I recall a few years ago, when we were debating about bilingual education, MICKEY began his floor speech in English, articulating the need for bilingual education in our schools. He then switched and began speaking Spanish, repeating the original argument he had made in English. His point was well taken, as Members unable to understand Spanish were dumbfounded. At the end, the floor gave him well-earned applause for his eloquence.

MICKEY came to Washington with a vision of improving the lives of his constituents, some of the poorest in Houston. MICKEY had a purpose, and he had a mission. It was no surprise that he would excel at his first assignment, as a member of the Energy and Commerce Committee during one of its most active periods. Although a novice, MICKEY proved that he could be a formidable statesman. As a member of the Telecommunications Subcommittee, he was a persistent advocate for minorities in the area of affirmative action in the Federal Communications Commission. His goal; to persuade broadcasters to better represent blacks on television.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a particular area of service of MICKEY LELAND, which has not been addressed by others. Shortly after MICKEY became a member of the Energy and Commerce Committee, he began to concentrate on a problem in the movie and television industry in this country. Approximately 10 years ago, both the movie and television industry did not utilize blacks and other minorities in their programs or commercials. In fact, whenever a black or minority actor was used, it was in a subservient or menial capacity.

MICKEY LELAND was concerned about this matter and began inquiring and speaking out about these racially discriminatory practices as it related to black actors and actresses. I recall a luncheon to which I was invited, where representatives from the movie and television industry were attending. I recall MICKEY explaining to them that black Americans brush their teeth and use deodorant products just as white Americans do. He explained that there was no reason why black Americans should not be used in commercial advertising since they were also major consumers of these products. He also advocated the importance of black Americans seeing themselves portrayed in a positive light in commercials and movies.

MICKEY was relentless in pursuing parity and quality in this area as he was in all other endeavors. As we watch our TV sets today, the market has dramatically changed. It is now commonplace to see black men, women, and children included in almost all commercials. I am pleased to see black programs such as the Cosby Show, 227, Amen, A Different World, and many other sitcoms be the outstanding programs that they are. This is reflective of how America has changed. Credit must be given to the leadership of MICKEY LELAND. As I watch integrated programs and advertisements, I often think back to that luncheon and realize that it was MICKEY's foresight and leadership that was instrumental in bringing about this change.

When MICKEY became chairman of the Postal Operations Subcommittee, he again proved to be an astute legislator. He helped win committee and House approval of a bill giving the Postal Service greater power to investigate mail fraud and investigated the effectiveness of the 1970 Postal Service reorganization.

My association with MICKEY was twofold. We were both Members of Congress and members of the Congressional Black Caucus [CBC]. For two consecutive terms he was chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus. During his tenure, MICKEY took the CBC to another level. He made himself available to speak all over the country on behalf on the CBC in order to broaden its base. Under his leadership, the CBC was able to work more cohesively with the Congressional Black Caucus Foundation [CBCF]. He also brought CBC members closer together by devoting a great deal of his time to retreats, where members could concentrate more on the role of the CBC and its goals and objectives. I will always be grateful to MICKEY for providing the CBC members with the opportunity to get to know each other better and strengthening our working relationships.

MICKEY's last assignment was his noble crusade for the plight of the millions of hungry children all over the world. His efforts were concentrated in Africa, in the famine-stricken deserts of Ethiopia and the Sudan. As chairman of the Select Committee on Hunger, MICKEY was determined to end the cycle of poverty and hunger that kills so many children worldwide each year. MICKEY's crusade was fueled by the haunting image of a little girl who died in his arms because she starved to death. MICKEY would say of that experience: "I can see her face right now. Every day I see her face."

MICKEY's war on hunger was deeply personal. He was raised in a poverty-stricken community, the impoverished fifth ward in Houston. He understood like so many of us here today what it means to be poor, hungry, and homeless in America. Because of these experiences, MICKEY had a profound understanding of the obstacles before the underprivileged. Their growing numbers disturbed him, and he was determined to reverse the cycle and even the odds.

Mr. Speaker, this is the primary reason why MICKEY insisted on going to the trenches to experience first hand the anguish of the hungry and homeless in order to better represent their interests through the legislative and political process. With every trip MICKEY made to Africa, he became more sensitive to the unmet needs of the people there. He became convinced that hunger must end, somehow, someway.

Mr. Speaker, MICKEY left a legacy of humanitarian deeds that will be hard to match. I will remember him for his ability to empathize with the plight of those whom he diligently served and his charismatic personality.

Mr. Speaker, to his family and to his wife, Alison, and their son Jarrett, I join my colleagues in extending my heartfelt condolences for the loss they have suffered. I hope that they, too, may find solace in their grief by remembering the great things for which MICKEY was responsible. His legacy of love, concern and commitment to the poor, the disadvantaged, and minorities will live forever.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I join so many of my colleagues today to pay tribute to Congressman MICKEY LELAND, who contributed so much to this Nation during his service in Congress and over his lifetime.

I had the pleasure of serving with MICKEY on the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, and appreciated his dependability and leadership as an ally for Federal and postal workers and retirees. While he is best known for his work on hunger issues, he certainly made substantial contributions to raising the morale and quality of the Federal workforce, and I value the time I spent with him working on these important issues, particularly the issue of pay equity for Federal employees.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Postal Operations, he worked on Postal modernization and played a key role in the Postal Service effort to eliminate mail fraud. Today, the House approved a bill sponsored by MICKEY to take the Postal Service off-budget, thereby providing protection for this very vital service of our Nation.

Of course, his work as chairman of the Select Committee on Hunger is his best known and certainly his most significant contribution during his years in Congress. MICKEY was instrumental in the creation of the Select Committee on Hunger and was one of the most important leaders on both international and domestic hunger issues. He led Congress to approve famine relief for Africa in 1985 and an assistance package for the homeless in 1986, to name just two of his major accomplishments.

As chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus from 1981 to 1985, he played an important role in working with the House leadership and Congress to further the priorities of the Caucus. He was a strong supporter of Israel and served as a vital bridge between the black and Jewish communities.

MICKEY LELAND was a man of compassion and commitment who should serve as an example for us all—he will be truly missed. I know I join all of my colleagues in extending my sympathies to his family, and to the families and friends of the delegation who joined him on his mission to Ethiopia. Let his memory inspire us to remember the words of Martin Luther King, Jr.: "Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere."

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I rise today out of honor and respect for our late colleague, Congressman MICKEY LELAND.

MICKEY LELAND set an example for each of us in this House to follow. He was dedicated to his job, dedicated to his family, and dedicated to serving people in need.

His compassion knew no boundaries. Not personal, not political, and not international. MICKEY LELAND saw problems and found solutions that were beyond most of our own horizons.

I had the opportunity of working with him this year to help prevent the use of food as a weapon in the civil war in Sudan. He was instrumental in bringing two enemies together so that relief workers could bring food to tens of thousands of starving people. Last year 250,000 people died in Sudan. This year, because of the work of MICKEY LELAND, a similar human tragedy was averted.

MICKEY LELAND used his position on the Hunger Committee with an effectiveness rarely seen in this body. He raised the awarness of each and every Member about hunger around the world and right here at home. He steered $800 million in assistance to Africa at the height of its famine. MICKEY LELAND was a leader without equal.

I send condolences to Alison Leland and her son. Our prayers are with you and your family.

This House, this Nation, and the world will miss our friend, MICKEY LELAND.

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, it is with very mixed emotions that I join this special order today to honor and pay tribute to our fallen colleague, MICKEY LELAND. MICKEY and I shared a very special friendship and I am still saddened and feeling a deep sense of loss at his untimely death. But in spite of these feelings, a smile still creeps up when I think of MICKEY.

I smile because I think of the good that he did. I smile because I think of the jokes he told and pranks he pulled on a good many of us. I smile because I know he died with a sense of fulfillment and accomplishment, carrying on a mission that was his consuming passion.

MICKEY was a man of many passions and he worked very hard to contribute something of himself to each of them. Doing what he could to ease the pain and suffering of starving millions was a central theme and a driving force of his life. MICKEY also cared deeply about the needs of those in his district and across America, including the homeless, the poor, children, and the elderly. But you didn't have to be down-trodden or forgotten by society to be counted among those that MICKEY cared about. One of his many passions was his intense desire to see that artificial barriers to success—race, gender, religion and so on—were torn down, and that everyone with a desire to grow, achieve and expand their horizons was given every fair opportunity to do so. He fought tirelessly to ensure equal access to ownership and in employment in the telecommunications industry for minorities and women. He was an advocate on behalf of honest working-class people, including government workers and organized labor, who often found themselves unfairly maligned.

MICKEY's private passions, the ones that were first and foremost in his life, were his wife Alison and son Jarrett. He was enormously proud of them both—and with good reason. If there was one thing that MICKEY couldn't do, no matter how hard he tried, it was to be modest about either one of them. MICKEY, to his credit, was able to successfully combine parenthood and service in Congress, without letting either one suffer.

As I noted earlier, MICKEY and I shared a very special relationship. Since we both sat on the Energy and Commerce Committee, and were members of the Congressional Black Caucus and other legislative organizations, we also shared many of the same concerns, dreams, and goals. We worked together extensively and I came to know MICKEY well. Though this powerful institution in which we serve can be cold and impersonal, MICKEY was one of the few who, regardless of your ideology or his, was always ready with a warm smile or a pat on the back. I'll miss that smile and I'll miss MICKEY.

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, the Congress has lost an important leader in Representative MICKEY LELAND. He was traveling on yet another mission to Africa to observe refugee camps on the Ethiopia-Sudan border, and lend his support to hunger relief efforts there. Typical of Mr. LELAND throughout his career, he wanted to observe first-hand the conditions in the camps, speak directly with the people suffering because of the political strife in the Sudan, and give hope, especially to the children there.

MICKEY LELAND was the driving force behind the House of Representatives Select Committee on Hunger, which he helped organize 5 years ago. Since then, serving as chairman of the Hunger Committee, Mr. LELAND led the fight in Congress for the hungry, impoverished, and homeless in this country and throughout the world. He had traveled to the same refugee camps in Ethiopia as recently as March to promote relief efforts for thousands of Sudanese refugees facing starvation as they fled the political violence in the Sudan.

Under LELAND's guidance, the Hunger Committee has had numerous legislative successes, and has played an important informational and lobbying role for hunger issues in the Congress. LELAND gained funds for starving Africans during the sub-Saharan famine of 1985, and pushed for congressional approval for a package of aid for America's homeless, including easier access to food stamps and job-training programs.

Under his leadership, Congress passed the Global Poverty Reduction Act, made improvements in the domestic women, infants, and children [WIC] feeding program, and made changes in U.S. foreign aid to specifically address immunization and target funds for child survival activities. He also pushed for a women in development focus in foreign aid programs.

The Hunger Committee and its objectives will live on after MICKEY LELAND. We can offer no better tribute to him than to aggressively pursue his agenda.

Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Speaker, I have experienced the greatest loss in my political career—the loss of my good friend MICKEY LELAND. MICKEY was someone to whom I could always go if I had a problem, and he always had a kind word to help me through. MICKEY was a good friend, husband, father, Representative, and American. This country has lost perhaps one of the greatest Members this institution has seen.

Each and every Member of this great body arrives in Washington hoping they can change the world. We all, at some point in our careers, have an impact on the legislative process, an issue, or an institution, but MICKEY LELAND had a lasting affect on the world. He did so much to help all of us realize the terrible problem of starving children in Africa.

It seems to me that in a world where people don't want to get involved, that makes MICKEY even more special. He did get involved, and saw tirelessly that something was going to be done. MICKEY did not have to make six trips to Africa, but he felt he did. I am sure he thought if he did not do it, perhaps no one else would.

Those trips to Africa not only helped us see the growing problem of the hungry in the Third World, but it also opened our eyes to the hungry here in our own country. MICKEY helped us see that hunger is not a regional problem, but a universal one. It cannot be solved in 1 year, 5 years, or even 10 years. It is a constant battle, and as soon as you stop fighting, the battle gets out of control.

MICKEY did not stop when hunger was not the "fashionable" cause any longer. He fought harder and worked harder to make people see that just because they were tired of hearing about that issue, didn't mean hunger had disappeared. People were still starving, and are still today. MICKEY kept fighting, and we have to continue his fight.

In this country, dying in the line of duty is the most noble of deaths. MICKEY's death was perhaps even more noble, because he died not only in the line of duty, but helping the people many forgot. MICKEY LELAND and his cause to eliminate hunger will not be forgotten.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to pay tribute to a friend and colleague who tragically died for a cause in which he ardently believed—aiding those who were helpless. The death of MICKEY LELAND is devastating to everyone, especially his family and close friends. It is also a tremendous loss for Congress. Congressman LELAND served as the conscience of this body. He was our constant reminder that people were dying of hunger in parts of the world far removed from the elegant meals on which we dine in Washington. MICKEY wasn't one to just pay lipservice to the causes in which he believed. He devoted his time, even his muscle as when he unloaded bags of grain in African refugee camps, for the less fortunate.

Although it is not much solace to say that Congressman LELAND did not die in vain—he did not. For many days, during and after the search mission for LELAND'S plane, pictures of the Congressman making suffering children in African refugee camps smile appeared on the front pages of major newspapers and on news broadcasts across the country. Suddenly, everyone was reminded of an issue that had faded from popularity but had never gone away—world hunger.

As one of Congressman LELAND'S colleagues on the Energy and Commerce Committee I saw that his concern was not only for the starving of other continents. He was an advocate for the people of his own nation as well. His voice unrelentingly reminded his colleagues on the committee of problems that we face here at home. He made sure that we remember the hungry and homeless in our inner cities and that we continue to protect equal opportunities for minorities.

Everyone misses MICKEY tremendously already, but words giving lipservice to all the good deeds he accomplished would not have been the way in which he would have wished to be remembered. Making sure that his ideas and his conscience live on in this institution would.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join in tribute to our friend and colleague, MICKEY LELAND.

MICKEY LELAND was a very rare and special human being, and we will long remember him for what he has done and what he showed us.

He witnessed the worst suffering this world has to offer, yet never lost his faith, his hope, or his good humor. When he decided to make the end of world hunger his mission, he had no illusions about the enormity of the task, and that cause was ultimately the one for which he gave his life.

We will remember him for that, but also for much more.

We will remember that he was fiercely and justifiably proud of his own culture and heritage, yet deeply and sincerely appreciative of others. We will remember the children he helped to visit Israel, the prisoners he helped leave Cuba, and the refugees from war and famine whose lives he tried to make easier and a little bit brighter.

We will remember his work on the Energy and Commerce Committee, where he tried to make health care available to all our citizens, and where he tried to open the doors of opportunity in our telecommunications industry to every American.

MICKEY LELAND was keenly aware of the importance of giving all Americans positive role models so that we could break the cycles of poverty and despair. MICKEY LELAND was himself a fine role model, for Americans of all creeds, colors, and ethnic origins.

Our hearts are with his young son Jarrett, his wife Alison, and the child they learned they were going to have shortly before his ill-fated trip to Ethiopia.

MICKEY LELAND'S passing is mourned by family and friends in Houston and Washington, but also on continents far away. We will never be able to forget his warmth, his smile, and his commitment—and we best honor his memory by resolving to continue his cause.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, let me thank the Texas delegation for calling this special order in memory of our dear friend MICKEY LELAND. He was an intelligent, hard-working, brave man, whom I will remember all my life. Few Members of Congress have so deserved this honor.

We have little to soften the blow of MICKEY'S death. We lose a talented legislator, a dear friend, and a good man. Our world's poor and hungry lose a skilled and tireless advocate. And his young wife and children mourn a husband and father, who should have had decades more to watch his family grow.

MICKEY'S philosophy was simple. He believed he could help people, and he believed he ought to help. That commitment sent him into politics—first to the statehouse in Austin, TX, and then to Washington and to some of the most desperate and remote places on the globe.

Nothing showed his character and compassion as well as his work to end hunger. He worked every day through the Select Committee on Hunger—a committee he himself established less than 6 years ago—to bring the suffering of the rural and urban poor to the attention of the country, and to find ways to bring them help.

He didn't do those things for his own good—he did them because he knew they were right. He believed, as he said in 1986, that "The humanitarian impulses of the American people are sound and true. We know in our hearts that turning away from people sorely in need diminishes both the individual and the entire family of man."

And so he worked to stop hunger and famine abroad. Six times he carried food to the roadless corners of Africa—six times. Just this year, he brought Manute Bol to the Capitol to tell the world about the war and famine in Sudan. He supported innovative efforts to support microenterprise in poor countries, and pushed to make more of our development aid available to women.

He worked just as hard to stop hunger in our own country. He introduced bills to establish a National Commission on Infant Mortality and expand Medicaid coverage to all women, children, and infants in poverty. He held hearings on hunger in Appalachia, the rural South and along the border with Mexico. He made domestic food aid programs more effective through the Emergency Hunger Prevention Act, and set up a nutrition program which brings food directly from farmers' markets to impoverished women, infants, and children.

His concern for the world didn't detract from his attention to his home. He tried to make sure that every one of his district's people had a chance. He brought hundreds of young people to work in his office over the years, and sponsored overseas internship programs on Israeli kibbutzes. Every year he chose an intern from a low-income minority community to work in my office. those young people will be his legacy—a testament to the help and hope and opportunity he gave so many.

I am proud to be here with so many friends to remember MICKEY LELAND. And I join with them in recognizing that the best tribute we can give him is to continue what he started. He gave us an agenda in October 1986, when he, Congressman DANTE FASCELL and I, received the Presidential End Hunger Award after the terrible Ethiopian famine. Let me quote from his remarks that day:

We must face and overcome the more persistent, less dramatic causes of hunger.

Humankind has yet to conquer the malnourishment that makes children prey to deadly infection and the waterborn diseases that sap the energies of entire communities and limit food production.

Above all, the endemic poverty that makes it impossible for half the world's people to purchase a nutritious diet—although granaries are bursting with the earth's bounty—must be wiped out. The poor can help themselves, but they must be given the freedom, tools and credit to set up income generating activities.

MICKEY LELAND will not be with us to see that work completed. But I am confident that it will be completed, and MICKEY LELAND did more than anyone to make sure of that.

His life was cruelly short. But it was a good life in every way. He had a wonderful family. He had good friends. And he helped his fellow man.

I am proud to have been his friend.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join in mourning the untimely death of our dear friend and colleague, MICKEY LELAND.

In the weeks since his death, MICKEY has received a great deal of belated acclaim for his efforts to draw attention to the problem of hunger, in this country and abroad. As we in this House know, the ill-fated mission to Ethiopia, in which he tragically lost his life, was just the last in a long line of similar, but less publicized, expeditions. Years before the issue of hunger became fashionable, MICKEY LELAND was taking the lead, enlightening his colleagues, and seeking solutions.

His commitment to improving the lot of others, and his dedication to seeing his goals achieved, were evident in his successful campaign to establish a Select Committee on Hunger in the House of Representatives. MICKEY's committee became a vital instrument for bringing the attention of the Nation and the world to the tragedy of starvation and malnutrition.

Under MICKEY's leadership, the select committee conducted a continuing and comprehensive study of the problems of hunger and malnutrition, focusing attention on food production and distribution, trade relations between the United States and less developed countries, the policies of multilateral development banks and international development institutions, and the effectiveness of food assistance programs in the United States.

But there were more dimensions to MICKEY LELAND's life than those of activist and hero. We should remember MICKEY as a vibrant human being with a passion for life, for we risk underestimating our ability to carry his work forward if we allow him to be wrapped in the posthumous mantle of saint and martyr. Indeed, I suspect that MICKEY with his playful sense of humor, would probably get a big kick out of his recent canonization by the news media. It was his sense of humor that served MICKEY so well in reaching out to potential adversaries, opening closed minds, and convincing others to do the right thing. He recognized the advantage to be gained in leavening even the most serious matters with a pinch of dry wit.

Perhaps my most vivid impression of MICKEY LELAND was as a man who loved and was devoted to his family. On occasion, MICKEY and I would enthusiastically exchange stories about his son, Jarrett, and my grandson, Barry, who are the same age. I recall how his eyes would light up with warmth and affection as he spoke of his young child.

Unfortunately, most Americans did not have the opportunity to know MICKEY LELAND as we did, and became aware of his work and accomplishments only after his demise. While no news account can capture the essence of a man's life, the unforgettable film images of MICKEY on one of his trips abroad, jubilantly joining in an African tribal dance, come close.

Mr. Speaker, above all, MICKEY LELAND was a man with an innate ability to reach out to other people. His record in this House is testimony to his talent for bringing together Democrat and Republican, Conservative and Liberal, black and white, have and have-not, on issues no one else was willing to champion. We in this body will miss MICKEY's dedication, his wisdom, his commitment to justice, and his compassion for his fellow man.

In this time of sorrow, our hearts go out to his wife Alison, his family and his many friends.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a man that was so much more than just a Congressman. MICKEY LELAND was a loving husband, a caring parent, and a trusting friend to all who knew him. He will be sorely missed by all of us whose lives he touched in so many ways.

As chairman of the Select Committee on Hunger, he worked hard to try and end hunger not only in America but all over the globe. He traveled around the world, seeing areas of poverty, and working to alleviate their pain. In 1985, LELAND sought $1 billion in famine relief for Africa. Many thought that he sought too much for another country, that we should be helping our own people with that money, but MICKEY LELAND recognized that when it comes to hunger, there are no territorial boundaries.

In June 1987, I traveled with MICKEY LELAND to Luanda, Angola. His experience and insight not only helped to bring back home a U.S. citizen, but provided this Member of Congress with a new perspective on the trouble in that area of the world.

His courage and his wisdom are an inspiration to all of us. It will not be easy to replace such a humanitarian, whose concern for all people of the world made him one of the leaders in the fight against racism, poverty, and hunger.

So that is why I ask all of my colleagues to join with me in paying tribute to MICKEY LELAND, and I know I speak for all of us when I wish his family the best in the days to come.

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Speaker, I'm honored to add a few words to the outpouring of respect and admiration for our departed colleague, Congressman MICKEY LELAND of Texas.

I had the honor of serving with Congressman LELAND for only a few short months, long enough to know I respected and admired him, short enough to recognize how much he is now missed.

Like most of us, I knew MICKEY LELAND as a man of compassion and conviction. He was one Member of Congress who knew how to get things done for his district, State, and country, without forgetting about the very real problems of the world around us. In an era when we suffer from a "me-first" attitude, the kind of attention MICKEY LELAND paid to the starving and oppressed people of the world sets a standard for the rest of us to meet. I represent a district that has more than its share of poor people. I've looked into the eyes of a hungry child and felt the same kind of pain I know Congressman LELAND must have felt, the kind of pain that drove him to bring this problem to our attention and to keep us from forgetting. Just as the hungry people in Africa and other countries have lost a champion, the hungry and downtrodden in my district in southern Illinois have lost a champion as well.

I've always considered public service a noble, honorable profession, attracting people who want to do something for the betterment of society. Nothing MICKEY LELAND did during his service in Congress ever made me think any differently. That kind of commitment led him into a situation that many have shied away from, that carried numerous and untold risks, and that ultimately claimed his life.

I hope that every person who considers being a public servant will remember the standard set by Congressman MICKEY LELAND, for they could do no better than to follow his lead.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, today I pay tribute to two great men, MICKEY LELAND and LARKIN SMITH, who were devoted to ridding our nation and the world of two problems that only resulted in tragedy and death: hunger and drugs.

MICKEY LELAND waged a battle to assist the starving and downtrodden. Politically, not only did he hold the chairmanship of the Select Committee on Hunger, he fought for aid to the regions of the world that most needed a break from incessant poverty. His commitment to abolish hunger did not stop there. He reaffirmed it by traveling to the most depressed regions of the world.

LARKIN SMITH started off his political career as I did; we were both sheriffs. We had a mutual interest in making the fight against drugs a priority in our counties, and, as Congressmen, we expanded that fight to include the Nation and the world. I applauded his effort to bring unity to the drug fight by giving a series of 28 consecutive 1-minutes on the House floor.

We, in Congress, must continue to carry out the mission of these two men. There is no better way to honor their memories.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join in this Special Order today to remember our esteemed colleague, Representative MICKEY LELAND.

MICKEY LELAND was a close friend and a truly outstanding individual. He and I were members of the same congressional class, both of us having been elected to Congress in 1978. We also served together on the Select Committee on Hunger, since it was established more than 6 years ago.

MICKEY was the guiding force behind the Hunger Committee. He was instrumental in its creation and as its chairman, he was at the forefront of identifying and addressing the problems of hunger in the United States and throughout the world. Several years ago, MICKEY brought the Select Hunger Committee's first international task force hearing to my congressional district to look at the food situation in Africa, with expert testimony from professors at the University of California, Davis. The hearing also focused on educating American children on the problems of hunger in the world. That event and others afforded me the opportunity to really get to know MICKEY.

In addition to MICKEY's unwavering commitment to eradicating hunger, he was also a champion of human rights and for those less fortunate. He not only made a real difference in the lives of the starving, but he also touched many more lives along the way, including those of us who have had the opportunity to serve with him. MICKEY LELAND will be sorely missed but he will live on as a source of inspiration to all of us.

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, in losing MICKEY LELAND, we lost a man who remained true to his beliefs, while political winds continued to shift. We should learn from this man who acted on the strength of his convictions.

He cared about the less fortunate of the world, and fought the battle against poverty not with rhetoric and empty promises, but with actions. Again, we should learn from this man who showed us what caring really is.

Our job as representatives of the people is to make the world a better place to live. MICKEY LELAND fulfilled that obligation eagerly.

Albert Schweitzer once said: "It is not enough to merely exist. It's not enough to say we are already doing all we can. At such moments, we must do something more.

"We cannot feed the world but we can feed the hungry in our town. We cannot enlighten the universe but we can make our own schools better. We cannot change all human hearts but we can operate a humane penal system. We cannot save all the children but those we can save we must save.

"We do not live in this world alone, our brothers and sisters are here, too. Some are living in a world of hurt that we may be able to aid, even in a very small way. In such small ways will we be judged, not by the scope of our fortune or the limits of our intellect."

MICKEY LELAND will be judged well.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank our colleague, Mr. BROOKS, for taking this time to pay tribute to our friend, MICKEY LELAND. Just like you, I was shocked to learn the news that MICKEY's plane was missing in Ethiopia. We all held out hope that the next news report that day would bring word that MICKEY and his delegation had been found and that all were safe. But instead, we learned that all had died in the crash.

MICKEY was very committed to the cause of fighting hunger in this country and abroad. And he had a special feeling for the people who are suffering in Ethiopia. He went there countless times to get a first-hand look at the problems there. He was personally involved to the point that in some cases, he helped load food and supplies that were being flown to camps in that part of the world.

His unselfish, caring work on the issue of hunger will be his legacy. He died trying to make a difference in the lives of others less fortunate than himself. We will miss him in this House, but the memory of his commitment will not be forgotten.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, this House mourns the loss of Representative MICKEY LELAND, whose dedication to public service led to his untimely loss in an Ethiopian plane crash on a mission of mercy.

MICKEY LELAND died doing what he did so well—bringing the attention of the world to a problem which, without such advocacy, would be nowhere near top of the agenda.

For all too many, the problem of world hunger, indeed malnutrition in our own Nation, is remote and abstract, something glimpsed in a headline, heard vaguely in a radio broadcast, seen but not absorbed on the nightly TV news.

Not with MICKEY. Human suffering was not something remote and abstract, relegated to the bad luck of an individual, a nation, or a people. It was personal. A friend of our Texas colleague recently described his "ability to imagine, and his will not to forget about, the sufferings of people he did not know."

That ability, which drew MICKEY to public service, is one which served his country well. His work as chairman of the House Select Committee on Hunger reflected that concern. The very existence of that committee was a direct result of MICKEY's determined efforts to convince this House that hunger, as an issue, deserved a special institutional place.

While MICKEY made a special mark on the issue of hunger, he was also a tireless advocate of issues and causes related to peace, social justice, and equality. His work on the homeless issue helped to spur enactment of landmark legislation on the homeless. And he was a well-respected member of the Energy and Commerce Committee.

Our lasting tribute to MICKEY should be to continue to exercise our imagination as he did, to address the sufferings of people whom we do not know. If each of us could use that imagination with just a portion of the enthusiasm MICKEY showed, our country would be a better place.

To his wife and family, we send our heartfelt sympathy. We will miss MICKEY LELAND, and we will remember his ability to imagine.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member is honored to join the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] and other Members of the House, in this tribute to our friend and distinguished colleague MICKEY LELAND. There is no adequate way to express the sense of desolation and loss that one feels when a life is ended before its time. MICKEY had business to do for American and the hungry of the world that he now cannot finish. We must do it for him.

As MICKEY's colleague on the Select Committee on Hunger, this Member knew well his keen wit and his relentless drive. His dedication, restlessness, and energy set a tone for the Committee's activities, which took him and its Members into remote and desperate poor regions, both at home and abroad. Armed with the conviction of first-hand experience, MICKEY secured additional emergency food aid and focused global attention on the devastation of hunger and famine—perhaps more than any other current or past Member of Congress.

Representative MICKEY LELAND's hand in setting the committee's agenda highlighted the influence of poverty, inequality, and ignorance on the condition of hunger. He constantly challenged the committee's mandate, expanding it to encompass a full range of issues from health and nutrition to teenaged pregnancies, from infant mortality to public assistance programs and how they work, from economic conditions on Indian reservations to river blindness in the Third World. And he showed us, over and over, the inter-relatedness of all these issues.

Now it is our responsibility to continue his drive. It will not be an easy task, because his talents and commitments were exceptional. Accordingly we must work together in a bipartisan way, to air our differences honestly and arrive at solid compromises. In this way, the House and Congress can honor MICKEY LELAND's life of commitment and service.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in expressing my profound and personal sorrow at the untimely death of our late colleague MICKEY LELAND.

In an age too often marked by cynicism and selfishness, MICKEY's caring, compassion, and hope helped to remind us that the most noble mission of all is the mission of mercy, brotherhood, and peace. It is on such a mission, and for such a high purpose, that MICKEY died.

Sheila and I extend our condolences to the Leland family and to the loved ones of those who were killed with him.

It is now up to the rest of us to take up his mantle and continue his struggles. His spirit and will must endure in each of us.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to append to my remarks editorials from two south Florida newspapers on MICKEY.

HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER

Long after world hunger ceased to be the issue du jour, Mickey Leland hung onto it, driven by the memory of a Sudanese child who died before his eyes in 1984. This memory became an obsession as the Democratic congressman from Texas became the conscience of his House colleagues on ending world hunger.

Now that concern has led to his death in the fog-shrouded mountains of Ethiopia. Mr. Leland, 44, and 15 others were travelling to a camp housing 30,000 refugees from Sudan's civil wars and famine when their plane flew into a mountainside.

Congress also is mourning the loss of a second representative, freshman Larkin Smith, 45, of Mississippi, who had no chance to make his mark on that institution. Mr. Smith's plane crashed on Sunday in a rural area of his home state. A former police chief, he served on the House Judiciary and Government Operations Committees.

Mr. Leland, though, had made a broad mark in his 10 years of House service. Son of a short-order cook who later became a teacher, Mr. Leland grew up in a Houston ghetto and trained as a pharmacist. But he quickly broke those confines for the world of politics—and the world itself. Freshly elected to the Texas legislature in 1972, he then began a three-month odyssey through Africa.

A Roman Catholic, he also was fascinated with Israel. He spent time bicycling through that nation and later created a program to send poor black youths there as a means of improving black-Jewish relations.

Although some South Floridians resented his visits with Fidel Castro, that personal relationship led to the release of four political prisoners held for decades in Cuban jails.

Of course, there were many who disagreed with Mr. Leland's liberal politics and with his focus on hunger in Africa when hunger remains in the United States. For them he had an answer: "I am as much a citizen of this world as I am of my country. To hell with those people who are critical of what I am able to do to help save people's lives. I don't mean to sound hokey, but I grew up on a Christian ethic which says we are supposed to help the least of our brothers."

And so Mr. Leland wanted to see what he—and this country—could do to help 30,000 Sudanese. Now that he is gone, will the United States, with its notoriously short attention span, forget the starving at home and abroad? Or will his death inspire others to pick up his mantel?

POOR, HUNGRY LOST FRIEND IN LELAND

When Rep. Mickey Leland went on fact-finding trips as chairman of the House Select Committee on Hunger, he did not visit London, Paris, Tokyo, Hong Kong and other favorite stops on political junket schedules.

After Congress adjourned for its summer recess 10 days ago, he flew to Addis Ababa. The drought and civil war ravaged Horn of Africa had haunted him ever since he saw firsthand the starving children of Ethiopia, the Sudan and Somalia.

He was on his seventh tour of the area when he died last week. The twin-engine plane carrying Leland and 15 other passengers and crew members smashed into a cliff during a storm, killing all aboard.

Leland was flying to a camp for Sudanese refugees near the border of Western Ethiopia when the plane disappeared, setting off a massive cooperative effort to find the missing aircraft. Ethiopian police and peasants joined U.S. personnel operating helicopters, a spy plane, weather satellites and other sophisticated equipment in a search hampered by foul weather and rugged terrain.

The 44-year-old Texan was not a one-issue legislator. A militant when he came to Congress, he helped improve communications between the Black Caucus and the Democratic leadership and between blacks and Jews. He also was instrumental in freeing Cuban political prisoners and lobbied successfully for a federal nutritional program for the pregnant. The poor and hungry have lost a staunch friend. The Congress has lost an important part of its conscience.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, MICKEY LELAND was an outstanding Member of the House of Representatives and he served his country well.

I know that on a great many occasions he was tested and always proved strong and courageous. He was a great family man and this was evident during the years he served with us as a Member of Congress.

He was a fighter for social justice and at all times a great legislator for the common people that he knew so well. His concept of public trust is without parallel and never did he hesitate to speak out against any proposal which he felt was not sound and in the best interests of our country.

Mr. Speaker, I want to extend my deepest sympathy to his lovely wife and to the members of his family.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, MICKEY LELAND was a man who fought for those whom the world tends to forget: the poor, the starving, and the refugees. My family, staff, and I were shocked and grieved to learn of the untimely demise of MICKEY and his party on August 7 when their plane crashed en route to a refugee camp on the western border of Ethiopia.

I can remember meeting MICKEY when he first entered Congress in 1978 and the compassion with which he advocated matters of conscience. I also recall him telling the heart-rending story of how, in his first trip to the Sudan in 1984, he watched a starving girl writhe and die before his eyes. But what I recall most about him was his sense of humanity.

MICKEY LELAND was a warrior of compassion and whose humanity compelled him, after witnessing that death, to create and chair the House Select Committee on Hunger and to play a critical role in our movement in Congress to apply pressure on the Apartheid Government of South Africa.

MICKEY'S interest in Africa spanned the entire length and breadth of the continent as well as the totality of the issues. He saw the similarities between the physical starvation of the people in the north caused by war and famine and the starvation of the spirit of those in South Africa caused by political oppression.

When someone as likable as MICKEY LELAND give up his young life to lessen the suffering of people throughout the world, the rest of us must renew our commitment to carry out his work. No matter where we live in the country, we might relieve the pain his family is suffering by continuing his struggle.

I feel how weak and fruitless any words of mine are in consoling MICKEY'S family from a loss so overwhelming. But I cannot help but offer the consolation that may be found in the millions of lives that he saved.

My deepest condolences go out to the Leland family. He will be sorely missed. The world has lost a real hero.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, the Members of this body were terribly saddened by the tragic news of Congressman LELAND'S untimely death. MICKEY LELAND had a special mission on this Earth and across our Nation, and throughout the world his friends and followers mourn his passing and celebrate his remarkable life. I am pleased to take this opportunity to share with my colleagues an especially warm tribute to MICKEY LELAND which was composed by Topper and Alyce Carew of Los Angeles, CA:

TO MICKEY

Too few men live and love what they believe. Those who do, walk firmly among us . . . as if God anointed. As if spiritually appointed.

They come and we feel their presence. Long after it is gone. Often before it came. Why? Because the planet waits and longs for the coming of those chosen few.

A shortcoming of man is his over preoccupation with the future. We wait too late to celebrate the now. In the nowness, we should celebrate the saints among us. But, saints like Mickey make it hard to do.

He did not want to be revered for doing God's work. He did not want to be separated apart from us as he walked out among the people.

For his choice was always to be one of us. Not above us. But with us. Always. Forever and ever.

We did not choose to be a man among men. That is often chosen for us on a higher level, beyond mortals. But those, like Mickey, who are chosen and who follow that course naturally are Godsends.

Without thinking, they exhibit courage. Without taking, they give. Without bitterness, they love. With compassion, they cry. To elders, they bow. To children, they teach. To God's right hand, he will ascend.

The Africa that bore you, the Africa that consumed you into its bosom, the Africa that nurtured and strengthened you, the Africa that freed you. The Africa that compelled and propelled you . . . at this very moment cries out. A million ancestral voices, beckon you into their eternity. A million children, now angels, sing of your coming. A barrage of ceremonial drums signal your arrival.

You take your place. Where you will sit with the kings and queens of all humanity. Where you sit with us shall be as an eternal spirit.

Mickey, with God, guide us into the 21st century. Help to guide us to the destination which you so clearly saw. May your memory remind us that we should never be judged by what we have or by what we say, but ultimately, by what we do. Not do for ourselves, but do for others. Today. Tomorrow. Infinitely.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, in my years in the House I can think of no sadder event than the death of MICKEY LELAND in Africa. MICKEY was a dear friend and colleague and I mourn the loss of this brilliant, joyful, dedicated, and thoroughly decent man. I have lost a friend and the world has lost a genuine humanitarian.

MICKEY was very much the practical idealist. You did not have to know him long before you understood his absolute commitment to the cause of human rights and to the poor and hungry of this world. But there was nothing self-righteous about MICKEY LELAND. He was a most charming and delightful person, and he knew how to make things happen in Washington. His considerable achievements in getting resources and actions to help the poorest of the poor are a tribute to his impressive skills and endless dedication. MICKEY knew that speeches and press releases could do little to ease the pains of hunger and it is a great pity that he did not receive more recognition for his work and accomplishments on behalf of the helpless and hungry.

We will all remember him. I salute his life and I extend my most sincere sympathy to his wife, Alison, his family and the people of his district in Houston.

Mr. SIKORSKI. Mr. Speaker, the true marks of a man are his aspirations and his spirit. What he strives for, and what he settles for. MICKEY LELAND set his marks sky high. He fought for the least of our sisters and brothers: the hungry, the oppressed, those who have fallen through the cracks in modern society, and those threatened by the side effects of modern society—such as industrial pollution. He lived by Martin Luther King's admonition, "Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere." And he gave his life working to bring an end to hunger on earth.

A couple weeks before his death, I had the privilege of sitting next to MICKEY LELAND for a hearing which dealt with another cause crucial to him—an end to toxic air pollution. Toward the end of the day-long hearing, after a wearying day of technicalities, trivialities, excuses and evasions, from Government and industry, MICKEY LELAND put the subject of air toxics into perspective. He did so with a story that has less to do with this complex topic than with the soul of MICKEY LELAND—a soul which strove for nothing less than the best we can be, and which would settle for nothing less than an end to misery in this world.

MICKEY LELAND's story of his childhood is a window into his indominable spirit. MICKEY sought to build a shelter on earth for all God's children. And he gave his life trying. I include his story here:

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Chairman, if I may be allowed just 30 seconds, because [EPA Administrator] Reilly keeps raising issues with me that somewhat bother me. I appreciate the overture, Mr. Reilly, and I will be done. No question, no responses are necessary, but I recall many years ago when I was just a little boy, my humble beginnings, when I lived in a house with my grandmother and grandfather, and my grandfather died in the midst of the renovation of my house. We had three different families living in the same house, my mother's family, my aunt's family, and my grandmother's family—and a contractor came into our house, did the bidding for the contract, got the contract, built the house—mean the addition. The addition was shabby and falling down, and the contractor came back to my grandmother's house. We didn't know anything about lawyers and all that kind of stuff. I'm not sure if we could have adjudicated the issue anyway, but the fact is that the guy told my grandmother—and she was very disturbed and crying and I was there and I will never forget it, I was 11 or 12—the guy told my grandmother, "but it was better than anything you ever had."

And I just admonish you that in fact even though the administration is taking steps further to help to clean up the environment, that at some point we have got to get to the position of recognizing that the health and safety and welfare of our people is a lot more important than weighing the economic costs that we are considering here today. I would hope that that is the rule of thumb that we are using and nothing else.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to join my colleagues in paying tribute to the late MICKEY LELAND. With the death of MICKEY LELAND, this House, the Nation, and the world lost a dedicated, compassionate and tireless public servant.

Mr. Speaker, MICKEY LELAND was a true champion of and hero for the poor, the hungry, the sick and the homeless. Alleviating hunger in America and throughout the world was MICKEY'S passion. In 1984, MICKEY became chairman of the Select Committee on Hunger, a panel he helped to create. After a trip to Africa in 1984, he almost single-handedly brought the plight of the starving people of Ethiopia to the attention of Congress and the Nation. I know that MICKEY was deeply moved by the suffering he witnessed in that drought stricken, war-torn African nation. MICKEY felt their pain and shared in their sorrow as children died from starvation and malnutrition. MICKEY cared deeply about the starving people of Africa, and he became a tireless and impassioned advocate for additional food assistance to Africa. In 1985, MICKEY convinced Congress to approve $1 billion in famine relief for starving African nations. MICKEY continued to work diligently to alleviate hunger in Africa until the day he died.

Mr. Speaker, MICKEY LELAND'S death was indeed tragic and untimely. But it was not in vain. Over the past few weeks, several Mickey Leland memorial funds have been created to provide assistance to starving African nations. Other countries are moving to increase food aid to Africa. Indeed, MICKEY has inspired millions to help the hungry throughout the world. Thanks to MICKEY LELAND, the war against hunger will continue to be waged in his memory.

Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege to work with MICKEY LELAND as a member of the Energy and Commerce Committee. Although MICKEY was proudly liberal, he was seldom partisan. He had a remarkable ability to forge workable compromises on tough issues. MICKEY worked both sides of the aisle with ease and success.

Mr. Speaker, MICKEY'S death occurred while he was on a mission of mercy. MICKEY was always working to improve the quality of life of those less fortunate in America and throughout the world. MICKEY LELAND will be sorely missed. But his legacy of caring and compassion will live on. I want to extend my deepest sympathies to MICKEY'S wife, Alison, and his son, Jarrett.

Mr. THOMAS A LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, upon receiving the confirmation that the plane carrying Congressman MICKEY LELAND, and others in his delegation, had been located on a mountainside in Ethopia and that there were no survivors, I realized that this institution had lost more than a colleague. I knew that our country had been stripped of a champion in the fight for human and civil rights in this era, but more importantly to me, I had lost a true friend. The death of MICKEY LELAND has left a huge void in the ability of the United States Congress to personify its fight against the hunger and malnutrition of our own citizens, as well as people worldwide.

During the past 10 years I had the privilege and the honor to share many of MICKEY'S ideas firsthand through our involvement on both the House Energy and Commerce Full Committee, and the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment. His ideas were consistantly innovative, progressive, and expressed from his heart in such a way that it was difficult, if not impossible, not to share his compassion for those less fortunate. MICKEY'S tireless determination and commitment to help others, particularly those who are disadvantaged by social circumstances and/or economic conditions, set the standard by which we as Americans should aspire toward and proudly associate ourselves with.

Today, MICKEY'S humanity is no longer with us, but his spirituality lives on in our minds and hearts. I urge Congress to insure that the life and death of our colleague was and is of value to this Nation by continuing and increasing its support for his causes in his honor. To that end, his existence will have made the ultimate difference between life and death for millions of Americans and others around the world.

I have lost a good friend. Congress has lost a great statesman. The world has lost a true humanitarian.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, it is a terrible test of our faith to have so tragically taken from our midst a good and decent man like Representative MICKEY LELAND of Texas' 18th Congressional District.

We are all shocked and saddened by his death. He and his companions in Ethiopia were on a mission of mercy. They were seeking to ease the suffering of millions of refugees, victims of cruel and inhuman poverty.

Congressman LELAND has dedicated much of his career in public service to such tasks, both here in the United States and abroad. It is a noble cause and one to which we must rededicate ourselves.

MICKEY LELAND will always be remembered for his service as the Chair of the House Select Committee on Hunger. He was the driving force behind the committee's efforts to focus attention on the range of problems which poverty inflicts on the poor, the oppressed, and the hungry in this country and around the world. He had visited Africa several times and was probably more keenly aware that anyone of the immensity of the problem. His leadership will be missed and his passion to right the ills he witnessed will be difficult to replace.

We have lost a friend, a leader, an able colleague—a young man of purpose—who freely sacrificed himself for those less fortunate in the world. I hope that his life and career in service to others may continue to be a shining example for all of us to emulate.

I extend my deepest sympathies to MICKEY'S family and friends, who have shown remarkable courage throughout this difficult time.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep sadness that I rise today to pay tribute to my very close friend and colleague, Representative MICKEY LELAND, whose life stands as a shining example of the precious ideals of freedom and democracy and whose work demonstrated his endless compassion for those in need.

MICKEY was truly a 20th century renaissance man. He was devoted to his community; he achieved excellence in sciences as demonstrated by his background in pharmacy; he loved art and music, especially jazz; and he significantly contributed to the betterment of society through government and politics.

MICKEY and I were both elected to Congress in 1978, and we had a special bond. Our offices were next door to each other, and MICKEY'S friendship and caring meant a great deal to me personally as I made the transition from serving in the State legislature in Sacramento to coming to Congress. The membership of Congress is more than five times the size of the State legislature, and MICKEY'S warmth, humor, and concern, helped to soften an institution that seemed awesome and cold to a newcomer in town.

He was also a true fighter, a fighter for the hungry, the homeless, and the poor, a crusader for justice.

Early in his congressional career, he asked the Speaker to name a select committee on hunger to not only focus legislative attention on the poor and suffering in our country, but to look at malnutrition in developing countries. It took several years for MICKEY'S vision to become a reality, but through his dedication and perseverance the House approved creation of this panel and Speaker O'Neill named him chairman.

In the developing countries, he worked with relentless dedication for increased foreign assistance to Africa; funds to supply vitamin A to countries to prevent river blindness disease; funds for drought-stricken Africa; emergency assistance for Southern African countries to bolster their economies against the apartheid regime in South Africa; and economic sanctions against the racist South African regime.

He once said that the "tragedy of hunger affects children most gravely by denying them the future which is their basic human right. The loss of a single individual hurts all humanity, but the loss of children is especially tragic." MICKEY'S death is a terrible loss, but his passion to end hunger throughout the world was an inspiration.

He showed us that even though our resources have limits, we have not nearly exhausted the limits of what we can accomplish with the levers of power we do control. His life challenges all of us to keep his dream alive.

In the 99th Congress, he chaired the congressional Black Caucus and provided tremendous leadership in addressing the concerns of black Americans, other minorities, and the poor. MICKEY always believed in coalitions. During his many years of activism he helped form groups which brought together black and Hispanic leaders to coalesce around common issues and concerns. He also took a leading role in promoting dialogs and joint efforts among black and Jewish Americans, and his work has done much to keep alive this traditional coalition of compassion dating back to the beginnings of the civil rights movement. MICKEY traveled to Israel many times, and was known for his efforts to bring black American youth to Israel for exchange programs. He was an outstanding humanitarian, and we have lost a great champion.

In both his professional career and personal life, MICKEY enriched the lives of many people throughout the world. I want to extend my sincere condolences to MICKEY'S loving wife, Alison, his son, Jarrett, his mother and brother, and a host of other relatives and friends who will deeply miss such a generous and passionate man.

It is often said that ours is a government of laws, not men. But so often it is the men and women of our democracy who keep hope alive that someday we can achieve the American dream of justice for all and a world where human rights are cherished and protected. It is MICKEY LELAND whose life so embodied the human struggle to make our Nation and world a better place. Words simply cannot capture all of the wonderful qualities of MICKEY LELAND. Yet it is the memories of his life, love, and work that each of us will carry in our hearts and minds as we work to continue his legacy.

Mr. EARLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to MICKEY LELAND, a man of vision and vitality who had an enormous impact on this House and on our Nation. MICKEY embodied the finest qualities of public service—integrity, compassion, energy, honor, devotion to duty. We could not afford to lose such a man.

MICKEY LELAND was a clear and compelling voice in behalf of the voiceless among us—the poor and neglected and abused and forgotten. He never stopped reminding us that we are responsible for feeding the hungry and housing the homeless and setting free those who are captive to disease and despair. He constantly called us to accountability in the fight against suffering and injustice.

MICKEY was a bridgebuilder. He had a marvelous linkage with his constituents in Houston's 18th Congressional District. He established lines of communication and trust among individuals of differing political persuasions and life styles. He crossed barriers and pursued tough journeys to live out his role as a liaison and an advocate. In his travels to the farthermost corners of the Earth, he showed us how to construct bonds of good will and brotherhood. He was a citizen of the world and he took that citizenship seriously.

MICKEY LELAND taught us how to live life with vigor. He had a wild and wonderful zest for life, an endearing sense of humor, a delightful capacity for laughter. He played his music in such an enticing way that many joined his band. He brought harmony to a world out of tune.

It is up to us to make certain that the spirit of MICKEY LELAND remains vibrant and alive. Like him, we must spare no effort to relieve the agony of refugees and poverty stricken children and homeless families. Like him, we must sacrifice comfort and pleasure to tackle the tough problems of injustice and prejudice and greed. His living legacy among us is the call to follow in his footsteps. We, like MICKEY, must attempt to give back to the world, through our work, a portion of its lost heart.

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, so much has been said and written about the tragic death of our friend and colleague, MICKEY LELAND. Yet, words cannot describe the profound impact that MICKEY had on so many persons throughout the world.

As a Congressman, he was a distinguished leader committed to improving the quality of life for all peoples the world over. At home, he was a loving husband and father. As a friend, he inspired us with his words and actions.

Mr. Speaker, the world will soon forget the words we have spoken in memory of MICKEY LELAND, but it will long remember the man to whom we pay tribute. His presence will be dearly missed, but his legacy will abide in us forever.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleagues in paying tribute to a young man I enjoyed, admired, and respected, Representative MICKEY LELAND of the 18th Congressional District located in Houston, TX.

The tragic accident which cut short his life has robbed us of a talented, creative, and enthusiastic leader. He inspired many, and through great depth of humanity, gave so much of himself to the causes of the less fortunate in our country and around the world.

During his 11-year career as a former chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus and a colleague in the House of Representatives, I observed with pride the enormous contributions made by MICKEY to improve the health and nutrition and overall living standards of his fellow human beings at home and abroad. Hunger was not just an issue to MICKEY LELAND. He saw it as scourge to all humankind and he acted accordingly to eradicate it in every way he knew how.

It is uncommon in life to find a man of such dedication and compassion as MICKEY LELAND. In the 23d Psalm, it is written that "Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for Thou art with me." MICKEY must have known that through his endeavors he did not walk alone. The candle he lit on behalf of those who suffer will burn on. His work, and the efforts of the dedicated public servants who perished with him, has already served to instill the desire in many of us to do more than we may have already done. His fighting spirit serves as a model to all of us to continue our effort on behalf of the disadvantaged.

In closing, we in the House, and especially those of us who had the privilege and opportunity to work closely with him were fortunate to have a man of his caliber associated with us. He will be sorely missed by his family, friends, colleagues, and the entire world community.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, we were all tremendously shocked and saddened by the untimely and tragic death of our colleague, the Honorable MICKEY LELAND, and those with him.

MICKEY LELAND'S life was proof positive that one man can make a difference and one man with courage makes a majority.

Two passages from the New Testament come to mind. Verse 40, chapter 25 of St. Matthew tells of Jesus' discussion with the disciples on the Mount of Olives, where Jesus said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethern, you have done it unto me."

MICKEY LELAND was in Ethiopia because of his concern for the least of our brethren—the poor, the homeless, the starving—particularly the children. It was his concern for those who are leaderless, who are without representation, who are without food and shelter, who are without resources, that returned him time and again to Africa. He was doing all that one man could do.

The second passage is St. John, chapter 15, verses 12 and 13, which records the words of Jesus during the Last Supper: "This is my commandant, That ye love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man that this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

I am convinced that MICKEY LELAND laid down his life for his friends, the hungry, not only of this Nation, but of the world because of his true love for all humanity.

Those who knew MICKEY are the better for having known him. Those of us who are fortunate enough to have served with him in the Congress are doubly blessed. The world is a better place for his having been here, and the world is lessened now that he is gone.

Mr. Speaker, as we extend our heartfelt sympathy and understanding to his family and his staff, let us make a pledge: We must pick up the battle flag unfurled by MICKEY LELAND against hunger and continue the fight.

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, much has been said and written about the untimely passing of Congressman MICKEY LELAND as a fighter against world hunger. He was also known as an activist for social justice and a believer in coalition politics.

However, I want to also remember MICKEY LELAND as an advocate of peace. He and I often spoke about the need to open dialog with people and countries with whom we had differences.

I have just returned from visiting five countries in Southern Africa (Zaire, Angola, Namibia, Mozambique, and South Africa). Wherever I went, people joined us in mourning his sad loss.

MICKEY strongly believed in dialog and reconciliation. In addition to his fight against hunger, he was known to Africans as one who constantly indulged in opening up dialog to reconcile differences to advance regional peace.

In the countries he visited, among them Kenya, Sudan, Ethiopia, Angola, Zaire, and Cuba, he spoke to Ministers and Heads of State, in his quiet manner, about human rights and conflict resolution.

His fight for social justice was not confined to the United States. He urged the Japanese to be more responsible to America's minorities. For that effort the Japanese Government will honor his memory with an international program to fight hunger.

During the debate on the Foreign Assistance Act he was the only voice on the floor of the House urging us to reconcile our differences with Ethiopia. Ironically, in his death, he did more to heal the wounds between these two countries than all the diplomats put together.

As we memorialize his loss as a fighter against world hunger, an activist for social justice and coalition politics, let us remember him as a Man of Peace.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, each of us lost a dear friend when Representative MICKEY LELAND was killed in the accident in Africa on his quest to alleviate the problems of hunger there. MICKEY was compassionate in everything he did. I remember his encouragement to me when I attempted to and finally did complete the antiapartheid march from the Capitol to the White House some years ago. Mostly what I remember about him came from his sparkling leadership for things that need to be done to help those who were less fortunate. This he successfully did at a time when our country was having great difficulties in fiscal areas. He emphasized for me the importance of things he gave leadership to and it was a pleasure to be a coworker with him on these important matters. We all extend our deepest sympathy to his family and express to them our love and concern.

As I close my remarks, I want to include in the RECORD the excellent Roll Call editorial of September 10 which follows:

[From Roll Call, Sept. 4-10, 1989]

MICKEY LELAND

Five years ago, Rep. Mickey Leland traveled to the Sudan to see the horrors of hunger firsthand. He got more than he bargained for; he watched a young girl die in front of his eyes. She was just "a skeleton of a person with a thin layer of brown skin on her," he said later. At the time, Leland turned to ask a relief worker about the girl and, "While I was talking to him, she died. I can see her face right now. Every day I see her face."

Every day, the rest of us, going about our mundane lives see such faces—or certainly know that such faces exist. And yet we do little. If we're legislators, we do what we can to pass laws to relieve the suffering in the world. But Mickey Leland did more. He went far beyond the call of duty. He tried to solve the problem by the sheer force of his personality, and it was quite a force! In addition to convincing the leadership to establish the Select Committee on Hunger in 1984, he proselytized the public, he cajoled his colleagues, and he traveled.

When Congress adjourned for recess this summer, he gathered two of his closest aides—his AA, Patrice Johnson, a brilliant young woman, and Hugh Johnson, a smart, witty bear of a man who had only recently joined the staff of the Hunger panel—and, together with Joyce Williams, a highly regarded expert on child mortality and nutrition with the House District Committee, State Department officials, and others, journeyed to Ethiopia and the Sudan once more. It was Leland's sixth official trip. He had been there as recently as April, with, among others, Hugh Johnson and Reps. Gary Ackerman (D-NY) and Bill Emerson (R-Mo). On Monday, Aug. 7, the delegation left Addis Ababa on a flight to a remote refugee camp in the Sudan. The plane crashed in bad weather. It took nearly a week to find the wreckage. All those aboard were killed.

Rarely has the death of a Congressman so severly shaken the Hill community. It's not hard to understand why. Leland, who was 44 when he died, was a charismatic figure who made friends easily—friends on both sides of the aisle (as the remarkable letter from GOP Rep. Jack Fields to Mickey's son, printed in the Aug. 31 issue of Roll Call, attests). Leland was also a skilled politician, admired by his constituents and by the leadership. If Sen. Lloyd Bentsen (D-Texas) had been elected vice president last year, Leland almost certainly would have run for the seat—and we think he would have won, becoming the first black Democratic Senator in history. He had a bright future. He also had an attractive and loving young family. His wife Alison, 30, an executive with Shearson Lehman Hutton in Houston, recently told Mickey that she is expecting a child early next year. The first Leland child, Jarrett, is three years old.

But his appeal went beyond charisma and politics: Leland was a Member of Congress who saw his job as helping the hungry and the downtrodden of the world—both through legislative means and otherwise. At great personal risk, he tried literally to touch as many of the poor of Africa as he could. This commitment transcended the normal bounds of the Congressional vocation. We think that Mickey would have devoted much of his life to the same cause even if he had stuck to the job he had before Congress (working as a hospital executive), even if he had been a carpenter.

In an age of professionalization, of self-centeredness, of grasping materialism, Mickey Leland—as well as Patrice Johnson, Hugh Johnson, and Joyce Williams (to whom we paid tribute in this space last week)—showed us all that the good life is a life helping others. We'll miss Mickey. He can't be replaced, but we can try to follow his example.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, words are not easy for me to find in this tribute to a great man and a good friend, Congressman MICKEY LELAND. I knew him well, and I worked with him closely. His death was sudden, unexpected, and it leaves me with a profound sense of loss.

MICKEY LELAND was an honest, talented, committed man. He was a man of great compassion, who felt strongly for those with too few books to read, too few opportunities for meaningful work and especially too little food. He died because of his deep personal commitment to do everything in his power to fight hunger, and to fight it everywhere, in this country and in countries around the world.

For MICKEY LELAND the war on poverty and hunger constituted the top priority he set for his work in Congress. But he had other commitments, other responsibilities. I served as his Ranking Minority Member on the Postal Operations Subcommittee he chaired. It is this role that I came to know and admire this great Representative of the 18th District of Texas. On issues affecting the Postal Service, its future and the future of its employees, there was no greater champion than MICKEY LELAND. I count my work with him as one of the great and rewarding periods in my 27 years of service in this House.

MICKEY was more than hard-working and knowledgeable. He was personable, witty, a pleasure to work with. He was a man of integrity. He said what he meant and meant what he said, and you could count on his word. He was a man of principle.

MICKEY LELAND served his constituents and this Nation well. In 9 short years in this House he made a difference. His shoes will not easily be filled. I will not forget MICKEY LELAND and the times we shared. He was one of the best, and I am very proud to have been able to count him as a friend. To his wife Alison, to his family and friends, my wife Nancy and I share in the loss you feel, and we share, too, in the pride you know in having been touched by the life of this great individual.

Mr. MCHUGH. Mr. Speaker, the untimely death of our friend and colleague MICKEY LELAND shocked and saddened me, as I know it did the many people all over the world who admired, respected and loved MICKEY.

The people who sent MICKEY LELAND to Congress have lost a great representative, and this body has lost one of its most visionary and effective moral leaders.

Just a week before his death, in what was probably MICKEY's last Washington press conference, he joined with me and Senator HATFIELD in releasing a report we had commissioned by the Arms Control and Foreign Policy Caucus, of which we were all members.

Our collaboration on that report will remain for me a warm memory and living testament of MICKEY LELAND's vision, courage, and involvement in crafting imaginative solutions to difficult world problems. Our report, entitled "The Developing World: Danger Point for U.S. Security", identified five serious challenges for the developing world: economic stagnation, environmental damage, the political power of the military, militarization (war, military spending and weapons proliferation), and drug-trafficking. It specified a number of long-range solutions that would represent new policy directions for the United States and other nations.

As chairman of the Select Committee on Hunger, MICKEY LELAND was keenly aware that complex problems require imaginative solutions; his participation in this report and his championing of its numerous recommendations constitute a legacy to us that I believe he was very proud of, though he could not know at the time that it would become his final statement of his visionary hopes for a better world.

Mr. Speaker, in the preparation of that report, I was proud to be a collaborator of MICKEY LELAND's in his last months and weeks among us. He will endure in my memory as a man of great strength as well as gentleness, of compassion, wisdom and commitment. I join with all my colleagues in extending our condolences to his family and many friends. I am confident that his goodness and vision will remain alive in the work of this House, of which he was such an honorable and effective Member.

Mr. CARR. Mr. Speaker, I will always remember the week of August 13, 1989. I was in my district when I got the news that the airplane carrying MICKEY LELAND and 15 others was overdue and unaccounted for. As a member of the Select Committee on Hunger and one who has always wanted to make that same journey to witness the ravages of hunger in sub-Saharan Africa, I felt a part of that trip even though I wasn't there.

And as a pilot, when I learned of the terrain and the weather I was immediately fearful that something tragic had happened—a plane forced down, but safe generally has an ability to communicate with overhead aircraft—yet in talking to the staff of the committee I tried my best to remain hopeful. But what really kept running through my mind was that great empty feeling: how can it be that MICKEY is gone? It didn't seem possible.

Of course, that's the way it is when someone your own age dies unexpectedly and you are forced to momentarily abandon the rush of living and confront the frailty of life and the certainty of death.

Now that the shock of MICKEY's tragic death have subsided its easier to put him and our relationship in perspective.

First, he was a friend. We worked together. We played together. No matter which it was he had a zest for it. And he did it with style. He was one of those friendly people who was always "up" even when you knew that wasn't the way he felt inside. He was easy to talk with and we left conversations with him feeling good. His manner generally worked for him and made him effective. It even caused us to overlook his transgressions and his flaws.

Second, no one doubts the sincerity of MICKEY's commitment to the things that he really cared about. This was never more true than his commitment in the cause of fighting world hunger a cause we shared. His death in this regard creates a void which we all must work harder to fill. And we will.

Lastly, MICKEY would be honored at the sadness and feelings of loss that we have, but he would not have wanted it. He wouldn't want us to take him more seriously than he took himself. He would be asking us to remember him well and to keep up his commitments to others. MICKEY, we will and we will.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, so many Members are deeply grieved by the death of MICKEY LELAND. With his passing, his colleagues in Congress, constituents, and the countless friends he made across this country and around the world have lost a spirited public servant, and a true humanitarian.

Throughout his life, MICKEY's seemingly boundless energy, tenacity, and idealism enabled him to win tough battles that many others would not think of tackling. He demonstrated a genuine commitment to helping others, often those who did not have voice. He was an active spokesperson for the civil rights and antiwar movement in Houston during a time when the efforts were not widely supported. He consistently worked for measures against the apartheid regime in South Africa. With his warmth, enthusiasm, and charisma, he was effective in drawing others into the variety of causes he championed.

However, MICKEY will probably be best remembered for his significant contribution to the battle against hunger, both on a national and an international level. He fought for the establishment of the Select Committee on Hunger, and then he used his chairmanship of that committee to pursue increased food and humanitarian aid to areas around the world devastated by hunger and development problems, as well as to areas within the borders of our own country.

I had the great privilege to work closely with MICKEY on a number of initiatives, the most memorable of them revolving around the trip which a Congressional delegation, under the distinguished chairmanship of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE], chairman of the Subcommittee on Africa of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, undertook in August of 1983. It was the first delegation to visit Ethiopia since the overthrow of the Haile Selassie government. The famine had been going on for almost 2 years, devastating and killing tens of thousands of Ethiopian men, women, and children, but it had not yet become a matter of great international notoriety.

We had occasion to visit a refugee camp, and we saw Ethiopian men and women who had walked for miles from their villages, and then, if they were fortunate enough to arrive when there was the delivery of food, walk back those miles again with a sack of meal on their backs.

We saw the children who were suffering from forms of malnutrition. In addition to seeing the deprivation and the death and destruction, we had occasion to meet with the head of the government, Colonel Mengistu of Ethiopia, and it was a fairly large delegation. We all spoke to him about a number of issues of concern to us, most especially getting him to agree to have greater participation in helping the people of his country. None of us seemed to make any dent until MICKEY made a very emotional appeal to Colonel Mengistu. At that point Mengistu himself became engaged, and he could not resist MICKEY's relentless appeal.

I believe it was as an outgrowth of that original dialog that MICKEY had with Colonel Mengistu that allowed him to really work closely with the Ethiopian Government and have the Ethiopian Government open its borders so in fact international relief could flood into Ethiopia.

We had occasion on that same visit to meet with the black Jewish residents in the villages of Gondar Province, and again MICKEY was deeply moved. That fit in perfectly with his work in the Israeli project which he had undertaken where a number of black and Hispanic youngsters had been engaged in an exchange program with Israeli youngsters from his district.

Subsequently, MICKEY, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE], and I introduced a supplemental appropriations bill to provide more than $1 billion in famine relief and recovery assistance for the drought-ravaged areas of Africa for fiscal year 1985. The three of us collaborated with other Members in testifying on behalf of and gathering support for this legislation, and ultimately we succeeded in achieving passage of a measure that provided nearly $800 million in assistance.

The savvy and tireless effort on the part of MICKEY played a key role in bringing about the passage of this bill, and his good humor helped mark that initiative as one of my most satisfying legislative experiences during my tenure in this body.

Opportunities for MICKEY to fight injustice seemed to almost fall upon him, and he always responded. During the course of that trip to Africa, while we were in Zaire, having met with a group of dissident former parliamentarians in our hotel, while most of us had gone off to another meeting, MICKEY had to go back for his camera. He saw then that the parliamentarians we had met with were being set upon by men in civilian clothes but in military trucks, and obviously this was the handiwork of the dictator of Zaire, Mr. Mobutu.

Through MICKEY's efforts, we had a confrontation with Mr. Mobuto on his yacht, where I think we demonstrated to him that, in fact, as far as these Members of Congress were concerned, whether we were guests in his country or not, we would not sit idly by while violations of human rights took place in our very presence.

Mr. Speaker, I will miss MICKEY LELAND, and I will never forget the example he set. I offer my deepest condolences to his wife Alison, his son Jarrett, his mother Alice Raines, his brother Gaston, and to the many others who grieve for him.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I want to pay tribute to a man I respected and admired: MICKEY LELAND. I counted MICKEY as a friend. I will miss him. So will thousands of individuals whose lives he touched in so many ways.

But MICKEY LELAND'S leadership and commitment to justice and equality were so great his work will continue to guide us and be remembered. MICKEY LELAND left a legacy of accomplishments that will never be forgotten.

I believe we must continue MICKEY LELAND'S work. I know we will because MICKEY LELAND work had a lasting effect on us and many others.

I often speak about the importance of citizens being involved and believing they can help make a difference in our world. MICKEY LELAND was an example of what a person can do. He opened the world's eyes to the devastation of hunger and made sure we are doing something about it.

Although we feel grief at his loss, we also are strengthened by what he accomplished and what he taught us. The tributes to MICKEY LELAND help us remember what he gave the world. But the best tribute we can make is to continue his work each and every day.

My thoughts are with Alison Leland and her son.

I will miss my friend MICKEY LELAND. I plan to work to make sure his ideas and his commitment continue to live on.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in their sorrow at the unfortunate death of our colleague MICKEY LELAND of the State of Texas, and concur with their statements.

MICKEY and I became good friends soon after he became a Member. We worked together in many areas where the Congress helped to meet serious needs of the people in the many areas of the world.

I do not remember a single instance where MICKEY failed to support our Committee on Appropriations in its efforts.

Several years ago MICKEY LELAND spoke to a joint meeting of the Mississippi Legislature where his message was well received.

Mr. Speaker, we have lost a valuable Member of the Congress, and I have lost a real friend.

To his family we wish strength to carry on, for MICKEY'S loss is a loss to us all. He leaves a fine record.

ADDITIONAL TRIBUTES TO THE LATE HONORABLE MICKEY LELAND

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCDERMOTT). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, in thinking of how I could pay tribute to MICKEY LELAND, the best I could think of was to talk to Alison and Jarrett and just tell them what is really in my heart about MICKEY.

Many in this House know that philosophically MICKEY and I could be as far apart as China is to the United States. I guess that is the real measure of a man who can disagree politically in everything that we did, and we did for 20 years because I knew MICKEY when I was going to the University of Houston 20 years ago and MICKEY was leading civil rights marches and anti-Vietnam marches and he was in the fray of politics and other meaningful causes way back then when he was going to TSU.

But MICKEY never held grudges. MICKEY was always a friend.

You know, I do not know of anybody that really knew MICKEY, disagree with him or not, that did not love MICKEY and really care for him and consider him a friend.

MICKEY was like that. MICKEY and I would work together on issues that were important to Houston, were important to Texas, but MICKEY was one of those rare individuals in this House who can do his job, who can fight like a tiger for the causes he believes in, and then go off, as the gentleman said, and play cards with his political enemies.

He was a free spirit who truly loved life.

The other measure of a person is how he treats his spouse and his children. I do not know of a man who did not love his wife like MICKEY did and all his love for Jarrett.

Jarrett, when you read this special order, I want you to read that your daddy really loved you. You were everything, you were his whole life, you meant everything to him.

One of the things that kind of tickled me when MICKEY and I were on a trip to Mexico was he knew how conservative I was and he admitted to me one day, he said:

You know, now that I have a little boy, I am starting to see a few things, not many, but a few things differently. And that little boy means everything to me.

So, Jarrett, your daddy did love you.

Alison, MICKEY never stopped talking about you. He truly loved his family, not only his Alison and his Jarrett, but his mother and everyone who was close to him. He was a family man and he sacrificed so much, including his life, for things that he truly believed in, sacrificed mostly his time with his family, his wife, and his boy.

I take this special order at the urging of our dean of the Texas delegation and I must say I appreciate him taking this long special order.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. EMERSON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, this is the one occasion since I have been in the House of Representatives—now 9 years—when I am truly confounded as to what is appropriate to say. That is so because no eulogy seems appropriate or adequate in describing MICKEY'S career, his personality, the breadth of his ideas, or the depth of his commitment.

What I do know most profoundly is that he was my very dear and close friend whose memory I will cherish forever. I will try to serve that memory as constructively and as diligently as my capacity allows.

MICKEY and I had the opportunity to do, together, many, many things. Just this past March and April, during the Easter break, we went to Sudan and Ethiopia. We went by way of Rome.

We had the wonderful opportunity to share mass on Easter Sunday at St. Peter's. One week later, one Sunday later, we were down in a displaced persons camp in the far reaches of Sudan. And he and I commented on the contrast, the difference between what we had experienced in Rome on one Sunday and the magnificence of it all, and the following Sunday to be in that displaced persons camp in Sudan and to note the disaster of it all.

You know, we thought there must be some message there. And I think there was. We certainly felt on both occasions that we were having a holy experience.

We talked a lot about problems, many of the problems that MICKEY was charged with dealing with; and it always struck me as being strange when I heard him described as an ideologue. I suppose there is a way one could make that definition fit. Indeed he has told me on many occasions how his reputation as an ideologue arrived at a certain point in his career.

□ 1850

During the period of his career that I had the opportunity to know him and to work with him he was anything but an ideologue. I know MICKEY as a hero, as one who reached across the aisle in any circumstance. Nothing put MICKEY off. He was not put off by party or ideology or color. He wanted results. He would work with anyone who would work with him to achieve responsible goals and objectives.

I, like many colleagues here, have not yet reconciled myself to the fact that he is not going to come walking in one of these doors any second now and have a good word with all Members. I was down in the dining room a while ago and recalled that on just the evening before we left for the August break, I was down there with my wife and two of my children, and MICKEY came in and was cutting up with all Members as was his wont to do, and he advised Members on that occasion how happy he was that he would in short order be the father of a second child, and he related how he has loved and enjoyed Jarrett, and how much it was going to add to his life, and Alison's life, to have yet another child to love and to care for.

I think that "love" is a word that is synonymous with MICKEY. He was truly representative of that spirit that is all-encompassing, knows no enemies. He reached out to everyone. He is going to be greatly missed.

MICKEY was most unique among the Members. We have a lot of work to do to appropriately honor his name and the purposes for which he lived.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his comments that were so well-taken. I yield to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI].

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and thank the chairman of the delegation and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY] for taking this special order.

I was just reminiscing with the dean of the delegation about if all the Members who claim to have been invited by MICKEY were on the trip him, half the Congress of the United States would have been in Ethiopia with him, but that was indicative of MICKEY's personality—that he cared so much about the issue. He flattered all Members, and complimented all Members by inviting Members to take part in his largesse of heart.

He was a dear friend of so many Members. We will miss him very badly. I want his family to know that I rise to extend the condolences not only of myself and my family, but the constituents of my district in San Francisco. They do know, I am sure, but everyone should know that MICKEY had a constituency throughout the country, and indeed throughout the world. He was a hero, even before our tragic loss.

Others in this body will have documented a legacy of service of MICKEY LELAND. We all know he had a heart as big as Texas, and he contributed enormously to the proud heritage of that State and to this Congress of the United States. I wish to associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST] and others who have remembered MICKEY as a person, as a family person, as a devoted husband and father, and recall the last day we all saw MICKEY, the last day of the session before the recent, when he proudly walked through the aisles and in the cloakroom telling Members he just heard from Alison and he was going to be a father again, and that he and Alison and Jarrett were going to have a new baby. He was so happy, and he proclaimed his happiness. That was our last memory of MICKEY in the House of Representatives.

He went on just a few short days later to gave his life in service to all of the children of the world. I believe from what I have heard here today that it will not be difficult for all Members to commit ourselves to making the world better for MICKEY's children, a world where the dignity and worth of every person is respected as MICKEY's respects each person, a world which lived up to the high ideals of MICKEY LELAND. Because that is his legacy to Members. So we must, for Jarrett, for the new baby, for MICKEY's family, diligently work at making the world a better place and continue the legacy of MICKEY LELAND.

Even though he is not here, all who loved him will carry him in our hearts forever.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEHMAN].

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank our distinguished colleague, the Honorable JACK BROOKS, for arranging this special order today. It is difficult to speak about remembering someone who was so alive among us every day by both his presence and his valuable work. Working with and knowing MICKEY LELAND was one of the greatest privileges I have in Congress.

He was tenacious in his pursuit of United States funds for African famine relief and development, and tackling the hunger issue here at home. He cared so much. MICKEY testified before our Appropriations Subcommittee on Foreign Operations on these and related issues. And it was indeed a privilege for me to ensure funding for the coming fiscal year for one of his initiatives, the need to reach Third World women in development programs.

We traveled together to Cuba last October to gain the freedom of Cuban political prisoners. That release of four political prisoners held for decades in Cuban prisons and their families would never had succeeded without MICKEY's efforts. Our trip to Cuba was just one example of the humanitarian that he was.

He was not ideological. He was a man for all seasons, a man for all people, a man of grand humor and a zest for life that will always be remembered.

The Edna St. Vincent Millay poem captures something about MICKEY'S life:

My candle burns at both ends;
It will not last the night;
But ah, my foes, and oh, my friends—
It gives a lovely light!

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN], who stayed late on this evening on his birthday to pay tribute to MICKEY LELAND.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas for yielding to me and for calling this special order this evening.

This is a loss for the State, and a loss for the Nation. Really, a loss for the world. MICKEY LELAND was a dear personal friend, and I feel that loss as well in a very personal way.

Let me share some of my thoughts at this moment about MICKEY. Sometime when people come from humble origins, the come to the Congress of the United States and they have the opportunity to meet with the President, two Presidents, to meet with world leaders, to talk to the top executives of business and labor, and they forget the roots from which they came, and the people whose lives are affected by the decisions we make here, day after day.

□ 1900

MICKEY was very popular, as everyone can tell from these speeches given. Whether people agreed with his political point of view or not, he was personally very popular, but he never forgot his roots. He never forget the people that were depending upon him.

MICKEY LELAND will long be remembered for his efforts in dealing with hunger, and that issue is one that will always be identified with his way in Congress of the United States.

We served together on the Health and Environment Subcommittee. MICKEY was a strong advocate for health care for the poor, the disadvantaged. He sponsored legislation to expand the Medicaid Program for low-income women and children. He knew that they were the ones being left out. He knew too often that it was the poor that would hurt the most when government did not do what it should be doing to equalize opportunities.

Many people may not realize, but, as we look to the battle in this Congress on clean air, MICKEY authored the legislation to regulate toxic air pollutants, and a few days before he left for Ethiopia we had a hearing on that issue. Toxic air pollutants are the kinds of pollutants that cause cancer, birth defects, and neurological damage, and MICKEY told me he was advised by some of the people who are his supporters back home that perhaps that was not the kind of issue he should take on. After all, the petrochemical issue is very strong in Texas, and he was developing a better relationship with them. They were responding more to his appeals to be involved in the community's activities. Yet MICKEY knew and told me that the people who were the ones whose lives were being shortened by these toxic air pollutants, who had to suffer the pains of seeing babies born prematurely and with defects, were poor people, were often minorities trapped in these communities, and they had no other choice but to breathe in that air. So he committed himself to take on this fight.

Mr. Speaker, at the hearing one of the witnesses said that the President's bill was making progress and, in fact, it was better than what we had now. He asked why MICKEY could not be satisfied with that, and MICKEY shared with all of us a very revealing personal story. He said that he remembered when a man came out to fix an addition on his grandmother's house, and during that time his grandfather had died. The addition was shabby, it was worthless, and the contractor came by, and his grandmother was in tears, MICKEY said that he will never forget this. He was 11 or 12 at the time, and that contractor said to his grandmother, "But isn't it better than what you had before?" as if she should be satisfied with something less than what she bargained for or that people back home in Texas and all around the country should be satisfied with letting a little bit more pollution take the lives of people with cancer, neurological damage.

Mr. Speaker, MICKEY could be so agreeable, but he could never be satisfied when others were in pain, and he told me just a few days before he left on that trip how proud he was of Alison, how well she was doing in her career, and he always wanted to show Jarrett off, bringing him by the committee. Jarrett was always licking an ice cream cone and running off to the zoo. MICKEY was so proud of him, so proud of Alison, so much in love with his family and friends.

We all miss him, We will miss him as a person. We will miss him as a leader.

Mr. DELAY Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL].

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleagues in paying tribute to Congressman MICKEY LELAND. The desperate needs of the poor and hungry continue to present enormous challenges to civilized societies. Rarely does someone manage to heighten our sense of outrage about these stubborn problems. MICKEY LELAND was such a person. Since he first came to Congress in 1979, he sensitized us to the world's forgotten people. MICKEY's quest knew no cultural or political boundaries; he only knew that it was decent for a country as great and as rich as ours to help people in need.

MICKEY LELAND's passion lent immediacy and weight to issues, such as hunger and homelessness, that most of us can see but not fully understand. He challenged us to acknowledge the daily plight of those less fortunate than ourselves, no matter what the economic indicators were telling us. He fought to dismantle popular myths about poverty and prosperity that prevent so many people from achieving their modest dreams. MICKEY LELAND wanted to make sure that everybody had a seat at the table.

MICKEY LELAND advanced the interests of the disadvantaged by making the political system work for them, instead of against them. He inspired candid, frank, and constructive debate, and, by sparing no rod when it came to bureaucratic foot-dragging, he dared us to be a better and more compassionate institution. I am deeply saddened that I have to say goodbye to such a principled, humble, and caring person. I hope that we will work together to preserve not only the laws he wrote, but the loving spirit in which he wrote them.

Jeanne-Marie and I extend our sympathy to his wife Alison and his son Jarrett.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL] and I yield to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER].

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY] for yielding this time to me.

MICKEY, I have cried a lot of tears since you have been gone, but not as much as you deserve. This House of the Congress is not the same without you. I think you are watching this today, and you know that the people who are speaking here today truly love you from both sides of the aisle, of all political persuasions.

Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that more than several of us have said they sometimes walk in this Hall and expect to see MICKEY kind of lumbering down and appearing, just being back to the way things were before. I think that is a statement to his presence that he had among us. One can just feel his absence since the day I came back. Many of us have been in groups saying how we feel his absence when we are just talking about maybe our personal lives, issues, things where MICKEY was right with us. You are missing from that, MICKEY.

When we looked at MICKEY's face, we saw friendship, and, as the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL] said, caring and compassion, a good sense of humor, and intelligence. When we saw MICKEY, we felt good because MICKEY was working for the most difficult issue of all, solving the problem of world hunger and poverty, and we knew we could follow his leadership. He was leading the way. It was less work for us, and now that he is gone we have to begin to carry on.

□ 1910

It is going to be very hard to fill the void. MICKEY was committed to taking care of the children of the world and when he had his son here, holding him in his arms, that little one just wanted to squirt out of his arms and run around the halls. MICKEY smiled. MICKEY was never so happy as when he was with his wife and his son.

I think that what MICKEY learned when he became a parent, and I think all of us learned when we became parents, is how much one little person takes of your energy and your time and your love and your commitment and, yes, your money, what it takes to be a parent.

MICKEY looked around and I think when he had this child and he had another on the way, it kind of redoubled his commitment to all God's children, because he said:

> If my one child takes so much from me, think of all the world's children who don't have fathers, that have drug-addicted mothers, that maybe are orphaned and maybe living in Africa and do not even have food on the table.

So I think his family made him feel all the more committed to this cause.

Well, I am not going to go on and say anything else, except to pledge my commitment, with that of my colleagues, to work on the issues that MICKEY worked for, world hunger, black-Jewish relations, and the condition of all the world's children. If we do that, we will be doing something for MICKEY.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH].

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, the gentleman from Texas, for yielding to me.

We all have our thoughts and anecdotes about MICKEY LELAND. He was affable, a good-natured individual, all these things that have been expressed here this evening, and yes, in many ways he was a lot like Larkin Smith, was he not? Both of them had many things in common.

One evening we had a special order dealing with Ethiopia, and we were having a give and take over on our side. MICKEY came on the floor. He had some of his own views, naturally.

We got up and we had our give and take. After the time had elapsed, MICKEY came over to our side and we continued our discussion, went downstairs, went over to the Rayburn Building. It was all done in a good-natured way. MICKEY laughing went off in his direction and we went off in our direction.

I think that explains the type of person that MICKEY LELAND was. As had been said so often here this evening, he was a person who deeply committed, but yet you could sit down and talk with him, have a discussion with him. You could give your side. He would talk about how he viewed things, give his perception. He was an outstanding individual in that way and I think that is why he was so dearly loved and why he was so effective here in the Congress.

When I first heard that his plane was missing, like everyone else in this Chamber, we all said a silent prayer, but we all knew that the next newscast would tell us that MICKEY had landed and everything was OK; but unfortunately, that is not the way it happened. Now we can all say, "There but for the grace of God, go I."

Albert Einstein had a beautiful saying. He said:

A thousand times a day I remind myself that my inner and outer life is dependent on the labors of other men, living and dead, and that I must give in the same measure as I have received.

When we think of MICKEY LELAND and Larkin Smith, I think we can all say that we have to give in the way they gave, follow the example that they have set.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. DYMALLY].

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas for yielding to me and for making it possible for us to pay tribute to our friend.

Much has been said about MICKEY LELAND'S advocacy against hunger, his coalition politics in Texas, and his fight against social injustice.

I want to talk today about MICKEY as a man of peace. MICKEY LELAND was never free to go into those areas where we had differences with the country, with the heads of state. You found MICKEY in Sudan, in Ethiopia, in Kenya, Zaire, Angola, Cuba, always preaching reconciliation. MICKEY felt very deeply that where there is dialog, there are opportunities for reconciliation of differences.

He was sometimes criticized for going into areas where there were violations of human rights or where there were socialist governments, but he felt that we as a body had an obligation to open up lines of communications with countries and peoples and heads of state with whom we had disagreements, and that is why MICKEY traveled to all the trouble spots.

I just came back from five countries in Africa and every place I went the people in those countries joined us in mourning the loss of MICKEY LELAND. His presence was felt in Africa more than you can ever imagine.

So today I want to join with my colleagues in expressing our deep sympathy to his wife, to his boy and his expectant child, his mother and the rest of the family, because no one will ever replace MICKEY LELAND as an advocate for peace around the world.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PRICE].

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me. I am privileged to participate in this special order tonight.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to our colleague MICKEY LELAND, who departed this life working to provide hope for the poor, the hungry, and the homeless. He will be sorely missed in the Halls of Congress, by those in Houston whom he represented so effectively, and in the homes and villages of many throughout the world. Many in my State of North Carolina knew him, respected him, and counted him a friend. I am proud to be in that number, and I speak for many in my State today in expressing a deep sense of loss.

MICKEY LELAND had a powerful sense of mission, to help people less fortunate than he, whether in the inner cities of our Nation or in the heart of famine-stricken communities in Ethiopia. At the conclusion of his trip to the Sudan last spring, MICKEY responded to critics of his visit: "I am as much a citizen of this world as I am of my country," he said. "I grew up on a Christian ethic which says we are supposed to help the least of our brothers." This was the essence of MICKEY LELAND'S calling which he pursued with a dogged persistence, not seeking recognition for himself but skillfully promoting his cause, making it harder for us to ignore the least fortunate among us.

We have heard the story of how MICKEY was profoundly moved by seeing a starving child die before his eyes in Sudan in 1984. He returned to Congress with a redoubled determination to help the starving and impoverished in the world. And he encouraged us, with the establishment and his leadership of the Select Committee on Hunger, to make a commitment to ending these problems, both at home and abroad. This was MICKEY'S dream and MICKEY'S mission.

Now, the challenge to continue this mission is upon us. For the problems MICKEY LELAND worked so hard to rectify are still with us. Much work is left to be done—more assistance from nations who enjoy plenty to those who do not, improved management and distribution of aid, and ending the war and disruption that has created so many refugees and so much suffering.

The plane carrying MICKEY LELAND, members of his and RON DELLUMS' staff, AID workers, and others never reached its destination to carry relief to refugees on the Sudanese border. Their work is not finished, and we honor MICKEY best by taking up his cause.

My deepest condolences to MICKEY LELAND'S family, and to the families of all the victims of this tragic accident.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I want to say, "MICKEY, I know you are listening. You have heard a lot of good things said about you in terms of your life and the way you lived it."

It is regrettable that tragedy brings us together today, but we are only one, a few among millions of people throughout the world who share in this grief.

□ 1920

MICKEY I want to report to you, even though it may not appear this way, the last thing you asked me on the day of our adjournment for the recess was to get rid of some of that excess baggage that I am hauling around. It may not appear that, but I have lost some weight, and I am going to continue to work at it.

Even after more than a month, MICKEY, I find your loss cannot be adequately addressed with a few words. To say your death was untimely and tragic understates its impact on this institution, this country, and, indeed, the world. Our loss of your friendship, your leadership, your outspokenness and your great compassion is of no mistake, but put into perspective, it does not compare with the loss your district has suffered. It is small in comparison to the loss of your worldwide constituency has suffered. It is small compared to the loss that your staff has suffered, and it all pales in comparison with the loss that your family has suffered.

You are gone now, MICKEY, physically, but your spirit lives on in all of us. You were a rare type of individual who earned respect from friend and foe alike.

Whether we agreed with you or not, one thing was certain: We had to respect your passion, your integrity, and your conviction.

Although you were termed as a liberal, I am certain that many Members of this Chamber who have the strongest conservative leanings would not disagree with that assessment.

MICKEY, you were one who never forgot your roots. That was dramatically evident to me when I attended your memorial service in Houston last month. The sense of loss I felt from your constituents was profound.

If anything can comfort them, it is that you, MICKEY, have made all of us better for your brief existence. There is no question that you have set an example for this Congress to follow. The formation of the Select Committee on Hunger is a direct result of your putting words into action, and in this case it was your words, MICKEY, and compassion for your fellow human beings and your unyielding desire to serve the less fortunate among the world's people. You fought hard for the Hunger Committee's creation and literally turned it into a life, living, and giving entity.

In fact, I guess as tributes go, it is an appropriate tribute that you died, MICKEY, carrying out the mission of ending hunger in the world.

Your impact on this institution will continue. The Select Committee on Hunger will continue. I trust that the leadership will select a new chair for that committee who shares your compassion, MICKEY, and understanding of how important it is to act from the heart and not for personal gain.

Mr. Speaker, the tragedy that brings us together today is one that millions of people throughout the world have shared in. Even after more than a month I find the loss of our colleague, MICKEY LELAND, cannot be adequately addressed by a few words. To say his death was untimely and tragic understates its impact on this institution, this country, and indeed, the world.

Our loss of MICKEY's friendship, his leadership. His outspokenness, and his compassion is great. Of that there is no mistake. But put into perspective, it does not compare to the loss his district has suffered. It is small compared to the loss his worldwide constituency has suffered. It is small compared to the loss his staff has suffered. And yet, all of that pales in comparison to the loss his family has suffered.

MICKEY is gone physically but his spirit lives on in all of us. He was that rare type of individual who earned respect from friend and foe alike. Whether you agreed with him or not, one thing was certain, you had to respect his passion, his integrity, and his convictions. Although he was termed a liberal, I am certain there are many Members of this Chamber who have the strongest of conservative leanings who would not disagree with that assessment.

MICKEY LELAND was one who never forgot his roots. That was dramatically evident to me when I attended his memorial service in Houston last month. The sense of loss I felt from his constituents was profound. If anything can comfort them, it is that MICKEY has made all of us better for his brief existence. There is no question that he has set an example for this Congress to follow.

The formation of the Select Committee on Hunger is a direct result of putting words into action. In this case, it was MICKEY'S words and compassion for his fellow human beings and his unyielding desire to serve the less fortunate among the world's people. He fought hard for the Hunger Committee's creation and literally turned it into a life-giving entity. In fact, I guess as tributes go, it is an appropriate tribute that MICKEY died carrying out its mission of ending hunger in the world. It is also unfortunate that he had to die to bring so much attention to an issue that should have been at the forefront of public attention—ending world hunger.

MICKEY's impact on this Institution will continue. The Select Committee will continue. I trust that the leadership will select a new chair for that committee who shares MICKEY's compassion and understanding of how important it is to act from the heart and not from personal gain.

I know many of us have repledged our commitment to fighting even harder for the plight of the homeless, the hungry, and the needy. I know I have. As MICKEY has so vividly shown us, we cannot take for granted that we can do it tomorrow. Like MICKEY's, our time will be up sooner than we think. So let's come together today and the rest of our days, and continue MICKEY's mission of feeding the hungry, housing the homeless. It is the least we can do.

Millions are better off today because of his caring. I for one am stronger for having been touched by his spirit, and I will miss him sadly.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, very well done, and I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the gentleman from Texas for holding this special order in honor of our friend, brother, and colleague, MICKEY LELAND.

We all know and we all have heard and we really understand the superb job that MICKEY did as chairman of the Select Committee on Hunger. For many of us, MICKEY LELAND represented more than the good people of the 18th Congressional District of Texas. He represented the very best in all of us. He was so American, but yet a citizen of the world. He was a gentle and kind man. He was an extraordinary human being.

This man, MICKEY LELAND, this good and decent public servant was on a mission, on a journey of mercy to help the suffering and starving people, to help those who have been left out and left behind.

MICKEY LELAND was a man of vision. He had a vision. He had a dream that we could put an end to hunger at home and abroad. He really did believe in the possibility of a society free of hunger and starvation. He died while he was trying to make this dream a living reality.

With the death of MICKEY LELAND, something died in all of us. He will be missed not only by the people of Texas but by the people of Atlanta, GA, by the people of America, by men and women of all walks of life throughout our own land and around the world.

Mr. Speaker, we owe a collective debt of gratitude to MICKEY LELAND. He taught us how to live, and he taught us how to die.

Thank you, MICKEY, for demonstrating to all of us the difference one individual can make in creating a better world, in creating a world at peace with itself. Thank you for your example, of a joyful life of service to humanity.

Those of us here today, those of us in this body have a moral obligation and a mandate to continue to work for MICKEY LELAND.

Mr. Speaker, again, I want to thank the gentleman from Texas for holding this special order.

However, before I close, I would like to commend the heroic effort of our colleagues, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WHEAT], the gentleman from New York [Mr. ACKERMAN], and the Sergeant at Arms, Jack Russ, in leading the gallant mission to bring MICKEY back home. Again, I want to thank my friend from Texas for yielding.

Mr. DELAY. I appreciate the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from American Samoa [Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA].

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas for giving me this opportunity to pay special tribute to my friend, MICKEY LELAND.

Mr. Speaker, MICKEY LELAND is the main reason why I was invited to serve as a member of the House Select Committee on Hunger. In the short time that I knew him, I came to respect MICKEY as a humanitarian of the first order; he was a person who got in among the people. He wanted to know why things were, as they are, and what could be done to make them better; he wanted to know what problems existed while ready to do whatever was necessary to facilitate change. On the one hand, he worked at the highest levels of government to pass laws and implement policy to change the plight of hungry people around the world.

Among the main driving forces in the life of MICKEY LELAND were the activities of the Select Committee on Hunger, and its impact on hunger, malnutrition, and health of the poor. This drive involved not only remote areas around the world, but included the poor and hungry living on the outer fringes of American society.

MICKEY LELAND became involved with the issues of the poor while studying to become a pharmacist. As the prime mover in the Congress to fight hunger and malnutrition, his efforts eventually led to the establishment of the House Select Committee on Hunger in 1984, of which he served as its first chairman.

My first real opportunity to know MICKEY was during the Colonius hearings held in Texas during May of this year. It was during this time that MICKEY, Congressman BUSTAMANTE, Congressman ORTIZ, and myself shared personal feelings and experiences with the local community. MICKEY LELAND, like some of us on the Hunger Committee, came from humble beginnings and grew up under difficult circumstances. The difficulties in his past never diminished his compassion and concern for the poor and the needy. I believe this is the most important legacy and challenge MICKEY LELAND left to all of us. This was the MICKEY LELAND I came to know and appreciate. This was the MICKEY LELAND known by many.

I extend my most sincere condolences to MICKEY's wife Alison and son Jarrett, for the loss of a loving husband and father. To the House of Representatives for the loss of a loved and respected colleague. To his fellow advocates in the struggle against racism, discrimination, and bigotry—and to the needy and poor—we've lost one of our greatest supporters. And, to the hungry of the world—we've lost a trusted friend.

Mr. Speaker, I was touched by the letter from my distinguished colleague from Texas, Congressman JACK FIELDS to MICKEY's son Jarrett, and would like to submit it to be made a part of the RECORD.

[From MidWeek Roll Call Aug. 31, 1989]

"JARRETT, I LOVED YOUR DAD"

(The Northeast News, a Houston area paper, asked Rep. Jack Fields (R-Texas) to share with its readers some personal recollections of Rep. Mickey Leland (D-Texas), who died in a plane crash in Ethiopia Aug. 7. Fields, a conservative, and Leland, a liberal, represented contiguous districts and, despite their ideological differences, had become close friends.)

(Fields replied to the News's request in the form of an open letter to the late Congressman's son, Jarrett, age three. We reprint the letter below in its entirety:)

DEAR JARRETT: Over the last several days, many people have expressed sadness that your father is no longer with us. President Bush, neighbors and friends back in Houston, Members of Congress and many of those he tried to help in Africa have explained how your father's life touched their lives, and have said how much they will miss him in the future.

Jarrett, you have lost a loving father.

Your mother has lost a supportive and loving husband.

Houston, and our country, have lost an effective leader who cared deeply about issues that others chose to ignore.

I have lost a very good friend—a friend who touched my life as very few people ever have. Your dad made me think—and he made me laugh, as well. In the last week, the news that I won't be seeing your father any more has made me cry.

Jarrett, when I first entered Congress—two years after your dad came to work here—I assumed that he and I would be enemies at worst and strangers at best. Your dad and I disagreed on many things, and I expected us to be fighting all the time.

In early 1981, we appeared on the same television show to talk about the country's new president, Ronald Reagan. Your dad was pessimistic, while I was optimistic, about what he would do for our country. Your father and I argued bitterly, and during that half hour I decided that I really didn't like your father.

For a couple of years after that, we had little contact with one another—until we were forced to spend time together on the same "red-eye" flight from Houston to Washington, via Atlanta. "Oh, Lord," I remember thinking, "I hope he doesn't sit next to me." But sure enough, his seat was next to mine. And as our plane lifted off the runway of Houston Intercontinental airport at one o'clock in the morning, I settled in for what I knew was going to be the worst night of my life.

But Jarrett, somewhere between Houston and Atlanta, as your dad and I talked, we discovered that there were many interests we shared—things like athletics and action movies. Maybe for the first time, we put politics aside and talked instead about our backgrounds, our families and our dreams for the future. By the time we landed in Washington, we weren't friends—but we weren't strangers any longer. And after that flight, day by day, we got to know one another better and like one another more.

During committee hearings, your dad would often come over to me and tell me jokes, or ask about my family. From time to time, he'd walk into my office—or I'd visit his—and we'd share a diet Dr. Pepper and tell one another stories. We'd finally become friends.

We had become good enough friends that I felt comfortable calling your dad whenever the ditch in front of my grandmother's house in Denver Harbor was clogged; your dad would call his good friend, Councilman Ben Reyes, who'd take care of the problem. We'd become good enough friends that I asked your mom and dad to attend my wedding. We'd become good enough friends that your father adopted me as his basketball coach, and he used to tell people how strange it was that a "pudgy white guy" was teaching a black guy how to play basketball in the House gym.

It was after one of those basketball games that your dad and I first talked about God. Your father said that he felt God had given him a mission, and that come what may, he was going to carry out that mission as best he could. Jarrett, I hope you will align yourself with God, and ask him to guide you on your mission in life. You need only remember your father to know that with God's help, you can overcome any obstacle and achieve any dream.

Your dad and I shared many private moments. But the moment that I'll always hold most dear is the night we went to see Honey, I Shrunk the Kids. After the movie, as he hoisted you up on his broad shoulders, he told you to call me "Uncle Jack." At that moment, your dad wasn't focused on the problems of world hunger or homelessness—problems he devoted years to his life to solving. Instead, he was totally focused on you, and I could tell that he was so proud of you.

Your dad often told me that the biggest sacrifice that he made serving in Congress was being away from you and your mother so much of the time. He said that it was an even greater sacrifice when he had to travel overseas, sometimes for weeks at a time, to learn more about issues important to him. I know he meant it. Just days before I saw him for the last time, your dad shared with me the news that your mother was going to have another baby—that you were going to become a brother, I saw how excited he was by the news, and he said that it only made him more determined to do all that he could to make the world a better place for you and your brother, or sister, to grow up in.

Your father worked hard in Congress to bring about that kind of better world. Just by being the kind of man he was—by setting an example for others to follow—he inspired others to work for the same goal of a better world.

One of the few times I ever saw your dad angry was when some Hollywood executives came to Washington to testify before a committee on which he and I served. Your dad scolded them about the negative way blacks were portrayed in many movies. He was concerned that there be proper black role models in movies and in all segments of society. Your dad was the kind of role model who motivated—and will continue to motivate—young black Americans for many years to come. Working with him on the Houston Crackdown campaign inspired all of us who serve in that organization. He was determined to steer young people away from drugs to inspire them to do their best in school, to encourage them to work hard, to challenge them to overcome disadvantages and to motivate them to achieve greatness in their lives—as he himself had done.

I didn't write you this letter to tell you about Mickey Leland the political leader, I wanted to tell you something about Mickey Leland the man. While I didn't always agree with your father, I came to respect him as a forceful advocate for those ideas he believed in—and I came to truly love him as a personal friend. Maybe that says a lot about our country—that a conservative Republican and a liberal Democrat can become friends in spite of their differences.

Jarrett, I loved your dad. I wish so much that you were just a little bit older so that you could have known him better, and so that you could understand why so many of us respected and admired and loved him.

Jarrett, I promised you that I'll always be here for you to tell you of your father's greatness, his achievements, his compassion and his genuine concern for other people. Your father touched my life in a very personal way, and I'll never be quite the same again. I'll miss him very much.

Love,

JACK.

□ 1930

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GUARINI].

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, I rise with both sadness and hope in joining my colleagues in tribute to MICKEY LELAND.

Sadness—because we have lost a good friend who truly lived to make the world a better place.

Hope—because his dreams live on: in the hearts of those he touched, in the generosity of spirit that guided his life and motivated his work.

Robert Kennedy often quoted a line by George Bernard Shaw: "Some people see things as they are, and ask why. Others dream things that never were, and say: 'Why not?' "

This is the spirit of MICKEY LELAND—who saw hunger, poverty, illness, and war and said: "This is wrong. We have to do something."

When he met the hungry, he tried to feed them.

When he met the poor, he tried to lift them.

When he met the ill, he tried to heal them.

When he met those who were bloody and battered by the violence of war, he extended the hand of hope armed with the force of logic and the ancient vision of a world at peace.

His life was enriched by friendship and empowered by faith. He deeply believed in working together. He built bridges between people, between parties, between races, between religions, and between nations.

He helped the favored and fortunate learn about hunger; he helped the mighty learn that human rights should be honored everywhere; he helped blacks, whites, and Hispanics learn about each other; he helped us all learn the true meaning of public service and love for each other.

He was moved by the innocent eyes of a starving child, who reached out for kindness and love. He was moved by the tortured soul of political prisoners, who reached out for simple justice. He was moved by the idea that America stands for something special, something important, something unique. He was moved by the idea that good and decent can make a difference, and that good and decent people must try.

He was moved, and we were moved. He asked so little, and gave so much. He died as he lived: on a mission of mercy.

So we say a prayer for you, MICKEY LELAND for Alison and your family.

Your dream lives on, your light still shines, and we will not forget you. Your strength and your inspiration will be sorely missed.

Your passing is not an end, but a beginning. Our sadness is tempered by your commitment. Our sorrow is tempered by your resolve. Our pain is healed by a strengthened call to conscience. And we are reminded again—as you knew all along—that here on Earth, God's work must truly be our own. May God be always by your side. Farewell.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the absence of our friend and colleague MICKEY LELAND is felt profoundly both in the corridors of Congress and in remote villages halfway around the world.

MICKEY was that rare person who had a boundless capacity to give to all those around him. When help was needed, MICKEY was there. He was there for his family, his colleagues, his constituents, his friends, above all, he was there for the powerless and dispossessed, working tirelessly to improve their plight. In a day and age when others measure success in purely materialistic terms, MICKEY's most satisfying reward was the glimmer of hope reflected in the faces of the hungry and homeless, the poor and the sick.

Last August, when I was seeking election to the House of Representatives, my father and I happened to be in Hawaii at the same time MICKEY and his wife Alison were there. I had long respected him for his outstanding leadership and I was grateful that he took the time during our visit to offer me advice and encouragement. My dad passed away earlier this year and MICKEY wrote me a beautiful personal letter expressing his condolences and about his joy at meeting my father.

After I became a Member of Congress, I had the opportunity to have many discussions with MICKEY about issues in which we shared an interest. He wanted to know about my work with the World YMCA Refugee and Rehabilitation Committee and UNICEF and my visits to Ethiopia, particularly during the drought of 1973. We talked about efforts to address hunger in the Sudan. The last time I spoke with him before we left for the August recess, the topic of discussion was the plight of Ethiopian Jews. MICKEY expressed his determination to help them resolve their situation.

He was a great Congressman to his own constituents, but he also took a personal interest in the problems that other Members experienced in their districts. He served on the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, and when I told him about the threatened closing of a post office in my hometown of Newark which involved thousands of local jobs, he offered to help.

I traveled to Houston about a week ago with the Education and Labor Committee for a hearing on legislation to protect the handicapped, the Americans with Disabilities Act. One after one, each witness spoke with pride of the contribution that their Congressman, MICKEY LELAND, had made to their cause.

Because of the way he lived his life, MICKEY will remain in our midst for years to come. He represents the very best of humanity. I am reminded of the words of the great American author, William Faulkner, who spoke of the ultimate triumph of man:

He is immortal, not because he alone among creatures has an inexhaustible voice, but because he has a soul, a spirit capable of compassion and sacrifice and endurance.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA]

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank our colleagues from Texas for calling for these special orders.

Mr. Speaker, 3 weeks ago, many Members of this body along with many more family and friends gathered in Houston to honor the memory of our fallen colleague, MICKEY LELAND. The grief we shared with his family and friends that day was very real and genuine, for so was this man.

Today, our loss and the loss to his family, friends and neighbors demands that we speak of all the good which could not be spoken of MICKEY LELAND in the brief time we shared in Houston.

Other Members of the House who shared committee assignments with MICKEY LELAND were more fortunate than I; they were able to know and enjoy his wit, his intelligence, and his dedication daily, in each of his congressional assignments. But I, too, consider myself fortunate for having known MICKEY LELAND, my friend and colleague.

MICKEY LELAND will always be remembered for his determination to help eradicate the poverty of hunger. But were we to remember this and nothing else, we would have ill-served his true legacy as Member of this body, and as an American.

Although he was known the world over for his stewardship of our Select Committee on Hunger, MICKEY LELAND was known in Houston as someone who never forgot the needs of his neighbors.

MICKEY LELAND served all those he represented. He served them as only the finest among us will; by seeing their needs, by feeling their aspirations, and by ensuring that these were incorporated into the laws we enacted here in Washington, DC.

MICKEY LELAND fed the hungry in more than a physical sense. He helped feed hungry minds and ease hungry souls. He worked to better our schools so that no one would be denied the personal and professional fulfillment that comes with an enlightened education. He worked tirelessly to protect and enhance our civil rights so that no one could be denied their personal justice under our laws.

Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for us to know the inner joy MICKEY felt in his campaign against these forms of hunger. But we can each be assured that joy is what he felt.

In each of his pursuits, MICKEY answered to a calling higher even than that of the office he held with such distinction; he answered to his conscience, and he answered to his God. And in this we can too be assured that he died doing what he needed to do to serve his fellow citizens of Houston, of the United States, and of our very small and fragile Earth.

Mr. Speaker, 100 years ago, another Member of this Chamber stood before a group of citizens and spoke of the charge and responsibility of being an American. He said:

Let every man honor and love the land of his birth and the race from which he springs and keep their memory green.

When Henry Cabot Lodge, a Republican, spoke this thought, he could have wished for no finer representative of his ideal than MICKEY LELAND, a Democrat.

Throughout his travels, MICKEY LELAND brought honor and dignity to the United States, without qualification. MICKEY LELAND was an American in the truest and most noble sense.

And yes, MICKEY LELAND did honor and love his race, again without qualification—for his race was my race, and your race and our race. It was—and it is—the human race.

Mr. Speaker, MICKEY LELAND will be missed by all those who knew and loved him as well as those who merely knew of him. But he will be missed most of all by those who knew and loved him best.

I join my colleagues in extending our deepest condolences to MICKEY's wife Alison, to his son Jarrett, to his new unborn child, to his mother, Mrs. Alice Rains, and to his brother Gaston. We share their grief, and we wish them great comfort in the knowledge that MICKEY LELAND will live on in the work he did and in the example he set.

Mr. DELAY. Very well said.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOGLIETTA].

Mr. FOGLIETTA. I thank the gentleman for this opportunity to come before the House to talk about my friend, MICKEY LELAND.

In 1984 MICKEY walked up to me on this floor and asked me if I would like to take a trip to Ethiopia with him. This was before the newsreels were showing some of the famine in that part of the world.

I, along with other Members, took that trip. And what I saw, as I got out of Addis Ababa and into the refugee camps, what I saw there devastated me. If you could possibly imagine looking over fields as far as you can see covered with literally tens of thousands of human beings, men, women and children, starving to death. The saddest part of all was the children.

BILL EMERSON, who was there with me, can vouch for the fact that it was almost a miraculous setting to watch MICKEY LELAND walk out onto those fields of starvation among the literally tens of thousands of children—and I do not exaggerate, you could not see the ground, you could not see anything for the thousands of children who were out there—and they were hopeless before he walked out. But MICKEY walked out with that smile of his, reached out to those children and he danced with them, he sang with them, and in a few minutes he had literally thousands of young people laughing, smiling, singing along with him. He was the pied piper of hope for those people.

When we returned to the Capital he rounded up some of the colleagues, BILL EMERSON, MARGE ROUKEMA, myself, and we went over to the White House, walked over to the White House and asked to see the President.

Again, miraculously, the President saw us.

We sat around the table and each of us told about what we saw in Ethiopia. The President reached over and picked up the phone and released 350,000 metric tons of food for the poor in Ethiopia.

That probably was the greatest privilege that I have ever had in my life, to be associated with MICKEY LELAND in bringing food to the thousands of hungry people of Ethiopia.

Yes, he asked me, and I am sure he asked many of his colleagues this time to go over with him again. I was contemplating doing that on the Friday of the last week of our session, and he walked over to me right here and said, "Brother, are you coming with me?" And I said, "Mickey, I have to have some minor surgery. I do not think I am going to do it."

He said, "OK, you will make the next trip with me."

Whenever one of us, whenever any Member of this House, Republican or Democrat, does anything to help the poor find housing, to help the hungry get food, to help those who need medical care get medical care, whether it is in Ethiopia, whether it is in the Sudan or whether it is urban America, we will be taking that next trip with MICKEY LELAND.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that if there are others who have reserved special orders, who are not present and claiming them, that my special order be moved to this point in time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCDERMOTT). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

ADDITIONAL TRIBUTES TO THE LATE HONORABLE MICKEY LELAND

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. EMERSON. I thank the Speaker, and I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ESPY].

Mr. ESPY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Missouri, the ranking member of the Select Committee on Hunger, for yielding to me.

I would also like to thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS], chairman of the Texas delegation, for taking the time to give us the chance to reflect on the great contributions of our colleague and our friend and for so many of us a mentor, MICKEY LELAND.

His death and the death of the 15 others on that plane, on that Ethiopian mountainside, will mean that the world has lost some of its generosity and some of its love.

MICKEY was one trying to feed and shelter millions. He was living out his faith. Even as he died, he was reaching out to thousands and thousands. It has been said, Mr. Speaker, that service to humanity is the rent that we pay for our space here on Earth.

We certainly know that MICKEY's rent was paid in full.

Mr. Speaker, the 18th Congressional District of Texas gave us this magnificent leader and allowed us to share his generosity and his spirit. He lived out the spirit of the Bible that "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more nor be without shelter or suffer sickness." It has also been said, Mr. Speaker, that although the dream might die, the dream surely shall endure.

With his death we should make it our business that those who would have benefited will still receive help and will still benefit. In this country alone an estimated 32.5 million people live in poverty. In his memory we should make them our business.

Of all those in our country, the most susceptible to poverty are our children and in his memory we should make that and them our business.

It has been estimated that nearly 50 percent of our children born in the United States, by the year 2000 will have spent part of their life in poverty. In his memory we should make them our business.

In homes without running water, in homes without window panes, and those without homes, in his memory we should make them our business.

Worldwide the number of people starving and hungry is hard to ascertain, Mr. Speaker, but literally millions are in the Sudan and in Ethiopia and in Somalia and in Mozambique and Angola; and in his memory we should make them our business.

□ 1950

These statistics moved MICKEY LELAND to dedicate his life to helping the poor, hungry and homeless. He reached out to all nationalities and all races. His kibbutz program, which allowed young black children to go to Israel, was developed with the spirit to end the prejudice between Jews and blacks. I am aware of that program, Mr. Speaker, because under the auspices of the MICKEY LELAND Kibbutz Foundation I sent students to Israel, and I remember that day, the day of the briefing and the day of the orientation he showed up personally in Yazoo City, MS. I said, "MICKEY, you didn't have to come, you could have sent someone else. There are only 18,000 people in this town, and only 10 children going to Israel. Why did you come?" He said, "MIKE, simply because I wanted to. Simply because I had to." That was MICKEY LELAND.

His relentless service should only move Members to be as human and as caring as he. Mr. Speaker, I am going to miss him as a colleague, but mostly as a friend. I offer my prayers to Alison and to Jarrett, and to Mrs. Rains, and to his brother, Gaston. His life challenged all, and we just have to tell him because we know that he is looking down at Members today, that we are going to meet that challenge.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his beautiful statement. I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MRAZEK].

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, I remember coming home with my kids from a fishing trip in Long Island Sound when my wife told me that MICKEY was missing in Ethiopia. I immediately remembered speaking to him in the gym after we had played basketball, just a few days before he left. He was telling a couple of Members how his family was worried about him, and how he felt badly about it. Someone said to him, "Well, MICKEY, you are doing God's work." He shrugged and he said, "Well, I only know that I have got to go." Then he looked up at me with a wicked smile that he had and he said, "Do you want to go?" I immediately declined. Who would want to go? I have seen people starve to death before. Who wants to go to a place where a person smells the stench of death in those camps, where mothers come up to a person, holding babies that are ready to die, pleading for you to save their baby? The obscenity of it. Who would want to see it?

For that long, horrible week that he was missing, I thought of him somewhere in that desolate land of those God-forsaken people, and I remember spending that whole week on those long, marvelous summer afternoons on the north shore of Long Island, sailing and swimming with my kids, and then I would think of MICKEY LELAND, I would feel sort of guilty first about the fact that I was enjoying life so much this summer with my own children, and then I would say a prayer that was basically the same kind of prayer, saying, "Suck it up, MICKEY, hang in there, I know you are alive out there." He was one tough son of a gun.

However, he was not alive. When we heard that he had died, I rememberd the good times we had shared, the nights he had hosted some Members in Houston when we went to this country-and-western place and he spent a good half hour after we walked in talking to a guy who shined boots in that place, and who he had gone to school with, catching up on old times with someone he viewed just as good a friend as a lot of people he had known in his life, and I remember him trying to teach my wife the Texas two-step and failing, and I remember this remarkable force of energy about him that was a sort of a force field, and it was kind of magical, and boy, it could melt down the opposition of somebody, no matter how strongly opposed to his views they might have been. I remember his enjoyment of life. Lord, he enjoyed life. I remembered his refusal to accept the fact that the richest and most powerful Nation in the history of this world could not do more to help the millions of children who starved to death on this planet in their mothers' arms each year. Of course, we now know for tens of thousands of Sudanese and Ethiopian refugees, it was MICKEY LELAND that personified the best, that is what I think is when us as a nation, the great heart that we show when a terrible calamity can engulf other people on this planet, and Americans rise to their help, but it was MICKEY's extraordinary quality that when the headlines began to fade on the famine crisis, and a new calamity brushed Ethiopia off the headlines in the world stage, MICKEY was still there, still driven on a mission to see that the people that he had come to know and love and to ask so little from him, would know that he had not forgotten them, that he would keep coming back, until they no longer needed him.

Those Members who are still here, and to recognize what he sacrificed his life for, it is our responsibility to see that mission continues, and I know that together we shall. MICKEY will always live in the hearts of those Members who are privileged to know him.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHAYS].

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, MICKEY LELAND is so deserving of this beautiful tribute here tonight. I am grateful for this opportunity to add my voice to those who have already spoken here.

As a new Member of this Chamber, I do not pretend to have been a close personal friend of MICKEY LELAND, but I looked forward to getting to know him better. He was just someone who stood out because of his genuine goodness. His life touched so many lives around the world, and in the brief contacts we had, he left a lasting impression on me. I saw a kind, strong, motivated legislator, a wonderful citizen of America who knew he was making a difference.

On behalf of my family and my staff and the people of the Fourth Congressional District in Connecticut, and particularly on behalf of the people of the three urban areas I represent, Bridgeport, Norwalk, and Stamford, I want you to know, MICKEY LELAND, that you are so loved and you are so missed.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his remarks. At this time I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WHEAT].

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my friend and colleague from Missouri for yielding to me.

I especially appreciate the opportunity to talk about my friend and his, MICKEY LELAND, and I know this is a difficult moment for him as much as he accompanied MICKEY LELAND on so many of his trips to faraway Ethiopia, and that he worked hand in hand with MICKEY on the problem of hunger and starvation.

It is true that MICKEY was a great man who worked for monumental changes, but it is the real acts of friendship that will make me smile when I remember MICKEY.

I knew MICKEY LELAND before I came to Congress. In fact, he was one of the people who helped me get here. His willingness to be a friend and adviser at a time when I did not really know what running for Congress was all about was all important to me. In fact, MICKEY helped teach me how to campaign.

□ 2000

Mr. Speaker, when I first explained to MICKEY that I was having difficulty getting people to stop and listen to me, he devised my most successful campaign technique, an old MICKEY LELAND special. It involved getting on a crowded bus, and making speeches and shaking hands with people who were literally trapped and had no escape.

From the day I showed up in Washington when MICKEY let me sleep on his sofa he was always there for me. Whether he was successful or not, he tried to guide me through the perils and pitfalls that await every new Member of Congress.

However, more than helping me with the mundane details of everyday life in Congress, MICKEY was there to supply a broader vision when mine was too narrow.

When I admired the cultural exchange program that MICKEY had established to send Houston's inner-city youth to Israel, he insisted, he did not ask, he insisted, that I create a similar program for children in Kansas City, though I doubted my own ability to do so. And I did encounter difficulty, especially in coming up with the financing for the trip for Kansas City children. When I encountered that difficulty, I went back to MICKEY, and MICKEY raised the money. It was a year before I discovered that the funds that had been used were MICKEY's own.

His great compassion for others was matched only by his unbounded capacity for joy, and we all often saw MICKEY joyous. I do not think I ever saw any greater joy on any man than the day MICKEY first brought his son, Jarrett, to the floor of the House of Representatives. Of course we all recognized Jarrett because for several weeks before his appearance we had been shown photographs of his brand-new son. Here in Washington, DC I had the opportunity to see the love and the commitment that MICKEY had for his constituents, his friends, and his family.

However, Mr. Speaker, I saw the depth of his commitment and love for all mankind in faraway Ethiopia, and MICKEY's love for Ethiopia was not an unrequited love, for the people of Ethiopia loved him and needed him just as dearly as he cared for them. I was struck that everywhere I went in Ethiopia that I would be stopped by Ethiopian citizens who would ask me, "Are you here for MICKEY?" Each one would recount a tale of when they first met MICKEY or when they first heard of MICKEY's work in Ethiopia to help save their starving nation, and they all prayed that MICKEY and his crew would be found alive.

Mr. Speaker, it was not just the people of Ethiopia or of Africa that MICKEY loved. He loved people everywhere, and that is why he described himself as a citizen of the world, and the people that he loved best were the children, children all over the world.

Mr. Speaker, it was his dream that no child anywhere would starve ever again, and MICKEY, who so loved children, had the heart of a child. This does not mean that MICKEY could not see that the world's problems were complex problems and that they took complex solutions; he helped to devise those complex solutions, but it did mean that he never lost sight of simple truths such as if children are hungry, then they need to be fed. He understood this truth.

However, Mr. Speaker, he was frustrated by the fact that he could not get enough people to pay attention to the fact that children in the world were starving. I believe that he cared so much that, if he had been told that he could make the world stop and take notice of hungry children, but that in order to do so he would have to get on a plane destined for tragedy, that MICKEY would have smiled and gotten on that plane anyway.

It is our habit in Congress to honor fallen Members with a memorial of some kind. Sometimes it takes the form of a physical monument. Sometimes it is in the form of a policy or program. But no memorial to MICKEY LELAND will be sufficient except that we work to fulfill his dream, and when we do and whenever a child is saved anywhere, MICKEY LELAND will smile at us again.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON] for yielding and for helping to organize this very important and appropriate tribute to the late MICKEY LELAND, our friend and our colleague.

Mr. Speaker, MICKEY LELAND was a very special person, and I think that comes through in all of the comments that people have made about him. All of us who got to know MICKEY felt that way and felt that way immediately about him, and that feeling only grew over a period of time.

Mr. Speaker, MICKEY was generous, he was friendly, he was open hearted. He loved people of all races, black and white. He loved people of all faiths, Jewish and gentile. MICKEY was a fighter for those who were less fortunate than himself or than us, not only in our country, but everywhere.

Mr. Speaker, MICKEY knew poverty, MICKEY knew deprivation, MICKEY knew suffering, for he had lived in poor neighborhoods. He lived among poor people, and his commitment to help people who had less than he was truly awesome.

I traveled across Africa with MICKEY LELAND earlier in my career in Congress to a number of countries. We flew across the plains and mountains of Ethiopia, and those images of that incredibly rugged terrain came back to me forcefully when I heard MICKEY's plane was missing. All of us hoped that MICKEY and his crew and companions would survive. Knowing of his resourcefulness we felt optimistic. We felt optimistic, too, as we waited for the news.

Mr. Speaker, that was dangerous terrain, and I was well aware of the dangers and the risks that MICKEY LELAND assumed as he brought help and hope to those who were hungry and were suffering in that unfortunate wartorn, ravaged land. Those of us who traveled and worked with MICKEY on those trips saw firsthand his commitment to that cause.

Mr. Speaker, it was a privilege to know MICKEY LELAND, and it was a privilege to work with MICKEY LELAND. All of us must continue his work to help alleviate hunger, not only in America, but in Africa and other countries where people suffer.

To mourn MICKEY LELAND's death and to celebrate his life we are holding a special event in Milwaukee, WI, on September 24 at 2 p.m. in the afternoon at city hall. Congressman ALAN WHEAT, who we heard from a minute ago and who helped find MICKEY's plane, will be there, the mayor of Milwaukee will be there, and other leaders in our community will be paying tribute to MICKEY LELAND. We are asking people who come to that event to bring food or other forms of help to in fact alleviate hunger in our own community where there is hunger still. I can think of nothing more important and by way of tribute to MICKEY LELAND than to continue his work to help the hungry in our own community and beyond our own community, and that is what we will be doing on September 24 in Milwaukee.

Mr. Speaker, all of us in Congress who loved MICKEY LELAND join in expressing our sad condolences to his wife, Alison, to his mother, Mrs. Rains, and to other members of the family. I can think of no Member of this House that has left us who leaves a stronger legacy of commitment to helping others and who will be more missed than MICKEY LELAND, and I think that, no matter how long we serve in this body, we always will have before us the memory and the example of MICKEY LELAND as a proud, and brave, courageous, committed, friendly and warm-hearted generous person.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY], and I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER].

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON], and let me say that, at least when I came to this body, I came from a little corner in the world, Brooklyn, NY. I had not done much traveling around the country, and serving in Congress is an amazing experience for someone such as myself. It really makes you into a patriot because you see people from all different parts of the country, from all different walks of life, and you say to yourself, "What good people these are," and the second thing that becomes apparent is that the Founding Fathers set it up so that this body mirrors the American people.

□ 2010

That, too, makes you a patriot, because you say that if the people in this body are so good and they represent the American people, what a great people we really have.

Sometimes when I am back home and resting, relaxing, away from here, particularly on breaks, I think of some of the people I really admire in this body, people who come from one corner of America or another and are just outstanding individuals. One of the people I always thought of, and still think of, is MICKEY LELAND. MICKEY was a friend. He was part of our inner group. I still picture him at the table, laughing, joking, being insouciant, no holds barred. MICKEY had no holds barred. He said what he thought and his thoughts were so sincere and decent and honest, and yet tough and incisive, that he did not have to fear always saying what he thought.

I think of MICKEY sitting at that table and I say to myself, what a loss. It is a personal loss for me. It is a loss for this body. It is a loss for America, but the thought of MICKEY, as is apparent tonight, will stay with us.

You come across many, many people in politics and you make their friendship and acquaintanceship. Unfortunately, one of the bad parts of this business is that you meet people who pass on, and because you meet so many people, sometimes you do not think of them very often. It is already clear to me, at least to this Member and I am sure it is true of just about every Member, every one of us is going to turn our thoughts to MICKEY over and over and over again, not only a week after he died, not only a month after he died, not only even a year after he died, but decades after he died. If every time we turn our thoughts to him and we picture that smiling, joking, challenging face and it gives us a little more strength to do our jobs, then MICKEY will not have died in vain.

To the Leland family, our condolences and wishes of strength and a good life, as best a life as can be had ahead.

To MICKEY, I will miss you. I do already.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY].

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Missouri for yielding to me and for conducting this special order.

We could do this special order in installments every night for the next week or month, put aside another hour or 2 hours and Members would keep coming down here to the floor to talk about MICKEY LELAND.

Now, the greatness of MICKEY, I think, is that almost all of us remember him in one way. Even as we were there standing in the church, looking at the crowd gathered for the funeral or thinking about the tragedy that befell him, there is one thing that always keeps coming back to us, and that is we can see MICKEY LELAND smiling at us and it continues to bring a smile to my face, because that in the end is my memory of MICKEY, a smile, a guy that in the middle of no matter how bitter or how absolutely confrontational the battle that we might have been in, whether in the Energy and Commerce Committee or some bill out here on the floor or someplace we were at the height of the battle, I would look over at MICKEY and MICKEY would wink at me and give me his little smile and then he would go back into battle again.

The beauty of MICKEY was that he had the same spirit, the same thing that lit up the fire in his heart, lit up the twinkle in his eye, and he had both burning full time all the time.

Why I love MICKEY so much is that it did not make any difference whether you were in battle or trying to have a good time, MICKEY was living life to its fullest.

For 11 years, I had the honor of sitting next to MICKEY LELAND in the Energy and Commerce Committee, on the Telecommunications Subcommittee, and we worked on so many issues over so many years that I cannot even begin to count them. If I had to stand hear and recite a litany of all the issues that were changed, all the affirmative action gains that were made, all of the public policy modifications that he affected during all those years that I sat next to him, we would be here for 2 days, because that is how good he was, and he did it almost effortlessly.

When MICKEY came over to visit you and to ask you for something, there was only one answer you gave, and it was, "Yes, I will do that for you, MICKEY."

He had a personal magnetism that transcended whatever significant legislative skill he had in understanding and explaining legislation. It was this gift of people. Everyone who knew him, everyone who met him, came to love him, even those who disagreed with him on the issues, because they knew that this was a special person.

Out on the floor of the Congress, all of us look up at the board to see how people are voting. We try to look around and check with different people who come from our home States or ideologically might agree with us or disagree with us to kind of get our bearing on how it is we ought to be voting on a particular vote. I used to look up at MICKEY's vote to see how he voted, for one very good reason. I always wanted to know what the right vote was. I always wanted to know what I would do if I was going to do the absolutely right thing, because that is what MICKEY did on every single vote. He tried to do the right thing, not the political thing, not the compromise thing. He tried to do the right thing, and everybody in this body knew it and they respected him for it.

Although we will all miss him and although we all loved him very much, I think that his memory lives on in all of us, because he served as a shining example of what a Congressman should be; but more than that, what a human being should be, because every day he gave us an example of how someone can help other people.

He never accepted the notion that there were things that people had to resort to if they were going to be successful and therefore compromise what it was that they stood for initially. He held to his principles and he brought others over. He convinced people there was a right way of doing it. It was not in a way that said you had to do it today or you had to do it tomorrow. It was that, "I'm going to keep working on you and move you to a point where you are going to start working in a way that I think makes sense for this planet and this country."

So I was thinking tonight that I would stand here and just tell my five funniest MICKEY LELAND stories, which would be pretty interesting stories, going from the time that we went to the America's Cup together, to the time that MICKEY and I began learning skiing, which was an interesting experience. It always kind of bothered me that the black guy from the fifth ward of Houston learned it much more quickly than I did, because we were taking on these constantly quintessential white sports, yachting and skiing, but that was MICKEY. No matter where he went, no matter what he did, he always did it better than anybody else, and everyone knew it immediately, and he always did it with a smile on his face.

So I thank you, MICKEY for that smile and I thank you for all of the times for as long as I long as I live that I will smile when I think of you, because in the end that is my memory of you. It is the smile. It is the happiness that you brought to me and to my life and to Alison and to Jarrett and to the rest of your family.

I know that MICKEY will burn brightly in your memories, and I have a sense that, like me, it will be his smile and his inimitable way of bringing a good time to anything that he touched that ultimately will be the lasting memory.

I hope that as MICKEY's children grow up that they can all come to know all of us and that we can tell them the little stories about MICKEY that make us smile, because in that way I think that we will be able to help them understand why it is that we all lost a great friend, and we all know that one of the great human beings that God ever created has passed from us, but that in many ways he will live forever in all of our hearts.

I miss him. He was one of my best friends.

To Alison and to his family, we love you all very dearly.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for his very articulate and moving tribute to our dear friend and colleague, MICKEY LELAND.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

LOOKING FOR LEADERS IN ALL THE RIGHT PLACES

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to include the following remarks by Mr. Steven L. Zelinger in the RECORD. Mr. Zelinger, a 1979 Truman Scholar, was the keynote speaker at the 1989 Harry S. Truman Scholarship Award Ceremony. Since 1987, he has served as a trial attorney with the U.S. Department of Justice in Washington, DC. The award ceremony was held at the Truman Library in Independence, MO.

LOOKING FOR LEADERS IN ALL THE RIGHT PLACES

INTRODUCTION

Chairman Staats, Vice Chair Miller, honored guests, Truman Scholar honorees and your guests, ladies and gentlemen:

I am honored to address you today, following in the footsteps of such esteemed speakers as Congressmen Bolling and Skelton and Wheat, Mayor Cisneros of San Antonio, Senator Danforth, Governor John Carlin, and Truman Foundation Vice Chairperson Anita Miller. Undoubtedly, you are wondering why you have the—uh—"good fortune" of hearing from Steve Zelinger. However, the board of the Harry S. Truman Scholarship Foundation has seen fit that you should be the captive audience of one of your own, and, indeed, I am the first Truman Scholar to address this convocation. I couldn't be more pleased.

Let me take a moment to tell you about myself. I am a trial attorney in the Civil Division of the U.S. Department of Justice in a branch that defends the President, his cabinet members, members of Congress, and federal agencies. We also prosecute those who insist on violating ethics and election laws. There is no time better than the present, then, to note that my comments here should in no way be attributed to my employer or be deemed to represent the views of the Attorney General or the Department of Justice. The views I state here are mine and no one else's.

I came to the federal government after approximately two years in private legal practice in Washington, DC, with the aim of making a public service contribution and getting some marvelous hands-on experience. I believe I have satisfied and am continuing to satisfy both those aims. Although we often spell the word "government" with a capital "G", it is an institution that is spread quite thin, with immense responsibilities and insufficient money, bodies and talent to meet them. This is not a new problem and will not likely go away, nor is it one that is limited to the federal government. It is a problem, however, that provides a window of opportunity for bright, ambitious, dedicated people such as you to make a valuable contribution and garner superb experience that may not be available in the private sector to those so early in their careers.

By way of example, allow me to share with you just a few of my experiences during two years of federal service. I have represented the President in a suit brought by a hundred Congressmen challenging his actions in the Persian Gulf as a violation of The War Powers Resolution. The suit raised crucial and still unresolved questions of the limits of executive power and the extent of Congressional authority in the area of foreign affairs. I have prosecuted labor unions that did not ensure that their constituent members' votes were given the proper respect to which they were entitled. I have been involved in the litigation aspects of international debt restructuring and ensuring that the United States courts remain a viable legal forum for the enforcement of international debt. I have acted as lead counsel representing federal agencies in cases raising questions of national concern. I recount these experiences not for purposes of self-aggrandizement—because, frankly, any one of my colleagues in the Federal Programs Branch at Justice could reel off similar experiences for you—but rather, to give you an idea of what kinds of opportunity and responsibility await you in your chosen field of endeavor. This brings me to the purpose for which we are assembled.

We are here to congratulate you and applaud your accomplishments, and to inspire and encourage the full development of your untold potential, not only for your own sake, but for the public good. This is a time to recognize yourselves and those who have supported and assisted you, and to enjoy for a brief moment the benefits of hard work and dedication that have allowed you to accomplish so much. Okay, that's long enough! Because the Harry S. Truman Scholarship is as much a challenge to action as it is a reward for accomplishment and recognition of untapped potential, there could be no more fitting a memorial for the man who, as described by the great photographer, Yousuf Karsh, "made one of the most momentous decisions in the history of man—to drop the atomic bomb. He recalled MacArthur, the implacable general, hitherto seemingly unvulnerable to authority. He was short of temper, long on common sense, and his outward image of the haberdasher from Independence, Missouri, was belied by his political sophistication and acute human judgments." Harry Truman was, by any measure, a leader, who met the challenges that Providence placed before him—and who had the foresight to prepare for those that were foreseeable.

DISCUSSION

In the remarks that follow, I will discuss the kind of leadership that, I believe, our nation needs to face the challenges that confront us. That leadership, of course, is what we all hope you will provide. And, given the grave problems that lie at the heart of the challenge, leadership becomes essential. This discussion will, of course, require a description of problems with which you are all too familiar. I am aware that this is an uncomfortable subject to discuss on such a festive occasion. It is not meant to be an exercise in depression, however. Rather, it is meant to inspire; for without problems to solve, you and I would clearly be out of a job—underpaid as it may be—in the public sector. Besides, as Alice in Wonderland reminds us, before we decide where we are going, we first have to decide where we are right now.

As fellow American lip-readers, you too recognize—I am certain—that government—at least at the national level—seems to be run by sloganeering. There is a story that, I understand, is making the rounds in Moscow these days. A certain comrade made an appointment with the famous Dr. Orlov of the Moscow Eye Institute, only to insist when the moment of his appointment finally arrived that he could not describe his ailment without Dr. Sverdlovska, the eminent ear specialist, also being present. Dr. Orlov was perplexed, but nonplussed, and upon the arrival of Dr. Sverdlovska, the Russian patient stated: "Comrades, my problem is that I am not seeing what I am hearing."

This story—while it loses something in the translation, perhaps—could as easily be making the rounds in Washington. And, it highlights a problem that, unfortunately, transcends party affiliation. This is exemplified by the behavior of the national leadership of both major parties, who are skirting our fiscal obligations by cooking the nation's books in such a way that private corporations doing so would be indicted for fraud. Harry Truman, among others, would have been appalled. In a letter from his retirement [that never was sent] to the Treasurer of the United States written in 1961—when, economic history tells us, most of the nation's expenses were still written on-budget—the former chief executive complained:

"I have been reading the statement of December 13, 1961, . . . [and]

"I'd appreciate it if you could find a way to place debits and credits so an ordinary citizen like myself could understand what you are trying to show . . . .

"Why don't you set up yours so any citizen who understands debit from credit can know what you are doing. I don't think that the financial advisor of God himself would be able to understand what the financial position of the government of the United States is, by reading your statement."

If President Truman thought it was tough in 1961, today's financial statement would be enough to make him roll in his grave.

Our so-called national leaders seem unwilling to make the hard choices that need to be made, or even to address them directly in the forum of public opinion. I do not mean to be partisan in this assessment. This paucity of political courage—a willingness to put your money where your mouth is or, at least, encourage the public to do so in a responsible way—is rampant on both sides of the political aisle. Prima facie evidence of this lack of political courage—as we lawyers like to say—is the approximately 98 percent reelection rate in the House of Representatives. Frankly, the Politburo has seen more turnover in recent days.

We Americans have become too comfortable with dinner-tab economics, which is like taking your meals with a fellow who never pays his fair share—someone else has to pick up the economic externalities. In our case, however, no one is picking up the slack, which means that you and I and, perhaps, our grandchildren will be paying the high price of dinners taken in a dining room replete with blue smoke and mirrors.

At the same time, a host of national problems calls out for solutions and redress. We could fill this afternoon with a full-blown discussion of the problems in infrastructure, where, for example, some 577,000 of the nation's bridges—one in four—have been determined to be dangerous. Or health care, where community health serves only 5 million of the 25 million poor who are eligible and where approximately 37 million Americans do not have health insurance. Or, we would focus on the bleak status of housing and homelessness. Depending on whose statistics you accept, there are upwards of 3 million homeless Americans, approximately 34 percent of whom are entire families. Characterizing public housing, particularly in high-rise configurations, as a concentration of pathologies, a return of the worst of the American frontier—Dodge City without a marshal, so thoughtful a conservative as George Will has exhorted:

"So, you modern-day Jeffersonians, you who think that government is best that governs least; welcome to your world. It is Hobbes' world, where life is always poor, nasty and brutish and often is short."

There are the continuing challenges of preserving, enhancing, and rehabilitating the environment and our natural resources, of ensuring the safety of our air transport, of closing insolvent savings and loans, repairing unsafe nuclear power plants, and providing the defense of the nation and upholding our global security commitments, to name a few.

I don't mean to harp on the problems we face in the United States. America is a great nation—and, one of the things that has made us great and will keep us great, is our dissatisfaction with imperfection. When we stop the continual process of self-criticism and self-examination—that is when our greatness comes to an end.

Much criticism has been directed lately at the nation's education system, and, that is where I would like to focus for a moment, for reasons that will soon become clear. There, the major federal program to help disadvantaged primary and secondary school children today reaches only 54 of 100 eligible poor children. Head Start, the successful program for disadvantaged preschoolers, now serves only one in five eligible children. Cuts in the federal School Lunch Program have kicked 3 million needy kids off the program's rolls. You are all intimately familiar with cuts in aid for college tuition, and I could bore you silly with a staggering array of statistics that show a decline in the national commitment to education.

The Chicago Tribune has documented its characterization of that city's school system as "institutionalized child neglect." This characterization is not unique to Chicago. The Tribune rightly stressed that much of the problem rests with fundamental social ills, viz., that two-thirds of Chicago's public school students live in poverty and come to school from environments of deprivation that would defeat the best intentions of even the best school system. And, indeed, in constant dollars, AFDC (Aid to Families with Dependent Children) benefits have been cut by 26 percent since 1977. In 1987, AFDC covered only 60 of every 100 children living in poverty.

The other evening, while reading the just-released quarterly government report on productivity—not something I do regularly, but in preparation for this speech—I was struck by the figure that, based on performance in the first quarter, we as a nation will produce $5 trillion in goods and services—more than any other nation. It was then that I recalled that the President in his Inaugural Address only four months ago said: "We have more will than wallet." And I asked myself: what country are we talking about, and what does it mean to say we cannot "afford" something?

The answer is, of course, that we prefer to do other things.

As Herbert Stein, Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers during the Nixon Administration has written, we cannot do more for defense, or education, or assistance to the poor or fighting drugs and crime because we prefer to use the national income for other things—essentially, for private consumption.

In the United States about $3,500 billion (or $3.5 trillion) a year is spent for private consumption—that's an economic term of art for "personal spending." Mr. Stein estimates that $35 billion a year would amply pay for all the things that the President has said he wants to do, for defense, education and so on, but feels we "cannot afford." We cannot do these things because we prefer to spend the $35 billion on private consumption. Giving up $35 billion of private consumption would not require reducing real consumption per capita from its present level. It would mean giving up about one year's growth in real per capita consumption, which is already 20 percent higher than it was 10 years ago.

But the President and the Congress cannot give up the $35 billion of private consumption and transfer it to the purposes I have described. They are only here to do what the people want them to do, and the public appears not to want an increase of taxes or a cut of Social Security expenditures, the only quantitatively significant ways of restraining consumption and making resources available for the purposes that the President says he wants to promote but cannot afford.

Here, of course, is where the concept of leadership enters into the picture. Why are national politicians so convinced that they will be punished by short-sighted American voters for supporting higher taxes? To answer the question, we must turn our attention away from Washington and toward the statehouse, where state politicians raise taxes all the time—and many of them win elections on it. It is in the statehouses that we will find the leadership and innovation so obviously wanting at the national level today.

Mississippi Governor William Winter initiated a tax increase in 1982. He earmarked it for education, called a special legislative session to consider it and launched a statewide campaign for its passage. This campaign—which featured 80 speeches by the Governor, 532 by this staff and the development of an active citizens' lobby involving 30,000 people—melted legislative opposition and left Winter one of Mississippi's most popular politicians. His successful effort has since been repeated by Democrat and Republican Governors around the country!

What's going on here? How could the same voters who opposed higher national taxes have supported state tax hikes? Why were Governors rewarded for endorsing tax increases when national leaders feared doing so? What lessons do these experiences have for the present administration and the 101st Congress struggling to reduce the deficit, fulfill campaign spending promises and resolve the panoply of financial, social and environmental crises?

The answer to such questions is found in a survey of state tax initiatives in the 1980s by policy analysts Fred Branfman and Nancy Stefanik: While voters continue to oppose untargeted taxes for general goals, they support targeted tax increases—so long as political leaders are candid about why they need the money, sensible and fair in how they plan to spend it, and courageous enough to lead the fight themselves. Americans are neither selfish nor short-sighted on taxes—they just want assurance that their money will be spent wisely.

Consider the experience of South Carolina Governor Richard Riley, who launched one of the most extensive political campaigns for a substantive issue in recent American history. In June 1983, following legislative defeat of an education bill he supported, Riley established two blue-ribbon committees to develop a comprehensive education-reform bill. He then barnstormed the state and built a bipartisan, business-supported coalition and grass-roots lobbying apparatus to push for the bill's passage.

This campaign featured seven highly publicized forums attended by 13,000 people from around the state; a statewide TV address by the Governor proposing to pay for the education initiative with a 1-cent sales-tax increase totalling $217 million or 8 percent of the state budget; nearly 1,000 speeches arranged by a speakers' bureau organized out of the Governor's Office; a toll-free hotline to answer questions; and, a privately-funded radio and TV advertising campaign on behalf of the initiative.

When the dust cleared, the state had passed not only a large tax increase but an education initiative considered the finest in the nation. Since 1983, South Carolina's SAT scores have risen 40 points, 6.2 percent more students continue on to college and 120,000 more students met the state's basic skills standards. Far from being penalized for supporting the huge tax hike, Riley "retired with great popularity," according to the 1988 Edition of the Almanac of American Politics.

Since then, Republican and Democratic Governors alike have demonstrated that the Mississippi and South Carolina experiences were not flukes.

Robert Orr in Indiana passed a $750 million increase in corporate and personal income taxes in 1987 on behalf of his "A+ Program for Education Excellence." Governor Orr's approval rating stood at 69 percent in the spring of 1988.

In 1984, Lamar Alexander in Tennessee passed a 1-cent sales tax totaling more than $1 billion over three years for his better schools program.

Arkansas' Bill Clinton waged a 1983 campaign for education reform financed by a $155 million sales tax increase. His effort featured a $500,000 media and direct-mail campaign funded by private sources, a 38-day special legislative session, a nasty fight over teacher-accountability provisions and final passage of a comprehensive education package comprising over 100 separate bills in November 1983. Clinton was reelected in 1984 and 1986 by 2-to-1 margins.

Nor is this trend limited to the field of education. For example, Gerald Baliles of Virginia passed a 12-year, $11.8 billion transportation initiative, funded by a combination of sales and fuel taxes and license-tag fees. Governor Baliles enjoyed a 70 percent approval rating following passage of the initiative.

CONCLUSION

The facts I have recounted for you are evidence, I believe, that what is required at the national level—at all levels—of government is effective leadership, which, in the words of Walter Lippman, often consists of giving the people not what they want but what they will learn to want.

We should be willing to experiment and explore possible strategies even in the face of uncertainty; undoubtedly, such willingness will become a more pronounced characteristic of a creative leader. It is not surprising that the lack of national leadership so evident today may be counterbalanced by the creative leadership effervescing in many of the nation's statehouses, its cities, and among local community and neighborhood organizations, where there is a not-so-quiet revolution going on. This state of affairs reflects what the framers—certainly, leaders who were not afraid to take chances—had in mind when they spoke of the states as the province for experiment, which, if proved successful, might serve as a model for the nation. It is also, I believe, the most enduring result of the "Reagan Revolution."

Of course, like much else in life, creative leadership is much more easily identified than defined. In the memorable words of Justice Potter Stewart, "I know it when I see it" It is even more difficult to prepare for. There are certain prerequisites—historical truisms, really—that we know, however.

It almost goes without saying that we must prepare ourselves through education and experience and, at that, each of you already has proved yourself. You represent a vast array of academic disciplines. From business administration to chemistry, from nursing and engineering to history, from political science to urban affairs and cartography, and uniformly represent excellence and a high level of achievement. You have indicated that your wish—at least at this juncture—is to pursue the public good through careers of federal, state and local legislators, attorneys and judges, members of the foreign service, environmental and public health specialists, and juvenile corrections officers. In those careers or with that training, some of you undoubtedly will become leaders, others, managers and implementors, and some of you, both of these. We need all the talented managers we can get, and it should be remembered that effective leaders are not very effective for long unless they can recruit managers to help them make things work over the long run. Nevertheless, as you progress and evolve, I commend to you this admonition from John W. Gardner, a prolific witer on the subject of leadership:

"All too often on the long road up, young leaders become 'servants of what is, rather than shapers of what might be.' In the long process of learning how the system works, they are rewarded for playing within the intricate structure of existing rules. By the time they reach the top, they are very likely to be trained prisoners of the structure. This is not all bad; every vital system reaffirms itself. But no system can stay vital for long unless some of its leaders remain sufficiently independent to help it to change and grow."

Thus, creativity is essential. Foster your creativity and, more importantly, that of others. Mark Twain said, "A man is viewed as a crackpot until his idea succeeds." We need to avoid killing the spark of individuality that allows creativity and dissent to flourish. We kill it with rules, red tape, procedures, standard operating restrictions and countless admonitions 'not to rock the boat.' Many of the great breakthroughs occur because of people well in advance of their time who are willing to agitate for change and suggest fresh new approaches that are, as yet, unacceptable to majority opinion.

Be courageous and persistent. Those of us who expect to reap the blessings of freedom and liberty—and justice—must undergo the fatigues of supporting it and provide the leadership to sustain it. Orestes Brownson, one of the more farsighted and overlooked of 19th Century social critics, said:

"Peace is a good thing, but justice is better. . . . Give us the noise and contention of life, rather than the peace and silence of the charnel-house [morgue]."

His words, too, recall the need not to recoil from conflict. Division and conflict are realities that true leaders must learn to accept; they produce opportunities for change and revitalization. I know of no one who said it better and pithier than, of course, President Truman, who remarked:

"A President who's any damn good at all makes enemies, makes a lot of enemies. I even made a few myself when I was in the White House, and I wouldn't be without them."

An effective leader must have integrity and principle. It is well to remember the old aphorism: 'Character and integrity are much easier kept than recovered.' It is also well to remember Dante's caution: "The hottest places in hell are reserved for those who, in a time of great moral crisis, maintain their neutrality."

In closing, I have no momentous quotation to recite that will stay with you the rest of your life or serve as a guiding beacon. Rather, I merely recount the poignant words of Merle Miller, the author of Plain Speaking and one of Harry Truman's biographers, which inspire as they relate the simplicity, dedication, and fortitude of the man from Independence whose public spirit will live through your deeds and acts. Mr. Miller wrote:

"On the way back to Kansas City [after meeting with Mr. Truman] that afternoon my associates were making fun of Mr. Truman's architectural taste—[Truman could not countenance what he called the "chicken-coop and hen-house architecture" of Frank Lloyd Wright]—and I went along with the crowd. But that night I walked over to the courthouse and stood there for quite a long while, looking at it and at the statue of Andrew Jackson. And I thought of [this] man [Truman] pushing 50 with no money except a salary of $6,000 a year getting into his car and at his own expense driving 25,000 to 30,000 miles so that he could build a courthouse and have a statue that were the best that in his mind they possible could be. And paying not a cent more than they were worth because he had some old-fashioned idea about his duty as a public servant. Duty. Obligations. And what was it Dean Acheson had said of him, that he was a man of rectitude?"

"And I thought, those things are more important than his opinions of Frank Lloyd Wright. I haven't changed my mind either."

Truman Scholars of 1989, congratulations! Give 'em hell.

KALAMAZOO'S GERMAN AMERICAN CLUB

HON. HOWARD WOLPE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to the German American Club of Kalamazoo on the occasion of the club's 35th anniversary.

The German American Club of Kalamazoo was founded in 1954 by Erich and Kaethe Doerfer, John and Wanda Mai, and Mr. and Mrs. John Gunther as the German Friendship Group. Beginning in 1963, immigrants from other countries, particularly from Holland, began joining the club. In 1974, the club sponsored its first Oktoberfest. The German American Club—recognized by the city of Kalamazoo as a public service organization—is now incorporated and enjoys a permanent home at Hackett High School.

The purpose of the German American Club of Kalamazoo, as spelled out in its constitution, is to "promote understanding between citizens of the United States and immigrants from other countries." In addition to the Oktoberfest festival, the club sponsors dances and in many other ways shares with the greater Kalamazoo area the celebration of historical dates and valued traditions important to a number of Kalamazoo's ethnic communities. Recently, the German American Club established a scholarship for Western Michigan University's German Language Department to be awarded annually to the best student of the German language.

Mr. Speaker, I am certain my colleagues will want to join me in recognizing the 390 current members of the German American Club of Kalamazoo for their dedication to fostering their cultural heritage and assisting European immigrants in their assimilation into American life. I am privileged to represent the members of the club and to work with constituents who use the celebration of their history as a means of committing themselves to the future not only of their own cultural communities, but to that of the broader American society.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE KENNETH MILLER WELLS

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I rise today to advise you that an outstanding citizen of Sacramento, Kenneth Miller Wells recently passed away. He has made numerous contributions to my community and we will all miss his presence.

Ken's career of public service began early when he joined the Army Air Corps in 1943. He served in World War II as a navigator and a bombardier. Kenneth attended Sacramento Junior College, the University of California at Berkeley, and he received his law degree from Hastings Law School in San Francisco.

Ken was a man who gave of himself in many ways. He entered into county service in 1954 when he became a deputy district attorney. Kenneth was named acting chief public defender in 1963, and the following year became the permanent public defender. As well as being a practicing attorney, Ken was also an adjunct law professor at McGeorge School of Law for 10 years.

Being an active member of the Sacramento community was a very important priority to Ken. He dedicated his time and experience to the Union Lodge No. 58, and to the Sacramento Scottish Rite and Benali Temples. Ken also served as chairman of the State bar's standing committee on criminal law and procedure.

Ken is survived by his wife, Shirley Wells; his son, Robert Wells; his daughters Miriam Wells and Reeta Ball; and seven grandchildren. I feel very honored that Mr. Wells has had such a positive impact on my community. We will all mourn the loss of a man of such high caliber.

PROTECTING THE AMERICAN FLAG

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of a constitutional amendment protecting the American flag from desecration.

I was shocked and outraged at the Supreme Court's decision in the Texas versus Johnson case, in which it ruled that desecration of the U.S. flag is protected under the first amendment to the Constitution. The American flag has long carried the message of freedom wherever she has been flown, and she has served as an inspiration to the millions of American men and women who have sacrificed their lives in defending the noble ideals upon which America stands.

I completely disagree with the Court that the States have no interest in protecting this important national symbol from desecration. I believe that Chief Justice Rehnquist was correct when he wrote in his dissenting opinion that "for more than 200 years, the American flag has occupied a unique position as the symbol of our Nation, a uniqueness that justifies a governmental prohibition against flag burning * * *."

Today the House is considering legislation, H.R. 2978, which attempts to protect the flag by amending Federal statutes. I do not believe that this bill goes far enough, and it will likely be struck down by the courts as unconstitutional. The only way to provide true protection to the American flag is through a constitutional amendment. Nevertheless, because the House does not have the opportunity to vote for a constitutional amendment at this time, and since I believe that no opportunity should be missed to offer protection to the American flag, I am reluctantly lending my support to H.R. 2978. I consider this legislation to be only a stopgap measure, however, until Congress has an opportunity to pass and the States have an opportunity to ratify a constitutional amendment.

I will continue to urge passage of legislation I have cosponsored to amend the Constitution to permit Congress and the States to prohibit the act of desecration of the U.S. flag and to set criminal penalties for that act. That is the only way that we will be able to ensure the American flag—which embodies the Nation's values and ideals—is truly protected from desecration.

IDAHO'S SAWTOOTHS

HON. RICHARD H. STALLINGS

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. STALLINGS. Mr. Speaker, during the August recess, I had the opportunity to spend some time in one of America's most spectacularly scenic areas, Idaho's Sawtooth Mountains, which happen to be located in my district. The wonder and grandeur of the Sawtooth region was confimed in a recent article published in the Washington Post, entitled "In the Heart of Idaho, the Sawtooths Soar—and Beckon." I commend it to my colleagues:

IN THE HEART OF IDAHO, THE SAWTOOTHS SOAR—AND BECKON

(By James T. Yenckel)

I don't know the exact moment when I came to realize that Idaho's remote Sawtooth Mountain country is one of America's most spectacular wilderness playgrounds. Maybe it was that chilly morning when I floated alone in the 102-degree water of a natural hot spring alongside the Salmon River and watched the rising sun cast the ragged Sawtooths in a brilliant spotlight. Or perhaps it was the hot afternoon at the end of a dusty hike when I stripped off my shorts and plunged into the refreshing coolness of a clear mountain lake, seemingly the only human for miles around.

Over the years, I had heard glowing reports about the Sawtooth region, mostly from friends who had gone skiing at Idaho's famous Sun Valley Resort just to the south. So given the chance last month, I headed out for a short sightseeing tour. The trip turned out to be something of an object lesson: No matter how well you think you know this country, there are still a lot of wonderful surprises waiting.

Only lightly visited, the Sawtooth region is an untamed land of snow-dappled peaks, sparkling lakes, sun-drenched meadows, burbling streams, vast expanses of pine forests and perhaps the purest air—by official test—in the continental United States. Here's where the Salmon—the legendary "River of No Return"—begins its wild-water rush to the sea; where cowboys still herd cattle on horseback and the wide-open spaces seem limitless. No matter where you pause and in what direction you are going, the views are gorgeous.

As early as 1911, the distinctive Sawtooth Mountains—they look like the long, sharp cutting blade of a heavy saw—were considered worthy of recognition and preservation as a national park. That estimable idea never triumphed over local opposition, but perhaps the next best alternative was achieved. In 1972, a 754,000-acre hunk of territory about the size of Rhode Island was officially designated the Sawtooth National Recreation Area, which is administered by the U.S. Forest Service.

Within its boundaries, dead center in the heart of Idaho, are: three mountain ranges—the Sawtooth, White Cloud and Boulder—with 40 peaks rising 10,000 feet or higher; the rolling grasslands of the Sawtooth Valley, surrounded by these ranges; more than 300 glacially carved lakes, some so clear you can see to astonishing depths; countless trout streams fed by summer snow-melt; and a half dozen or so crumbling ghost towns such as Custer and Bonanza that still hint of their days of former glory.

The eastern two-thirds of the recreation area is laced with miles of sightseeing roads, paved and unpaved, which makes the region an inviting destination for travelers who like to take in the scenery from the comfort of an auto. Good roads climb to four of the largest lakes—Stanley, Redfish, Pettit and Alturas—so you don't have to hike more than 50 feet from a parking lot to a sandy beach. Roadside campgrounds are so plentiful that finding a site by a lake or stream is rarely a problem.

The western third—encompassing the 216,000 acres of the Sawtooth Mountains—has been set aside as the Sawtooth Wilderness, which means it is open only to hikers, backpackers and riders on horseback. For them, there are more thn 750 miles of trails. Daytrippers can take scenic loop trails to isolated lakes; backpackers can trek into the higher mountain valleys over routes that may require several days to cover.

The word "recreation" in the name should be read literally. The Salmon, which flows in a looping course for 420 miles through Idaho, is one of the country's premier white-water rafting rivers. The area's many outfitters operate relatively gentle half-day and day-long float trips down the upper Salmon, or lead multi-night trips of the hold-on-for-all-you're-worth category down the river's rushing lower reaches or on the Middle Fork of the Salmon.

Almost any outdoor activity you can name is readily available, and mostly without the summer throngs that flock to America's most-popular national parks. Take your pick: mountain climbing, bicycling, mountain biking, kayaking, fishing, sailing, trail riding (guided day and overnight rides), hiking, swimming and waterskiing (Redfish Lake is five miles long, three miles wide and has a marina). I thought the lakes might be as cold as ice, since nights in the Sawtooth are chilly. But the hot sun of long summer days warms the water, at least around the lakes' shallower edges, so that a swim is surprisingly comfortable.

Hunting—for elk and deer—is also permitted seasonally in the Sawtooth, an activity that distinguishes it from national parks, where hunting generally is prohibited. Another difference is that limited cattle grazing, lumbering and mining are allowed. I saw evidence only of the cattle—hundreds of them—and their presence didn't bother me at all. In fact, the herds added to the Old West flavor. A few of the ranches, such as the delightful Idaho Rocky Mountain Ranch where I stayed, take in paying guests.

The biggest community in the Sawtooth—just inside its northern boundary—is Stanley, which according to its highway name sign has a population of 140. A onetime rowdy supply center for the nearby gold- and silver-mining communities, Stanley can still show a lot of life on weekends when the locals gather to do the "Stanley Stomp." It's dance hall dancing to a western band in any step that fits your fancy.

Though now a tourist center, Stanley has managed to keep its turn-of-the-century pioneering look. The basic architectural design is log cabin, a style that is carried out in the several motels and lodges that—along with rafting outfitters—are its principal commercial establishments. Adding appropriate character to the town are a couple of saloons opening on to the main street, which is wide, unpaved and dusty. Fully in character, also, it is named Ace of Diamonds Street.

Just outside Sawtooth's southern boundary is Ketchum, another former mining community that really struck it rich when the Sun Valley Resort opened in the 1930s on its doorstep. If any place in central Idaho can be said to bustle, it is this sophisticated town of luxury inns and gourmet restaurants. Ketchum's most famous resident was Ernest Hemingway, who is buried in the local cemetery.

Like many of us who grew up in the 1940s, my chief acquaintance with Sun Valley had come directly from the old 1941 movie "Sun Valley Serenade," which starred ice skating champion Sonja Heine and John Payne. On screen, the resort seemed glamorous, and in fact it is still a pretty ritzy place. For some reason that movie had stirred in me a desire to ice skate on the Sun Valley Resort's outdoor rink, an odd dream that has persisted for four decades. So I went in search of the rink, and I wasn't disappointed. Partially shaded from the sun, it is able to remain open during the summer months. Indeed, on weekends the resort puts on a big ice skating show—just like in the movie.

Even getting to the Sawtooth Mountains is a pleasure. The three-hour drive east from Boise, Idaho's capital, to Stanley takes you along the Ponderosa Pine Scenic Route (Route 21), a state scenic highway that snakes its way into the mountains just beyond the outskirts of the city. At the outset, you twist through arid hills blanketed with sagebrush. But very quickly the road gets serious about climbing, and soon you are among sweet-smelling pine forests. Along the way, the road tops a couple of 7,000-foot passes and goes into so many corkscrew spins you think you're already doing the Stanley Stomp on wheels.

As a newcomer to the Sawtooth National Recreation Area, I stopped first at the visitor center to pick up some hiking maps and find out a little about the place. There is a visitor center at Redfish Lake just south of Stanley and another one just north of Ketchum on Route 75. The highway, dubbed the Sawtooth Scenic Route, wiggles through the center of the recreation area linking Stanley and Ketchum.

Northern Shoshoni Indians roamed the Sawtooth Valley hunting mountain sheep when trapper Alexander Ross of the British-owned Hudson Bay Co. crossed over the mountains in 1824, presumably the first white man to see it. But because of its remoteness, few followed him until 1864, when prospector John Stanley—lured by gold finds elsewhere in Idaho—discovered placer near the town that bears his name. The next decades were years of boom and bust in the valley as more gold and silver deposits were found and then mined out. Those Shoshoni who had survived the inevitable conflicts were forced onto a reservation.

In the 1890s, the Sawtooth Valley became one of the major sheep-grazing regions of the West, but overgrazing rapidly became a big problem, as did overcutting of timber. Herders failed to realize the grass in the dry West did not replenish itself as quickly as it did in the East where rainfall is plentiful. The landscape was rescued in 1905 when President Theodore Roosevelt proclaimed the Sawtooth country the Sawtooth Forest Reserve. In 1972, it became a national recreation area. Grazing now is controlled to preserve the grasslands, and lumbering mostly is for dead or fallen trees to be used for posts, poles or firewood. The area's primary use is recreation.

Certainly the Sawtooth Mountains are the most dominant feature of Sawtooth country. They thrust skyward in a long north-to-south ridge line presenting fully as spectacular a view as the more famous Grand Tetons to the east in Wyoming. Even in mid-summer, the gray-pink granite peaks shade deep pockets of snow. A thick blanket of pines drapes across the lower slopes, hiding hundreds of snow-fed lakes.

Down in the valley, however, it's the Salmon River that predominates. It rises as a small stream in the south, grows into a fast-flowing river as it makes its way north and exits Sawtooth country to the east in a white-water roar through a narrow canyon. This stretch of Route 73, which parallels the river northeast from Stanley to the town of Salmon, is appropriately called the Salmon River Scenic Route. Almost on Idaho's eastern border, the river has a change of mind and makes a wide loop, reversing itself and heading west through the Frank Church/River of No Return Wilderness to the Snake River on Idaho's western border. The Snake empties into the Columbia River, which flows to the Pacific Ocean.

I mention the Salmon's geographical wanderings because a major exhibit at the visitor center describes the plucky salmon that each year make their way 800 miles up river from the Pacific to the Sawtooth Valley. Just east of Stanley on Route 75 is a stretch of the Salmon called Indian Riffles. In August, according to the Forest Service, you can watch female salmon clean the rocks by swishing the tails. This apparently is the way they prepare a nest for their eggs.

Light-colored areas on the river bottom are evidence of nest building in previous years. The eggs are hatched in mid-winter, and the youngsters remain in their home waters for a year before heading for the ocean. A year to three years later, the survivors return to spawn and the cycle is complete. Rafters follow the same course down river, but the are shuttled back in buses or vans.

At the Redfish Lake Visitor Center, a ranger recommended the half-day, five-mile hike along the western shore of the lake. It is a well-marked trail through the woods that climbs and dips only slightly. And best of all, you don't have to retrace your steps if you have tarried too long on the way. A ferry picks up hikers at the southern tip of the lake at several scheduled times daily.

Redfish is the most congested of the lakes, though the word is perhaps overstating the modest traffic that it gets. Still easily accessible by dirt road, but much more lightly visited is little Pettit Lake, which is scenically situated at the base of a steep granite cliff. I found my own trail there, wandering away from the campgrounds and around the lake. After I'd hiked for a while and seen no one else, I went for a cooling skinny-dip. Who wouldn't? It's more fun swimming without a bathing suit, even when you are alone.

One afternoon I took the bumpy 12-mile drive north from Indian Riffles along the Yankee Fork, a tributary of the Salmon, to the ghost town of Custer. Unpaved but fairly well maintained, the road initially is lined with heaps of rocks, the residue from a gold-dredging operation that dug up the river bed from 1940 to 1952. The dredge, a sort of huge scoop on a barge, is open for tours.

Custer, a bit farther up river, dates back to the earlier mining boom of the late 1870s. From 1881 to 1904, more than $12 million in gold and silver from the region were processed in the Custer mill. In 1886, the community's population peaked at 700, making it the largest town in the area. By 1911, it was deserted. Today, perhaps a half-dozen log buildings, maintained by the folksy Custer Museum, are still standing on what was once Custer's main street.

You can sit on the porch of the Empire Saloon, as I did, and contemplate the rowdy life that was so typical of Western boom towns. Nowadays, the only activity is the rustling of sagebrush or the swirl of a dust devil as a breeze sweeps up the Yankee Fork canyon. But Custer may have a modest resurgence yet. Idaho is celebrating its centennial as a state next year, and the ghost town of Custer is expected to receive restoration funds as an important centennial project.

On another day, I took a wonderfully scenic circle drive to explore the countryside outside the recreation area. My 250-mile route took me south on Route 75 over 8,701-foot-high Galena Summit to Ketchum and Sun Valley and then east on U.S. 20 to Craters of the Moon National Monument. South of Ketchum, the landscape flattens out, and there is not much to attract the eye. And yet the open emptiness has its own appeal. I drove for miles without passing another car in either direction. Apparently, I startled two pronghorn deer, who made a leaping dash across the road in front of me.

Craters of the Moon, a huge volcanic parkland, is one of the bleakest spots in America, but that is what makes it so fascinating. And there is much beauty in the incredible reddish-black rock formations formed by the lava flow that came from not just one volcano but numerous fissures. The name, of course, is descriptive; the huge, 75-square-mile area looks much as we once imagined the moon to be. A seven-mile loop road travels past cinder cones, lava tube caves and other volcanic features. Short interpretive trails lead up to volcano vents or down into the lava caves.

My route took me east again to Arco, which has the distinction of being, so it proclaims, "the first city in the world lighted by atomic power." North of Arco, U.S. Route 93 heads through the Lost River Valley, where hay growing is a major enterprise. The fields here are kept a lush green, watered by giant irrigation machines. In their profusion, they look like alien monsters on the march—presumably with a mind of their own since I never once saw a human master at the controls. Borah Peak, Idaho's highest mountain at 12,662 feet, rises in splendid view on the eastern side of the valley.

At Challis, I turned west again on Route 75 toward Stanley as it follows the Salmon up river through its canyon. For 55 miles, the river is seldom out of view, and I thought almost anywhere along the way might be a nice place to stop for a picnic and dabble your feet in the water. Once I watched an outdoorsman in an inflated kayak navigate his way through the rock-filled rapids.

Campers, I suspect, get to know the Sawtooth country best. But I was on a short break from the office, and I stuck to more civilized lodgings, which are concentrated in the Sun Valley-Ketchum area to the south and Stanley to the north.

In Ketchum, I stayed at the River Street Inn, a very attractive and hospitable bed-and-breakfast inn a couple of blocks from the heart of town and within view of the Sun Valley ski slopes on Bald Mountain. The inn's distinctive feature is a Japanese-style soaking tub in each of its eight rooms—a wonderful treat at the end of a long drive. Across the street, I dined outdoors at the Evergreen Restaurant, which served what I thought was the best fresh trout I have ever eaten. It was grilled, stuffed with scallions and Parmesan cheese and served on a plate decorated with edible flowers.

But these were mostly urban pleasures, and I wanted a bit of the rustic ranch life. There may be other ranches as beautifully situated as the Idaho Rocky Mountain Ranch, a working cattle ranch, but I doubt it. It sits on the eastern slope of the valley looking over the distant Salmon River to the Sawtooth Mountains beyond. Guests stay in several modest but comfortable log cabins adjacent to the main lodge building.

In the evening, you can pull up a rocking chair on the lodge's front porch, sip a Sun Valley Lager—a local beer—and watch the sun settle behind the Sawtooth Mountains. It is an enchanting time in the valley. The heat of the day has passed, and a coolness in the air hints that you will need a jacket soon. The only sound is the breeze stirring the tops of the pine trees.

"The perfect way to end my stay in Sawtooth country," I thought, but my visit was not quite over. The next morning I awoke about 6:30, peered out of my cabin and took in an even more glorious view of the mountains. They were bathed in the light of the rising sun and gleamed almost white. Quickly I slipped on a pair of shorts and jogged down the ranch's dusty entrance road, the mountains directly in front of me.

About a mile down the road, along the edge of the Salmon River, the ranch has diverted the water from a natural hot springs into a concrete pool. Steam rose in spirals in the chilly air. I jumped in, and for the next half hour or so soaked contentedly while drinking in the views that surrounded me. The Sawtooth Mountain country had been working its spell on me for several days, and this was the clincher. I say it now, without reservation, it is one magnificent place.

THE CAPITOL HILL GROUP MINISTRY

HON. WALTER E. FAUNTROY

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of Members and staff the following example of leadership by the ministries of the city of Washington, DC, joining together with the members and organizations of our communities, to address the tragedies of violence and drug trafficking in our neighborhoods.

Joining the Reverend Dr. Seon were ministers from other Capitol Hill churches. Some of the most moving remarks were provided by young people who spoke to the issue of saving our youth from the temptations of drug use and drug trafficking.

WHY WE ARE HERE

(Remarks of the Reverend Dr. Yvonne K. Seon, Minister of the Sojourner Truth Congregation of Unitarian Universalists in Washington, D.C., and President of the Capitol Hill Group Ministry at the "Candlelight Vigil for the Victims of Violence in Our Neighborhood," Lincoln Park, Wednesday, August 9, 1989.)

I am the Reverend Yvonne Seon, President of the Capitol Hill Group Ministries. I am here because the religious leaders of this community committed to come together with our neighbors tonight to take a stand with you for peace and for justice. We grieve with you for those in our neighborhood who have been or may be among the one or two who are killed each day in our city. We grieve with you for those who have been victimized in other ways by the violence and chaos of our daily experience.

We are here to stand with you to say that the death and the destruction and demoralization and the self-destruction and the terror brought to our neighborhoods through the sale and use of drugs in our community must end.

We have witnessed to our victimization as women and men who have been robbed of family members and of friends; robbed of our freedom to be at peace as we come from and go to our homes; robbed of our peace of mind for our children when they are not at home; robbed of our hope for a future of promise, dignity, and worth for ourselves, our neighbors, our city, and even our world.

We have witnessed to our victimization, and we have said, "ENOUGH." Enough of victimization. Enough of tears. Enough of fear and enough of rage festering inside us.

Tonight, we are here to offer our prayers and to speak our commitment to a new vision of our community and for our world. Tonight, on behalf of all those who are victims of the violence of our neighborhood, we commit to create a new harmony, a new courage, a new joy, a new beauty, and a new possibility for Being, here, where we are, now and henceforward. AMEN.

A TRIBUTE TO MALCOLM C. McCORMACK

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to pay tribute to Malcolm C. McCormack, who is retiring as executive secretary and chief executive officer of the Harry S. Truman Scholarship Foundation. As a board member of the Foundation, which is the official Federal memorial to the 33d President of the United States, I have witnessed Malcolm's dedication and contributions to the field of education.

Before Malcolm's appointment to the Truman Scholarship Foundation on September 1, 1978, he served for 11 years as Georgetown University's vice president for university relations. Born in Memphis, TN, Malcolm was educated in Washington public schools and is a graduate of Georgetown's School of Foreign Service. He did graduate work at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy at Tufts University.

During the Korean war Malcolm served as an intelligence officer for the Central Intelligence Agency [CIA]. He left the CIA after the Korean war and served as retail advertising manager and general advertising manager of the Washington Star. He was awarded Georgetown University's John Carroll Medal in 1966 and an honorary doctor of humane letters in 1978.

During his tenure with the Truman Scholarship Foundation, Malcolm expended the outreach for applicants to include community and junior college students and more minorities. The Foundation, established by Congress, awards scholarships to outstanding students who intend to pursue careers in public service.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that you and my fellow colleagues will join me in saluting this fine American citizen. His contributions have been great and I wish him all the best in his retirement.

TRIBUTE TO SACRAMENTO'S SESQUICENTENNIAL

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, 150 years ago on August 12, 1839, John Sutter first landed on the shores of the American River and established what is now my home, the great city of Sacramento. I rise today to pay tribute to Sacramento's Sesquicentennial, and to share with my colleagues the proud heritage of my community

Sacramento has long served as the gateway to opportunity and an enriched quality of life. In 1849, goldminers and prospectors from all over the country flooded to Sacramento in the hope of striking it rich. Poor immigrants were drawn here by claims of exaggerated wealth. What they found was even more precious: a community whose real wealth was reflected in its spirit, energy, and diversity. Sacramento became a real home to the adventurous newcomers, not merely a stopover for the mines. Now, 150 years later, Sacramento is a real home to nearly 1 million citizens and, is named 1 of the top 10 places in the Nation to live, is still recognized as the land of opportunity.

Established as California's capital city in 1854, Sacramento has been influenced through the years by mighty institutions; political, military, and financial. From the Gold Rush and Pony Express to the Central Pacific Railroad; from the big four of Crocker, Hopkins, Huntington and, Stanford, to the big four of agriculture, water, religion, and politics; from the early merchants of Weinstocks and Brueners to the McClatchy dynasty; from the agricultural strength of the fertile Sacramento Valley to the military might of our three installations; each segment has played an important role in developing our city in its infancy and guiding it to its fledging prosperity today.

Notwithstanding its rich political and economic history, Sacramento would not be Sacramento without the American and Sacramento Rivers. Bordered by these mighty waterways, Sacramento's history has been shaped by the prosperity of trade and the devastation of floods. Sacramentans have experienced the riches of panning its gold and the exhilaration of rafting its rapids. Our rivers remain constant and an ever present reminder of the birth of our great city.

Mr. Speaker, Sacramento is poised to move into the 21st century with a determination typical of its adventurous forefathers. Fraught with adversity through its formative years, Sacramento's residents resolve to make Sacramento a grand city has cemented the deep roots of civic commitment evident in our community today. A cosmopolitan city complete with a burgeoning downtown skyline, a professional basketball team, and the prospect 50 new jobs a day, Sacramento's future looks bright for the next 150 years and for generations to come.

THE NEW JERSEY FIREMAN'S MUTUAL BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize before the House of Representatives the New Jersey State Fireman's Mutual Benevolent Association, which is meeting this week in Atlantic City, NJ.

The New Jersey FMBA is the single largest organization of firefighters in New Jersey, with over 6,000 members and 87 locals from throughout the State.

The members of the FMBA risk their lives every day serving and protecting the people of the great State of New Jersey. Their service to the State of New Jersey is indispensable. The men and women of the FMBA represent the values which Americans revere most: courage, service, sacrifice, duty, and honor. They are our modern heroes.

It is with great pleasure that I salute the New Jersey Fireman's Mutual Benevolent Association, and it is with great pride that I ask that this statement honoring the FMBA be entered into the official CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for September 12, 1989.

HISPANICS IN THE AMERICAN LABOR MOVEMENT

HON. ALBERT G. BUSTAMANTE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Speaker, this month America observes Hispanic Heritage Month, and it is a time for us to reflect on the contributions of Hispanics to our Nation and community. Throughout the country a schedule of events has been designed to educate the American people of the important influence of the Hispanic culture on our American society.

I wish to call my colleagues' attention to the September edition of Hispanic magazine, which features an article on Hispanic-Americans in the American labor movement entitled, "Entering the House of Labor". Highlighted in the article are the contributions of our very own colleague Esteban Torres. Esteban is a member of the United Auto Workers Union and the founder of The East Los Angeles Community Union [TELACU]. TELACU is more than a valuable community service organization within the East Los Angeles area; it plays an important part in representing the interests and aspirations of all Hispanic-Americans.

But the article devotes most of its attention to Hispanic union leaders associated with the Labor Council on Latin American Advancement [LCLAA]. LCLAA is a support group of the AFL–CIO, and it goals are to make the American labor movement more responsive to the concerns of Hispanic union members, to organize Hispanic-Americans into collective bargaining units, and to recognize the growing political influence Hispanics have on the American electoral system.

My dear friend Jack Otero serves as LCLAA's president. Jack is international vice president of Transportation/Communications Union. Along with Steelworkers Al Montoya, Paul Montemayor and Maclovio Barraza, he helped to found LCLAA. The union movement in general and LCLAA in particular have been vital forces in bringing Hispanics into mainstream America. Hispanic-Americans are gaining a foothold on the American economy, and we have organizations like LCLAA and dedicated individuals like Esteban Torres, Jack Otero, Al Montoya, Henry Santiesteban, and many others to thank. I commend my colleagues to read the article, which follows, so they may become familiar with the examples these individuals have set for other Hispanics to follow.

[From Hispanic magazine, September 1989]

ENTERING THE HOUSE OF LABOR

(By Thomas H. Sharpe)

Alfredo C. "Al" Montoya doesn't seem the type who spends a lot of time in fancy restaurants. He says he rarely goes out to lunch, so I figure that lunch is the best time to catch him. Sure enough, when I arrived at the AFL–CIO building, just across from the White House, he was alone, wearing a knit shirt and no tie, reading The Washington Post. The office was filled with boxes.

Montoya, 68, is part of American labor history. He first joined the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers in Grant County, New Mexico, in 1950 as a business manager. It was also after the union was expelled from the old Congress of Industrial Organizations (CIO) for left-wing sympathies. He was with the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers when they merged with the United Steel Workers, one of many unions that eventually formed the CIO. The CIO then merged with its more conservative rival, the American Federation of Labor, to become the AFL–CIO, the nation's largest labor federation. In 1973 he helped to found the Labor Council on Latin American Advancement (LCLAA), an organization of Hispanic unionists, working closely with such Hispanic labor leaders as César Chávez, the late Maclovio Barraza, and Paul Montemayor. He became LCLAA's executive director in 1977.

I wanted to know if Montoya thought a Hispanic would finally be named to the AFL–CIO's 33-member Executive Board during its semi-annual convention November 13–16 in Washington, D.C. "Don't hold your breath," he joked, then reeled off a list of possibles, a dozen up-and-coming Hispanic labor leaders, including LCLAA's president since 1986, Joaquín F. "Jack" Otero. A week later, I met with Otero and asked him the same question.

Otero, in his fifth-floor AFL–CIO office, looks out his window and ponders the question. A seat on the Executive Council? "Well, that's one of the things we're agitating for," he says. "It's going to happen sooner or later." As Otero points out, the numbers can't be ignored: 1.3 million Hispanic union members. At least 75 Hispanic officers, vice presidents, directors, and plenty of high-caliber men and women in the rank and file.

Leading Council contenders? César Chávez, president of the United Farm Workers and the only Hispanic president in the AFL–CIO's 88-union federation, is the obvious choice. But if Chávez is running, he isn't saying.

Neither is Otero. With unionism declining in the United States, and Hispanic unionism declining even faster, becoming the first Hispanic on the AFL–CIO's Executive Council is a dubious honor.

Opening and closing his broad hands, Otero talks about the decline. As vice president of the Transportation Communications International Union and president of the Labor Council on Latin American Council (LCLAA), he tracks such matters. In 1988, for the first time since the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics has followed it, the Hispanic union participation rate dropped below that of the general population.

Otero explains, the reasons are much the same for all Americans: automation, overseas production, sophisticated management tactics, right-to-work laws, and greater worker mobility. "Employers know the psychology of human beings," says Otero. "They'll tell them, 'If you work for us, you could someday be president of the company.' It's the entrepreneurial system."

It is not because unions are not trying. Otero's union was called the Brotherhood of Railway and Airline Clerks until new members objected to the term brotherhood, linking it to the Mafia and sexism. The National Education Association woos young Hispanics to the teaching profession through sophisticated publicity campaigns, in English and Spanish, and has taken the lead in opposing English-only laws. Service industry unions that once fought Spanish translations of meetings are finding bilingualism an essential organizing tool. The AFL–CIO has hired actor Edward James Olmos for its "Union, Sí" campaign this fall. But it will take more than publicity to organize Hispanics without union representation.

When Otero first came to the United States, he was already a second-year medical student from Cuba and hoped to enter a U.S. medical school. During the summer, while taking courses in English, an uncle arranged a summer job for him at the railroad office as a billing clerk, he remembers getting paid $3.40 a day.

When summer came to an end and he was about to pursue his original plans, he was offered a full-time position with the railroad and within 60 days was a dues-paying member of their union.

"As was required, I attended the regular union meetings, but quickly found them very interesting. I became very interested in the process and the issues of workers' rights. These were new concepts for me since I had not worked in Cuba and this was my first real job," but his talents did not go unnoticed and by the time Otero was 23 he was elected general chairman, a business manager position which was also a salaried post. "I was the youngest man ever elected to a position of that importance in the history of the union," he says. In that post, he handled grievances, arbitrations, negotiating cases, etc.

Then once his bilingual skills were discovered, he was sent to Europe to the International Transportation Workers Federation in London.

What followed for Otero was a career traveling and working in Europe and South America. "One of my key responsibilities as I traveled from country to country was to let emerging transportation unions know how things were done in Europe and the United States, with regards to technology, collective bargaining trends, and human rights.

Otero, the father of three children and grandfather of four, is most proud of the fact that he was the first Hispanic elected at the local, regional and then international level of his union. "And that I have been able to help many workers get what was rightfully due them," he says.

Henry Santiesteban, 74, is a living repository of union lore. Looking back to the '50s when he was elected president of the Newspaper Guild's Los Angeles chapter, the first Hispanic so honored, he reflects on how communists dominated several American unions, including some in the entertainment industry. Their methods quickly alienated Santiesteban. "The most immediate thing, in my opinion, was their lack of democracy," he recalls. "They used political character assassination tactics. They would harangue speakers and try to physically take the microphone away and keep meetings going with all sorts of parliamentary devices until the other people got tired and left."

Santiesteban, a self-described liberal Democrat, credits former Screen Actors Guild President Ronald Reagan, among others, for purging the unions of Communists, but he thinks that as governor of California and president of the United States, Reagan went too far to the right. He compares the tactics of the '50s Communists to those of GOP Chairman Lee Atwater. "What the Republicans are using today, the Communists have used in the past," he says, referring to the character assassination and racism that underlined the Willie Horton television ads used in the last election.

Not ready to retire, Santiesteban and his wife Stina, run a public relations firm that works primarily with Hispanic and labor union clients.

"In El Salvador, we would just go in and take over the office," says Ramiro Salinas, looking over the giant papiermâché broom, colorful posters, and other media props in the Justice for Janitors office, a project of the Service Employees International Union (SEIU). "Here you have to do all these silly things."

Earlier this year, Salinas and 70 other janitors at Washington, D.C.'s newly remodeled Union Station joined SEIU to seek a raise from $5 to $6.50 an hour, medical benefits, and a guarantee of fulltime employment. Before negotiations began, their employer lost his contract, and the janitors, mostly Salvadoran, Mexican, and African Americans, found themselves without work. They passed out leaflets for weeks, urging train communters to write Union Station's authorities, the Secretary of Labor, and others to protest what they felt was anti-union corporate maneuvering. SEIU took their charges of unfair labor practices to the National Labor Relations Board, which rejected them. The janitors soon found new jobs and the effort was abandoned.

Salinas, now an SEIU organizer, says the Union Station story is typical, but not final. More liberal immigration laws, including amnesty, have made immigrants less fearful of deportation for union activity. Unions have helped them understand their new rights. Additionally, Salinas emphasizes, Hispanics in the service industry are tired of being denied promotions and benefits because of their national origins.

And the future? Most of the janitors involved with the Union Station action are now union activists. And Salinas, only 25, is organizing janitors at the World Bank.

Labor's support for civil rights has been one of its most valuable organizing tools, especially among blacks, the most unionized of any ethnic group. Labor unions paid for much of the March on Washington where Martin Luther King Jr. delivered his "I Have A Dream" speech. King was assassinated in Memphis during an American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees' strike.

Jesse Rios, 44, President of the National Council of Field Labor Locals (AFGE), says there will be more civil rights battles as Hispanics swell unions' ranks and clamor for equal representation in top offices.

Government unions are a breed apart, hindered from striking or active political participation. "We bargain from a posture that has our feet anchored in cement," says Rios, who thinks his AFGE has improved working conditions, especially in the assignment of duties. His council represents Department of Labor employees who oversee safety conditions of other workers, "a grave responsibility," he says.

European labor traditions, where unions form political parties and run candidates for office, rarely work in America. Only one president, Reagan, has had a labor union background, and no unionists serve in the Senate and only four in the House of Representatives; three of them are Black, and one, Congressman Esteban Torres (D-California), is Hispanic.

Torres is the son of an Arizona copper miner. He began his own career with the United Auto Workers (UAW) in Los Angeles during the early 1960s where his bilingual abilities and international perspective caught the attention of UAW President Walter Reuther. Torres became Reuther's Director of the International American Bureau for Caribbean and Latin American Affairs in Washington, D.C. Torres was then handed an assignment that would take him outside the traditional union arena.

"Reuther thought there was a role for the UAW in urban areas, forming what we called 'community unions.' He thought these community groups could acquire political power by bringing together people from the shops to commingle with housewives, teachers, bankers, and other members of the community," says Torres, who began organizing in East Los Angeles.

In 1971, the UAW wrote its first check to The East Los Angeles Community Union (TELACU), today a multi-million-dollar enterprise, with shopping centers, an industrial park, financial institutions, retail and wholesale businesses.

Torres, who served as TELACU's first executive director before joining the Carter administration as a White House aide and then ambassador to UNESCO in Paris, thinks the community union concept might reverse trade unionism's decline.

"There's been a failure on the part of the labor movement to educate and form effective union organizing programs," he says. "Labor unions could be stronger in their public affairs and public relations aimed at young people and new immigrants."

Torres, 59, first elected to Congress in 1982, blames the Reagan administration for packing the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) with "reactionaries"—although the Reagan era saw the first Hispanic NLRB commissioner, Patricia Díaz Dennis, now a Commissioner with the Federal Communications Commission. Torres predicts no pro-union legislation will emerge during the Bush administration. But he finds hope in recent developments: Hispanics and labor no longer oppose each other on issues like immigration, affirmative action, and language, he observes.

Whatever happens November 13-16 at the AFL-CIO convention in Washington, D.C., LCLAA will remain neutral. Black unionists successfully lobbied for another Executive Board member in 1981, but the member subsequently lost her national union position.

Greater long-term Hispanic participation in organized labor outweighs any one election, says LCLAA's Al Montoya, winding up for the afternoon, "We have given Hispanics a foothold in the house of labor," he says. "Now we want to extend the benefits of collective bargaining to the millions of Hispanic workers who do not currently enjoy them."

OUR FLAG, OUR FREEDOM, OUR RIGHT

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, for over 200 years the American flag has occupied a precious spot in the hearts of our Nation's citizens. It is a unique symbol of the principles and values which make this country great and which are generally shared by American citizens. Many have sacrificed, fought, and died under the flag for freedoms forged by the principles and values embodied in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution.

This Member would call an essay by the editors of Reader's Digest to the attention of his colleagues. Appearing in the September 11, 1989 edition of the Washington Post under the title "The Banner Yet Waves," this essay presents an insightful and warm-hearted analysis of what the American flag means to the people of these United States. It is an essay that merits close examination.

Children have crayoned it on paper with too few stars and too many stripes as their first notion of nationhood.

Prisoners of war have secretly fashioned it from scraps and rags as the center of their hope and defiance.

Mothers and widows have kept it carefully folded as a reminder of honor and sacrifice.

With pomp of arms, Marines raise it over embassies and consulates from Argentina to Zimbabwe.

With no ceremony at all, janitors raise it over elementary schools and town halls from Maine to Oregon.

Blurred like a hummingbird wing, it flies from the aerial of a speeding pickup truck in western Texas.

Still as a painting, it hangs in the humid night air as the national anthem echoes over 40,000 fans at Baltimore's Memorial Stadium.

It is sewn on the uniform of the policeman in an Ohio town. It is printed on the T-shirt of a young woman roller-skating by a California beach.

It flutters beside a tombstone in a rural Pennsylvania graveyard because someone remembered. It hangs soaked in the rain on a Wisconsin porch because someone forgot.

Tacked to a broken two-by-four in a tornado-devastated Iowa trailer park, it says with feisty hope, "We're still here."

It flies over battleships . . . and over car dealerships.

It stands by pulpits . . . and hangs over bars.

It has been used, and abused, to tout waterbeds and soft ice cream, drugstores and amusement parks.

It has been worn threadbare by the rhetoric of politicians, but somehow the American flag, "Old Glory," has never become a cliché.

Ask the man on the street what's in the Constitution and you'll probably get embarrassing brevity, or silence. But Americans have an intuition about that document, and the focus of that intuition is the flag.

It triggers within them the deepest feelings about a place where breadlines, prison camps and tanks in the square are not the general order of things. The flag signals to them a phenomenon of history that protects them from indignities, permits them peace, draws refugees with priceless hope, offers help with boundless heart, and earnestly seeks to correct its own problems.

Americans are often nonchalant about their freedom. But yes, the postmistress in the little village may offer up a prayer about her country as she hauls down the flag in the evening. And yes, aging veterans do shed a tear when the flag goes by on Memorial Day. And yes, the baseball fan anxious for the game to start gets a lump in his throat when he turns toward the star-spangled banner to sing, "Oh, say, can you see. . . ." Cynics will never understand why their charges of "flag-waving" only bewilder, amuse or insult the average citizen.

While Americans know that behind this rectangle of cloth there is blood and great sacrifice, there is also behind it an idea that redefined once and forever the meaning of hope and freedom. Lawyers and justices may debate the act of flag-burning as freedom of expression. But a larger point is inarguable: when someone dishonors or desecrates the banner, it deeply offends, because the flag says all that needs to be said about things worth preserving, loving, defending, dying for.

ERNIE SAMUELS: SIMPLY THE BEST

HON. WILLIAM LEHMAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, other Members of the House of Representatives have outstanding constituents, strong community leaders and great achievers but, here in Florida's 17th Congressional District, we are the most fortunate of all because we have the one and only Ernie Samuels.

Ernie does the most good in his own quiet way—he is a dear and special friend—he enriches our community—the following story captures some of the Ernie Samuels magic.

[From the Miami Herald, Aug. 31, 1989]

AT POINT EAST CONDOS, HE REIGNS SUPREME

(By Gina Shaffer)

If condos were kingdoms, Ernest Samuels probably would be the longest reigning monarch in South Florida—and maybe the United States.

For 22 years, Samuels, 83, has ruled over Point East, a sprawling 64-acre empire nestled between Biscayne Boulevard and the Intracoastal Waterway.

"He's a man for all seasons," said Eli A. Howard, a member of the board of directors at Point East.

No organization keeps track of the longevity of condo board presidents, but most observers agree 22 years is a long time to run the show.

"I don't think I've ever heard of anybody being board president that long because it's such a tough job," said Judy Foster, of the Community Associations Institute, a national organization of condo and homeowners' groups. "If he claims that, he might be right. More power to him."

Patricia Rogers-Libert, president of the Northeast Dade Coalition, and David Samson, president of the Concerned Citizens of Northeast Dade, both organizations made up primarily of condo associations, also haven't heard of anyone surviving in such a hot seat for so long.

AMAZING LONGEVITY

"I find that absolutely incredible," Rogers-Libert said.

While most condos have trouble attracting candidates to serve on boards, Samuels, a retired furniture manufacturer, has taken the reins willingly, accepting the mantle of "Mr. Condominium."

He admits, however, that the board that keeps re-electing him has had to twist his arm the past few years.

"He's almost indispensable," Howard said. "He has a father image here. It'll be very difficult to replace him."

With some 2,000 residents living in 17 buildings, Point East, which has an auditorium, gymnasium, medical offices, bowling alley and five swimming pools, is about the size of a small town. It has as many residents as El Portal.

"He's like the mayor of this community," said Joyce Kroesen, who has worked as office manager at Point East for 15 years.

Samuels' only compensation for this volunteer job has been the smiles and handshakes of residents who have come to regard him with the kind of awe usually reserved for presidents and foreign dignitaries.

They named their auditorium after him.

His picture, with the words "A Great Leader" underneath, is taped on an office wall, next to the illustrated faces of George Washington, Abraham Lincoln and John F. Kennedy.

"People write letters here and address the envelopes to 'President Ernest Samuels' as if he was the president of the United States," Kroesen said. "I think they think he can do just about anything. They just know he's the one solid person in Point East they can turn to."

CONDO LEADER

When the Romanian-born Samuels moved to Point East in 1967 from New York, residents were looking for someone to represent them in front of the condo's developer who strongly objected to their demands and wouldn't let them meet in the auditorium.

"They decided I could put some order into things instead of chaos," Samuels said.

He wound up forming a coalition of 220 area condo associations and leading delegations of condo owners who testified before Congress and lobbied state legislators in Tallahassee.

He was considered one of the state's leading condo activists, along with Annie Ackerman, the feisty condo commander who helped give Northeast Dade condos political clout. Ackerman, who lived at Point East, died in May.

The efforts of these condo activists led to the 1973 Condominium Act, which required disclosure of information on leases and protected the rights of condo dwellers.

"Ernie and others like him changed the entire face of community association living in Florida," said Alan Becker, a former Northeast Dade state representative who is now partner in a Fort Lauderdale law firm specializing in condo litigation. "I don't think you could overstate the impact these early pioneers had on the state of the industry."

Becker, who drafted much of the condo legislation while serving in the Legislature from 1972 to 1978, added: "Ernie's able to lead the community and make tough business decisions and still have the respect, admiration and trust of the people who live there."

MULTIFACETED JOB

From making sure leaking roofs are patched up to giving pep talks to weary senior citizens, Samuels has mastered the nuts and bolts of running a condo.

He supervises a staff of 38 employees, including mechanics, plumbers and pool cleaners. Much of his day is spent checking work orders and making sure repairs are done.

It takes the wisdom of Solomon and the patience of Job.

"Every little problem, they want to speak to him," Kroesen said. "If their toilet breaks, they have to speak to him personally. If they lock themselves out, they want him to come over and let them in."

The biggest maintenance job under way is replacement of the 23-year-old steel underground lines with copper plumbing in every building. Samuels estimated it will cost about $1 million, but because he has laid away enough reserves, condo owners aren't footing the bill.

"I told you I'm a manager, didn't I?" said Samuel, with a triumphant glint in his pale blue eyes.

When leading monthly meetings of his 17-member board, Samuels comes across as a take-charge, no-nonsense chairman.

"He commands everybody's respect," said Jeanette Blinder, a former board member, editor of the Pont East newsletter and a volunteer assistant to Samuels. "He has his finger on everything."

While the hours are long and the vagaries of condo life occasionally annoying, Samuels enjoys feeling needed.

"The satisfaction is knowing that I help people," he says, with a shrug.

EFFORTS REWARDED

His efforts haven't gone unheralded.

When he served on the statewide Land Sales and Condominium Advisory Commission, then-Gov. Bob Graham wrote him a letter commending his activism, saying, "You helped many of us in state government realize the problems and concerns of Florida's citizens and have been influential in helping us serve our constitutents. Through your efforts, much of the current condominium law has been developed."

Samuels has rows and rows of plaques and proclamations lining the walls of his condo and office. Among them are a key to the city of Miami, a plaque from Metro-Dade Mayor Steve Clark on his 80th birthday in 1986 and a clock from U.S. Rep. William Lehman presented Feb. 26.

He also has a key to a recreation center in Israel named after him. He helped raise money for it through the Greater Miami chapter of the Jewish National Fund. He is vice president of the chapter.

Samuels' eyes moisten as he reads aloud the word embossed on a plaque given to him in 1969 by the residents of Point East: "There is nothing more difficult to take in hand, more perilous to conduct or more uncertain in its success than to lead in the introduction of a new order of things."

A widower whose wife of 40 years, Rose, died 11 years ago of a heart attack, Samuels doesn't plan to remarry. Though single women have invited him to dinner, he always turns them down.

"I wouldn't find another woman like my wife," he said.

Instead, he had filled the void by making management of Point East the pinnacle of his life.

"The man is here from sunup to sundown," Kroesen said. "Then they're calling him at home. No one would do it, especially for free. He does it for Point East because he loves this place."

Adds Howard: "He's the No. 1 volunteer from his heart."

RELIGIOUS GROUPS SUPPORT LEGISLATION TO CONTROL ASSAULT WEAPONS

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, the list of courageous national organizations which support reasonable controls on the availability of semiautomatic assault weapons sales to the general public continues to grow.

In addition to earlier statements of support by various law enforcement groups—the National Association of Police Organizations, the National Sheriffs' Association, the International Association of Chiefs of Police, the Fraternal Order of Police, to name just a few—a large group of religious organizations have joined together, to issue the following statement in support of further congressional action to pass constructive semiautomatic assault weapons legislation this session.

I am pleased to enter the organizations' statement into the RECORD for my colleagues to consider:

CHURCH LEADERS' STATEMENT ON ASSAULT WEAPONRY

With other citizens of our nation we have looked with horror and dismay on the increasing incidence of assault weapon violence around our country. The murder of the school children in Stockton, CA is only the most visible example of the threat posed by these weapons. With hundreds of thousands of them already in the possession of the United States civilian population, the potential destructive force of assault weaponry is truly staggering. In our cities they serve as the preferred weapon of drug traffickers and other persons with criminal intent, posing a threat to the population in general and to law enforcement officials in particular. And, of course, there is always the imminent danger of an assault weapon being used in simple random destruction as in the January schoolyard killings.

In speaking of "assault weaponry" we mean to imply those automatic or semiautomatic, anti-personnel rifles, shotguns or handguns that are designed primarily for military or law enforcement use. Characteristics of these weapons include muzzle velocities often greater than standard long guns, high capacity ammunition magazines, light weight construction, folding stocks which allow for concealability, and the capacity of many types of them to be readily converted to fully automatic machine guns. Their design suggests one primary purpose—the rapid and efficient killing of human beings. As such, there can be no place for these weapons in civilian life.

As the church recognizes God as the author of life, so does the church understand human beings to be the stewards of the life granted us by God. Therefore we, the undersigned, speaking as the leaders of our denominational bodies, call on the President, the Congress, and other federal officials to act promptly and decisively to rid our nation of the threat posed to our national life by assault weapons. We call for an immediate ban on the possession, sale and importation of assault weaponry by civilians. Towards this end, we support legislation by the Congress to enforce such a ban on a national level, preferably making such legislation retroactive. We feel that only in this way can a means be found for controlling the wanton destruction of human life made possible by the civilian possession of those instruments of death.

THE 140TH ANNIVERSARY OF ST. PAUL'S PARISH IN SACRAMENTO, CA

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to invite my colleagues to join me in celebrating the 140th anniversary of St. Paul's Parish in Sacramento, CA.

St. Paul's is Sacramento's oldest parish, and shares with the city of Sacramento a long and proud history. St. Paul's was organized in 1849, 1 year before the State of California was admitted to the Union. Originally organized under the name of Grace Episcopal Church, early members included Sacramento merchants Leland Stanford and Collis P. Huntington who later gained fame as the founders of the Central Pacific Railroad.

The original wooden structure located at Eighth and I Streets was torn asunder by gale force winds in 1901. Perhaps the winds were an act of God as this setback turned out to be a blessing in disguise. Designed by the famous architect D.H. Burnham, a new neogothic grey stone structure was built between 1903 and 1908 on the corner of 15th and J Streets. It is a structure of magnificence and inspiration.

The wealth of history contained in the parish, such as the many priceless stained glass windows, and the Johnson tracker organ built in 1875, exemplfies Sacramento's proud heritage, and serves as a fitting tribute to the city's forefathers. While St. Paul's development has paralleled that of the surrounding community, its commitment to tradition and strong sense of the past are ever present.

Since its founding in 1849, St. Paul's has been a source of support and guidance for the residents of Sacramento, and has played a significant role in the city's development. I wish the parish a long and successful future.

BOB MICHEL: LEADERSHIP IN THE HOUSE

HON. EDWARD R. MADIGAN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, September 1, Minority Leader BOB MICHEL spoke on the subject of "Leadership in the House of Representatives," at the Everett McKinley Dirksen Congressional Research Center in Pekin, IL. The Dirksen Center recently announced that it will be the official repository of papers, documents, and other memorabilia of MICHEL'S congressional tenure.

I am certain our colleagues will enjoy, as I did, BOB MICHEL'S warm, nostalgic, and incisive look at leadership in the House he has graced for so many years.

REMARKS OF CONGRESSMAN BOB MICHEL

This is a very special day for me and my family as we formally announce that the Dirksen Leadership Center will be the repository for the papers, documents, pictures and memorabilia we have accumulated over our more than 40 years of public service.

The fact that I'm beginning to clean out my Congressional attic doesn't mean I plan to move out of the House soon.

To the contrary: I hope to be creating even more documents, all to be housed at the Dirksen Center one day.

Going through the files of my early days in Washington brought back many memories of my first days on Capitol Hill as the Administrative Assistant to my predecessor in the Congress, Judge Harold Velde, who most of you know, lived right here in Pekin, Illinois.

He was the one who actually offered me the opportunity to prove my worth in the political arena, after Bradley University President, David B. Owen, recommended me for the position, just before my graduation.

Obviously for me, it was a stroke of good fortune for which I shall always be grateful.

I'll never forget meeting for the first time the man for whom this Congressional Leadership Center is named—one whom I've always considered as my political mentor. He was in the process of cleaning out his Cannon House Office Building Office after serving 16 years in the House.

He actually thought he was losing his eyesight, but with unique treatment at the time, warded off the affliction and then was importuned by all the States' party leaders to run for the U.S. Senate against the well-entrenched Majority Leader, Scott Lucas, who hailed from nearby Havana, Illinois.

Everett Dirksen won that bitterly-fought race in 1950 wearing out 2 automobiles crisscrossing the state over an 18-month period.

There are those who say he once wanted to be on the stage. I think he was a better actor than the late Sir Laurence Olivier.

Ev had flair, he had a sense of the dramatic, a feel for the shifting mood of an audience, an uncanny sense of timing.

He had a carefully constructed political image, before the word "image" became popular in politics. His hair, said to be combed each morning with an egg beater, was his trademark.

But along with this innate sense of the theatrical, there was a mastery of the legislative craft.

He loved to put words together in a bill and votes together on the floor. He loved the give-and-take of debate and the easy camraderie of the cloakroom. He was, in a true sense of the word, a leader.

And remembering his leadership makes me think of the giants of my early days in the House.

I recall watching in awe as Speaker Sam Rayburn strode forth from the Speaker's lobby to assume the Chair—alone, aloof, majestical. Although not tall in statute, he was every inch the Speaker of the House—and everyone knew it.

And then there was Joe Martin, my first Republican leader. Even in the Minority, he acted like a Speaker because he had once been the Speaker during the 80th and 83rd Congresses. Like Rayburn he was a bachelor, married to the House.

Speaker John McCormick dressed conservatively. But he was always pulling from his coat pockets wrinkled papers and folded documents. I can see him now, waving them like a trial lawyer at his opponents in debate.

And there's Minority Leader Charlie Halleck, a firebrand, aggressive, though, redfaced, mixing it up in debate on the floor with McCormick. He eventually lost his minority leadership to Gerry Ford in a rebellion on Young Turks against the old order.

It is hard to say that one was a better leader than the other. That is like saying that on the basis on a won-and-lost record alone, one baseball manager is better than another.

If you don't know the kind of team he had to manage, the injuries to key players, the ways in which specific games were won and lost, you can't judge a baseball manager's value. You have to know the climate in which he had to operate.

The same principle applies to judging House leadership. It does not lend itself to generalities and easy rules. You have to know the specific facts, the details—or, as an author once put it, "how the weather was".

Let me give you an example: Sam Rayburn is a legend. But would he have been a legend had he spent as much time in the minority as his Republican opposite number, Joe Martin?

I doubt it. That doesn't mean he would have been less of a leader. But the victories that are guaranteed by large majorities add a luster to a leader's image.

Incidentally, in my own case, each new day that I serve I am setting a new record for having served longer in consecutive years, as a member of the minority party, than any other man or woman in our history.

House leadership means selecting, under constraints of time and political pressure, not necessarily the very best in all fields, but an amalgam and/or combination of qualities of leadership the caucus of party members feel are appropriate for the times.

House leadership means learning to deal with the various divisions in the House—and the Democrat-Republican division isn't the most difficult one to handle.

More important at times are liberal-conservative differences, regional differences, differences among states, factions within parties, fights between committees over "turf", and, of course, the 435 different personalities, ambitions, dreams and character flaws.

And don't forget differences between the House and the White House—whether your party controls the presidency or not. Tip O'Neill had almost as many problems with Jimmy Carter as he did with Ronald Reagan. But there are always problems between Congress and the White House.

I haven't even mentioned House relationships with the Senate, not always the best. A House leader is expected to be able to deal with all of these—simultaneously.

Each of these groups interacts with the others in a constantly shifting, volatile mixture of emotions and ambition and ideals. A personal grudge, a secret ambition, a hidden motive, an unspoken agreement, can all mean more, on a given issue, than partisan differences. A House leader has to know these things.

But he or she also has to be able to communicate what he or she knows. And in the House, that isn't as simple as it sounds. Allow me for a few moments to describe the problems of communication facing a House leader.

Too often, when political communication skills in Washington are discussed, we limit the discussion to the presidency. Ronald Reagan was the Great Communicator, Jimmy Carter had problems in speaking on television, and so on.

But we rarely hear about an entirely different—but very important—kind of political communication. I refer to the many ways a House leader must communicate.

If you limit the word "communicate" to prepared addresses, you don't understand the variety of means of communication a House leader must master—or at least understand.

When I ran for Republican leader in 1980, my opponent was my friend Guy VanderJagt, one of the most impressive orators ever to grace the House.

When Guy takes the podium, as he did as Keynote speaker at the 1980 Republican Convention, you know you are hearing one of the last of the great orators in the House. He memorizes every word.

If that race for the Republican leadership had been decided solely on the basis of oratorical skills, Guy would have won in a landslide—shucks, even I would have voted for him.

But our colleagues decided that what was needed was a work horse and I've been plowing that ground ever since. In doing so, I've discovered that oratory, in the grand tradition is only one way a House leader can communicate—and not always the most effective way.

A House leader must be prepared to debate on the floor, ad lib, no notes, on a moment's notice. We don't do as much of that sort of thing as we used to, but you still have to be ready.

Speaker John McCormick was a fierce debater on the floor, full of fire and ready to take on all comers. Speaker Carl Albert was a fiesty little son-of-a-gun, as tough a debater as you have ever seen.

Neither of them is remembered as a great orator. But they knew that in the House a few effective words in a floor debate are worth a thousand well-prepared words in a full-scale speech.

Jim Wright was a fine orator of the old school, with big gestures and rhetorical flourishes. Sometimes on television it became a bit hokey, a bit corny. But when he was "on", he was very good. In floor debate, he more than held his own.

But a good leader also has to know his limitations in communication. In many cases, a chairman or ranking member of a committee or committee members can better make the case for the party position in a floor debate.

A wise leader knows this and makes certain he gets his most informed and persuasive speakers down in the well of the House.

A classic example of this occurred during our debate on the nuclear freeze in 1983. A Democrat challenged my Illinois colleague, Henry Hyde, who had just criticized a prominent woman advocate of the freeze.

The Democrat said: "Yes, she is, as you say, the mother of the freeze. But President Reagan, through his lack of arms control progress, is the father of the freeze."

And, without missing a beat, Henry Hyde shot back:

"And that makes you a son of a freeze."

The debate went our way after that.

I believe one of the most important communicative skills a House leader can have is his ability to listen, in small groups, to persuade a few here and few there, off the floor.

President Ford, when he was Minority Leader, was very good at this. And, within the bounds of modesty, I might say that if I have any special gift for leadership, it comes in such small sessions. I am a good listener.

When we speak of communications skills we almost always think of speaking or writing—but listening is just as important in politics.

But how many scholarly studies or media reports do you see about the political art of listening? None that I know of. Maybe the Dirksen Center can create a Department of Listening Arts.

Sam Rayburn was a great listener in small groups. He is legendary for his "after hours clinic." He would call in a few Members to his office on the first floor of the Capitol Building and, over good bourbon and branch water, he'd just talk—and listen.

Let me quickly add that I was never invited to those legendary sessions. I was both a Republican and a junior member. Speaker Rayburn wasn't going to waste good bourbon on such lesser forms of life.

When Ev Dirksen was the Senate Minority Leader, I was his Congressman and very privileged from time to time to sit in on Ev's own "after hours clinic" where I learned so much just by listening.

Yes, in the age of C-Span House coverage you have to master—or at least adapt to—television. I am the despair of my staff because when I go on a TV interview show, I have the habit of directly answering the questions that the newsman asks me.

This sometimes results in candid, rather impolitic statements, that cause unexpected difficulties.

My staff tells me this is old-fashioned and that I would be better off to get my point of view across, no matter what the question is. But I grew up in a simple mid-west tradition that says when someone asks you a question, you either answer it directly or shut up—and on TV, it's hard to shup up.

I have limited myself to one aspect of ledership—communication. But there is so much more to say about the climate of House leadership. I could write a book about it—and maybe someday I will.

Only a book could deal with the extraordinary story of Democrat Phil Burton, an ultra-liberal activist who came within one vote of being elected majority Leader in 1976. It is a story that says much about the power of personality in the House.

Only a book could discuss what I call "leaders without the formal title." I refer to fine House members such as Mel Laird and Barber Conable, both Republicans, who, for different reasons, never became members of the top leadership, although each was superbly qualified.

Then, of course there is the leadership role played by committee chairmen, like our good friends Dan Rostenkowski and John Dingell—and by the multitude of subcommittee chairmen.

And it would take a book to discuss the impact of television in the age of C-Span coverage of committees and the House floor. I could devote an entire chapter of how some House Republicans took a dull, little-noticed House ritual—the Special Order—and, through C-Span coverage, turned it into an effective political weapon.

But I'll put that off to another day.

For today, let me conclude by saying that after more than 40 years in Washington, I am convinced House leadership is one of the least understood but most important facets of our federal system of government.

I say this because members of the House are closest to the people. We are elected every 2 years. We are sensitive—some would say hyper-sensitive—to the social and economic changes in our nation.

We don't have 4 years like a president or 6 years like a Senator to hide our mistakes. We serve as a kind of distant-early-warning system for democracy. We are ever aware of new problems and also aware of the clumsy legislative means at our disposal to deal with those problems.

Think of the nuclear freeze movement, the pro-choice and pro-life abortion activists; the innumerable special interests, the environmentalists, the unions, the industries—for each of them, the House is the place where immediate pressure can be brought to bear.

A House leader has to contend with all of this—and, like all his colleagues, he has to get re-elected every 2 years and then elected by his or her peers to be their leader.

If you ever think that a leadership position places you above the rest of your colleagues, you probably won't have that position very long. You have to keep in touch.

And if you think such a position allows you to neglect the folks back home, you are in for sudden, rude surprise.

The messy, often chaotic reality of the House, with 435 individuals, just doesn't lend itself to the theoretical abstraction of ideologues.

Ideological activists believe they know the truth and they don't want to negotiate or compromise or even talk about compromise. But in the House, the ability to strike a wise compromise is an essential part of leadership.

Ideological activists don't understand that in the House, as on the battlefield, maneuver can often leader to eventual success, where a frontal assault might fail.

In the House, as on the battlefield, troops will follow a leader into danger if they believe he is picking his fights shrewdly. But they will immediately withdraw their trust if they think for the sake of abstract theories you are sending them again and again into unwinnable battles.

It is my hope that the Dirksen Center continues to be the place where these complexities are studied, where serious scholars deal with the House in all its intricate glory.

In conclusion, let me say that exactly 50 years ago today, Hitler's troops crossed the Polish border and began World War Two.

I'll leave to historians the task of explaining what that war was all about.

But I'm certain of one thing: the fight against totalitarian tyranny, in World War Two and since then, has had at its heart the kind of legislative freedom the Dirksen Center was created to study.

The right of human beings to freely choose those who will govern them is worth fighting for and dying for. In Poland, in the Soviet Union, in China, in Central America, in South America, all over the world, men and women are struggling to achieve or retain the kind of legislative freedom we enjoy.

So I can think of no better place to commemorate this historic date in world history than at the Dirksen Center, which is committed to study the Congress of the United States, the very symbol of freedom to so many people all over the world.

I want to thank the officers and board members for inviting us to be a part of the Dirksen Center. The Michels arew fortunate to have such a fine institution as this to catalogue, house, and display our papers and memorabilia in a most professional manner.

DRUGS IN AMERICA—A WORLD VIEW

HON. NEAL SMITH

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, Phi Alpha Delta Legal Fraternity has long been recognized for its furtherance of high ethical and service standards in the legal profession. In recent years, PAD has made a significant contribution to the public good by supporting education which serves a valuable role in teaching good citizenship and respect for law. An important component of the fraternity's work in LRE is its Drug/Alcohol Education Program. In furtherance of this program, a law-related education training seminar was held in Washington during the period July 5–9, 1989. One of the principal speakers was Dr. Irving G. Tragen, executive secretary, Inter-American Drug Abuse Control Commission, Organization of American States, who presented a world view of the problem that is at the top of everyone's list of current priorities. I am inserting this speech into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD entitled "Drugs in America—A World View" to the attention of my colleagues, so that others may have access to his ideas concerning this very important problem.

DRUGS IN AMERICA—A WORLD VIEW

(By Irving G. Tragen, Executive Secretary, Inter-American Drug Abuse Control Commission, Organization of American States)

The drug problem is omnipresent in our hemisphere today. No one who reads the hemisphere press can avoid its impact—murders on the streets of Washington, drug wars in the slums of Rio and on the streets of Los Angeles, the assassination of Justices and officials in Bogota, the accusations of drug-related corruption in the Caribbean and Miami, overdoses by addicts from Buenos Aires to Montreal, young people whose lives have been decimated by drugs, and national economies like Bolivia and Belize distorted by drug money and those who control that money.

The dimensions of the illicit drug trade are gigantic. The U.N. Division of Narcotic Drugs estimates its value world-wide at $250–$300 billion dollars annually. The Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control of the U.S. House of Representatives estimates that over $135 billion of drugs was sold in 1986 in the U.S.; and its Chairman, Representative Charles Rangel has recently talked of evidence that U.S. sales are approaching $200 billion. A recent Rand Corporation study concluded that our efforts to stop the supply at the U.S. borders have failed and cannot succeed in the future—because 90 percent of the profits are made in the U.S. Let me give some examples of the dimensions of which we are speaking: a unit of coca leaf which is worth $1 in Bolivia, triples to $3 when converted into coca paste or bazuco in Latin America and $200–$300 when processed into cocaine and placed on the street in the U.S., Western Europe and the Far East. A kilo of cocaine which costs around $2,000 wholesale in Bogota, sells for $14,000 wholesale in Miami and $60,000–$120,000 retail to U.S. users. By the way, the oversupply has reduced wholesale prices from $60,000 to $14,000 in four to five years—without appreciably reducing the street price to the user. And, indeed the street price has risen with the advent of crack. From a kilo of cocaine, 14,000 doses of crack can be created; at $10 a dose that would generate $140,000 a kilo.

This is big business—one which is dominated by a few astute businessmen. The Medellin Cartel, really made up of 5 separate but often cooperating syndicates, is believed to control over 80 percent of all the cocaine sold world-wide. Linkages of the Cartel to the M–19 and the FARC in Colombia and the Sendero Luminoso in Peru have been documented and are of increasing concern to the OAS member states. The Cartel also is reported to finance right-wing goon squads that murder uncooperating judges and officials. INTERPOL reports that drug money from the FARC and M–19 is being used to finance subversion from Northern Ireland to the Italian Red Army to Lebanon to the Philippines. Coincidence of interests, not ideological ties, typify dealings of the Cartel—interests that primarily relate to expanding markets and maximizing profits. Prime Minister Robinson, of Trinidad and Tobago has equated the explosion of guns in his country to the illicit drug trade.

This is a cash business. Cash which is used to pay "campesinos" in advance for growing crops—at a time when the debt crisis has dried up liquidity all over the hemisphere and when commodity prices have been at post-World War II lows. Cash which is used to bribe officials to look the other way—and who once corrupted are recruited into the marketing network by making subsequent pay-offs in drugs, not money. Cash that is used to buy arms, planes and computers to facilitate the flow of drugs and protection for dealers at all the links in the chain. Cash that is buying legitimate business, banks and even governments in order to launder the profits.

Illicit drug trafficking is a crime of transnational dimensions and its remedies—in prevention and enforcement—must also be transnational. It is a single, inter-linked chain dominated by organized criminal syndicates which stimulates production in one country, control the manufacture of narcotic drugs in another, direct their transportation via other countries for their sale in markets within and beyond the American Continent, promote their use and reap their enormous profits.

There is no doubt that demand is the driving force behind this enterprise and the supply will not decrease until demand is reduced. However, we cannot efficiently attack only one link in the chain of production, manufacture, transportation, abuse and money laundering, without simultaneously confronting all the other links. And it is for this purpose that world-wide and regional cooperation must be mobilized to support governments and private organizations in controlling the multiple dimensions of the drug problem.

I

International cooperation in the struggle against drugs began at the turn of the century with the 1907 Hague Convention, and continued in the international arena under the League of Nations and then the United Nations. In 1948, through the United Nations Social and Economic Commission, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs was set up to orient and coordinate international efforts in this field.

The Commission has drawn up three Conventions on this problem. Two are already in force and the third, adopted in mid-December 1988, is in the process of being signed and ratified by United Nations member states.

The first is the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, amended by the 1972 Protocol, to which 148 countries are Parties, including all the Latin American and Caribbean States. This Convention establishes a world-wide system for determining the annual limits of production, manufacture, export, import, distribution, sale, abuse and possession of narcotic drugs, for medical and scientific purposes and the control of the poppy, coca and cannabis and all their derivatives. The International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) has been set up to determine such limits. States party to the Convention are required to comply with its terms, to adopt national legislation which effectively applies its provisions in their respective jurisdictions, to cooperate with other states in implementing its provisions and to limit the production, export, import, distribution, sale, use and possession of narcotic drugs to medical and scientific purposes.

The second is the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances, to which some 100 countries are party, including all Latin American and Caribbean States. Under its provisions, it creates a world-wide system for analyzing, classifying and controlling psychotropic substances which jeopardize the health and well-being of people, and the INCB, with advice from the World Health Organization (WHO), is empowered to administer the Convention.

The third, perhaps the most innovative recent development in International Cruminal Law, is the new Convention against the Illicit Trafficking in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances, presently under review by all the nations of the world, in connection with its signing and ratification. The Convention lays down broad norms for the definition of the crime, the jurisdiction of the States, the seizure and confiscation of property, extradition and legal cooperation, mutual legal assistance in investigation, trials and judicial actions related to the illicit trafficking of drugs, the transfer of proceedings, other forms of cooperation and training, international cooperation and assistance for transit states, control over the distribution of precursors and chemical substances used in illicit manufacture, measures to eradicate the illicit cultivation of narcotic drugs and to eliminate illicit demand, controls over commercial transport and the suppression of illicit traffic by sea, in free ports and via postal services. INCB has responsibility for supervising the implementation of the Convention. This transcendental instrument establishes the basis for unprecedented international cooperation in the fight to overcome this transnational crime.

In our hemisphere there are two instruments which foster cooperation between our countries in the fight against drugs. The first is the South American Accord on Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances (ASEP), signed in 1973, and based in Buenos Aires, which is composed of ten South American states.

The other is the Inter-American Program of Action of Rio de Janeiro against the Illicit Use and Production of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances and Trafficking Therein, approved by the 31 member states of the OAS; its headquarters are in Washington and which is administered by the Inter-American Drug Abuse Control Commission (CICAD).

For the English-speaking Caribbean countries, the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) has been given responsibility for carrying out a broad program against drugs, although it has not yet adopted a special instrument. The program includes education for prevention, public awareness, suppression of illicit trafficking, epidemiology and treatment and rehabilitation.

The deepening concern of the international community has been marked by the creation of world-wide and regional bodies to deal with the problem.

The United Nations system includes three specialized bodies: the Division of Narcotic Drugs (DND) which serves as secretariat to the Commission; the International Narcotics Control Board, (INCB), the specialized body which administers the conventions; and the U.N. Fund for Drug Abuse Control (UNFDAC) which, plays a singularly important role in the world-wide effort as the most important multilateral source of financing for national programs.

In addition, most of the specialized agencies of the U.N. system operate programs which deal with specific aspects of the program.

Regional organizations have also been established, such as the Pompidou Group for the European Community. In the Americas, we have ASEP, CARICOM and CICAD.

II

The CICAD is the entity most recently created by the Inter-American System, and it began its work in April, 1987. The Inter-American Program of Action of Rio had its genesis in the General Assembly of the Organization of American States (OAS) in Brasilia in November in 1984. In Resolution 699, the Assembly declared that drug trafficking is a crime which affects all of mankind and convened a Specialized Inter-American Conference on Drug Trafficking for the first quarter of 1986. This Conference was held in Rio de Janeiro in April of that year and it was there that the Inter-American Program of Action of Rio de Janeiro was unanimously adopted. In November 1986, the OAS General Assembly meeting in Guatemala not only approved the Program and created CICAD to carry it out, but also signed the "Inter-American Alliance for Combatting Illicit Drug Trafficking."

Since April 1987, CICAD met on five occasions, during which it drew up its policies, guidelines and priorities. Let me emphasis that the CICAD was not specifically designed to be a law enforcement body as the Program of Action of Rio clearly specifies—but it does embrace all the links in the drug trafficking chain. Budget restrictions have compelled CICAD to concentrate its efforts on four immediate lines of action: Juridical Development, Education for Prevention, Public Awareness through Support for Private and Community Action, and an Inter-American Information Network.

Legal development, because without effective legislation, enforcement, court action and penalties, there can be no reasonable deterrent—and only through legal cooperation among the member states can the transnational criminal syndicates be brought under control. In May 1988 in Costa Rica, the first hemisphere-wide strategy meeting on legal development was convened, under the co-sponsorship of ASEP. Senior officials from 16 countries identified the priority topics that warrant inter-American attention and possibly special multilateral instruments, including seizure and forfeiture of assets emanating from the drug trade, control of chemicals and precursors used in processing narcotic drugs, money laundering and bank secrecy provisions, and inter-governmental cooperation among ministries, judiciaries and law enforcement agencies. Within the guidelines of the world-wide conventions, especially that of December 1988, this line of action is designed to assist the American countries analyze the dispositions needed in their national legislation to be consistent with the new convention and with the norms and procedures of their neighbors.

Education for prevention because the Program of Rio attributes the top priority to demand reduction. This line of action is aimed at youth. Working with experts from around the Hemisphere, the education specialists of the OAS have designed a program to incorporate drug prevention into all of the schools of the American. In Montevideo in May 1988 this program was launched at a meeting of education, health and anti-drug specialists from the five Andean countries, Uruguay, Argentina and the U.S. A second inter-American meeting for the English-speaking Caribbean was held in Grenada on November 9-12, 1988. A third was held in Mexico in mid-May 1989 where some 15 countries—including those of Central America, as well as the Dominican Republic and Panama participated. The fourth for the countries of Southern Cone is scheduled for July 11-14. Hence the program based on inter-country cooperation to develop teaching materials, training instructors and community leaders and to share experiences among the member countries will be fully functioning this year.

Support for private and community organizations, because limited government resources need to be supplemented by private and community action and because these groups can awaken broad public awareness of the problem and its terrible consequences. A workshop in Santo Domingo in January 1989 initiated this line of action. The program action is designed to involve the U.S., Latin America and Caribbean private sector in funding private activities to broaden public understanding of the problem and to cover essential prevention, treatment and rehabilitation efforts which the public sector cannot provide. Meetings with owners and directors of the media, the private sector and community leaders—as well as an inter-American teleconference on public awareness—are scheduled for the second half of 1989.

An inter-American information system, because all of the member countries and private organizations working on the drug problem—its prevention, law enforcement and all related dimensions—need ready access to the latest documents, reports and experience of all the affected countries and institutions. The Inter-American Program of Action of Rio specifies that the CICAD establish an Inter-American Documentation Center and an Inter-American Data Bank. Both have been set up and are initiating operations. CICAD is now working with 12 regional and subregional multilateral bodies—including the Pan-American Health Association, ASEP, CARICOM, ILANUD, and the Inter-American Children's Institute—to design a network of regional and national information centers which will permit access through modern communications systems to the available body of information on illegal production, manufacture and trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances as well as their improper use.

In synthesis, world-wide, regional, and subregional multilateral bodies have been set up with various instruments and mechanisms at their disposal for fostering and facilitating cooperation among governments and people in the struggle against illicit trafficking and drug abuse. It is clear that a framework exists for supporting the efforts of the countries, and for facilitating the search for new and more effective courses of action. Nevertheless, it should be pointed out that all the world-wide, regional and subregional instruments and mechanisms are to achieve their desired objectives.

CAL THOMAS COLUMN EXPOSES LEFTIST TILT OF THE AMERICAN PRESS

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, smug, self-righteous, and liberal. Those are the three terms that describe the major American news media today.

Those first two qualities prevent American journalists from conducting any self-examination of its own tilt to the left, despite the mounting evidence.

But as columnist Cal Thomas points out in a column that appeared recently in the Saratogian, a daily in my district, the press may yet be influenced by what we call in America "the bottom line."

Readership is declining. Newspapers are folding everywhere. The same public that votes for the more conservative Presidential candidate in election after election already knows that the major news organizations are far out of the mainstream.

When newspapers find their readership declining, the fact won't go unnoticed by advertisers, who really pay the bills. Newspapers are, after all, businesses, and very profitable ones at that. Perhaps not for long, unless they drop their ideological blinders.

I place the Cal Thomas column in today's RECORD, and urge every Member to read it.

IDEOLOGY BALANCE IN THE NEWSROOM STILL LEANING HEAVILY TOWARD THE LEFT

The American Society of Newspaper Editors recently published the results of its survey on the racial, gender and age makeup of the contemporary newsroom. The survey found that on average newspapers employ mostly younger people (barely 10 percent of the journalists are older than 50), mostly white (95 percent) and mostly male (65 percent).

At the executive level of publishers and chief editors, only 15 percent are women and only 4 percent represent minorities.

What the survey did not ask was the ideological makeup of those in the newsroom. Many believe that where politics and a world view are concerned, the percent of journalists of the liberal persuasion closely approximates that of whites in the business—more than 90 percent.

In 1982, Dr. Robert Lichter, who heads the Center for Media and Public Affairs in Washington, conducted his own study of graduate students at Columbia University Journalism School, the nation's most prestigious. Seven years later, those students are now likely established in their profession.

Lichter found that the students were more liberal than those already working in the news business. Asked their preferences for the 1972 election, 91 percent preferred George McGovern to only 9 percent for Richard Nixon. In 1980, 59 percent supported Carter, 29 percent endorsed liberal Republican John Anderson, only 4 percent for Ronald Reagan.

Asked to rate most admired public figures, the Columbia journalism students put consumer advocate Ralph Nader at the top, followed by Gloria Steinem, Sen. Ted Kennedy, Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young, economist John Kenneth Galbraith and the Sandinistas. Below the Sandinistas came Margaret Thatcher, Jeane Kirkpatrick and Ronald Reagan. Fidel Castro scored higher than Kirkpatrick and Reagan.

Ninety-six percent of this group favored abortion, and 18 percent said homosexuality is wrong.

"We were checking the argument we had heard from liberals," says Lichter, "that their experience makes them sympathetic to the underdog. If that's true, people coming into the (news) business from school should not be as liberal as those already there. But that turned out not to be true."

The Lichter survey seemed to reveal that the ideological balance in the press is becoming even more tilted to the left. The reason, I think, is not only that the press serves as a magnet to many of the liberal persuasion, but also that students at the major universities are being taught that only liberal positions are worthy of the educated mind.

As University of Chicago professor Alan Bloom has written, "There is one thing a professor can be absolutely certain of: almost every student entering the university believes, or says he believes, that truth is relative . . . the danger they have been taught to fear from absolutism is not error but intolerance." This view is reinforced at the universities and what is produced from this intellectual kiln is what writer Ben Stein has called "a unified, idiosyncratic view of life."

It is such a view that leads to branding conservative positions as irrelevant.

The danger that comes from a newspaper's complete lack of ideological and political balance is that fewer people will read them. While other factors also have contributed to a decline in readership and the closing of many newspapers, my conversations with conservatives around the country have convinced me that the failure of newspapers to balance their liberal bent on news reporting has contributed to the disaffection of countless readers.

The newspaper industry is at least making an effort with respect to race and gender. No such effort is being made regarding philosophic balance—even though, according to a 1985 study commissioned by ASNE, three out of four adults doubt the credibility of their publications and said that if the publications do not act to improve their reputation, their privileges and the size of their readership are in danger.

That study and the one by Dr. Lichter ought to make newspaper management take notice of what their readers—and, in many cases, former readers—think.

CLEAN AIR LEGISLATION SHOULD INCLUDE FUNDING FOR MASS TRANSIT, DEVELOPMENT OF ALTERNATIVE FUELS, CLEAN COAL TECHNOLOGY, AND TECHNOLOGY APPLICATIONS AND CONVERSIONS

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the Governor of North Dakota, George Sinner, recently sent me a letter containing some suggestions about clean air legislation. I think that these are good ideas and I want to make them available to Members of Congress to keep in mind as we develop clean air legislation. I have put his suggestions in the form of a House resolution and I ask all Members to consider the suggestions in this resolution as a contribution to ideas that have already been proposed to address the national problem of cleaning up the air we breathe.

The major issues in the clean air debate will focus on two goals: First, strategies to bring nonattainment areas into compliance with at least current clean air standards and second, strategies to reduce acid rain and limit emissions of sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide from power generation and industrial plants. This resolution suggests that in addressing these two broad goals, Federal funding should be provided for certain programs that will assist cities and industries to meet clean air standards.

First, Governor Sinner suggests that in relation to the goal of assisting ozone nonattainment areas, a reasonable time frame ought to be allowed for reaching attainment. Also, funding should be provided for the development and utilization of mass transit and the development of alternative fuels such as methanol and ethanol.

The Environmental Protection Agency recently released data which indicates that over 100 cities in the United States are out of compliance with current air quality standards. This listing reflects an increase of 37 more areas that fail to comply with the Clean Air Act. Mass transit and the development of alternative fuels should be part of solution to bring these cities into compliance.

Some cities have already started to seize the opportunity to make use of alternative fuels in order to reduce air pollution. Since 1988, the Denver area has required the use of oxygenated fuels during the winter months. An oxygenated fuel is gasoline blended with ethanol or another additive that produces a cleaner burning fuel. The Denver Alternative Fuels Program is already showing dramatic results. The area hopes to be in compliance with clean air standards for carbon monoxide by 1995. The use of oxygenated fuels combined with mass transit improvements can make that a realistic goal.

Using alternative fuels such as ethanol has a second desired affect of reducing surpluses of farm commodities and strengthen farm prices. Ethanol is made from grains and our Nation has ample grain surpluses to supply an expansive effort to develop these fuels. Further, alternative fuels not only have substantially lower emission of carbon monoxide and other pollutants but their utilization will also reduce our reliance on imported oil.

In relation to the second goal, reducing acid rain by limiting emissions of sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide, Governor Sinner suggests that strategies to reduce these emissions should include funding for clean coal technology and technology applications, development, and conversion.

The assistance of Congress is both fair and necessary in funding clean coal technology and technology applications, development, and conversion.

Necessary because of the cost of retrofitting old powerplants, adding stack scrubbers or switching to low-sulfur fuel—the things necessary to bring the dirty old plants into the age of clean air—will cost $50 billion or more.

Necessary because, unassisted, industry is not going to be able to complete the research and powerplant retooling by itself to meet the goals now being drafted in our committees. The costs of retooling are not going to fall equitably across the United States. Rather, the costs will fall upon the 10 or 12 States that generate most of the electricity from coal will end up paying most of the costs in an effort to meet clean air standards.

While some have suggested using highway funds for mass transit and general funds for clean coal technology, this resolution suggests that funding for mass transit, development of alternative fuels, clean coal technology and technology applications, development, and conversions be supported by an oil import fee. Each dollar of import fee annually generates $2.5 billion. A $3 fee would produce $7.5 billion per year.

Governor Sinner points out that it is liquid fuels that add markedly to the ozone problem and it is liquid fuels that we are most in danger of running out of—both by overuse and by supply interruption. The importation of oil is therefore the most appropriate source of sorely needed funds to protect our environment.

Again I would emphasize that this resolution is intended to contribute to the clean air debate. I urge my colleagues, especially those who serve on the committees of jurisdiction, to consider these suggestions as part of the already wealthy pool of ideas being proposed to develop an effective strategy to address the serious problem of cleaning up our Nation's air.

The text of this resolution is as follows:

H. RES. —

Whereas many metropolitan areas are faced with serious carbon monoxide and ozone pollution problems that are threatening the health of citizens living in these cities and retarding general economic growth;

Whereas the Environmental Protection Agency has determined that 101 areas between the years 1986 and 1988, 37 areas more than the period 1985–1987, have failed to meet Federal Clean Air Act standards for ozone and carbon monoxide pollution levels and thus could be faced with the loss of highway, pollution control and water project funds from the Federal Government, and could face other substantial penalties imposed for failing to meet the air pollution standards;

Whereas cities in "nonattainment" status should be encouraged to take advantage of every available technical, mechanical, managerial, and practical solution to dealing with ozone and carbon monoxide pollution by the Federal Environmental Protection Agency;

Whereas the Environmental Protection Agency has determined that two-thirds of the nationwide carbon monoxide emissions are from transportation sources;

Whereas the Environmental Protection Agency has approved the use of oxygenated fuels, particularly fuel ethanol blends, for nearly 10 years and has determined that ethanol blended fuels significantly reduce automobile tailpipe emissions of hydrocarbons, dangerous aromatics, carbon monoxide, nitrogen oxide, and formation of ozone;

Whereas the use of clean burning oxygenated fuels can displace harmful amounts of aromatics such as benzene and toluene in gasoline which have been used in greater quantities as lead levels of gasoline have been phased down;

Whereas domestically produced fuel ethanol from surplus grain provides new markets for our grain production, increases farm income, lowers Federal farm program costs, enhances national energy security, provides new jobs and improves the economic climate in rural communities all over the country;

Whereas the expanded production and use of ethanol fuels from American grain provides new and expanded markets for "value added" agricultural production; saves taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars and represents one of our Nation's best opportunities to substantially reduce imports of oil and gasoline;

Whereas oxygenated fuels such as ethanol can provide substantial environmental benefits and have already delivered over 500,000,000,000 miles of high octane performance for millions of American motorists since 1979;

Whereas domestic natural gas that can be recovered with existing technology represents a 62-year supply at current consumption levels;

Whereas the reduction in sulfur dioxide and nitrogen dioxide emissions from power generation and other industrial plants is necessary to alleviate the wholesale damage to the environment and human and animal health;

Whereas the United States power industry has already demonstrated the benefits of current pollution control technologies, evidenced by an 8 percent drop in sulfur dioxide emissions from coal-fired plants between 1980 and 1987 despite a 26 percent increase in volume of coal burned at power plants in the same period;

Whereas our Nation's dependence on imported oil has surged to half of domestic use and continues to increase; and

Whereas crude oil imports to the United States contributed approximately $35,000,000,000 to the United States merchandise trade deficit in 1988: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That (1) strategies to attain lower ozone levels should include—

(A) a reasonable time frame for reaching attainment;

(B) provide sufficient funding for mass transit projects; and

(C) provide for the development and use of alternative fuels such as ethanol, methanol, and natural gas,

(2) strategies to reduce acid rain, limits on sulfur dioxide emissions and nitrogen oxide emissions should be supported by—

(A) funding of clean coal technology, and

(B) funding for technology applications, development, and conversions both retrospectively as well as prospectively, and

(3) funding for mass transit projects, development of alternative fuels, funding of clean coal technology, and funding for technology applications would be supported by an oil import fee.

A NATIONAL INFRASTRUCTURE FUND

HON. ROBIN TALLON

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. TALLON. Mr. Speaker, we have a great country, a wealthy country. The Commerce Department's estimate of the present national wealth, which includes the values of structures, equipment, inventories, and land, is $16.2 trillion. This is 36 times greater than what it was in 1940 and 41 times greater than in 1934. It is important that we continue those practices that have made our country great—to encourage productivity and to ensure that essential programs of benefit to the people of the country not be discontinued simply to reduce spending. The budget must be balanced, but we must also continue to protect our infrastructure for a strong economy.

In order to ensure our continuation as a great nation, we need a strong national defense that is backed by a strong country and public support—strength that can come only by protecting and developing our Nation's resources—our real wealth, our lands and waters. The development of our rivers and harbors and the construction of our schools, highways, airports, and so forth, along with an educated, healthy populace, with adequate food and nutrition flowing from a strong agricultural base, provides the foundation for our national growth.

It is a condition of human nature to take things for granted. Very few of us have given a second thought to the extraordinary infrastructure we have in this country to move people and goods. It is not something that we can afford to take for granted much longer.

Consider these facts about just one component of our transportation system, our highways:

There are almost 3.9 million miles of roadway in the United States. Eighty percent of this system is surfaced. In total, our road network has a replacement value of about $480 billion, making it one of our country's greatest assets.

Each year, the U.S. road network handles more than 1.8 trillion vehicle miles of travel. Eighty percent of this travel is done on the Federal-aid highway system, even though it comprises less than 22 percent, 843,000 of the Nation's road mileage.

In 1985, the Nation's highways transported 610 billion ton-miles, or 40 percent of total freight tonnage. This represents a 70-percent increase over 1965.

In 1985, real Federal, State, and local spending on the Nation's highways, streets, roads, and bridges was $45.1 billion. Capital spending by all levels of government, however, totals approximately $24 billion per year—about 6 percent of the gross national product. For every dollar the public sector spends to construct, operate, and maintain our roadways, the private sector spends $15 to move people and goods.

According to the Federal Highway Administration, for each mile of paved road, the Government spends an average of $24,910 for capital outlay and $7,280 for maintenance.

At the same time, consider these facts:

More than 62 percent of paved roads in the United States are deficient and in need of surface repairs.

The added cost of driving on bad roads last year was an estimated $16.2 billion, or $99.60 per driver.

The Nation wasted an estimated 1.25 billion vehicle hours and 1.38 billion gallons of gas in traffic congestion on limited access highways in 1984. By the year 2005, waste would soar to 6.9 billion hours and 7.32 billion gallons of gas.

Given the increasing population, regional shifts, and growing intersuburban travel patterns, the capacity of the Nation's highway and road network will have to expand further to avoid serious problems in the future.

Severely congested airports numbered 18 in 1986. FAA expects this number to increase to 32 in 1996 if no action is taken.

In a recent report, the Secretary of Transportation stated that over 220,000 of the Nation's 575,000 bridges were either structurally deficient or functionally obsolete. The costs associated with fixing all deficient bridges was estimated to be $51 million.

The greatest enemy of America's bridges is old age. Although the average life of a U.S. bridge is 50 years, some 30 percent of bridges over 20 feet long are at least that old. More than 25,000 bridges still in use are over 80 years old.

Continuing current levels of funding into the future, discounting any effect of inflation, will result in a $1,000 increase in vehicle operation costs per household.

Construction costs for deferred capital improvements on roads are up to 160 percent higher than the costs of making those improvements when the need arises.

U.S. spending on public works declined from 19.1 percent of total government expenditures in 1950 to 6.8 percent in 1984.

Our infrastructure, our highways, bridges, airports, water systems, sewage-treatment plans, and other public works, are in serious trouble.

In a report issued last year, the National Council on Public Works Improvement recommended that public spending must double just to maintain the status quo. It's obvious the present budget crisis precludes the Federal Government from meeting this challenge. Towns and cities must fill this void, but they too have their own financial constraints.

To help stimulate local and State government spending, and to maintain the important Federal/State partnership, I'm cosponsoring legislation calling for the creation of a national infrastructure fund [NIF]. It would be a revolving loan fund requiring a one-time Federal capital infusion of $2.5 billion. The States—should they choose to participate—would be required to ante up a prorata share that would generate an additional $2.5 billion if all of the States participated. Together these moneys would be capable of leveraging up to $50 billion for financing vital public facilities around the country.

Once established, the NIF would loan funds to States only for those infrastructure projects that are supported by user fees, for example, toll roads, waste water treatment plants, thus assuring timely repayment. Because loans would be financed with bonds backed with full faith and credit of the Federal Government, local communities would realize a cost-saving benefit through the NIF by paying a smaller interest rate on the borrowings. As the States begin repayment of the loans, the reconstituted NIF can then be used to issue new project loans.

The NIF is a manageable program that makes funds available at less than market rates. It is simple, has very small administrative costs, and allows the States to determine where to put their investments.

The NIF will help us shore up what is increasingly a crumbling foundation for our entire economy. Let's make sure it's a restored national infrastucture that makes next year's headline not crumbling highways and collapsed bridges.

AMERICAN ACADEMY OF PEDIATRICS RELEASES STANDARD'S STUDY

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, as the Congress continues to debate how best to address the critical issue of child care for American families, I would like to share with my colleagues the findings from a national survey conducted by the National Academy of Pediatrics. The Academy's survey reiterates the need for Congress to assist States and parents in improving the standards affecting the health and safety of their children in child care settings as well as the need for adequate enforcement of such standards.

NATIONAL SURVEY FINDS WIDE GAPS IN CHILD CARE HEALTH AND SAFETY STANDARDS

WASHINGTON, DC.—A national survey of health and safety standards in child care shows wide variations among states' requirements. Critical health and safety regulations in many states are inadequate, vague or nonexistent, according to a survey conducted by the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) and the American Public Health Association (APHA).

The collaborative study evaluated child care licensing requirements in every state and in eight major cities.[1] "Many of the standards we chose to survey, such as immunization and handwashing, provide minimal protections that states should certainly require," said George Sterne, M.D., co-chair of the AAP/APHA National Health and Safety Standards for Child Care Project, of which the state survey is one part. "Parents would be surprised and dismayed to learn that basic standards such as these are not required of child care facilities in many states."

The purpose of the survey was to determine the level of protection currently offered in child care centers (non-residential facilities where 13 or more children receive care from non-relatives); group day care (family residences where seven to 12 children are cared for by at least one provider and one assistant); and family day care (family residences where one to six children are cared for by a provider).

The survey showed that while all states have licensing requirements for child care centers, only 37 states license group day care and 47 states license family day care. One-quarter to one-half of states that license child care miss crucial health and safety standards needed to protect children such as: handwashing; pre-employment staff health evaluation; staff-infant ratio; and staff training.

While child care centers were shown to have better regulations for health, safety, sanitation and nutrition than group and family day care homes overall, more children are cared for in group or family day care settings. Approximately 1.4 million children are currently enrolled in licensed child care centers in comparison with an estimated 1.4 million in regulated group day care and 2.2 million in regulated family day care.

"This survey clearly illustrates one of the problems parents confront when searching for quality child care—regulations vary widely from state to state," said Susan Aronson, M.D., a member of the project's steering committee. "In addition, even in states with better regulations, lack of inspections and poor enforcement provide little assurance of quality in licensed child care programs."

The states that ranked consistently high for sufficient health and safety regulations in all the areas evaluated and in each type of child care program include Ohio, Nevada, Pennsylvania and Tennessee.

The states that ranked consistently low in all child care settings are Idaho, Mississippi, Maryland and Missouri. The survey experts also pinpointed the areas most in need of new and improved standards, including: Prevention and management of child abuse; nutrition; children with special needs; staff health; and health and safety organization and administration.

"Generally worded standards in states' regulations are usually too broad and vague to be helpful for the provider or the state," said Debra Hawks Peabody, APHA director of the Child Care Standards Project. "These standards could be improved by making them more specific and clearly stated, so that providers can implement them easily and states can monitor them routinely."

In May, the U.S. Senate passed a comprehensive child care bill, the Act for Better Child Care, which calls for states to create adequate standards for out-of-home care. The House will consider similar legislation in September. "Federal legislation is desperately needed to provide states with first, a blueprint of what quality child care is, and second, the fiscal support to ensure that attaining that quality is possible," said Dr. Sterne.

The survey was funded by a grant from the Bureau of Maternal and Child Health and Resource Development, Department of Health and Human Services, and was conducted from April to September 1988. Enforcement of child care standards was not examined.

The American Academy of Pediatrics is an organization of 37,000 pediatricians dedicated to the health, safety and well-being of infants, children, adolescents and young adults.

[1] The cities surveyed included Anchorage, Baltimore, Chicago, Cincinnati, Las Vegas, New York City, Oklahoma City and Washington, DC.

TRIBUTE TO CHESTER PARTYKA

HON. JAMES A TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Chester Partyka, the president of the Ohio Division of Polish American Congress, who is being honored by the Polonia Foundation of Ohio, Inc. The Polonia Foundation recognizes Mr. Partyka as a selfless community leader living in today's pluralistic American society.

Chester Partyka is an excellent example of true success. Mr. Partyka was born on December 2, 1925 in Poreba, Poland, a small town outside of Warsaw. When the Nazis invaded Poland on September 1, 1939, he was kidnapped by the Nazis and became a Polish prisoner of war. This was the beginning of the horrors of war that would affect the rest of Mr. Partyka's life. He was eventually freed by Americans and then joined the Allies to help liberate Europe.

Mr. Partyka's life would then take a dramatic turn for the better. Arriving in America in 1950 with only $17 of military scrip in his pocket, he advanced from owning his neighborhood beverage store to developing a successful real estate firm, Partyka Realty, Inc. In 1980, Mr. Partyka semiretired and began to devote most of his energy and time to Polish-American affairs. He has become deeply involved in various civic, cultural, and religious activities. Chester Partyka is well known not only in the Cleveland area, but also on the State and National level. He is a member and a very active participant in a wide variety of organizations. His wide spectrum of activities includes the position of national vice president of the Polish American Congress, the organization which represents 12 million Polish Americans in 3,000 organizations nationwide and 500,000 Polish Americans in Ohio. He is also an active member of the National, State, and Cleveland Area Board of Realtors as well as the Ohio Lottery Commissioner, appointed by our Governor Richard Celeste, with a yearly budget of $1.4 billion.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Chester Partyka for his impeccable service to his community and country. The reason for Partyka's success stems from his knowledge, understanding, and compassion for other people's problems. He is known as a team player and we are deeply indebted to him for his dedication and the contributions he has made to our State and Nation's causes. I am honored to represent this outstanding individual.

ST. STEPHEN'S CHURCH, KEARNY, NJ, TO MARK 50TH YEAR

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, a very fine religious institution, which has been serving the people of my district and the State of New Jersey for the last 50 years, is celebrating the golden anniversary of its building on September 17. The church I speak of is St. Stephen's Church.

This magnificent Gothic edifice is 205 feet long, 101 feet wide, and 78 feet from ground to roof, and has a seating capacity of 1,100.

According to Rev. William Hatcher, pastor, and as reported in the Jersey Journal by A. Elizabeth Foley:

St. Stephen's Church building, a landmark on Kearny Avenue, Kearney, since the midthirties, will celebrate its 50th anniversary of dedication September 17 with a noon mass concelebrated by Archbishop Theodore E. McCarrick, three auxiliary bishops and the Rev. William Hatcher, pastor. Later in the day, a dinner dance will follow at the Mayfair Farms, West Orange.

Prior to the construction of the building, the church was located in a two-story structure at the corner of Midland Avenue and Chestnut Street. The church used the first floor, and its grammar school occupied the second level. St. Stephen's, a parish since 1904, opened its school the same year.

Under the ministry of the Rev. George N. Murphy, who began his pastorate in 1926 and continued until his death in 1948, the parish grew steadily as did the Roman Catholic population of the town.

In 1933, Murphy purchased 23 lots on Kearny, Laurel and Washington Avenues. Plans for the new building were announced in May, 1935, with ground breaking taking place in June, 1936.

Designed by Robert J. Reilly of New York, it was built by E.M. Waldron Company, Newark, using Connecticut granite for exterior walls with Indiana Limestone for trim. Interior walls, faced with stone, are topped by a wodden ceiling framed in oak. On June 6, 1937, then Bishop Thomas Walsh blessed the sacristy and officiated at the cornerstone laying and foundation blessing.

The new church, a climax of prayer, faith, courage, sacrifices and parishioner's generosity, became a landmark on September 17, 1939, when the edifice was dedicated by Archbishop Thomas J. Walsh at a solemn high mass of thanksgiving. Father Murphy was celebrant and Bishop William A. Griffin, preacher. Archbishop Walsh consecrated the high altar and one of the transept alters, reserving the second transept altar for consecration together with the entire church. The reredos were blessed and dedicated in memory of Murphy. The present organ was installed in 1960 at a cost of $60,000 during the pastorate of the Rev. Adrian Maine.

In October, 1988, a campaign was begun to restore and refurbish the church and to make necessary liturgical changes. The stone was pointed and cleaned, the roof repaired, and the doors refinished. In addition, electrical wiring was modernized and lighting updated. A sign identifying the church has been erected and a ramp for the handicapped will soon be completed.

The former St. Joseph side altar has become the eucharistic chapel, adorned with hand-carved angels from Ortisei, Italy. Marble from the former altars to St. Mary and St. Joseph has been restored to create a new altar of sacrifice in the main sanctuary. A new baptism area has been provided, with the marble font made from sections of the former communion rail. Reconciliation rooms in accordance with the new Rite of Penance have replaced wooden confessionals.

In honor of the Sisters of Charity who have taught in the school for 85 years, a hand-carved stature of St. Elizabeth Ann Seton has been placed in the shirine area of the church.

Father Hatcher is assisted by Rev. Gary C. Ward, parochial vicar; Rev. Thomas F. Blind, parochial vicar; Deacon Incoronato Vitale; Rev. Warren R. Hall; Rev. Mark Dooley, pastor emeritus; Rev. Leonard Dembrow, weekend assistant; Rev. Edwin Sullivan, weekend assistant; Sister Eileen Griffin, S.C., school principal, of Sisters of Charity, Convent Station, New Jersey; Robert Maidhof, music minister and organist; William Giaccum, trustee; and John McLaughlin, trustee; and Michael Higgins, parish pastoral council president.

The people of Kearney, over the years, have been family oriented, patriotic and Godfearing and have made their lives' objectives to make our great United States greater.

I am certain that my colleagues here in the House of Representatives would like to join me in extending congratulations to St. Stephen's Church and its parishioners on this happy occasion.

WAR AND REMEMBRANCE—A CONGRESSIONAL TRIBUTE TO WORLD WAR I VETERANS

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to once again bring to my colleagues' attention, the plight of the World War I veterans.

At the beginning of this Congress, I introduced H.R. 1918. This bill will provide a pension of $150 per month to the surviving veterans of World War I. From the Revolutionary War to the Spanish-American War, Congress passed a service pension for veterans and widows. After World War II, an appropriate new philosophy towards compensating veterans produced educational benefits, and home and farm loans. The veterans of World War I have been left out in the transition between the two approaches.

I have over 70 cosponsors now and I thank you for your support. I am also going to include, as an extension of remarks, an August 11th article by Ted Johnson of the Los Angeles Times. It reflects on the memories of several World War I veterans. Please read, and understand what these brave men had to suffer through.

WAR AND REMEMBRANCE—ALL'S QUIET BUT NEVER FORGOTTEN

(By Ted Johnson)

Samuel Silberling, Fred Hummer and Cecil Kepler were in high school 75 years ago this month as Europe's powers plunged into the Great War.

They, like others, read the news on June 28, 1914, of Austrian Archduke Francis Ferdinand's assassination, which struck a nerve among Europe's most powerful nations.

By August, the intricate system of alliances and crosscurrents of nationalism and aggression helped pull Germany, Russia, Britain and France into the war.

The three students, who are among 830 veterans of the Great War who live in Orange County, had little idea that these guns of August would lead to mass U.S. involvement, starting in 1917. One of President Woodrow Wilson's 1916 reelection pledges was to keep the United States out.

Many of the veterans are now in their 90s, and they have survived most of their wartime buddies. At Seal Beach's Leisure World retirement community, the Veterans of World War I post disbanded five years ago. A Costa Mesa post dissolved last year.

For those who remain, the memories of active duty are still vivid. Silberling, Hummer and Kepler remember their anxiety when they volunteered. They easily recall both their awe of their new experience and their horror of battle.

"World War I was the worst war we had," Silberling said. "It was hand-to-hand fighting. It was a very person-to-person war, and we weren't prepared for it."

He recalled seeing soldiers lying in the trenches either wounded or dead, and the Germans and Allies going at each other with clubs and bayonets.

Silberling, 88, had been in a radio school in New York when the war broke out. He thought this would be a great way to put what he learned into practice. So at 17, he enlisted in the coastal artillery. Although he was not old enought to join, communications experts were in such demand that officials turned the other way when his age was questioned, he said.

"I lied about my age," said Silberling, who lives at Leisure World in Seal Beach. "When the war broke out, they didn't have enough radio and telephone operators. That's why these guys closed their eyes to my age."

When his mother, who had a boarding-house on Coney Island, found out that he had enlisted, she petitioned a state senator to get him out because he was too young and had not gotten her permission. Hearing this, Silberling took quick action.

"I told the commander the situation," he said. "He told me that there was a ship that was to leave for France the next day. The next morning, I was sailing."

In France, he went right to the front lines, where, as acting communications officer, he witnessed three major engagements. He carried his equipment through the trenches, dug hollow spaces and operated the equipment from there.

"My whole object was to get near the trenches but in a corner where I would not be hit," he said. "They couldn't replace me that easily.

He said he considers himself lucky to have survived the war and made it this far. In France, he had several close calls.

One time, just after he walked away once, a bomb went off in his trench. "I said, 'Geez, if I was still there that minute, I would be gone.' "

"I had lucky breaks," he said. "It was weird how lucky I was."

In another close call, he and a friend got caught in mustard gas, a poison that had extremely irritating, blistering and disabling effects. They survived with their oxygen masks.

"I got the mask on just in time," he said. " My friend, Earl McKinney, got some of the gas. He suffered from that damn gas for a long time."

Silberling was in France's Argonne Forest for about 10 days during the Meuse-Argonne offensive. About 1.2 million Americans fought in the final battle, which took place over the last 47 days of the war.

One of every 10 was killed or wounded.

"The grounds were wet all the time. He said. "My feet swelled up like a balloon. They had to cut my shoes off, and my socks had disintegrated."

At Leisure World, Silberling still gets in rounds of golf. In the early 1970s, he had a bit part in "The Godfather."

For Fred Hummer, 89, of Fountain Valley, the war was fought on the home front. He became a bugler for the 22nd Infantry, playing and serving at the White House, the Capitol and the Statue of Liberty.

Hummer still plays the same 10-inch-long bugle that he used to wake up the members of his company each morning during the war.

"It was funny when I was discharged," Hummer said. "The sergeant says to me, 'Give me your side arm, but keep the bugle.' "

Twice a month, he plays bugle calls for the American Legion, which he joined in 1919 as a charter member. And, after he does his 10 push-ups, he still practices the horn every day.

One of his most vivid memories of wartime is guarding a German spy who had plotted to blow up the Brooklyn Bridge. He guarded the spy on the train from New York to Trenton as he was being taken to a prison.

"He want to the bathroom," he said. "After a while, the guard who was nearest to the door heard a crashing sound. . . . They kicked the door in, and he was just about out the window and off the train. The sergeant shot him."

Hummer rose each morning at 6 a.m. to blow the wake-up call—which did not make him too popular with the soldiers.

"They'd like to shoot me," he said. They wanted to throw everything at me. The buglers would have to find their own quarters to sleep. Otherwise they'd like to steal it.

"It reminds me of that song, 'Someday I'd Like to Murder the Bugler,' "

Cecil Kepler, 91, of Orange faced a similar situation. At the end of the war, he was a bugler on the front in Europe, waking soldiers at 5 a.m.

'They'd give me trouble," he said. "I got to the point where I'd just turn over their cots and take off."

Although he served in France during the final months of the war, it was during a lull in fighting, so he saw no action. For Kepler, some of his worst memories were of crossing the Atlantic. On his ship, one of his buddies caught influenza and died.

"I had to blow taps for him," he said. "They had to bury him at sea."

Later, as they were several days from Europe, a German U-boat surfaced. After a brief engagement, a gunner on their ship sank the submarine with a direct hit.

Kepler, who with his wife, Eula, 86, volunteers once each week at the Veterans Hospital in Long Beach, still recalls with precision the French towns his company traveled through, He remembers the end of the war especially well.

"At the distance we saw cars going by on the road with a little American flag on the fender," he said. "We knew something was going on, because that was not allowed. The next day they came and said, 'We've signed an armistice.' But we didn't know what an armistice was."

The war was over, He was discharged several months later. For many of his fellow servicemen, it came too late.

"We got mustered out some day in May, 1919," he said. "But Prohibition had started the night before."

LEGISLATION FOR THE USE OF VOLUNTEERS TO STRENGTHEN THE BORDER PATROL

HON. CARLOS J. MOORHEAD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I am today re-introducing legislation that will shore up the strength of our Border Patrol force through the use of volunteers in noncritical areas by the U.S. Immigration & Naturalization Service. The Immigration Service Volunteer Assistance Act amends section 1342 of title 31 to allow trained volunteers to aid the INS in search and rescue missions, in chaplain programs, in providing language interpretation services, in observing and reporting activities in border areas and in other noncritical, nonoperational support functions of the INS as deemed appropriate by the Attorney General. Under the provisions of the act, volunteers are not authorized to arrest, detain, or interrogate individuals. Volunteers would not be considered Federal employees except in cases of duty related injuries or tort claim provisions. In effect, my legislation creates a pilot reserve border patrol using volunteers with highly specialized training for noncritical operations.

This same concept has worked very well for many local law enforcement agencies. Los Angeles County, for example, has used thousands of volunteers in virtually every segment of its operations. Volunteers have provided county government with a renewed strength and energy and enormous savings to taxpayers. I would like to see the Federal Government vigorously, but prudently, follow this same course.

One of the priorities of the President's national drug control strategy is to strengthen the presence of the Border Patrol along the Southwest border. All Americans must cooperate and become involved in our efforts to stop the flow of illegal drugs coming across our Nation's borders. While the volunteers would be used to provide support, their services would be designed to augment and assist but not to displace any Federal employee or agent. Their purpose is to assist regular professional Border Patrol staff in a nonoperational capacity.

The President recently proposed a Government-chartered foundation to encourage all citizens to serve their country in some capacity on a volunteer basis. My legislation promotes this concept in a specialized way. I urge my colleagues to rise in support of this bill and other community service initiatives urging volunteerism by all Americans.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION ABOUT THE PATENTING OF ANIMAL LIFE

HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill that would provide for a moratorium on the patenting of animal life until there is a proper regulatory review and approval process in place that takes into consideration environmental, health, safety, and biomedical ethical standards on the commercialization of an animal.

Mr. Speaker, the patenting of animals has received a great deal of attention by the Courts, Intellectual Property, and Administration of Justice Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee. I believe we must explore further the implications of animal patenting on our health, safety and environment.

In 1980, the Supreme Court opened the door to the patenting of animals when the decision in Diamond versus Chakrabarty allowed the patenting of a genetically engineered microbe. In 1987, the Patent and Trademark Office [PTO], using a broad interpretation of the Chakrabarty case, announced it would consider applications for patents on genetically altered animals. One year later, in April 1988, the Patent and Trademark Office approved the first animal patent for a genetically altered mouse.

Over 75 patent applications on animals are pending at the Patent and Trademark Office. It is the Congress' duty, not PTO's, to determine whether living organisms, like plants and animals, are patentable. Congress saw the need for this type of active involvement in 1930 by enacting the Plant Patent Act and again in 1970 by enacting the Plant Variety Protection Act. With regard to the patenting of animals, however, it was the PTO, not Congress, that decided in 1987 that nonhuman animals constituted patentable subject matter. The PTO stepped in to fill the void. But it is time for Congress to become more involved in the debate. A moratorium would provide us with the necessary time to determine whether or not we need to make improvements in our patent law to deal directly with the patenting of animals.

The concept of a patent comes from the U.S. Constitution. A patent is a grant issued by the U.S. Government giving the patent owner a temporary right to exclude all others from making, using, or selling the invention during the term of the patent. Under our laws, inventors have been able to obtain a patent for any new, useful, nonobvious, and fully disclosed process, machine, manufacture, composition of matter, or improvement thereof.

Certainly, in this Nation's history, there were people who feared the impact modernization of technology would have on our society. Some wanted to put reigns on progress out of fear. While I do not subscribe to the notion of halting progress for the sake of fear, I do have serious concerns about the effect patenting of animal life could have on our society.

Although biotechnology is a new and constantly changing field, the basis on which one receives a patent is not. Perhaps our requirements for a patent should change to adapt to new technology. I believe we have reached the point at which we must examine whether our patent system is keeping up with technology. Namely, do the truths that have enabled millions of inventors to obtain patents still hold for the patenting of animals? This is a crucial question that needs further exploration.

Critics of my proposal will claim that the existing regulatory review and approval process for all patents adequately applies to genetically engineered animals. Of course there are standards which all inventions must meet to be patentable. However, I believe that the patenting of genetically engineered animals may warrant a higher degree of scrutiny than that for other potentially patentable material. The patenting of a machine is different than the patenting of an animal. An animal, unlike most other patentable material, has the capacity to reproduce. This provides us with unique health, safety, environmental, and ethical concerns.

Genetically engineered animals warrant a special regulatory review and approval process. Patents give special protection that may serve to encourage research, development, and innovation. I don't want to stop progress; I want to ensure that these tools of progress are used to move us safely and soundly into the 21st century.

COMMEMORATING MARJORIE BARRICK AS THE "SPIRIT OF LIFE" RECIPIENT

HON. JAMES H. BILBRAY

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. BILBRAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor one of southern Nevada's most prominent philanthropists, Marjorie Barrick. On Saturday, September 23, 1989, the City of Hope National Medical Center and its Beckman Research Institute will present to this exceptional Las Vegan the "Spirit of Life." This prestigious honor recognizes individuals who have given generously of themselves to humanitarian and social endeavors. Mrs. Barrick is truly deserving of this honor.

Marjorie Barrick is a woman with broad vision. Acceptance of the "Spirit of Life," the most distinguished honor given to a lay person on behalf of the City of Hope provides a statement of her values and her belief that research has no geographic boundaries. The City of Hope has a 76-year history of having extended its programs of patient care and scientific research to Nevadans and the world at large.

The honors bestowed upon Mrs. Barrick are testimony to her commitment and dedication to bettering the human condition. I urge my colleagues to join me today in commending Mrs. Barrick for her inspirational and unselfish commitment to improving both the quantity and quality of life.

CONGRESSMAN DALE E. KILDEE CONGRATULATES REV. ROBERT E. HENSON FOR 10 YEARS OF LOCAL MINISTRY

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues and the Nation a recognition ceremony that will be held Sunday, September 17, 1989 honoring Rev. Robert E. Henson. Reverend Henson will be celebrating his 10th year of local ministry at South Flint Tabernacle in my hometown of Flint, MI.

Reverend Henson began his service career at the Texas Bible College in Houston, TX. It was there he began his ministerial training. He was ordained in 1969 and is presently licensed by the United Pentecostal Church International. His previous pastorates include congregations in El Campo, TX and Portage, IN. In October, 1979 he brought his ministry to South Flint Tabernacle in Flint.

Reverend Henson's service to his congregants goes far beyond speaking to them from the pulpit every Sunday. He has become an integral part of their lives because he is willing to meet people right where they are—to minister to their real needs and to counsel them from his experience, strength and hope. Under his direction, South Flint Tabernacle has grown from a congregation of 400 to 600. He has reinstituted a strong bus ministry, expanded an outreach program and developed several fellowship ministries for all age groups. In addition to conducting Christian School Ministry and other Christian education programs, Reverend Henson instituted a church newspaper publication and served as a speaker for the Life and Liberty Radio Broadcast. In addition to his ministry in our local community, Reverend Henson has preached at numerous district camp meetings nationwide and he has been actively involved in world missions work, visiting over 50 countries around the world.

Mr. Speaker, South Flint Tabernacle continues to serve as a blessed place of worship and a wellspring of faith and inspiration for its parishioners under the leadership of Rev. Robert E. Henson. During his 10 years of local pastoral service, Reverend Henson has succeeded in far surpassing his expected duties as pastor. Our community has greatly benefited by the dedicated and unselfish services of Reverend Henson. His commitment to mankind has touched the lives of countless people and continues to serve as a message of bright hope to our entire community. I personally have been a beneficiary of his dedicated ministry and good counsel. It is indeed an honor and a privilege to ask my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives to join me in paying tribute to this highly regarded man on his 10th anniversary of local pastoral ministry.

TRIBUTE TO CAROVILLESE MUTUAL AID SOCIETY OF CAMPBELL

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Carovillese Mutual Aid Society of Campbell, from my 17th Congressional District of Ohio.

The Carovillese Mutual Aid Society was formed by an outstanding group of individuals who immigrated here from Italy early in the 20th century. At this time many men and women left the quaint mountainside village of Carovilli, Italy to seek employment and a better life in America. They settled predominatly in Akron, East Youngstown, and Youngstown, OH. There they worked together in the steel mills and began to settle into their new lives in the United States.

The people from Carovilli worked hard and began to feel at home in their new surroundings. They spoke little English, however, and experienced some loneliness in America. So they decided to form a union, a societal lodge, which they called "Carovillese Mutuo Soccorso de East Youngstown." In later years, the name was changed to English, the Carovillese Mutual Aid Society. The purpose of the society was to promote friendship, charity, and benevolence, and to assist each other in time of sickness or distress.

Within 6 months, the society applied and received their charter from the State of Ohio. The date was August 3, 1921, 68 years ago. Carl Rich is the only surviving charter member. All members are expected to have high moral standards, and must be the son of at least one Carovillese parent. The men must be between the ages of 18 and 49, and are required to marry the daughter of Carovillese parents in order to maintain membership. Once strictly an Italian lodge, the society now has members of many nationalities. As these members have some Carovillese tracing, they are warmly accepted as one of the family. Last year, they initiated into the brotherhood two fourth generation members, Jimmie and David Bobby.

Mr. Speaker, the Carovillese Mutual Aid Society of Campbell has given its members the gift of lifelong friendships. It has given its community the gifts of service, charity, and kindness. It has struggled throughout this century to give its people a sense of identity and togetherness. It is indeed an honor to represent this outstanding group of individuals.

I am sure that my colleagues here in the House of Representatives will wish to join me in extending best wishes to Father Kilian McGowan, C.P. for good health and happiness in his service to God and man.

A CONGRESSIONAL TRIBUTE TO KIWANIS CLUB OF LONG BEACH

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to today to pay tribute to an organization which has provided services and community support to my district of Long Beach, CA. This distinguished organization is the Kiwanis Club of Long Beach and on September 16, they will be celebrating their 70th Anniversary.

This event is of unprecedented historical significance, since the Long Beach chapter is the first Kiwanis Club West of the Mississippi to celebrate 70 years of community service.

It all started on July 18, 1918, when 16 men at the Lord & Taylor's Confectionery Parlor to form the Kiwanis Club of Long Beach. The parent club had been established just 4 years earlier in Detroit, MI, adapting its name from an American Indian Term meaning to "make oneself known."

Chartered on September 16, 1919, with 95 members, the Long Beach club is part of a worldwide service organization which, today, has more than 300,000 members. Over the years, membership in the Long Beach club has included many of the city's most notable leaders, including its 1927 president, Frank F. Merriam, who later became Governor of California.

The Long Beach club has over 160 members. In 1987, the once all-male club admitted women, and over the past seven decades has contributed time and resources to help build a healthful, hopeful future for the area's underprivileged children. A major beneficiary is the children's clinic, supported in part by the club's annual Karing for Kids Charity Ball.

Other recipients of Kiwanis' generosity include the Long Beach Day Nursery, Boy Scouts, YMCA, Senior Citizens Center, Youth Baseball, the Girl Scouts' sea explorer ship Orion, and many more. The Long Beach club is also the originator of S.O.S. which stands for Save Old Spectacles. This program involves annual collection of old eye glasses, refurbishing them and then shipping them out to over 1600 hospitals in 55 countries, for needy recipients.

My wife, Lee, joins me in extending our congratulations to the Kiwanis of Long Beach. The Kiwanis of Long Beach have exemplified their principle that, as a group, Kiwanis men and women, in spirit and enduring fellowship, achieve what individuals alone cannot achieve.

THE DISADVANTAGED MINORITY HEALTH IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1989

HON. JAIME B. FUSTER

OF PUERTO RICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. FUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend a good friend of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, EDWARD M. KENNEDY, for his sponsorship of a bill which would be of great importance to improving the health care of all minorities in our Nation.

That bill is the Disadvantaged Minority Health Improvement Act of 1989, which we too, will be considering in the House at some time.

To that end I would like to share with my colleagues today some of the thoughts on this legislation I shared with Senator KENNEDY.

I would like to commend you for sponsoring the Disadvantaged Minority Health Improvement Act of 1989, an essential piece of legislation for the improvement of the health status of all minorities.

As Chairman of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, I am extremely concerned about the health problems faced by the poor in this country, especially those of the disadvantaged patients within the Hispanic community. Unfortunately, the disadvantaged represent a large segment of the Hispanic community. Statistics show that almost one in four Hispanic families lives in poverty (24.7% for Hispanics compared to 9.9% for non-Hispanic families).

More alarming, however, is the fact that Hispanics, although facing serious health problems as the result of poverty, are the group with less access to our health system and are dramatically underrepresented in the health professions, two important aspects addressed by this legislation.

Hispanics are the group least likely to have regular sources of health care with 30.1% of Hispanics lacking regular sources of health care compared to 20.1% of blacks and 16.3% of whites. Perhaps this alarming situation could be explained by the fact that even though Hispanics represent 7.9% of the U.S. mainland population, Hispanics account for only about 4% of physicians and 2% of registered nurses.

The Disadvantaged Minority Health Improvement Act of 1989, if enacted, would provide new tools to address the health crisis facing our community. I am especially supportive of the bill's section which strengthens the mandate of the Minority Health Office of the Department of Health and Human Services to coordinate health prevention and service delivery programs within minority communities.

Moreover, this bill recognizes that an increase in financial aid programs for those interested in pursuing a health profession is essential if we want to increase the number of minorities in these fields. Thus, I am also extremely supportive of increasing the federal contribution to the Health Professions Student Loan Program in order to provide loans and scholarships to underrepresented members of minority groups.

I would like to point out that some Members of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus are actively working to address this crisis within our community. Representative BILL RICHARDSON has been working in coordination with the late Representative Mickey Leland and Representative LOUIS STOKES and Senator ARLEN SPECTER, in drafting the American Health Parity Act of 1989. This major piece of legislation addresses other issues of great concern to the minority community.

Examples of the issues we need to address are: reducing the infant mortality rate among minorities, increasing drug and alcohol addiction programs and extending pediatric AIDS services. I hope that all the members of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus will be called upon to provide support for this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to remind you that September 15th is the official commemoration of Hispanic Heritage Month, a celebration of the outstanding contributions of the 19 million Americans of Hispanic descent to the social, economic and political fabric of this Nation. It is also a month for reflection about who we are as a community and what we need to achieve and strive for in order to fulfill the American dream.

Thank you for your efforts to help Hispanics achieve these worthy goals.

CYPRUS: A SETBACK IN THE PEACE PROCESS

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about recent reports that the U.N.'s Cyprus peace process has been dealt a serious blow. I hope that Mr. Denktash will reconsider his recent decision and rejoin the intercommunal talks. Long and hard negotiations held in a spirit of reconciliation under the U.N.'s direction is the only way that peace will come to that tragically divided island.

During the past year, I have carefully monitored the progress of the peace talks which are being held under U.N. supervision and have the full support of the United States. I was impressed by the determination of both sides to continue meeting and periodically reviewing the progress of the Cyprus talks with the U.N.'s Secretary General, Perez de Cuellar.

This July, the Secretary General presented a draft outline of an overall agreement to settling the Cyprus dispute to Mr. Denktash and to President Vassiliou. In general, the outline envisions political equity of the two communities as well as a bicommunal federation. The three freedoms are to be recognized in the federal constitution. The issue of security is considered along with plans to drastically reduce the presence of foreign troops and the achievement of a military balance between the two communities. Other important aspects for an overall settlement were also included. The draft outline is a fair and balanced assessment of how the two parties to the dispute can resolve their differences and bring peace to that long-divided island.

After criticizing the July 19, "Women's Walk Home" into the buffer zone in Nicosia, Mr. Denktash refused to participate in the next scheduled meeting in the intercommunal talks. He later clearly stated that he refused to participate in meetings in which the U.N.'s draft outline was scheduled to be tabled. On August 21, the Turkish Republic National Assembly released a 13-point decision which gives Mr. Denktash guidance when the talks resume. The resolution stated the following:

13. In the light of the issues stated above, only after confirmation that there is no document on the table which is the result of direct negotiations, can the talks continue by mutual dialogue of the two leaders with a view to preparing a draft document.

Mr. Denktash will rejoin the talks only if no U.N. draft outline is discussed. President Vassiliou will participate in the talks only if the U.N. document is to be reviewed. The Secretary General is concerned about the setback in the intercommunal dialog and will not restart them until the atmosphere clears. The talks may be delayed for months.

It is unfortunate that Mr. Denktash is rejecting a document that was painstakingly crafted by the Secretary General and was seen by both sides as a nonbinding draft outline of an overall agreement to the Cyprus dilemma. Mr. Denktash has been a key participant in the ongoing talks, and I honestly believe that there were no surprises in the draft outline for him.

There is understandable disappointment at Mr. Denktash's decision both at the United Nations, in the Republic of Cyprus, and in the United States. Starting from square one will take time and effort and the prospect for a peaceful settlement to the problems of Cyprus again seems far away. I am certain that my colleagues share my great disappointment and join me in strongly encouraging Mr. Denktash to study the merits of the draft outline, roll up his sleeves, and find a negotiated solution to the challenging problems of Cyprus.

SEPTEMBER 15—POW/MIA DAY

HON. JOE KOLTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise before the U.S. House of Representatives today to express the highest tribute possible to the 142,000 American service members held as prisoners in World War I, World War II, the Korean war and in Vietnam, and to those thousands of Americans who remain listed as Missing in Action.

September 15—POW/MIA Day—is the national recognition of these brave and unselfish men and women who have tremendously sacrificed for the freedom and security of the United States of America.

This year at the Bulter Veterans Administration Medical Center, a Prisoner of War/Missing in Action Commemorative Medal will be honorably presented to Mrs. Ethel Ritonto, sister of PFC John L. Straley of Wampum, who is missing in action in Southeast Asia.

Recently, I presented a second Commemorative medal to Heather Young of Saltsburg, daughter of Capt. Robert M. Young, who was killed during the Vietnam war where he had been listed as missing in action and as a prisoner of war.

These two 4th Congressional District presentations are in accordance with the Department of Defense Authorization Act of 1984, and is part of a national recognition ceremony for all ex-POW's and their families.

As of late last month, the U.S. Government has said there are 2,340 servicemen still listed as missing from the war in Indochina.

I am very honored to present these medals, and honored to stand before the U.S. House of Representatives today and salute the dignity, faith, and valor of those who gave their lives or who were captured or imprisoned.

But in addition, efforts must be made to secure the release of personnel who may still be held against their will and to obtain the fullest possible accounting of those still missing.

To those who did not return from our wars—and to their families—I offer a very solemn salute with a touch of pride for the caliber of patriotism and dedication in the 4th Congressional District of Pennsylvania.

The loyalty, hope and courage of these families provide inspiration to all Americans, and that is why I honor them today.

THE PENSION RIGHTS PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

HON. JOSEPH M. McDADE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Pension Rights Protection Act of 1989. This bill addresses a serious, increasingly common problem of severely reduced pension benefits resulting from corporate restructuring.

Employees of companies that have been taken over or sold find that the pensions promised them as part of an employee benefits package are frozen. If an employee has not yet met the eligibility requirements for retirement, this corporate action leaves that worker with only an accrued benefit. On average, workers lose 45 cents for every pension dollar they would have received had their pension plan not been terminated.

Realizing that the value of their pension has been reduced, workers understandably turn to the Federal Government since private pensions are federally guaranteed. Unfortunately, the Employees Retirement Income Security Act [ERISA], guarantees "terminated employees" only the benefits they had accrued before termination. This includes their own contributions plus benefits derived from employer contributions.

For many workers, even those who continue in the same job after a buyout, the change in management means that their pension benefits are frozen and will lose value over time. When an employee's pension is fixed, the accrued benefits promised under ERISA may quickly lose value. Inflation significantly reduces the value of a frozen pension benefit.

Further, employees frozen out of their retirement by a corporate takeover are denied any periodic inflation adjustment granted retirees.

The most significant threat to the value of an employee's pension is the loss of credit for years of service when changing from one defined benefit pension plan to another. Employees terminated from a plan under which they had many years of service are often covered by the new management under a similar pension plan. However, most of these plans allow no credit for the employee's service under the old management.

Portability of service credit between the original pension plan and the new plan would protect employees from being ravaged by corporate reorganizations. Under the Pension Rights Protection Act, pension plan participants would be protected against losing the value of the past service credit.

The pension plan established by the new management would be required to credit each participant immediately for service under the frozen or terminated plan. By augmented accrual under the successor plan, workers would not have to start again at ground zero with the new plan.

We must endeavor to protect workers, particularly those with many years of loyal service to a company, from losing the pension benefits associated with long tenure. Corporate mergers and takeovers often mean golden parachutes for displaced managers. Today, I invite your support of the Pension Rights Protection Act of 1989, to protect employees from the lead balloon of reduced pension benefits.

HON. DALE E. KILDEE CELEBRATES THE RIDLEY'S GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, in American history, the past 50 years have been marked by war and peace, prosperity and want, good times and bad. However, there have been institutions fundamental to the government and our society which have survived unchanged. Lillian and William Ridley's marriage, in its warmth, vivacity and devotion, has remained a constant for 50 years in a fast-paced, ever-changing world. On September 23, they will celebrate their golden anniversary amid loving relatives and friends at a special dinner in their honor.

The Ridleys have been gifted with a wonderful family, countless friends and an attitude which remains as youthful as when they exchanged vows in 1939. Among the many ways they keep young is through golfing and gardening. The Ridleys are also very active in the Church of Christ. They have been blessed with five children, nine grandchildren, and two great grandchildren. William is retired from General Motors Corp. and Lillian from Mr. Gibby's Restaurant.

I want to extend all of my best wishes and warmest regards to Lillian and William Ridley and wish them love and happiness in the years to come.

A TRIBUTE TO ENOLA MAXWELL

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to congratulate a woman who serves as a shining example to all of San Francisco, Mrs. Enola Dundy Maxwell, on the occasion of her 70th birthday. I was fortunate enough to attend her "Roaring 20's" benefit birthday bash on August 26, 1989, at the Potrero Hill Neighborhood House, an event suffused with much love and rejoicing at the accomplishments of this most remarkable woman. And remarkable, perhaps, is an understatement. Mrs. Maxwell's leadership has guided the Potrero Hill Neighborhood House—the "NABE" as it is affectionately known—to its position as a multipurpose social agency that provides services to a broad based and diverse community, including seniors, the disabled, and youth. She has created an institution that embodies the principles of compassion and dignity in delivering critical services to the underprivileged.

Mrs. Maxwell's entire life has been one of selfless devotion to others. She marched in Alabama with Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., she is committed to the peace movement, and works with the Martin Luther King, Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change and the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. She was an early supporter of gay and lesbian civil rights. She has devoted her seemingly endless reservoir of energy and commitment to people with AIDS, the plight of inner-city youth, the economic peril facing single parent families, and the epidemic proportions of teenage pregnancy.

Mrs. Maxwell has not only been a force for positive change, but positive unity as well. She continues to be a leader in bringing together diverse and competing elements of our San Francisco community, creating an effective coalition to fight for the needs of the people she serves as well as vesting in those people a sense of empowerment and political participation that is all too lacking in many segments of our society.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time the works and deeds of this remarkable woman have come to the attention of this body. In 1976, my predecessor, the late Philip Burton of California, paid a similar tribute to Enola Maxwell's service, compassion and leadership. In 1987, on the occasion of the 80th anniversary of the Potrero Hill Neighborhood House, I asked the House to recognize her many achievements. And in 1989, at 70 years young, we once again pay tribute and honor to the continued achievements of this most remarkable of Americans.

PORTAGE'S NEW CITY HALL

HON. HOWARD WOLPE

OF MICHIGAN

HON. FREDERICK S. UPTON

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, we rise to pay special tribute to the city of Portage, MI. On September 16, 1989, Portage will dedicate its new city hall. Located in the city's centrally located triangle area bordered by Shaver Road, Westnedge Avenue, and Centre Street, the 26,000 square foot building will house 64 employees and cost $2.4 million to construct.

The dedication of Portage's new city hall is symbolic of the city's extraordinary growth and development. From its origins as a rural, agricultural area, Portage has grown to a city well in excess of 40,000. It is the home of the Upjohn Co.—which, along with several other companies located in Portage, distribute products worldwide. The city is recognized as southwestern Michigan's commercial center, anchored by the 720,000 square foot Crossroads Mall. Its natural beauty, the city's vast selection of housing, and the friendliness of its people—all this makes Portage an excellent place to call home.

It is fitting that Portage has opened this new facility just 1 year after celebrating its 25th anniversary. The original office building housing city employees was built as a township hall and was expanded. However, these increases in space fell far short of today's needs. Consequently, for a number of years, the city has had to house many of its administrative staff in other buildings, while those working in the main facility experience space, structural, mechanical, and site deficiencies.

The support of Portage voters for the bond issue needed to finance the construction of the new city hall is testimony to the community's confidence in its elected officials, administrators, and employees. The new facility will now permit even more efficient delivery of public services.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Portage know they live in a special place. We are proud of the fact that we share the responsibility of representing their city and that we each represent a portion of its citizenry. We are honored to work with people who take such pride in their city and who use the celebration of their new city hall as a means of recommitting themselves to the future of their community.

TOM BOLACK—A MAN WHO LIVED FOUR LIFETIMES

HON. BILL RICHARDSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize a constituent of mine who is more than just another voter—he is an institution. Tom Bolack of Farmington is a rancher and a lifelong public servant. He has served as mayor, State legislator, lieutenant governor, and for a short time Governor of New Mexico.

Val Cooper, a freelance writer in New Mexico, is writing a book about Mr. Bolack. In the August 1989 edition of CrossCurrents, Val offers a most interesting preview of what she might include in her upcoming book about this most fascinating man, Tom Bolack. I am attaching for my colleagues' review Ms. Cooper's article titled, "Tom Bolack: A Man Who Has Lived Four Lifetimes."

TOM BOLACK: A MAN WHO HAS LIVED FOUR LIFETIMES

When Tom Bolack of Farmington shook the Kansas prairie dust from his sturdy boots and headed to the "Land of Enchantment" in the 1940s it was one of the best things that ever happened to the state of New Mexico.

For, in the process of becoming a self-made millionaire, the once-handsome, rugged Bolack also directed his energies and talents into community and state endeavors, the likes of which had not been witnessed before.

This man of vision, drive, charisma, who thrives on challenge, has lived about four lifetimes in his 70 years. He has survived brutal oil field beatings, being charged by man-eating animals, a near-fatal airplane crash, and a pickup truck accident that left him with five skull fractures and a disfigured face, now hidden by a silky, silvery beard.

After striking it rich in oil and gas ventures the white-thatched Bolack enjoyed a meteoric rise to state and national recognition. He was elected mayor of Farmington, a state legislator, and the first Republican lieutenant governor in 32 years, and he served a short but colorful stint as governor.

He attained acclaim as a big game hunter, baseball club owner, and one of 10 directors-at-large of the prestigious U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

Bolack is a philanthropist, entrepreneur and crusader for conservation. He's known far and wide for the practices he has initiated on his 12,500-acre B-Square Ranch, located just outside Farmington's eastern city limits.

"This is my cathedral," the non-church-going Bolack is fond of telling visitors whom he escorts about the pastoral peacefulness of two man-made lakes containing thousands of Canadian geese, ducks and fish. The network of ranch roads is alive with preening peacocks, deer, rabbits, quail, guineas, chickens, roosters and a variety of other wild animals, such as Barbary sheep, coons and coyotes.

Countless thousands of children and others have visited the ranch house museum, which holds trophies that are the result of wild game forays into Africa, India, South America and Mexico.

Bolack rescued the failing Albuquerque Dukes and owned that baseball club for 14 years before selling it to the Dodgers. He served on the prestigious State Board of Finance under two governors. He's a director of the First National Bank. He was vice president of Albuquerque's Sandia Tramway. He was a partner in developing Farmington's first shopping complex, the Mesa Shopping Center. Bolack has been credited with "selling" the San Juan Basin to the major oil developing companies despite the fact that in the early years there were many experts who failed to see the tremendous potential of the area.

He spearheaded a successful battle in Congress for one of the most beneficial water reclamation projects for the West—the Upper Colorado River Storage Project. The Navajo Indian Irrigation Project is one of the beneficiaries of that legislation, a fact which earned Bolack the title "The Great White Father" from his Navajo friends.

Thomas Felix Bolack made his debut into the world May 18, 1918, in a two-story farmhouse 14 miles east of Winfield, Kansas. He was named for both his grandfathers, Felix Bolack and Thomas Sheets.

When he was old enough to go to school, young Thomas saddled up his horse and rode 4½ miles due north. That was after he had arisen at 4 a.m. to milk the cows and clear his trap lines of skunks, possums and other animals whose skins provided the lad with spending money.

"When the teacher would see me coming," he laughed, "he'd get out the can of chloride lime. I never could quite get the smell of skunk off my hands by ordinary washing."

Bolack's younger sister, Marceil Johnson, who still lives on the family farm, recalled that her brother "really loved nature, was always exploring and hunting. He was always coming in the house with a snake in each hand, and a pocketful of Snake eggs, or lizard or toads."

The youth developed bravado early. Mrs. Jonson remembers their father telling about finding Tom one day when he was about four years old, holding onto the family's pet dog. "Shep," with one hand and fiercely-pounding on a beehive with stick in the other hand. "The bees were swarming all around the dog and biting him but didn't touch Tom," said his sister. "I guess the Lord takes care of fool kids."

When Tom was an over-muscled 16-year-old, a man named Elmer Ash drilled a wildcat well on the family farmland, and Bolack got his first job in the oil patch as a tool dresser, at a salary of $1 a day, man's wages in those times.

That year he also had difficulty getting along with his dad—as often happens between two strong-willed men—and Tom left home. To supplement his income when jobs were scarce, Tom's mother used to help him raid the wheat bin in the barn.

Bolack idolized his mother, Hazel, and after her death he had a chapel constructed in her memory adjacent to Farmington's United Methodist Church.

When work was slow in the oil fields, young Tom signed on with construction crews. After the day shift he learned to operate heavy machinery—bulldozers, draglines and power shovels—by talking the night watchmen in to letting him practice handling the controls by moonlight.

Bolack attributes the "exercise" he got in Kansas with being a big assist in developing a "wing spread" from fingertip to fingertip—a reach that was "two and a half inches longer" than the great heavyweight boxer Joe Louis. A lot of boxers found that out when Bolack participated in Golden Gloves bouts.

So did many an oil field crew back when it used to be the norm for a driller to furnish proof of his authority with his "dukes." His sharpest memories of those times: fist fights. His nose was broken half a dozen times, and his knuckles became so gnarled that they've "never been right since."

An offer from Petroleum Products Company of a job at $600 a month as superintendent of the firm's New Mexico oil fields brought Bolack to the state in 1942. During the two years he stayed at that job he kept scouting the wastes of the San Juan Basin and, with his mail-order knowledge of geology, became convinced that the territory was rich in oil and gas. The young man spent some pretty chilly nights in his sleeping bag under the stars, searching for energy across the mesas and arroyos of the Basin.

In mid 1946 Bolack began to buy oil leases from the federal government for 25 cents an acre. It is legendary how he bought his first 2,400 acres with a $600 loan from an Aztec bank by putting up his old Hudson jalopy on which he had put about 350,000 miles scouting for oil.

Five years later those leases were going for $5,000, and Tom had a piece of the action, always retaining an overriding royalty.

Once, when Bolack had renewal payments coming up on big blocks of leases, he was flat broke with a $4,000 note due. In desperation he went to a Winfield, Kansas, banker and asked to borrow $10,000.

"What have you got for security?" asked the banker.

Tom shoved out his big fist and opened his calloused hands "These," he said. He got the loan.

Less than a year after he acquired his first block of leases, Bolack sold most of them to Delhi-Taylor Oil Co. for about $20,000, retaining a 5 percent overriding royalty. With that he bought $14,000 worth of additional leases, paid off some debts and returned to Kansas to marry a Bushton telephone operator named Alice. They had two children, Tommy and Terry, now grown. Alice died in 1978 after only a a10-day bout with cancer.

At one point Bolack owned or controlled more than 100,000 leases. Today he has interests in rigs running in Colorado, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Louisiana, Wyoming and Utah—as well as in about 2,000 San Juan Basin oil and gas producers.

Of the 1940s Bolack says, "I don't know what kept me going, but I figure it was desire to show up geologists and oil men who ridiculed me rather than an urge to make money. I got real delight in drilling my biggest well in a spot where one geologist said he would drink every drop of oil discovered."

This writer was in the Bolack home with others the day that gusher came in. There were toasts all around, then Tom proposed one: "I would like to share my good fortune with someone where it will do some good." And a short time later he wrote a sizable check to Farmington's Sacred Heart Church.

When the check was delivered later that evening to a group of men comprising the church's building committee, they accepted it as a miracle. The money was for the exact amount that was needed to complete the church school—and the group had just finished petitioning for it in a special prayer service!

That gift also was the first of innumerable donations Bolack has made to charitable and other organziations, tallying in the millions.

In 1958 Bolack killed a world record polar bear on the ice packs off Siberia. He also killed a 17-foot, 6-inch man-eating crocodile in Africa, whose belly contained the remains of a woman, and bones and teeth believed to be those of a man.

Before Bolack won the fight with the crocodile, which occurred during the night, he and his guide both nearly lost their own lives. The hunters crept up on the mammoth reptile in a motor boat with its motor silenced. Tom took his first shot, and with only a torch for a light he hit the monster in the head. The thrashing animal's tail subsequently upended the boat, sending Tom and his guide into the murky water in complete darkness. The guide was able to retrieve a flashlight from the upended boat and, in the feeble light, Bolack again shot the croc—this time through the hindquarters to stop the deadly, gyrating tail.

After this the men were able to right the boat and make it to safety, leaving the dead croc in the water to be hauled out the next morning.

Months later, a lot of people thought they were hallucinating when they saw a crocodile dangling from a crane outside a third story window at a Denver taxidermist's building. It was the only way the enormous critter could be gotten out of the building.

"Three drunks took the cure," smiled Bolack, "they thought they were seeing flying crocodiles."

Bolack and former Governor Edwin L. Mechem will never forget their near-fatal airplane accident in 1960 in southwestern New Mexico during a campaign trip. Mechem was seeking re-election and Bolack was his lieutenant governor running mate. As the plane was coming in for a landing, it struck a high tension wire. The plane was miraculously landed safely after which Bolack was rushed some 180 miles to an Albuquerque hospital for treatment of some severe facial gashes suffered from flying plexiglass.

When battle lines for the Upper Colorado River Storage Project were drawn in Congress four decades ago Bolack, then in his thirties, organized a group known as the "Aqualantes" comprising financial contributors and workers throughout the Four Corners dedicated to backing the bill. The prematurely gray lobbyist made an imposing figure striding around the halls of Congress dressed in a white Stetson, shiny black cowboy boots and a black string tie. He set up an Aqualante office, mostly at his own expense. Twenty months of effort paid off with passage of the bill. Navajo Dam, located 37 miles east of Farmington, was the first dam to be completed under the legislation. It contains a lake that backs up 34 miles, as well as providing water for industrial developments and the gigantic Navajo Indian Irrigation Project, a 110,000-acre agricultural complex south of Farmington.

Bolack became governor—and held office only one month—when Gov. Mechem resigned to fill a U.S. Senate vacancy in 1962. Of that short stint one newsman recalled, "Bolack enjoyed every minute of it. He'd sit back in his chair, put his feet and a bottle on the big desk and invite us all to swap stories. He may have been the shortest-term governor in the history of the state, but he was certainly one of the most popular."

Bolack has been perhaps the largest single contributor of animals to the Rio Grande Zoo in Albuquerque. Ingrid Schmitt, the zoo's general curator, says, "I can't even begin to tell you how much he has donated in trees, plants and animals."

In 1974 Bolack was in a pickup truck that plunged over a 400-foot sandstone embankment on the ranch. He suffered five skull fractures. He spent weeks in an Albuquerque hospital, and attending physicians declared that they'd "never seen anyone live with this many ruptures in his skull."

A stroke in 1985 took even more of a toll on Bolack, but he remains amazingly alert despite the fact that physically he shuffles around, often with the aid of a cane. He continues to monitor ranch lands and direct the business, philanthropic and money-making endeavors of his enterprise, while son Tommy spearheads the manual operation of the B-square.

Bolack would like to be remembered "as a conservationist first—I'm sure I've put more back than I harvested from the land—and a hell of a hunter second."

Today, recreation abounds and industrial complexes flourish where once even sagebrush struggled to survive in a land which seemed destined to forever remain dry and sterile. The changes are largely through the efforts of a man of vision, a person of action, a tower of strength, a many-faceted individual known as Tom Bolack.

RUTGERS' PROFESSOR'S REPORT HIGHLIGHTS ROLE OF PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY IN NEW JERSEY

HON. BERNARD J. DWYER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. DWYER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call to the attention of my colleagues an interesting and important report, written by Prof. Hal P. Eastman, DBA, of the Graduate School of Management at Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey.

Professor Eastman, in a report entitled "The Economic and Social Impact of New Jersey's Health Products Manufacturing Industry," lays out in great detail the significant effect which the health products industry has on the State of New Jersey and, more importantly, the remarkable extent to which the industry in New Jersey dominates nationwide.

For example, the report points out that 22 percent of the industry's nationwide shipments originate in New Jersey; 24 percent of the industry's research and development investment and 29 percent of the industry's nationwide employment are also based in New Jersey.

For our State, Professor Eastman notes, this level of economic activity translates into nearly 50,000 jobs, more than $8 billion in product shipments, and more than $1.3 billion in research and development activities.

Mr. Speaker, this report by Professor Eastman clearly illustrates the significance of the health products manufacturing industry to both New Jersey and the Nation. At a time when so much of our attention is focused on health issues, ranging from AIDS to aging, we are all relying on America's pharmaceutical industry to find the vaccinations, the treatments, and the cures to continue to reduce the threat of disease.

New Jersey is the proud home of the corporate headquarters, laboratories, and manufacturing plants of more than 100 of this Nation's premier health products companies. When combined with the State's outstanding workforce and our fine institutions of higher education, the result speaks for itself.

Mr. Speaker, I commend Professor Eastman on the fine job he has done on this report and believe that it will play a significant role in helping to focus future economic development activity in New Jersey.

ASHLEY ANTOLAK AN INSPIRATION

HON. JOHN J. DUNCAN, JR.

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to recognize a beautiful, bright and courageous little 5-year-old girl from my home district in Athens, TN. Her name is Ashley Antolak and and she is the 1989 National Poster Child for the Muscular Dystrophy Association. She appeared in this capacity last weekend on the MDA telethon which is hosted every year by the national spokesperson, entertainer Jerry Lewis.

Ashley is beautiful, as can be attested to by her picture on the cover of the September 3, 1989, issue of Parade magazine. Also, she is a very brave little girl which has been shown through her hard work and determination to beat the odds of her nerve-muscle disorder, spinal muscular atrophy. The love and support of her parents, Bob and Donna, as well as the tremendous help of the MDA clinic, has given Ashley the will to learn to walk. She may not be fast, but she can walk, and this in itself is a valiant feat.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud of Ashley Antolak. The hope, courage, and inspiration she offers to all of us in invaluable.

IN RECOGNITION OF TAIWAN'S 78TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. RICHARD H. LEHMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, for the relatively small but immensely important island nation of Taiwan, Tuesday, October 10, 1989, will mark the country's 78th anniversary. I would like to commemorate this remarkable historical achievement by offering my congratulations to the people of the Republic of China, to President Lee Teng-hui, to Premier Lee Huan, and to the Republic's representative to the United States, former Foreign Minister Ding Mou-shih.

Mr. Speaker, the Republic of China's accomplishments are truly amazing. With a population of 19 million people, this island has become the world's 13th largest trading entity and the 5th largest trading partner of the United States; it has the world's second largest foreign exchange reserves and ranks as one of the world's best credit risks. For its commitment to democratic ideals; for its many successes in the international marketplace; for its high standard of living; for its continued economic growth; and for its outstanding relationship with the United States, I salute the Republic of China on Taiwan and wish it peace and prosperity in the years to come.

IN MEMORY OF JUDGE KARDASH

HON. HELEN DELICH BENTLEY

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, today I am privileged to honor the memory of a man whose wisdom, jurisprudence, and kindness earned him a permanent place in the hearts of the citizens of Maryland.

The man of whom I speak is Judge James Kardash, who died in 1987 after having been appointed to two 10-year terms as a Maryland District Court Judge. Even though he has left us, the legacy of love he left behind still endures in the hearts of all who knew him.

That is why, for the past 3 years, his friends have organized a golf tournament and bull roast in his honor. In 1987 the event's organizers called upon Gov. William Donald Schaefer to issue a proclamation in this great man's honor. The following year Baltimore County Executive Dennis Rasmussen was asked to do the same.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the friends of Judge Kardash have called upon me to pay homage to this fine gentleman. And it is a task which I am more than pleased to undertake.

Judge Kardash was a man who accomplished many different things. He was a soldier—serving his country during the Korean war. He was a student—working his way through night school to achieve his goal of becoming a lawyer. He was a public servant—elected to the Maryland House of Delegates in 1966 and 1970 as well as serving as chairman of the advisory board of the State Department of Juvenile Services in addition to his service on the district court.

Most of all, however, he was a man who cared about people—a person who dedicated his life toward doing his best to serve others and to make a difference for the better. Indeed if the affection for his memory which still exists 2 years after his passing is any indication of his success, Judge Kardash's efforts were without failure.

To Judge Kardash's wife Edna and his five children I offer my salutations and best wishes. To Judge Kardash's memory I offer my most sincere thanks upon a job well done.

FLAG PROTECTION ACT

HON. JAMES V. HANSEN

OF UTAH

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, today, along with many of my colleagues, I voted reluctantly to support the Flag Desecration Act. I did so because I feel it is an important step in protecting our flag, but a step only. It is not the final solution.

The Supreme Court has ruled that descrating the flag is a God-given right under our Constitution. No law this body passes can go against the Constitution, making the Flag Desecration Act a seemingly pointless piece of legislation. But the Flag Protection Act does give us an opportunity to experiment with the language we will need in the ultimate solution to the problem—a constitutional amendment. We have the opportunity to ensure the language of such an amendment is effective, not riddled with loopholes. Amending the Constitution is no trifling matter, therefore it is important we do it right. Unlike most other laws Congress passes, a constitutional amendment, if flawed, is not so easily remedied.

The passage of this law, even though it may be unenforceable, sends a statement to the American people that Congress is addressing the problems created by the Supreme Court's Texas versus Johnson decision and that we will not tolerate the wanton and willful desecration of our national symbol.

ATHEIST SOVIETS WOO IRAN WITH RELIGION

HON. CHARLES E. BENNETT

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I include here a thoughtful commentary by Gen. James D. Hittle, USMC retired, published last month in Navy Times:

ATHEIST SOVIETS WOOING IRAN WITH GOOD DOSE OF RELIGION

While the world's media were focusing on Tiananmen Square in Beijing and gushing over "Gorbyism" in Germany, Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev was still being a typical Russian expansionist.

Give him, and the Russian long-range strategists, the credit due them. They have completely outmaneuvered the United States and our allies in Iran. There, far from the main beat of the media, Russia has achieved stunning, even historic, gains. Again it was a demonstration of how Russia, a land of chess players, had a farsighted policy, made its moves patiently and astutely, and finished the game with a board-clearing sweep.

This payoff for the USSR's long-range Iranian policy took place in Moscow in late June. The occasion was the official visit of the Speaker of the Iranian Parliament, Hashemi Rafsanjani.

While there, the Iranian official, according to press reports, signed fundamental agreements covering a range of subjects including economic cooperation through the end of the century, huge Russian military sales to Iran and cooperation in scientific, technological and nuclear matters. In addition, the bilateral agreement provided for building a new railroad line that would link Moscow and Teheran. This provision further underlines the motive of this diplomatic coup. Russian expansion in Central Asia has, in recent years, been largely paced and consolidated by extension of railroads.

In the long run, what could turn out to be the most important item of agreement related to, of all things for the USSR (an officially atheistic government), religion. The Russian-Iranian agreement calls for exchange visits of religious leaders. As if to emphasize the significance of this pledge, Rafsanjani said he would visit Baku, the Capital of Soviet Azerbaidzhan. Baku was a meaningful selection. It is one of the leading centers of Russia's 50 million Islamic citizens.

Clearly, this religious exchange agreement is a major achievement for Gorbachev. From the days of the Czars to Lenin, Stalin and the present communist regime, the huge Moslem population in Russia's "Islamic Crescent," from Eastern Europe through central Asia to the borders with China, has been a problem and a threat to the ruling government. The persistent nightmare of Russian rulers has been the dreaded possibility that religious zealots would spark the fires of an irresistable Pan-Islamic movement and uprising.

Benchmark events of history are seldom the products of happenstance. Neither is this Russia-Iranian reapproachment. It is the long sought goal of years of patient and shrewd planning by Soviet mid-Eastern experts and step-by-step progress along a torturous pathway.

Writing in the Wall Street Journal, Kenneth R. Timmerman, editor of "Mednews," a Paris newsletter concerning mid-East strategic subjects made a penetrating analysis of Soviet policy toward Iran. His observation that "The tale of Soviet-Iranian relations over the past decade is one worthy of more attention than it generally receives," is, in light of recent events, a masterpiece of understatement.

Whatever were his many failings, the late Kremlin boss, Leonid Brezhnev, kept his sights on long-range foreign objectives. It was his Tashkent speech that set the stage for closer relations with Red China, and it was his 1981 policy address to the 26th Congress of the Communist party that made the opening overtures to Khomeini's Iranian government for a reapproachment. Even then, the offer bore early fruit. As Timmerman pointed out, that same year the USSR and Iran agreed to a series of commercial and military treaties, including Soviet advisers to Iran.

Despite Iran's oulawing the Tudeh Party, which was supported by Russia, and widespread executions, Iran really didn't foreclose relations with the USSR. Russian advisers helped build Iranian heavy industry and Iran did not interfere with Russian intelligence agents watching Afghan and Pakistani border activities.

Russia's penetration of the Ayatollah's government went on. Various press accounts have related, for instance, that the former Soviet-paid announcer for the Revolutionary Iranian radio station in Baku wound up as a personal secretary to Ayatollah Khomeini. Also, the Ayatollah's chosen successor, Khamenei, reportedly was educated at the USSR's Patrice Lumumba University in Moscow. Timmerman says "Soviet sympathizers have simply donned turbans and grown beards . . . infiltrating government ministries and national bureaucracies," where they have risen to high ranks, even in the nationalistic Islamic Revolution Corps.

The explosive incident of the Satanic Verses provides another lesson in the USSR's duplicity and ability to exploit a situation to Russian advantage and U.S. detriment. When the ailing Khomeini denounced Salman Rushdie's book as blasphemous and publicly announced that he had, in effect, put an Islamic hit contract out on him, the United States, England and other countries reacted with righteous indignation, protesting such wanton international terrorism.

But not Russia, which reacted with obvious duplicity. The United States and Great Britain asked Soviet Foreign Minister Edward A. Shevardnadze, who was scheduled soon to visit Iran, to put the "kill order" on his agenda for meetings in Teheran. He agreed to do so. The USSR had called for "new foreign policy thinking" and said the USSR was interested "in cooperating with the West to solve regional tensions." Wishful thinkers saw this as Russia's intended good faith cooperation and further evidence that the Cold War was over.

When Shevardnadze met with the Ayatollah in late February he had the opportunity to cover U.S. and British views on the kill order with the person who ordered it. He didn't mention it. Because the Ayatollah was personally directing the hate campaign against Mr. Rushdie, that was an empty gesture. No Iranian subordinate of the fiery Ayatollah was about to question the edict of their leader.

Later, in Washington, D.C., the Soviet ambassador to the U.S., Yuri Dubinin, seemed extremely anxious to display sympathetic understanding of the Iranian reaction in the Rushdie affair. Responding to a reporter's question as to why the USSR didn't condemn the Iranian threat to kill Rushdie, Mr. Dubinin is quoted as saying the Rushdie matter "is something that reflects once more the importance of respect for all general human rights."

Boiled down to its essentials, Russia was not opposing the Iranian assassination order, and was ever sympathetic toward the policy. The Kremlin knew what it was dealing with in such matters. After all, the KGB is a world champion in the export of terror.

But, in reality all that the Russians were doing was what Russian rulers have done for more than a thousand years: pushing shrewdly and opportunistically ever outward along their historic thrust lines of expansion.

There's an ironic aspect of the reported agreement to reopen the high capacity gas pipeline from Iran to the USSR. The line, which feeds into the Soviet natural gas system was closed in 1980 when Russia couldn't swallow the Ayatollah's decision to triple the gas prices. With Iranian gas again flowing into the USSR's pipelines, and with Russia a major supplier of natural gas into Western Europe, Gorbachev and the Ayatollah's successors must be having a good laugh. Directly or indirectly the Western Europeans who have so opposed Russian and Iranian policies are helping foot the bills for both countries!

Finally, this Russian achievement in Iran has a lesson in reality for those who believe the Cold War is over. During WWII, Stalin moved large military forces into Iran's strategic Azerbaidzhan border area. In typical Russian fashion, when the war ended, Stalin didn't move out of the occupied territory. This became a sharp point of argument between Moscow and Washington. President Harry Truman, who had a remarkably clear sense of global strategy, well understood the pivotal strategy, importance of Iran throughout the Mid-East, Afghanistan and the approaches to the Indian subcontinent.

Truman had no intention of letting Stalin get away with grabbing a strategic foot-hold in Iran. Faced with Stalin's stubborn refusal to withdraw, the U.S. president let Stalin know that if Russian forces didn't withdraw, he would act. Well aware that Harry Truman had made the decision to drop the bomb on Nagasaki and Hiroshima, Stalin acted the realist and got out.

The U.S.-Russian confrontation in Iran was the beginning of the Cold War. Today, Russia, with patience, persistence and consummate skill, has emerged as a major foreign influence in Iran, With the strategic stakes so high, the United States, although badly outmaneuvered, can't afford to fold tents and walk away.

And so the Cold War goes on in Iran, where it started so many difficult years ago.

MARKING THE CENTENNIAL OF THE UNITED METHODIST CHURCH OF SIMI VALLEY, CA

HON. ELTON GALLEGLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to mark the centennial of the United Methodist Church of Simi Valley, CA, the first congregation in my hometown.

The first members of the Simi Colony—as the city was known at its founding—began to arrive in mid-November 1888, and after the arrival of several more families in 1889, the Colony house was selected to house the church's first congregation.

Under the leadership of Rev. Sheridan Phillips, a church was later built next to the small Colony house, and was dedicated free and clear of debt in 1912.

Between 1924 and 1928, facilities were completed at the corner of Los Angeles Avenue and Church Street, which served the Simi Valley congregation until 1968.

In 1943, the Susana Knolls Methodist Church was begun under the leadership of Dr. Thomas Grice and Mrs. Gertrude Black. This served the east end of the Simi Valley. After occupying a couple of other church buildings, in 1960 the Susana Knolls congregation built new facilities on Katherine Road, under the leadership of Dr. Wayne C. Hollins, pastor. This building served them until 1968.

In December 1968, the Susana Knolls United Methodist Church and the Simi Valley Community United Methodist Church merged. As a result of a gift of five acres of land from Mrs. Wayne (Eleanor) Montgomery, new facilities were built at the corner of Erringer Road and Cochran Street. The Rev. Arthur E. Harrington and Jean Trouche were the pastors.

Dr. Frank M. Witman has served the congregation since 1969. Under his leadership, and the dedicated participation of members and friends of the church, successful completion in 1987 of new facilities has been achieved with the building of a new sanctuary, chapel and offices, at a cost of $1.8 million. The congregation provided about 20 percent of that cost through volunteer labor. The congregation is looking forward to a debt-free dedication in 1992. The Rev. J. Richard Uhls also shares in the pastoral leadership of the congregation.

Mr. Speaker, I know I speak for my colleagues in congratulating Dr. Witman and the members of the United Methodist Church upon the church's centennial, and in wishing them well in the years to come.

STUDENT AUTHOR WEEK

HON. BILL EMERSON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, during the week of September 24 through 29 in the State of Missouri we will be observing Student Author Week. During this week Missouri schools will be encouraging parents, as well as students, to get involved with special writing activities that have been developed to challenge and excite young writers. A goal of 550 school districts has been set for this observance.

I would like to commend the Missouri Department of Education on this fine program that does encourage young minds to be creative in this writing and stresses the importance of authors. Writing is a vital form of communication in our society; therefore, to survive in the world young people need to know how to communicate through words in stories, articles, novels, poems or journals. The observance of this week will help teachers and the school systems to honor student authors for their works. It will also encourage students to write and may spark an interest in becoming an aspiring author.

I again commend the Missouri Department of Education on this fine program and hope it will bring an awareness so that we may all appreciate the talents of those who study and practice writing.

UNMANNED SPACE MISSIONS SUCCESSFUL

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, we are often told that if we wish to maintain public support and international respect for the U.S. Space Program, we must emphasize manned space missions. The recent Neptune reconnaissance by Voyager 2 demonstrates the error of that view.

In that connection, I call my colleagues' attention to an editorial of August 26, 1989, in the London Times:

TRIUMPH IN SPACE

Voyager 2 speeds today from Neptune's cold blue clouds out into the cosmos, bearing its Mozart symphony and other messages from Earth towards Andromeda and Sirius. Its signals will continue to be received by the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in California for another 25 years, but its rendezvous with the moon Triton yesterday brought to a triumphant conclusion man's first reconnaissance of the solar system.

The precision of its final lap has been almost as thrilling as the photographs of Neptune and Triton, and the discovery of six previously undetected moons orbiting the planet. A craft weighing less than a ton, equipped with six computers which together boast only a thousandth of the memory of a household word processor, and a radio powered by the charge equivalent of a refrigerator lightbulb, reached a target 2.75 billion miles away, within seconds of its 12 years and five days time schedule, and only 20 miles off course.

Voyager 2's equipment reminds us that when it blasted off, the silicon chip was brand new and the video-recorder and laptop computer lay in the future. The greetings it bears are from President Carter and Dr. Kurt Waldheim, then UN Secretary-General. Its miracles of discovery have been achieved by what its navigators call "routine magic".

They have married the technology of 1977 with huge ground computers, used by scientific teams to analyse the data Voyager sends back and "spoon feed" it instructions at a rate it can absorb. They have, for its exploration of Neptune and Triton, succeeded in making the magic work despite a transmission time, in each direction, of over four hours.

The results, from Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and now Neptune, the planets it has swung round on its 4.43 billion mile journey, will take years to analyse completely. For little more than the cost of a Stealth bomber.

Our understanding of the physics of the universe—of magnetics, cosmic rays, and even the potential, on Saturn's moon Titan, for extra-terrestrial life—has been enormously enhanced. Man's intelligence, in plotting the journey, tracking the two Voyager space probes and directing them to their rendezvous, years ahead, with planets racing round the sun at thousands of miles and hour, has yielded such spectacular discoveries that it is sobering to reflect how nearly this extraordinary endeavour came to being aborted.

The moment the space shuttle was approved in 1972, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration ordered its cancellation. A "Grand Tour" by a couple of spider-like machines was deemed far less exciting than man on the moon. A mission as far as Saturn was finally allowed. Voyager 1, which sent back the first pictures of that planet's storm systems, was deliberately programmed to turn out of the solar system. Voyager 2 was permitted, and ingeniously reprogrammed, to extend its journey to Neptune.

In October, Galileo sets off for Jupiter. Its journey will have been made possible by the technique, devised 24 years ago by Mr. Gary Flandro for the mission to Neptune, of exploiting the gravity of the planets around which the probes swung to pick up energy. But other lessons have been less readily learnt.

Unmanned space exploration remains the poor relation. Only last month, although carefully without setting a timetable, President Bush pledged to set course for colonizing the moon and landing on Mars, making the U.S. the "pre-eminent space-faring nation".

The Voyagers have proved, with their 115,000 extraordinary photographs, that unmanned exploration is fully as capable as are manned flights of inspiring the imagination. Their performance, in terms of scientific data, far surpasses what man in space can yet begin to achieve. Congratulations for the remarkable team in Pasadena should include firm assurances that what they have mournfully described as "the last picture show" represents only the first of a robustly-supported series of unmanned explorations of the mysteries of the solar system.

NEW MEXICAN REGULATIONS HURT OUR LIVESTOCK PRODUCERS

HON. JOE SKEEN

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. SKEEN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a resolution, along with 18 of my colleagues, which addresses a serious problem that has emerged in the ability of American livestock producers to ship their stock to Mexico.

Regulations recently imposed by the Mexican Government have created barriers that eliminate free trade between our two nations and our livestock producers are the targets.

My resolution urges the Secretary of Agriculture and the United States Trade Representative to move quickly in working with their counterparts with the Government of the Republic of Mexico to once again establish free trade of livestock between the two nations.

The regulations have resulted in banning the importation of certain livestock into Mexico as well as requiring excessive health restrictions and certification for imported animals. The Mexican Government is using health concerns as the impetus for the regulations. But a close examination of the facts indicate these concerns do not warrant the action taken by Mexico.

While swine and cattle have been impacted, at this time it is the American sheep industry that is feeling the brunt of the new Mexican regulations These regulations are costing American sheep producers millions of dollars.

During the months of August, September, and October, American sheep producers send thousands of head of old ewes into Mexico for slaughter. The new regulations effectively allow only castrated male sheep to be shipped to Mexico. Consequently, our producers are being denied a very important export market for their old ewes. To date, more than $1 million in direct sales to Mexico have been lost as a result of the new Mexican import regulations. Of even greater concern is the sharp drop of domestic sheep prices that is a direct result of these regulations. The bottom line is that our sheep producers are being hit hard in the pocketbook by discriminatory and protectionist trade measures imposed by the Mexican Government.

Discussions have been held in the past few weeks between the United States and Mexico on this trade issue. However, there is no definite commitment from the Mexican Government that the current regulations will be amended or changed in any way.

Therefore, it is imperative that the Secretary of Agriculture and the U.S. trade representative use whatever resources are available to adequately resolve this issue.

Time clearly is working against our domestic livestock producers, especially our sheep producers. If a change in the Mexican import regulations is not made in the next few weeks, the American sheep industry will have been denied an important export market with a valued trading partner. This should not be allowed to happen.

The Republic of Mexico is a member of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [GATT]. One of the principles of GATT is to eliminate unfair trade barriers. This resolution simply asks that the current unfair trade barriers imposed by Mexico on American livestock be lifted.

I hope my colleagues in the House will join me in support of this resolution.

IN MEMORY OF CHARLES FRANCIS GOEB

HON. BILL LOWERY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. LOWERY of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor an outstanding citizen of the 41st District of California, Mr. Charles Francis Goeb. Born with cerebral palsy, Mr. Goeb nevertheless maintained a very active status in the community. As a member of the Rancho Penasquitos Town Council he served as the representative to the district landscape committee and on the public relations board. Mr. Goeb also attended Palomar College and was a member of the "Undefeated Club."

In spite of his affliction, Mr. Goeb never limited himself; instead, he became a local advocate for disabled rights. His friends describe him as a man who was hard-working, devoted to his beliefs, and prouder than most to be an American.

Mr. Goeb attended his last town council meeting Wednesday, August 9, 1989. As he left the meeting he was tragically struck and killed by a drunk driver.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that you and my colleagues join me in expressing our deepest sympathy to his wife, Mrs. Linda Goeb and his family. Mr. Goeb will be deeply missed by all those who knew and worked with him.

CANTOR PERRYNE ANKER'S 10 YEARS AT BETH SHOLOM TEMPLE

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives the outstanding contributions of Perryne Anker as she is commencing her 10th year as Cantor of Beth Sholom Temple in the City of Santa Monica, CA.

Cantor Anker has devoted almost 20 years of her life as a religious leader who immeasurably enhances the spiritual, cultural, and humanitarian character of the community, and who inspires youth through her loving guidance and enlightened teaching.

Cantor Perryne Anker is considered to be a pioneer in having opened the Cantorate to the participation of women.

Cantor Anker shows her extraordinary musical talents in a spirit of ecumenism with synagogues, churches, and other organizations throughout Santa Monica and Los Angeles, enriching society and promoting a sense of beauty, harmony and tranquility.

I am pleased to commend Cantor Perryne Anker for her significant accomplishments which improve the quality of life in the community.

A TRIBUTE TO PAUL GANN

HON. WILLIAM E. DANNEMEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, my home State of California, indeed the entire Nation, will miss Paul Gann who died Monday, September 11. Paul Gann was a patriot and American of the first order. He was also my good friend.

Paul Gann was most well known for his tax crusade on behalf of proposition 13 that he coauthored. He was always the people's advocate and spent much of his life taking on several causes which he felf were in the best interests of Californians.

He was personable, even tempered, always cordial, good humored, and, above all else, courageous. This last quality became most evident in his waning years. At age 70, Paul Gann acquired the virus for AIDS after open-heart surgery. It wasn't until 1985 that the deadly virus began to break down Paul's immune system that he realized the death sentence he had been given.

Paul Gann's perspective of the AIDS epidemic represented that of the innocent victims of AIDS. The unknowing spouse, the newborn child, the hemophiliac, and like Paul, those receiving HIV-tainted blood.

Paul Gann's life is a testament to good living and public service. His death is a testiment to the tragedy of the AIDS epidemic and how public health, especially in California, has been intimidated into misjudgment and politicization by militant homesexuals and opportunist politicians from both parties.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is appropriate to close with these words from Paul Gann delivered here in Washington back in 1987. His friends will deeply miss him.

PAUL GANN STATEMENT ON AIDS

I'm here to start what may become the last campaign of my life. My doctor tells me that I have contracted AIDS, that I received it from a contaminated blood transfusion five years ago when I had open heart surgery. I don't know how much more time I have, but I want to spend it doing everything I can to protect others from falling under this deadly spell.

I'll be campaigning for more openness about AIDS. You know, it seems as though those who have AIDS, or might have AIDS, want to keep it all a secret so they can keep doing what they want and keep spreading the disease, but as a victim I would like this stopped.

Those of us infected with the virus for AIDS are still citizens of this great country, and we know better than anyone what a terrible thing this disease is. Instead of selfishly trying to protect oursleves by keeping secrets, we should be leading the fight to protect our friends and loved ones from falling into the same fate.

In other words, we should be the ones who are out there saying let's test more and tell more. We have to face it! There's no cure for AIDS. The only way to control it now is to find out who has it and let others know.

Personally, I'm for testing everyone and telling everything. Nell and I have been unable to have a sexual relationship since after my open heart surgery, otherwise Lord knows what harm I might have inflicted upon my wife, but as soon as we found out about my condition she took the test herself and, thank God, she's free of the disease.

I know some of us are going to hurt by all this testing and telling. Some people are going to be cruel to us, mostly I imagine out of fear. But, you know, I have faith in peoples' good will. If they don't think we're trying to keep it a secret, they'll do everything they can to help us.

But no matter how they react to us, they have a right to know. For instance, I had a dental appointment not long ago and I told my dentist that I have AIDS. I didn't know what he'd do, how he would treat me, or if he would just pull on those rubber gloves and drill and grind away like he's always done.

But I had to accept whatever he would decide, for I have no right to think only of myself, risking that man's life in order to make my remaining time a little easier.

And the same holds true for everyone else. As I said, I'm going to be campaigning for more openness about AIDS, and I'm going to continue campaigning to protect Proposition 4, the state spending limit we enacted back in 1979, And I intend to do these things as I've always done: By travelling around, speaking to groups, being on radio talk shows and TV.

If the invitations stop arriving, so be it. I'll still believe that we should do lots more testing and let the results be known.

Who knows, we might even help ourselves. Maybe if all these scientists get more information about who has AIDS and who doesn't they'll learn something new and we'll have a cure sooner.

One last word. When my doctor told me that I had AIDS, I felt more anger and frustration than ever before, that someones bad judgement sentenced me to death. You see, even though I'm 74 years old, and going on 75, I still treasure life as much as anyone, regardless of age.

But my doctor tells me that if it weren't for all the blood I received five years ago, I would have died right there on the operating table. So you can say that the blood—contaminated as it was—gave me at least another five years of life, maybe more, and that I am thankful for.

So I've apologized to God for my anger. And I pray for his help in this effort to protect others from this dreadful disease.

HONORING GRACE CHURCH FOR 150 YEARS OF SERVICE

HON. CHARLES E. SCHUMER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, when Rev. Kenneth Griepp presides over morning worship services at Grace Church on Sunday, September 24, 1989, it will mark a very special occasion. On that day the church will be celebrating its 150th anniversary. I rise today to pay tribute to this proud institution of Canarsie.

When the first building of the church was built in 1841 on land contributed by the famous Remsen family, the area was the town of Flatlands in the city of Brooklyn. According to congregation historian Steve Ruppert, it was then the Methodist Protestant Church of Canarsie. The church has seen four different names since, and Brooklyn has become part of New York City, but what hasn't changed is the strong community and spiritual commitment of its membership.

Reverend Griepp follows in a long and colorful history of Grace pastors over the last century and a half. He took over the leadership of the church after many years in the New York area. The last 10 years he served on Staten Island. As Reverend Griepp begins his tenure, he has an impressive legacy before him. Grace Church has seen 19 pastors including Rev. Clifford Kidd who served from 1913–52.

Grace Church has a proud history of leadership in the community. From its very early days forming the first school in Canarsie to the tireless work of its members in preserving the values that have made our neighborhood so strong.

I invite my colleagues to join me in extending a heartfelt and well-deserved congratulations to the Grace Church on the occasion of its 150th anniversary. Best of luck to Reverend Griepp as he leads the way into the next century of service.

BILL PASSED TO PROTECT THE FLAG

HON. AMO HOUGHTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, today the House passed a bill to protect the flag. If approved, this legislation will be law—not an amendment to the Bill of Rights. I supported it.

This is a touchy subject. There are no safe or easy solutions. Also, the process here in the House frankly leaves a lot to be desired. For one thing, the bill was considered under a procedure which did no permit changes. So I had only one option—to vote for the specific language approved by the Judiciary Committee. I'm not particularly fond of doing business this way. It permits no room to make changes.

But, despite the drawbacks, I thought this approach was the best way to begin the process of protecting our flag. What H.R. 2978 does—the bill we considered today—is to say to anyone who knowingly mutilates, defaces, burns or tramples the flag that they will be fined or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. That is clear.

Several distinguished constitutional scholars think such language can pass constitutional muster. I want to give it a chance. If the Supreme Court rules adversely on this approach, then there's plenty of time to go the constitutional amendment route.

WIC COVERAGE FOR PREGNANT PRISONERS AND THEIR CHILDREN

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. MILLER of California. On Thursday, the House and Senate staff will meet to resolve the differences between the Child Nutrition and WIC Amendments of 1989.

The House bill contains a small but critical provision that permits—not requires—States, at their option, to provide WIC coverage to pregnant women and their infants in State and local prisons and juvenile detention facilities. The Senate bill contains no such provision.

Women who are incarcerated, particularly for drug-related violations, have a multiplicity of serious problems which must be addressed while in prison. For those women who are also pregnant, adequate nutrition is a serious problem for themselves and for their babies, many of whom otherwise risk being born with severe medical complications resulting from malnutrition. For these women, proper nutrition through the WIC Program would be an essential component of their drug rehabilitation program. For their children, WIC would be a critical ingredient in their safe development.

Today, in an editorial which I would like to share with Members of the House, the Wasington Post strongly supported the House WIC provision and urged the Senate to adopt it.

The editorial, from the September 12, 1989 edition of the Washington Post, follows.

PREGNANT AND IN PRISON

House and Senate conferees will meet this week to reconcile differences between bills passed to reauthorize the federal program providing special food assistance for low-income pregnant women, infants and children (WIC). Because of budget restraints, only about half the individuals eligible for this assistance actually receive it. But one group specially in need—pregnant women in jails and prisons—are specifically excluded from the program by a regulation of the U.S. Department of Agriculture. The House-passed WIC bill would remove this barrier, and the Senate should accept that provision.

The prison population of this country is growing enormously, but the number of women incarcerated is increasing at a much faster rate than that of the male population. Of the 31,000 or so women now in prison, about 10 percent present special problems because they are pregnant. Many have been drug users and alcohol abusers whose babies are already at great risk. But the obstacles to a successful pregnancy are increased if special attention is not paid to their nutrition. A survey conducted in 38 states revealed that 58 percent of the institutions serve exactly the same diet to pregnant inmates as to others and in most cases that diet does not meet the minimum recommended allowances for pregnancy.

The House provision does not require that WIC money be used for prisoners. It simply makes that option available to the states. Nor does the proposal provide any additional federal funds for this purpose. Why then, should states divert any of the scarce money to offenders some would find unworthy of help? First, of course, because the real beneficiaries are babies for whom an extra egg, an extra carton of milk or a piece of cheese every day can made a life-saving difference. Second, if one chooses to be hardheaded about it, because improving prenatal nutrition costs society less in the long run. Prisoners' babies with health problems must be cared for with public funds; even the healthy ones almost all go into foster care soon after birth.

Finally, decent care must be given to these women because they are in the custody and care of the state, which has a special obligation for their welfare. Unlike pregnant women in the community, prisoners cannot expect help in the form of supplementary food from family, friends or charity. They are entirely dependent on the prison system for what they eat and for the medical care they receive. The House bill recognizes society's obligations not only to these unfortunate women but to their completely innocent children. The Senate should go along.

A FINAL BOUNDARY FOR GETTYSBURG NATIONAL MILITARY PARK

HON. WILLIAM F. GOODLING

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which provides for a new, and final, boundary for the Gettysburg National Military Park which lies within my congressional district. The new proposed boundary for the park comes as a result of an extensive study by the National Park Service in compliance with Public Law 100–132.

The new boundary will add approximately 1,900 acres to the park, increasing its size to 5,750 acres. The Park Service is to be commended for its efforts to produce a boundary study which provides for the long-term protection of the park while also taking into account local concerns and needs. The Park Service held an extensive series of public meetings and consulted with local elected officials at all levels.

Only 250 of the 1,900 new acres will be added to the park through outright purchase in fee, with the remaining acreage being protected through scenic easements and the purchase of development rights. For a rural farming community this is good news, because in many cases farmers will continue to do with the land what they have done for generations.

Prior to the enactment of Public Law 100–132 I had been concerned that the uncertain boundary and the relatively unplanned growth of the park was causing difficulties for local citizens and governments. This concern culminated 2 years ago with efforts to add the Taney Farm tract to the park, a property outside the current boundary of the park. Supporters of this effort and I were able to reach a compromise permitting addition of the Taney Farm while also requiring a comprehensive study to determine a final boundary for the park. The Secretary of the Interior was required by the law to "consult with the people of the community and their elected representatives at all levels as well as with other interested individuals and groups."

This final report was submitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Interior in August, 1989, and I am now introducing this bill to implement its recommendations.

My sincere hope is the House Interior Committee will be able to give this matter expeditious consideration so this final boundary will become law in the very near future.

AID FOR THE AMERICAN BREAST CANCER EPIDEMIC

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to provide funding to fight a killer. This killer will take the lives of 43,000 wives, daughters, mothers, and granddaughters this year. It will kill them slowly, painfully; it will rob them of their security, their dignity, their precious years of motherhood. This killer will physically mutilate them and it will take their money as well. In many cases it will steal their life savings and impoverish their loved ones. Many women will be well within the killer's death grip long before they are aware, while many others will know that killer by name and yet, will be helpless to stop it. That killer's name is breast cancer.

The scourge of breast cancer has reached epidemic proportions in our Nation. In 1989, breast cancer will strike 142,000 women in the United States and 43,000 will die of this disease. It is not enough to emphasize public education and early detection of the disease, although this has saved or prolonged many lives. What is needed is a cure. Most women detect their own symptoms, still nearly a fourth of those diagnosed will die. According to a recent study by the Federal Center for Disease Control, the death rate for victims has increased 24 percent between 1979 and 1986. One in every 10 women in the United States will be diagnosed as having breast cancer. This disease cuts across all social and economic boundaries. Our last four first ladies; Mrs. Nixon, Mrs. Ford, Mrs. Carter, and Mrs. Reagan have all undergone breast surgery.

Some minor progress has been achieved in the search for a cure but many new leads cannot currently be explored. Most of the $60.89 million budgeted in fiscal year 1989 for breast cancer at the National Cancer Institute is directed to treatment and clinical trials. While this funding is also essential, relatively little is left for basic research and etiology. To adequately follow up on leads to a possible cure, at least $25 million in additional funding, earmarked to basic research, is needed. Today I am introducing legislation which will provide the National Cancer Institute with this needed boost. Education and early detection are not enough. We must find a cure.

With the expected deaths of 43,000 American women this year, the incidence of breast cancer has most certainly reached crisis proportions similar to other diseases, such as AIDS. I applaud my colleagues' rush to fund the AIDS research program with the $1.6 billion so urgently needed this year. As an illustration, recent strides in AIDS research prove that we can accomplish in health care when we provide adequate funding. Similarly, an additional $25 million in funding for breast cancer research is a small price to pay for a chance to advance a cure.

Breast cancer is not solely an issue for women. Breast cancer uproots and bankrupts families, orphans children, and widows spouses. All of us know of, or know someone personally whose life has been disrupted by this killer.

Mr. Speaker I urge all of my colleagues to join me in support of this nonpartisan concern. I know many of my colleagues have loved ones who have suffered from breast cancer. A few present and former Members have battled it themselves. Let's join together today to put this killer away for good.

1988 RADIO PERSONALITY OF THE YEAR

HON. ROBIN TALLON

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. TALLON. Mr. Speaker, Tom Kinard is a man who loves his job—and he's good at it—a rare combination these days. As the morning radio personality on WJMX in Florence, SC, Tom's outstanding broadcast career has recently earned him the distinction of 1988 Radio Personality of the Year awarded by the South Carolina Broadcasters Association.

Tom didn't win this award by just going to work every day to listen to himself talk. He takes pride in knowing what his listeners want to hear, and his unique dedication to the WJMX audience has brought countless hours of listening pleasure to South Carolinians from Columbia to Myrtle Beach.

Currently, Tom hosts the WJMX morning show, "Kinard N' Koffee" that offers a mix of adult music and interviews with local personalities ranging in topics from political issues to the arts. And Tom knows that since most people start their day with the radio, he has the power to get their day off on the right foot with upbeat and positive programming.

Through the years, Tom Kinard has epitomized the broadcaster who plays that pivotal role in the life of the community. He brings the news—good and bad. He shares vital information and consequently has a tremendous impact not only on the Florence community, but also, on the entire region as well.

Tom's outstanding dedication to community service extends beyond the radio waves, however. His lifetime membership in the Jaycees, service on the Florence Little Theater Board, and layspeaker at numerous churches, arts, and community events are visible indications that his sense of community goes far beyond his work hours.

With a broadcast career spanning almost 25 years in South Carolina, Tom has done everything from sports announcing to a daily music show to production director. He is trully a "jack of all trades" in this profession. His varied talents have won him numerous other broadcasting awards prior to the recent SC Broadcasters award, too.

While working at WBBQ in Augusta, SC, Tom received an award from the Associated Press for a series on Augusta's poor. In addition, he has received several awards for spot production from both the North and South Carolina Broadcasters Associations, as well as the National Clio Awards.

Tom Kinard has been a positive and entertaining fixture on the Pee Dee media scene for many years, and I know I join his legion of fans in hoping for many more.

TRIBUTE TO EAGLE SCOUT TOM GUST

HON. RONALD K. MACHTLEY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Eagle Scout, Tom Gust. Tom earned the rank of Eagle Scout while he was a member of Troop 22 in Newport, RI.

The process of becoming an Eagle Scout is a hardship which tests the fiber of the young men who take the challenge. Tom's perseverance and accomplishment lift him above the ordinary. Tom has displayed the courage, discipline and leadership which forms the backbone of our Nation.

I wish to offer my congratulations to Tom and hope that he will continue to strive towards the goals he has established as a Boy Scout.

DONALD C. ROBINSON

HON. HAROLD ROGERS

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, what finer homage can a man give to the American people than to dedicate his career entirely to Federal service?

Donald C. Robinson of Corbin, KY, is such a distinguished public servant and citizen. He began his career in defense of his country by serving in the U.S. Army for 3 years, then embarked on a life of community service in the Social Security Administration; on the ground level first as a field representative, then moving through to the rank of district manager where he has served since August 31, 1964—a total of almost 34 years meeting the needs of thousands of Americans who have relied upon one of our most revered social contracts, the Social Security System.

Mr. Robinson has also exemplified his high calling as a citizen through service in a multitude of community organizations: as a board member on the Kentucky State Health Coordination Council and the Cumberland River Comprehensive Care Center, treasurer of the Corbin Public Library for 17 years, holder of many offices in succession for the Rotary Club, president of the 64-unit baptist housing complex in Corbin, active member of First Baptist Church, and as preserver of our national pastime in the Little League.

On September 22, 1989, Mr. Robinson will bring his Federal service to a close. And as he continues his vigorous public service, I want it forever preserved in the RECORD of this august body that it is the tireless lifelong dedication of people like Mr. Donald D. Robinson that continues to make America the destination of all who truly seek freedom and liberty.

THE UNITED STATES MUST ACCOMMODATE EASTERN EUROPEAN REFUGEES

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, it would seem that the mass exodus from East Germany through Hungary is yet another triumph for freedom and democracy, to be greeted with enthusiasm by the United States. Throughout the cold war and beyond, one of the highest priorities in American policy toward the Soviet bloc has been to secure freer emigration from the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe for those individuals who have faced religious and political persecution in their homeland.

Unfortunately for those East Germans, like Soviet Jews and Poles and other Eastern Europeans leaving their countries in droves, the liberalization of Soviet bloc emigration policy has come at a bad time. As refugees are fleeing Communist nations in unprecedented numbers, the United States has not fulfilled its role in this immigration aspect of glasnost.

For the most part, positive developments in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union have been met by supportive American reactions, evidenced by successful nuclear arms reductions and easing of military tension in Europe. However, one aspect of glasnost, the liberalization of emigration policy, has gone conspicuously unanswered by an appropriate U.S. response. I believe the first step in the response is raising the refugee ceiling for fiscal year 1990.

Despite the undeniable progress toward democracy in the Soviet bloc, political and religious persecution and oppression is still alive behind the Iron Curtain. Finally given the chance, hundreds of thousands have sought freedom in the West. The fiscal year 1989 ceilings for refugees from Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union—6,500 and 25,000 respectively—have proven drastically insufficient. In the first 9 months of fiscal year 1989, 70,000 Soviet and 38,000 Eastern Europeans applied for refugee status to enter the United States. This number does not even consider the huge number of emigres who fled to a second nation in Western Europe, with the ultimate goal of reaching America. The West German Embassy informed me that West Germany, with one quarter of the United States' population, accepted 180,000 Soviet bloc refugees from January through July 1989. In comparison, the administration's yearly ceiling for refugees from the Soviet bloc was 43,500, after a midyear upward adjustment.

In short, the restrictive refugee ceilings lead to a rigorous application process in which the United States turns away a great number of refugees that our country once accepted with open arms. In days before budgetary restrictions began undermining America's ability to carry out our foreign policy, the United States authorized over 500,000 refugees from Southeast Asia from 1980 to 1984. But now that the Iron Curtain is down, a new barrier, caused by budget restraints, is preventing an adequate refugee policy.

Budgetary restaints may require new approaches to accommodating refugees, but they must not translate into closing the door to America to refugees from the Soviet bloc. I have written President Bush requesting the accommodation of 100,000 additional refugees from the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe—which I would also like to submit for the record. Considering the number seeking such status in the Soviet bloc and the likelihood of increased liberalization in Communist nations next year, this figure should be viewed as a bare minimum. It is estimated that over 200,000 will seek refugee status from the Soviet Union alone next year.

The United States, a nation which prides itself on freedom and openness as represented by the Statue of Liberty, should not be satisfied with a constricted refugee policy. As the State Department points to the $7,000 pricetag for each refugee admitted to the United States, we must remember the countless billions of military funds spent to promote democracy and freedom in Eastern Europe since World War II.

Rather than concede that we cannot accommodate deserving refugees, the United States must find creative methods which would grant refugee status while limiting costs. In my discussions with America's ethnic and religious associations, they have indicated a willingness to work toward an increased private share. I believe many in Congress would certainly be willing to explore a refugee status without full funding of transportation and relocation expenses.

Of course, refugee policy is only the first step in reacting to liberalized emigration from the Soviet bloc, but it is a necessary first step. Since glasnost has been underway in the Soviet bloc, immigration from Eastern Europe has actually decreased, rather than the more cooperative reaction one might expect. Immigration to the United States from Eastern Europe has decreased over 50 percent from 27,480 in 1982 to 12,838 in 1987. While Europe accounted for 72.3 percent of United States immigrants from 1950 to 1959, and 62.4 percent from 1960 to 1969, only 16 percent of United States immigrants came from Europe between 1981 and 1987. During the same time—1950 to 1987—total immigration increased from an average of 251,000 annually in the 1950's to 601,000 in 1987. These trends point to immigration policy as another area which needs to be reformed in the wake of glasnost. Increasing refugees will help, because as Eastern European refugees gain permanent resident status, they can become sponsors for family members in their homeland.

The accommodation of Soviet bloc refugees is not only a necessary response to the increase in numbers fleeing the Soviet Union, it is an important affirmation that America's arms are still open to those who face oppression at home. The policies which define the American ideal, such as championing human rights and accepting refugees, cannot be sacrificed, even at the powerful hands of a limited budget.

A TRIBUTE TO MARK W. FORSTER

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Mark W. Forster who will be receiving his Eagle Scout Award on Sunday, September 24, 1989, at St. Paul's United Church of Christ, Selinsgrove, PA. It is truly an honor for a young man to receive this award recognizing him for his dedication to his community and his country. This event is always a special time for family and friends who can be so proud to know someone who receives this distinguished honor.

Mark is the son of James and Linda Forster. He has proven his leadership abilities in several ways. He joined Scout Troop 419 in June 1982, being active in the Scouting program as well as his church, school, and community activities. Mark has served as assistant patrol leader, patrol leader and leadership corps. He is a brotherhood in the Order of the Arrow. He completed junior leadership training and has earned the 50 miler Afoot and Afloat Award. He has hiked several trails in Pennsylvania, including the Loyalsock and Black Forest Trails. He was a member of the 1985 National jamboree contingent from the Susquehanna Council. A crew member of troop 419 to Philmont Scout Ranch in New Mexico in 1987, he canoed the Susquehanna River from Selinsgrove to Harrisburg and the Juniata River from Lewistown to Duncannon. He attended Camp Karoondinha for 5 years and has been active in other troop, district, and council outdoor programs.

Mark's Eagle project consisted of planning and landscaping the St. Paul's United Church of Christ Cemetery. He had to contact the church council, present his plans, receive approval and carry out his project by locating grave stones buried underground, raising and straightening other stones, mowing, planting flowers, erecting a sign and landscaping. He completed his project with the assistance of other Scouts and Scouters.

Mark is active on the Selinsgrove High School basketball and track teams. After graduation he plans to attend Williamsport Community College to study woodworking. He plans to continue in Scouting as an adult leader.

Mr. Speaker, I invite you and my colleagues to join me in congratulating Mark W. Forster for earning this distinguished award. He has shown community service and leadership capabilities in his work with the Scouts. He is excellent proof that America's future will be in great hands.

KERRVILLE, TEXAS OBSERVES 100TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. LAMAR S. SMITH

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the city of Kerrville, TX is observing the 100-year anniversary of its incorporation in September 1989. This proud occasion is a celebration of that remarkable pioneer spirit upon which our country was founded.

Kerrville is located on the banks of Texas' most scenic river, the Guadalupe, in the heart of the beautiful Texas hill country. Begun as a modest cypress shingle-making community along the riverbank, Kerrville has grown to a city of 19,000 people and is a center for tourism, small industry, retirement, medical services, and the arts. Kerrville is also well known as a center for the production and trading of mohair. With its marvelous scenery, ideal climate, and abundant economic opportunity, Kerrville has gained a reputation in Texas and beyond as a community with an exceptional quality of life.

In commemoration of its rich history and contributions to the state of Texas and the Nation, I would like to recognize the city of Kerrville, TX and extend to its citizens our congratulations and best wishes on the occasion of their centennial celebration.

A TRIBUTE TO THE GRAND REOPENING OF THE SURBECK MEMORIAL BUILDING

HON. BILL SCHUETTE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. SCHUETTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the grand reopening of the Devoist J. Surbeck Memorial Building in Corunna, MI. The ceremony for this historic occasion will take place on September 17, 1989.

The Surbeck Memorial Building orginally served as the First National Bank of Corunna. In 1903, however, the building was totally destroyed by a fire.

Hugh McCurdy, who is president of the First National Bank of Corunna, as well as probate judge for Shiawassee County, organized the renovation of the Surbeck Building. The talents of Richman & Sons, the original contractors of the Shiawassee Court House, and Clair Allen, the original architect of the Shiawassee Court House were also brought together again for the Surbeck Building's rehabilitation.

The rebuilt Surbeck Building housed the Old Corunna State Bank until the late 1960's. Shiawassee County then purchased the monumental building from the Old Corunna State Bank, and it served as the county health department headquarters, as well as the community library, for over 20 years.

In 1983, members of the Shiawassee County Board of Commissioners renovated and restored the Surbeck Building back to its original appearance. The renovated building was used as a county office building.

In 1988, the Surbck Building fell victim to fire once again. After being once again renovated and restored, the Surbeck Memorial Building presently serves as the Old Kent Bank.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in commemorating the grand reopening of the Devoist J. Surbeck Memorial Building. The Surbeck Memorial Building stands as a symbol of the history and tradition which the proud people of Corunna will continue to cherish and preserve for generations.

EXXON CLEANUP NOT FULFILLED

HON. GERRY SIKORSKI

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 12, 1989

Mr. SIKORSKI. Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of principles that we all learned as children: cleanup after yourself and leave things how you found them. On September 15, less than 6 months after the Valdez oilspill, Exxon is leaving Prince William Sound very different from how it found it.

I have introduced a resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 175, expressing the sense of Congress that Exxon has not fulfilled its obligation to clean up the oil spilled in the Valdez accident. Exxon should take the necessary steps to ensure a thorough cleanup, including maintaining winter crews as appropriate, until the spill is completely cleaned up.

I thought you might be interested in the following piece published in the New York Times, Thursday, September 7, 1989.

EXXON SLIPS AWAY

[By Gerry Sikorski]

The not so funny story is that it takes 10 Exxon executives to change a light bulb: one to change it and nine to do the public relations.

Exxon's decision in July to unconditionally suspend the cleanup of the Valdez oil spill as of Sept. 15 served to restart both their public-relations machine and the public's anger.

Congress must insist that Exxon take appropriate steps to insure a thorough cleanup of Prince William Sound, including maintaining winter crews, as appropriate, until the spill is completely cleaned up.

Despite Exxon's claim that its work is almost completed, the Coast Guard has looked at the more than 1,800 miles of oil-fouled coastline and found that less than half the job Exxon promised to do had been done. Nevertheless, Exxon has cavalierly announced a suspension—leaving tides, waves and seagulls to do its job.

In May, Exxon chairman Lawrence Rawl pledged to resume the cleanup next spring and return the beaches to their natural state. But in July an Exxon spokesman refused to commit the company to doing so. He stated that Exxon planned to send back only 20 of the 10,000 cleanup and survey workers in the spring.

Many of our nation's top scientists predict that by spring the oil goo will harden, turning the once pristine wilderness into the world's largest asphalt lot. And, left to "cleanse" itself, much of the oil will settle to the ocean floor, releasing toxic petroleum hydrocarbons into fish and the food chain for decades to come.

Exxon's "don't worry, be happy" assumption that, no matter how badly we deface her, Mother Nature can take care of herself, is nothing new.

When the Alaska oil pipeline was built 15 years ago, Exxon dismissed the dangers of an oil spill in Prince William Sound with reassuring coos of good faith. This spill couldn't happen, the company told us and, if it did, Exxon had just the right contingency plans to deal with it.

But when the Valdez cracked open in March and dumped 72 million pounds of crude oil into one of the most biologically diverse and fragile ecosystems in this hemisphere, Exxon had no oil spill specialists onhand. It had fired every one as a profit-boosting measure. The company's vaunted emergency contingency cleanup plan consisted of one brokendown barge in dry dock.

Then Exxon procrastinated as cleanup deadlines came and went with April showers and May flowers. Finally, as outrage grew, it pledged in May that the cleanup would be completed by end of summer.

Meanwhile the spill—the largest in our nation's history and the costliest industrial accident ever (exceeding those at Three Mile Island and Bhopal, India)—has irreparably damaged much of the animal life and the crystalline waters of the sound. At least 50,000 birds, 10 percent of the area's population, have been killed.

Significantly, as the oil was spreading last spring, the environmental Protection Agency indicated that, despite industry claims, new drilling proposed by the Bush Administration cannot take place without damage to the delicate tundra environment.

It also said that the Alaska National Wildlife wilderness area—breeding ground for North America's largest remaining herd of migratory caribou and habitat of polar bears, musk oxen, wolves, foxes and a rich variety of waterfowl and fish—is under siege from 20 years of oil company mismanagement, failure and illegalities. Acres of tundra blackened by chemical spills, oil wastes, leaking chemical drums and other-flowing garbage dumps tell the story.

Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan has stated, rightly, that Exxon is fully liable and responsible for the accident and has an obligation to restore Prince William Sound to its original condition. Inexplicably, Secretary of Transportation Samuel Skinner meekly accepts Exxon's claim that it has lived up to its obligations and that the people of Alaska are "satisfied."

Alaska's Governor, Steve Cowper, says he expects Exxon to stay on the job until it is done. Alaska's Department of Environmental Conservation has expressly requested Exxon to leave some crews in place this winter to deal with oil that washes off beaches. Exxon plans to keep its crews in Anchorage, hours away.

Exxon's executives are hoping for a case of collective amnesia in the American public, so that a suspension of the cleanup will turn a winter into a millennium. It is time for Congress to say "enough"—enough missed deadlines, broken promises and good intentions. We can begin by passing a resolution expressing the sense of Congress that Exxon has failed in its obligation to cleanup the spill and must do so without suspension or delay.

It's probably true that the road to hell is paved with good intentions. It is undoubtedly true that the path from the Valdez is paved with Exxon crude—and Americans want it cleaned up.
